TO MR. GEORGE CHAPMAN ON HIS TRANSLATION OF HOMER'S WORKS INTO ENGLISH METRE.*

Thou ghost of Homer 'twere no fault to Call His the translation, thine the original,
Did we not know 'twas done by thee so Well Thou mak'st Homer Homer's self excel.

ON MR. CHAPMAN'S INCOMPARABLE TRANSLATION OF HOMER'S WORKS.

What none before durst ever venture on,
Unto our wonder is by Chapman done,
Who by his skill hath made great Homer's Song
To vail its bonnet to our English tongue,
So that the learned well may question it,
Whether in Greek, or English, Homer writ.
O happy Homer, such an able pen
To have for thy Translator, happier than Ovid,† or Virgil,‡ who beyond their Strength Are stretch'd, each sentence near a mile in Length.

But our renowned Chapman worthy praise
And meriting the never blasted bays,
Hath render'd Homer in a genuine sense,
Vea, and hath added to his eloquence:
And in his comments his true sense doth
show,
Telling Spondanus, what he ought to know, Eustathius, and all that on them take Great Homer's mystic meaning plain to make,
Yield him more dark with far-fetch'd allegories, Sometimes mistaking clean his learned stories:

As 'bout the fly Menelaus* did inspire,
Juno's retreat, Achilles’ strange desire;
But he, to his own sense doth him restore,
And comments on him better than before
Any could do, for which (with Homer) we
Will yield all honour to his memory.

S. SHEPPARD.†

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER.

Much have I travel'd in the realms of gold,
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.
Oft of one wide expanse had I been told That deep-brow'd Homer ruled as his demesne:
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:
Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken;
Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

THE PREFACE TO THE READER.*

Or all books extant in all kinds, Homer is the first and best. No one before his, Josephus affirms nor before him, saith Velleius Paterculus, was there any whom he imitated; nor after him any that could imitate him. And that Poesy may be no cause of detraction from all the eminence we give him, Spondanus (preferring it to all arts and sciences) unanswerably argues and proves; for to the glory of God, and the singing of his glories, no man dares deny, man was chiefly made. And what art performs this chief end of man with so much excitation and expression as Poesy? Moses, David, Solomon, Job, Esay, Jeremy, &c., chiefly using that to the end above said? And since the excellence of it cannot be obtained by the labour and art of man, as all easily confess it, it must needs be acknowledged a divine infusion. To prove which in a word, this distich, in my estimation, serves something nearly:

Great Poesy, blind Homer, makes all see Thee capable of all Arts, none of thees.

For out of him, according to our most grave and judicial Plutarch, are all Arts deduced, confirmed, or illustrated. It is not therefore the world's villifying of it that can make it vile; for so we might argue, and blaspheme the most incomparably sacred. It is not of the world indeed, but like truth, hides itself from it. Nor is there any such reality of wisdom's truth in all human excellence, as in Poets' fictions. That most vulgar and foolish receipt of poetical licence being of all knowing men to be exploded; accepting it, as if Poets had a tale-telling privilege above others, no Artist being so strictly and inextricably confined to all the laws of learning, wisdom, and truth as a Poet. For were not his fictions composed of the sinews and souls of all those, how could they differ far from, and be combined with eternity? To all sciences, therefore, I must still, with our learned and ingenious Spondanus, prefer it, as having a perpetual commerce with the divine Majesty; embracing and illustrating all his most holy precepts, and enjoying continual discourse with his thrice perfect and most comfortable spirit. And as the contemplative life is most worthy and divinely preferred by Plato to the active, as much as the head to the foot, the eye to the hand, reason to sense, the soul to the body, the end itself to all things directed to the end; quiet to motion, and eternity to time; so much prefer I divine Poesy to all worldly wisdom. To the only shadow of whose worth, yet, I entitle not the bold rhymes of every aspish and impudent braggart, though he dares assume anything; such I turn over to the weavings of cobwebs; and shall but chatter on molehills (far under the hill of the Muses) when their fortunatesest self-love and ambition hath advanced them highest. Poesy is the flower of the Sun, and disdains to open to the eye of a candle. So kings hide their treasures and counsels from the vulgar, ne revellent (saith our Spondanus.) We have example sacred enough, that true Poesy's humility, poverty and contempt, are badges of divinity, not vanity. Bear then, and bark against it, ye wolf-faced worldlings; that nothing but honours, riches, and magistracy, nescio quae surgidé spiritatis (that I may use the words of our friend still) quae solas leges Justitiæm exactis; paragrapheum omnem aut alterum, pluris quum vos propi faciatis, &c. I (for my part) shall ever esteem it much more manly and sacred, in this harmless and pious study, to sit till I sink into my grave, than shine in your vainglorious bubbles and impieties; all your poor policies, wisdoms and their trapings, at no more valuing than a musty nut. And much less I weigh the frontless detractions of some stupid ignorants; that no more knowing me than their own beastly ends, and I ever (to my knowledge) blest from their sight, whisper behind me villifyings of my translation; out of the French affirming them, when both in French, and all other languages but his own, our with-all-skill-enriched Poet is so poor and unpleasant that no man can discern from whence flowed his so generally given eminence and admiration. And therefore (by any reasonable creature's conference of my slight comment and conversion) it will easily appear how I shun them, and whether the original be my rule or not. In which he shall easily see, I understand the understandings of all other interpreters and commentators in places of his most depth, importance, and rapture. In whose exposition and illustration, if I abhor from the sense that others wrest and rack out of him, let my best detractor examine how the Greek word warrants me. For my other fresh fry, let them fry in their foolish galls; nothing so much weighed as the barkings of puppies, or foisting hounds, too vile to think of our sacred Homer, or set their profane feet within their lives' lengths of his thresholds. If I fail in something, let my full performance in other some restore me: haste spurring me on with other necessities. For as at my conclusion, I protest, so here at my entrance, less than fifteen weeks was the time in which all the last twelve books were entirely new translated. No conference had with any one living in all the novels I presume I have found. Only some one or two places I have showed to my worthy and most learned friend, Master Harriot, for his censure how much mine own weighed; whose judgment and knowledge in all kinds, I know to be incomparable and bottomless; yea, to be admired as much, as his most blameless life, and the right sacred expense of his time, is to be honoured and revered. Which affirmation of his clear unmatcheness in all manner of learning I make in contempt of that nasty objection often thrust upon me; that he that will judge must know more than he of whom he judgeth; for so a man should know neither God nor himself. Another right learned, honest, and entirely loved friend of mine, Master Robert Hewes, I must needs put into my confessed conference touching Homer, though very little more than that I had with Master Harriot. Which two, I protest, are all, and preferred to all. Nor charge I their authorities with any allowance of my general labour; but only of those one or two places, which for instances of my innovation, and how it showed to them, I imparted. If any tax me for too much periphrasis or circumlocution in some places, let them read Laurentius Valla, and Eobanus Hessus, who either use such shortness as cometh nothing home to Homer; or, where they shun that fault, are ten parts more paraphrasial than I. As for example, one place I will trouble you (if you please) to confer with the original, and one interpreter for all. It is in the end of the third book, and is Helen's speech to Venus fetching her to Paris from seeing his cowardly combat with Menelaus; part of which speech I will here cite:

Oida to dekimon 'Alepbo 'Menálakes Neikrados, &c.

For avoiding the common reader's trouble here, I must refer the more Greekish to the rest of the speech in Homer, whose translation ad verbum by Spondanus I will here cite, and then pray you to confer it with that which followeth of Valla.

Quoniunm verbum auctus Alexandrum Menelau Postquam victi, sumpserat me donum abducere, Proprietae verbum non dulce (ceu dolos) cogitantes advenisti?
Sede apud ipsum vacans, deorum abnegab vaia,
Neque vacans tum pedibus rerum in catam,
Sede semper circa eam arhumus perfeciat, et ipsum servus Donec te vel uxorem faciat, vel hic servam, &c.

Valla thus:

"Quoniunm victi Paride, Menelaus me miseram est repulsit ad lares, ideo tu, ideo falsit sub imagine venisti, ut me deciperes ob tuum nimiam in Paridem benevolentiam. Sed dum illi adses, dum illi studes, dum pro ilio sagatis, dum illum observas arque custodias, deorum commercium religiasti. Nec ad eos reversura est amplius; adeo (quantum suspicor) aut uxor ejus efficiens, aut ancilla." &c.

Wherein note if there be any such thing as most of this in Homer; yet only to express, as he thinks, Homer's conceit, for the more pleasure of the reader, he useth this over-
TO THE READER.

plus, dum illi aedes, dum illi studes, dum pro illo salagis, dum illum observas, atque custodis, doctum commercium reliquistis. Which (besides his superfluity) is utterly false. For where he saith religiussi doctum commercium, Helen said, Oeus \*aucebas *aucebas, doctum autem adnegi, or adnue, ria, \*aucebas (pel \*aucebas as it is used poetically) signifying denegare, or adnue; and Helen (in contempt of her too much observing men) bids her renounce heaven, and come live with Paris till he make her his wife or servant; sceptically or scornfully speaking it; which both Valla, Eobanus, and all other interpreters (but these ad verbum) have utterly missed. And this one example I thought necessary to insert here, to show my detractors that they have no reason to vilify my circumspection sometimes, when their most approved Grecians, Homer's interpreters generally, hold him fit to be so converted. Yet how much I differ, and with what authority, let my impartial and judicial reader judge. Always conceiving how pedantical and absurd an affectation it is in the interpretation of any author (much more of Homer) to turn him word for word, when (according to Horace and other best lawgivers to translators) it is the part of every knowing and judicial interpreter, not to follow the number and order of words, but the material things themselves, and sentences to weigh diligently, and to clothe and adorn them with words, and such a style and form of oration, as are most apt for the language into which they are converted. If I have not turned him in any place falsely (as all other his interpreters have in many, and most of his chief places), if I have not left behind me any of his sentence, elegance, height, intention, and invention, if in some few places (especially in my first edition, being done so long since, and following the common tract) I be something paraphrasistical and faulty, is it justice in that poor fault (if they will needs have it so) to drown all the rest of my labour? But there is a certain envious windsucker, that hovers up and down, laboriously engrossing all the air with his luxurious ambition, and buzzing into every ear my detraction, affirming I turn Homer out of the Latin only, &c., that sets all his associates, and the whole rabble of my maligers on their wings with him, to bear about my impair, and poison my reputation. One that, as he thinks, whatsoever he gives to others, he takes from himself; so whatsoever he takes from others, he adds to himself. One that in this kind of robbery doth like Mercurry, that stole good and supplied it with counterfeit bad still. One like the two gluttons, Philoxenus and Gnatho, that would still empty their noses in the dishes they loved, that no man might eat but themselves. For so this kestrel, with too hot a liver, and lust after his own glory, and to devour all himself, discourageth all appetites to the fame of another. I have stricken, single him as you can. Nor note I this, to cast any rubs or plasters out of the particular way of mine own estimation with the world; for I resolve this with the willfully obscure:

Sine honore vivam, maloque numero ero.

Without men's honours I will live, and make No number in the meanest course they take.

But, to discourage (if it might be) the general detraction of industrious and well-meaning virtue, I know I cannot too much diminish and deject myself; yet that passing little that I am, God only knows, to whose ever-improved respect and comfort I only submit me. If any further edition of these my silly endeavours shall chance, I will mend what is amiss (God assisting me) and amplify my harsh Comment to Homer's far more right, and mine own earnest and ingenious love of him. Notwithstanding, I know, the curious and envious will never sit down satisfied. A man may go over and over, till he come over and over, and his pains be only his recompense; every man is so loaded with his particular head, and nothing in all respects perfect, but what is perceived by few. Homer himself hath met with my fortune, in many malingers; and therefore may my poor self put up with motion. And so little I will respect malignity, and so much encourage myself with mine own known strength, and what I find within me of comfort and confirmance (examining myself throughout with a far more jealous and severe eye than my greatest enemy, imitating this:

Judex ipse sui totum se explorat ad unguem, &c.), that after these Iliads, I will (God lending me life and any meanest means) with more labour than I have lost here, and all uncheck'd alacrity, dive through his Odysses. Nor can I forget here (but with all hearty gratitude remember) my most ancient, learned, and right noble friend, Master Richard Stapilton, first most desertful made the frame of our Homer. For which (and much other most ingenious and undeserved desert) God make me amply his requirer; and be his honourable fam. speedy and full restorer. In the mean space, I entreat my impartial and judg Reader, that all things to the quick he will not pare, but humanely and nobly part defects; and, if he find anything perfect, receive it unenvied.

OF HOMER.

Of his country and time, the difference is so infinite amongst all writers, that the no question, in my conjecture, of his antiquity beyond all. To which opinion nearest I will cite, Adam Cedrenus placeth him under David's and Solomon's rule. The Destruction of Troy under Saul's. And of one age with Solomon, Michael G. Siculus affirmeth him. Aristotle (in terrae de poetis) affirmeth he was born in the isle begot of a Genius, one of them that used to dance with the Muses, and a virgin that is compressed by that Genius, who being quick with child (for shame of the she came into a place called Aegina, and there was taken of thieves, and brought to Smyrna, to Mæon king of the Lydians, who for her beauty married her. After whom she walking near the flood Meletes, on that shore being overtaken with the three her delivery, she brought forth Homer, and instantly died. The infant was received Mæon, and brought up as his own till his death, which was not long after. according to this, when the Lydians in Smyrna were afflicted by the Æolians thought fit to leave the city, the captains by a herald willing all to go out that would follow them, Homer, being a little child, said he would also leave (that is, and of that, for Melesigeneus, which was his first name, he was called Homer.

Plutarch.

The varieties of other reports touching this I omit for length; and in place think it not unfit to insert something of his praise and honour amongst the great all ages; not that our most absolute of himself needs it; but that such authentic testimonies of his splendour and excellence may the better convince the malice maligners.

First, what kind of person Homer was, saith Spondanus, his statue teacheth, Cedrenus describeth. The whole place we will describe that our relation may be better coherence, as Nylander converts it. "Then was the Octagonon at Corinth consumed with fire; and the bath of Severus, that bore the name of Zeus in which there was much variety of spectacle and splendour of arts; the works ages being conferred and preserved there, of marble, rocks, stones, and iron brass; to which this only wanted, that the souls of the persons they presented were in them. Amongst these master-pieces and all-wit-exceeding worksmanship Homer, as he was in his age; thoughtful and musing, his hands folded bene bosom, his beard untrimmed and hanging down, the hair of his head in like so on both sides before, his face with age and cares of the world, as these in wrinkled and austere, his nose proportioned to his other parts, his eyes fixed or up to his eyebrows, like one blind, as it is reported he was." (Not born blind Velleius Paterculus, which he that imagines, saith he, is blind of all senses.) his under-coat he was attired with a loose robe, and at the base beneath his brazen chain hung." This was the statue of Homer, which in that condition perished. Another renowned statue of his, saith Lucian in his Encomium of Ithacenses, stood in the temple of Ptolomy, on the upper hand of his own Cedrenus likewise remembereth a library in the palace of the king, at Constantinople that contained a thousand and a hundred and twenty books; amongst which there went of a dragon of an hundred and twenty foot long; in which, in letters of gold Ilid of Homer were inscribed; which miracle, in Basiliscos Emperor's time, was consumed with fire.
For his respect amongst the most learned, Plato in Ione calleth him ἄρωτον καὶ ὕμνητος τῶν ποιῶν, Ποιητῶν omnia et praestantium et divinissimum; in Phaon ἔκειν ποιηθείς, divinum Poetum; and in Theaetetus, Socrates citing divers of the most wise and learned for confirmation of his then held opinion, as Protagoras, Heraclitus, Empedocles, Epicharmus, and Homer: Who, saith Socrates, against such an army, being all led by such a captain as Homer, dares fight or resist, but he will be held ridiculous? This for Scaliger and all Homer's envious and ignorant detractors. Why, therefore, Plato in another place banisheth him with all other poets out of his Commonwealth, dealing with them like a Politician indeed, use men, and then cast them off, though Homer he thinks fit to send out crowned and anointed, I see not; since he maketh still such honourable mention of him, and with his verses, as with precious gems, everywhere enshath his writings. So Aristotole continually celebrateth him. Nay, even amongst the barbarous, not only Homer's name, but his Poems have been recorded and reverenced. The Indians, saith Αelianus (Var. Hist. lib. xii. cap. 46), in their own tongue had Homer's Poems translated and sung. Nor those Indians alone, but the kings of Persia. And amongst the Indians, of all the Greek poets, Homer being ever first in estimation; whencesover they used any divine duties according to the custom of their households and hospitalities, they invited ever Apollo and Homer. Lucian in his Eneomachian Demosthenes affirmeth all Poets celebrated Homer's birthday, and sacrificed to him the first fruits of their verses. So Thersagoras answereth Lucian, he used to do himself. Alex. Paphius, saith Eustathius, delivers Homer as born of Egyptian parents, Damassoros, being his father, and Αθηρα his mother; his nurse being a certain prophetess and the daughter of Oris, Isis' priest, from whose breasts, oftentimes, honey flowed in the mouth of the infant. After which, in the night, he uttered nine several notes or voices of owls—viz., of a swallow, a peacock, a dove, a crow, a partridge, a redshank, a stare, a blackbird and a nightingale; and, being a little boy, was found playing in his bed with nine doves. Sibylla being at a feast of his parents was taken with sudden fury, and sung verses whose beginning was Διασακιορνικος παλαικος: polyrnic, signifying much victory, in which song also she called him μεγέλος, great in glory, and ἀγαθανίας, signifying garland-seller; and commanded him to build a temple to the Pegridarli, that is, to the Muses. Herodotus affirms that Phaemius, teaching a public school at Smyrna, was his master; and Dionysius in 50 oration saith, Socrates was Homer's scholar. In short, what he was, his works show most truly; to which, if you please, go on and examine him.

TO THE

MOST HONOURED NOW LIVING INSTANCE OF THE ACHELLEAN VIRTUES TERNIZED BY DIVINE HOMER,

THE EARL OF ESSEX,

EARL MARSHAL, ETC.*

How irrational and brutish an impiety soever it be, not only to increase the curse of humanity in making the scar of the body the crown of the soul, but to murder and bury her in it; none needs to be benumbed with admiration, since her intellectual blood is shed with such authority, prerogament, and profession; and to be a perfect

villainizer of her faculties, is to seat Custom and Imputation, like Justice and Wisdom on both sides of his chair, crowning him with honour. And this even of a plague necessity must come to pass; since all the means we have to make her excellent known to us, and to forge out of that holy knowledge darts to enamour us with her unpainted beauties, are held with too true experience of their effects, the only parasite to entangle our estates in miseries and massacres. Her substance yet, being too pure and illustrious to be discerned with ignominious barbarous sense; and the manner whereon she works too passive and drossy to propagate her earthly residence of eternity; she hath devised, in despite of that worm-eaten idol, another fruitless, dead and despised receptacle, to reverse her appearance with unspeakable profit, comfort and life to all posterities; and that is this poor scribbling, this toy, this too living preservative for the deathful tombs of nobility; being accounted in out most genteel and complimental use of it, only the droppings of an idle humour; far unworthy the serious expense of an exact gentleman’s time. So is poor learning the inseparable Genus of this Homeriical writing I intend; wherein notwithstanding the souls of all the recorded worthies that ever lived, become eternally embodied even upon earth; and our understanding parts making transition in that we understand, the lives of worthy termed poets are their earthly Elysiums, wherein we walk with survival of all the deceased worthies we read of; every conceit, sentence, figure, and word being a more beautiful lineament of their souls’ infinite bodies; and could a beauty be object of sense, composed of as many divine members, and that we had senses responsible for their full apprehension, they should impress no more pleasure to such a body, than sweetly enjoyed in this true manner of communication and combination of souls. But as it is not possible such a beauty and such organs of apprehension should be composed no more can any sensual delight compare with the felicity of the mind. And ought not this to be so, where the incomprehensible figure of God is diffused in sacred and eternizing beams, where we have in earth society with eternity? All this walks up the bosom of Death in the worthiest writing; and shall a man veil to a painted heggy on horseback, and go saucily by such a godlike resplendence with a wall-eye and horned countenance? For as number, sound, and rhyme can challenge no inclusion of the soul without divine invention, judgment, and disposition, no more can the souls expect eternity on earth without such eternal writing. And to cast this with our vanities at our backs, is to bear the lives of beasts in our bosoms; in which base portraiture is ever borne contempt of fame, honour, and love of the best; which never failed accompanying any humane or less barbarous condition. To you then, most abundant president of true noblesse, in whose manifest action all these sacred objects are divinely pursued, I most humbly and affectionately dedicate this president of all learning, virtue, valour, honour, and society; who with his own soul hath eternized armies of kings and princes; whose imperial muse, great monarch of the world would say effect more of his conquests than his universal power. And therefore at Achilles’ tomb, with most holy impression of fame, and the zeal of eternity, pronounced him most happy to have so firm an eternizer in Homer.

Most true Achilles, whom by sacred prophecy Homer did but prefigure in admirable object, and in whose unmatched virtues shine the dignities of the soul, the whole excellence of royal humanity, let not the peasant-common politics of the world, that count all things servile and simple, that pamper not their private sensualities, burying quick in their filthy sepulchres of earth the whole bodies and souls of honour, virtue, and piety, stir your divine temper from perseverance in godlike pursuance of eternity.

We must assure ourselves that the soul hath use, comfort, and benefit in dissolution and second being, of the fame, love, and example she proposed here, she hath general combination with blessed Eternity; and fame, love, and example being all eternal.

Now if eternity be so victorious and triumphant a goddess that with her admirable foot, she treads upon sceptres, riches, senses, sensualities, and all the saffron-gilt pomp of ignorant braveries, only knowledge having the assentful spirit to tread on this foot, and be lifted to the height and sweetness of her bosom, what place with greatest doth an eternizer merit? The foot and the back parts? how to be accounted?
according to his unfashionable habit of poverty, that like the poisoned mists of thawing muckpits smokes from the hoarded treasure of soulless gold-worms? If the crown of humanity be the soul, and the soul an intellectual beam of God, the essence of her substance being intellec, and intellec or understanding the strength and eminence of her faculties, the differencing of men in excellency must be directed only by their proportions of true knowledge. Homerical writing then being the native deduction, image and true heir of true knowledge, must needs in desert inherit his father’s dignity.

Help then renowned Achilles, to prefer and defend your grave and blameless Prophet of Phœbus from the doting and vicious fury of the two Atrides, Arrogancy and Destraction; be dreadless bulwarks to bashful and fainting virtue against all those whose faces Barbarism and Fortune have concealed with standing lakes of Impudence; who being damned up with their muddy ignorance, retain no feeling of that to which all their senses are dutifully consecrate; against our sieve-witted censors, through whose brains all things exact and refined, run to the earth in heaps; when nothing remains but stones and unserviceable rubbish. And gratulate in English extraction with free and honourable encouragement, this poor assay of Poesy’s Greek Nectar; which I durst not more liberally pour out, for fear of vulgar profanation; if that divine sweetness and nourishment it hath wrought in divinest temper should for want of palate and constitution in others want his due attribution. My hope of excuse therefore may be worthily grounded, since this penury being effected with such store of labour, and so much quintessence to be drawn from so little a project, it will ask as much judgment to peruse worthily as whole volumes of mere pervial inventions.

Besides this enforced breach of the commandment to live without care of morrow (which ever carries his confounded punishment with it, distracts invention necessary even in translation) interrupts the industry of conceit, and the discourse of the soul, and then the too true consideration, that whatsoever is laboured in this kind is esteemed but idleness and vanity, though of such sacred importance that all wholesome laws and constitutions have heretofore been exhalted, and the conceit, direction, and highest wing of most grave souls have taken strength and inspiration from it: This I say, most excellent Earl, could not as yet admit more English to this most excellent Poet and Philosopher; the flood and variety of my native language as it were with dullness fettered in my unhappy bosom; and every comfort that might dissolve and encourage it, utterly bereft me; your honoured countenance yet and vouchsafed reacknowledgment of one so unworthy as myself, being the great objects of all my labours in their first dedication, shall draw on the rest.

And thus wishing for the worthy expense of my future life to follow by all opportunity your honoured attempts and admired disposition, I doubt not my zeal to the truth of your rare virtues will enable me, inferior to none, to turn my paper to crystal, from whence no time shall raise the engraven figure of your graces. In the meantime, if your Lordship descend to acception of these few disordered likes, I shall recompense their defects in their next edition. Nor can it be reputed an unworthy incitement to propose the true image of all virtues and humane government, even in the heart of this tumultuous season, to your other serious affairs; especially since it contains the true portrait of ancient stratagems and disciplines of war; wherein it will be worthy little less than admiration of your apprehensive judgment to note in many things the affinity they have with your present complements of field: the orations, counsels, attempts, and exploits, not to be exceeded by the freshest brains of this hot-spirited time; the terror of arms endlessly thundering; piety, justice, valour, and royalty, eternally shining in his soul-infused verse. To which (honourably pardoning this tedious induction, turn and hear your divine Homer) according to Spondamus’ attraction, magnifict canonem.

By him that first, and ever freely consecrates his whole faculties to the honour of your princely virtues,

GEORGE CHAPMAN,
TO THE READER.

I suppose you to be no mere reader, since you intend to read Homer; and therefore wish I may walk free from their common objections which can only read. When disorder is seen, that four books are skipped, as a man would say, and yet the poem continued according to the Greek alphabet—viz., that for Gamma which is Eta, and that for Delta which is Theta, &c.; then comes my known condemnation more grievously than charity would wish: especially with those that having no eyes to perceive and judge of the translation, and whatsoever the main matter deserves, will be glad to show they see something in finding fault with that form; and peradventure find the queasy stomachs turned at whatsoever is merited in the much-laboured work.

But to him that is more than a reader, I write; and so consequently to him that will disdain those easy objections which every speller may put together. The word skillful and worthy translator, is to observe the sentences, figures, and forms of speech proposed in his author; his true sense and height, and to adorn them with figures: forms of oration fitted to the original, in the same tongue to which they are translated, and these things I would gladly have made the questions of whatsoever my labours have deserved: not slighted with the slight disorder of some books, which if I cannot in as fit place hereafter without check to your due understanding and course of the Poet, then is their easy objection answered that I expect will be drowned in the foam of their eager and empty spleens. For likelihood of which ability, I have good authority, that the books were not set together by Homer himself; Lycurgus first bringing them out of Ionia in Greece as an entire poem; before whose time his verses were discovered into many works, one called the battle fought at the fleet; another, Dolonides; another, Agamemnon’s fortitude; another, the Catalogue of ships; another, Patroclus’ death; another, Hector’s redemption; another, the funeral games, &c., which are the titles of several Hildas: and if those were ordered by others, why may I challenge as much authority, reserving the right of my precedent? But to omit this, I can say further for reason to my present alteration, in the next edition when it come out by the dozen, I will reserve the ancient and common received form; in meantime, do me the encouragement to confer that which I have translated with the same in Homer, and according to the worth of that, let this first edition pass; so shall ye do me but lawful favour, and make me take pains to give you this Emperor of wisdom (for so Plato will allow him) in your own language, which will more honor it, if my part be worthily discharged, than anything else can be translated. In meantime, peruse the pamphlet of errors in the impression, and help to point the same with your judgment, wherein, and in purchase of the whole seven, if you be quick to accept, you shall in the next edition have the life of Homer, a table, a preface, true printing, the due praise of your mother tongue above all others: Poesy, and such demonstrative proof of our English wits above beyond-sea men, if we would use them, that a proficient wit should be the better to hear it.

TO THE MOST HONOURED EARL,

EARL MARSHAL.*

SPONDANUS, one of the most desertful commenters of Homer, calls all sorts of men learned to be judicial beholders of this more than artificial and no less than divine creation; than which nothing can be imagined more full of soul and humane extract for what is here prefigured by our miraculous artist, but the universal world, which if

so spacious and almost unmeasurable, one cirelet of a shield represents and embraces? In it heaven turns, the stars shine, the earth is enflowered, the sea swells and rageth, cities are built; one in the happiness and sweetness of peace, the other in open war and the terrors of ambush, &c. And all these so lively proposed, as not without reason many in times past have believed, that all these things have in them a kind of voluntary motion; even as those tripods of Vulcan, and that Dedicatory Venus ἀντικείμενος; nor can I be resolved that their opinions be sufficiently refuted by Aristonicus, for so are all things here described by our divinest poet, as if they consisted not of hard and solid metals, but of a truly living and moving soul. The ground of his invention he shows out of Eustathius, intending by the origiinity of the Shield, the roundness of the world; by the four metals, the four elements: viz., by Gold, fire; by Brass, earth for the hardness; by Tin, water, for the softness and inclination to fluxure; by Silver, air, for the grossness and obscurity of the metal before it be refined. That which he calls ἀντικείμενος, he understands the Zodiac, which is said to be triple for the latitude it contains, and shining by reason of the perpetual course of the Sun made in that circle; by ἀντικείμενος, he means the Axle-tree, about which heaven hath his motion, &c. Nor do I deny, saith Spandonus, Aeneas' arms to be forged with an exceeding height of wit by Virgil, but compared with those of Homer they are nothing. And this is it, most honoured, that maketh me thus suddenly translate this Shield of Achilles, for since my publication of the other seven books, comparison hath been made between Virgil and Homer; who can be compared in nothing with more deceit and cutting of all argument, than in these two Shields; and whosoever shall read Homer throughly and worthily, will know the question comes from a superficial and too unripe a reader; for Homer's poems were writ from a free fury, an absolute and full soul; Virgil's out of a courtly, laborious, and altogether imitative spirit; not a simile he hath but is Homer's; not an invention, person, or disposition, but is wholly or originally built upon Homeric foundations, and in many places hath the very words Homer useth; besides, where Virgil hath had no more plentiful and liberal a wit, than to frame twelve imperfect books of the troubles and travails of Aeneas, Homer hath of as little subject finished eight and forty perfect; and that the trivial objection may be answered, that not the number of books, but the nature and excellence of the work commends it; all Homer's books are such as have been precedents ever since of all sorts of poems; imitating none, nor ever worthily imitated of any; yet would I not be thought so ill created as to be a malicious detractor of so admired a poet as Virgil, but a true justifier of Homer, who must not be read for a few lines with leaves turned over capriciously in dismembered fractions, but throughout; the whole drift, weight, and height of his works set before the apprehensive eyes of his judge. The majesty he enthrones, and the spirit he infused into the scope of his work, so far outshining Virgil, that his skirmishes are but mere scramblings of boys to Homer's; the silken body of Virgil's muse cunningly dressed in gilt and embroidered silver, but Homer's in plain, massy, and unvalued gold; not only all learning, government, and wisdom being deduced as from a bottomless fountain from him; but all wit, elegance, disposition and judgment. Homer saith Plato, was the prince and master of all praises and virtues; the emperor of wise men; an host of men against any depraver in any principle he held. All the ancient and lately learned have had him in equal estimation. And for any to be now contrarily affected, it must needs proceed from a mere wantonness of wit; an idle, unthrifty spirit; willful because they may choose whether they will think otherwise or not, and have power and fortune enough to live like true men without truth; or else they must presume of puritanical inspiration, to have that with delicacy and squeamishness which others with as good means, ten times more time, and ten thousand times more labour could never conceive. But some will convey their imperfections under his Greek Shield, and from thence bestow bitter arrows against the traduction, affirming their want of admiration grows from defect of our language, not able to express the copy and elegance of the original; but this easy and traditional pretext hides them not enough; for how full of height and roundness soever Greek be above English, yet is there no depth of conceit triumphing in it, but as in a mere admirer it may be imagined, so in a sufficient translator it may be expressed. And Homer that hath his chief holiness of estimation, for matter and instruction, would seem to have his supreme worthiness glossing in his courtship and privilege of tongue. And if Italian, French, and Spanish have not made it dainty, nor thought it any presumption to turn him into their languages, but a fair and honourable labour, and, in respect of their country's profit and their poet's credit, almost necessary, what curious, proud, poor shamefacedness should let an English muse to traduce him, when the language she works withal is more conformable, fluent, and expressive; which I would your Lordship would command me to prove against all other whippers of their own compliment in their country's dialect.

O what peevish ingratitude and most unreasonable scorn of ourselves we commit to be so extravagant and foreignly witted, to honour and imitate that in a strange tongue, which we condemn and contempt in our native! for if the substance of the Poet's will be expressed, and his sentence and sense rendered with truth and elegance, he that takes judicial pleasure in him in Greek, cannot bear so rough a brow to him English to entomb his acceptance in austerity.

But thou, soul-blind Scaliger, that never hadst anything but place, time, and terms to paint thy proficiency in learning, nor ever writest anything of thine own impotent brain, but thy only impalpable diminution of Homer (which I may swear was the absolute inspiration of thine own ridiculous genius): never didst thou more palpably damn thy grossly spirit in all thy all-countries-exploited filcheries, which are so gross and biliterate, that no man will vouchsafe their refutation, than in thy senseless reprehension of Homer; whose spirit flew as much above thy grovelling capacity as heaven above Baraunum; but as none will vouchsafe repetition nor answer of thy other unanswerable fancies, no more will I of these; my Epistle being too tedious to your Lordship besides, and no man's judgment serving better (if your high affairs could admit the diligent perusal), than your Lordship's, to refute and reject him. But alas, Homer is now to be lift up by my week arm, more than he is now depressed by more feeble opponents, if any feel not their conceits so ravished with the eminent beauties of ascescal muse, as the greatest men of all sorts and of all ages have been. Their most modest course is, unless they will be powerfully insolent, to ascribe defect to their apprehension, because they read him but slightly, not in his surmised fragility of object, that most really and most feantically pours out himself in right divine occasion. But the chief and unanswerable mean to his general and just acceptance must be your Lordship's high and of all men expected precedent, without which he must be like a poor snail, pull in his English horns, that out of all other languages (in regard to the country's affection and royalties of his patrons) hath appeared like an angel from cloud, or the world out of chaos. When no language can make comparison of him with ours, if he be worthily converted; wherein before he should have been born lame and defective, as the French midwife hath brought him forth, he had never more question how your Lordship would accept him; and yet have two of his kind embraced him as a wealthy ornament to their studies, and the main battle of the armies.

If then your bounty would do me but the grace to confer my unhappy labours with so successful and commended, (your judgment serving you much better than your leisure, and yet your leisure in things honourable being to be enforced by your judgment), no malicious and dishonourable whisperer, that comes armed as an army of authority and state against harmless and armless virtue, could wrest a wanted impression so much from itself to reject, with imitation of tyrannous content any affection so zealous and able in this kind to honour your estate as mine. Kings and princes have been Homer's patrons, amongst whom, Polteny would say that had slight hands to entertain Homer, had as slight brains to rule his country's wealth. And an usual severity he used, but a most rational (how precise ridiculous soever it may seem to men made of ridiculous matter) that in reverend piety and perfect humanity he taught: whosoever writ or committed any part of the detraction against Homer (as even such a man wanted not his malicious depravity) he put him with tortures to extremest death. O high and magically raised spect, from whence a true eye may see means to the absolute redress, or much wished extenuation, of all the unmanly degeneracies now tyrannizing amongst us, if that which teacheth happiness and hath unpainful corrosives in it (being entertained and observed), to eat out the heart of that raging ulcer, which, like a Lernean Fi seriously and as with armed garrisons defended and heartened; that which engenders and disperseth that wilful pestilence, would be purged and extirpate; but that which teacheth, being overthrown, that which is taught is consequently subject to eversion; and if the honour, happiness and preservation of true humanity consist in observing the laws fit for man's dignity, and that the elaborate prescription of those laws must of necessity be authorized, favoured, and defended before any observation can succeed; is it unreasonable to punish the contemn of that moving prescription with one man's death; when at the heels of it follows common neglect of observation, and in the neck of it, an universal ruin? This, my Lord, I enforce only to interrupt in others that may read this unsavoury stuff, the too open-mouthed damnation of royal and virtuous Ptolemy's severity. For to digest, transform, and sweat a man's soul into rules and attractions to society, such as are fashioned and tempered with her exact and long laboured perfection of study, in which she tosseth with her imperial discourse before her, all cause of fantastical objections and reproofs; and without which she were as wise as the greatest number of detractors that shall presume to censure her; and yet by their flash and insolent castigations to be slighted and turned over their miserably vain tongues in an instant, is an injury worthy no less penalty than Ptolemy inflicted. To take away the heels of which running profanation, I hope your Lordship's honourable countenance will be as the unicorn's horn, to lead the way to English Homer's yet poisoned fountain; for till that favour be vouchsafed, the herd will never drink, since the venomous galls of some of their fellows have infected it, whom, alas, I pity. Thus confidently affirming your name and dignities shall never be more honoured in a poor book than in English Homer, I cease to afflict your Lordship with my tedious Dedicatories, and to still sacred Homer's spirit through a language so fit and so favourless; humbly presenting your Achilles virtues with Achilles' shield; wishing as it is much more admirable and divine, so it were as many times more rich, than the Shield the Cardinal pawned at Antwerp.

Corruption furnaceth the universal sighs and complaints of this transposed world,

By him that wisheth all the degrees of judgment and honour to attend your deserts to the highest, GEORGE CHAPMAN.

TO THE UNDERSTANDER.

You are not everybody, to you, as to one of my very few friends, I may be bold to utter my mind, nor is it more impair to an honest and absolute man's sufficiency to have few friends, than to an Homerical poem to have few commenders; for neither do common dispositions keep fit or plausible consort with judicial and simple honesty, nor are idle capacities comprehensible of an elaborate poem. My Epistle dedicatory before my seven books, is accounted dark and too much laboured: for the darkness there is nothing good or bad, hard or soft, dark or perspicuous, but in respect; and in respect of men's light, slight, or envious perusals (to whose loose capacities any work worthily composed is knit with a riddle) and that the style is material flowing, and not rank: it may perhaps seem dark to rank riders or readers that have no more souls than burbots; but to your comprehension, and in itself, I know it not is not. For the affected labour bestowed in it I protest two mornings both ended it and the Reader's Epistle; but the truth is, my desire and strange disposition in all things I write, is to set down uncommon, and most profitable coherents for the time: yet further removed from abhorred affectation than from the most popular and cold digestion. And I ever imagine that as Italian and French Poems to our studious linguists win much of their disconnadred affection, as well because the understanding of foreign tongues is sweet to their apprehension, as that the matter and invention is pleasing; so my far-fetched, and as it were beyond-sea manner of writing, if they would take as much pains for their poor countrymen as for a proud stranger when they once understand it, should be much more gracious to their choice conceits than a discourse that falls naked before them and hath nothing but what mixeth itself with ordinary table-talk. For my variety of new words, I have none ink-pot I am sure you know, but such as I give passport with such authority, so significant and not ill-sounding, that if my country language were an usurer or a man of this age speaking it, he would thank me for enriching him. Why, alas, will my young master the reader affect nothing common, and yet like nothing extraordinary? Swaggering is a new word amongst them, and round-headed custom gives it privilege with much imitation, being created as it were by a natural Prosopopeia without etymology or derivation; and why not an elegance authentically derived, and as I may say of the upper house, be entertained as well in their lower consultation with authority of Art, as their own forgeries licked up by nature? All tongues have enriched themselves from their original (only the Hebrew and Greek which are not spoken amongst us) with good neighbourly borrowing, and as with infusion of fresh air, and nourishment of new blood in their still growing bodies, and why may not ours? Chaucer, by whom we will needs authorize our true English, had more new words for his time than any man needs to devise now. And therefore for current wits to cry from standing brains, like a brood of frogs from a ditch, to have the ceaseless flowing river of our tongue turned into their frog-pool, is a song far from their arrogation of sweetness, and a sin would soon bring the plague of barbarism amongst us; which in faith it needs not be hastened with defences of his ignorant furtherers, since it comes with meal-mouthed toleration too savagely upon us. To be short; since I had the reward of my labours in their consumption, and the chief pleasure of them in mine own profit, no young prejudicature or castigatory brain hath reason to think I stand trembling under the airy stroke of his severe censure, or that I did ever expect any flowing applause from his dry fingers; but the satisfaction and delight that might probably redound to every true lover of virtue, I set in the seat of mine own profit and contentment; and if there be any one in whom this success is enfloured, a few sprigs of it shall be my garland. Since then this never-equallèd Poet is to be understood, and so full of government and direction to all estates, stern anger and the afflictions of war, bearing the main face of his subject, soldiers shall never spend their idle hours more profitably, than with his studious and industrious perusal; in whose honours his deserts are infinite. Counsellors have never better oracles than his lines; fathers have no morals so profitable for their children as his counsels; nor shall they ever give them more honoured injunction than to learn Homer without book, that being continually conversant in him, his height may descend to their capacities, and his substance prove their worthiest riches. Husbands, wives, lovers, friends, and allies, having in him mirrors for all their duties; all sorts of which concourse and society in other more happy ages, have instead of sonnets and lascivious ballads, sung his Iliads. Let the length of the verse never discourage your endeavours; for talk our quidditcally Italianists of what proportion soever their strutting lips affect, unless it be in these couplets into which I have hastily translated this Shield, they shall never do Homer so much right, in any octaves canzon, canzonets, or with whatsoever Iustian Epigraphs they shall entitle their measures. Only the extreme false printing troubles my conscience, for fear of your deserved discouragement in the impair of your poet's sweetness; whose general divinity of spirit, clad in my willing labours (envious of none nor detracting any) I commit to your good nature and solid capacity, ARGUMENT.

Apollo's priest to the Argive fleet doth bring Gifts for his daughter, prisoner to the king;
For which her tender'd freedom he entreats:
But, being dismissed with contumelious threats,
At Phœbus' hands, by vengeful prayer, he seeks
To have a plague inflicted on the Greeks.
Which had, Achilles doth a council cite, Embodying Calchas, in the king's despite,
To tell the truth why they were punished so.
From hence their fierce and deadly strife did grow.
For wrong in which Eacides so raves,
That goddess Thetis, from her throne of waves
Ascending heaven, of Jove assistance won,
To plague the Greeks by absence of her son,
And make the general himself repent
To wrong so much his army's ornament.
This found by Jove, she with Jove contends;
Till Vulcan, with heaven's cup, the quarrel ends.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Alpha the prayer of Chryses sings:
The army's plague: the strife of kings.

Achilles' baneful wrath resounds, O Goddess, that imposed Infinite sorrows on the Greeks, and many brave souls lost From breasts heroic; sent them far to that Invisible cave
That no light comforts; and their limbs to Dogs and vultures gave:
To all which Jove's will gave effect; from Whom first strife begun Betwixt Atrides, king of men, and Thetis' godlike son.
What god gave Ereis their command, and Oped that fighting vein?
Jove's and Latona's son; who fired against
The king of men,
For contumely shown his priest, infectious Sickness sent
To plague the army, and to death by Troops the soldiers went.
Occasion'd thus Chryses, the priest, came
To the fleet so far;
For payment of unvalued price, his daughter liberty.

The golden sceptre and the crown of Phœbus in his hands Proposing; and made suit to all, but most to the commands
Of both the Atrides, who most ruled.
"Great Atrides, who most ruled,
And all ye well-greaved Greeks, the Gods, Whose habitations be
In heavenly houses, grace your powers
With Priam's razed town, And grant ye happy conduct home! To Win which wish'd renown
Of Jove, by honouring his son, far-shooting Phœbus, deign
For these fit recompenses to dissolve the ran-Sensible chain
Of my loved daughter's servitude." The Greeks entirely gave Glad acclamations, for sign that their de-Sires would have
The grave priest reverenced, and his gifts
Of so much price esteemed.
The General yet bore no much mind, but Viciously degraded
With violent terms the priest, and said:—
"Dotard! I avoid our fleet, Where lingering be not found by me; nor Thy returning feet
Let ever visit us again; lest nor thy godhead's crown,
Nor sceptre, save thee! Her thou seek'st
I still will hold mine own, Till age deflower her. In our court at Argos, far transferr'd
From her loved country, she shall ply her Web, and be prepared
With all fit ornaments my bed. Incease me Then no more.
But, if thou wilt be safe, be gone." This said, the sea beat shore, Obeying his high will, the priest trod off
With haste and fear.
And, walking silent, till he left far off his Enemies' ear;

* Eacides, surname of Achilles, being the grandson of Eacus.
Phoebus, fair-haired Latona’s son, he stirred up with a vow,
To this stern purpose: ‘Hear, thou God that bearest the silver bow,
That Chryses guard’st, most Tenedos with strong hand, and the round
Of Cilla most divine dost walk! O Smintheus! if crown’d With thankful offerings thy rich fane I ever saw, or fired Fat thighs of oxen and of goats to thee, this grace desired
Vouchsafe to me: pains for my tears let these rude Greeks repay, Forced with thy arrows.’ Thus he pray’d, and Phoebus heard him pray;
And, vex’d at heart, down from the tops of steep heaven stoop’d; his bow,
And quiver cover’d round, his hands did on his shoulders throw;
And of the angry deity the arrows as he moved Rattled about him. Like the night he ranged the host, and roved (Apart the fleet set) terribly; with his hard-loosing hand
His silver bow twang’d; and his shafts did first the mules command;
And swift hounds: then the Greeks themselves his deadly arrows shot.
The fires of death went never out; nine days his shafts flew hot
About the army; and the tenth, Achilles called a court;
Of all the Greeks: heaven’s white-arm’d Queen (who, everywhere cut short, Beholding her loved Greeks, by death) suggested it; and he [now I see (All met in one) arose, and said: ‘Atrides, We must be wandering again, flight must be still our stay,
If flight can save us now, at once, sickness and battle lay Such strong hand on us. Let us ask some prophet, priest, or prove Some dream-interpreter (for dreams are often sent from Jove)
Why Phoebus is so much incensed; if un-performed vows
He blames in us, or hecatombs; and if these knees he bows
To death may yield his graves no more, but offering all supply Of savours burnt from lambs and goats, avert his fervent eye,
An turn his temperate.’ Thus, he sate; and then stood up to them Calchas, named Thesitorides, of augurs the supreme;

He knew things present, past, to come, and ruled the equipage.
Of th’ Argive fleet to Ilius, for his prophecies Given by Apollo; who, well-seen in the they felt, proposed
This to Achilles: ‘Jove’s beloved, when thy charge is disclosed
The secret of Apollo’s wrath? then cover, and take oath
To my discovery, that, with words powerful actions both,
Thy strength will guard the truth in because I well conceive
That he whose empire governs all, with all the Grecians give Confirm’d obedience, will be moved: then you know the state Of him that moves him. When a king once mark’d for his hate
A man inferior, though that day his seems to digest
The offence he takes, yet evermore he’s up in his breast Brands of quick anger; till revenge quench’d to his desire
The fire reserved. Tell me, then, if soever ire Suggests in hurt of me to him, thy will prevent?’
Achilles answer’d: ‘All thou know, speak, and be confident;
For by Apollo, Jove’s beloved, (to perform his vows,
O Calchas, for the state of Greece spirit-prophectic shows Skills that direct us) not a man of all Grecians here,
I living, and enjoying the light shot this flowers sphere, Shall touch thee with offensive blow, though Agamemnon be The man in question, that doth boast mighty enmity
Of all our army.’ Then took he prophet unreproved,
And said: ‘They are not unpaid nor hecatombs, that moved
The God against us; his offence is priest impair’d
By Agamemnon, that refused the he prefer’d,
And kept his daughter. This is cause heaven’s Far-darter darts
These plagues amongst us; and this will empty to our hearts
His deathful quiver, uncontain’d, the loved sire
The black-eyed damsel be resigned.
And given our soldiers; which again to take into our hands Were ignominious and base. Now then, since God commands,
Part with thy most-loved prize to him; not any one of us Exacts it of thee; yet we all, all less thou suffer'st thus,
Will treble, quadruple, in gain, when Jupiter bestows
The sack of well-wall'd Troy on us; which by his word he owes.'
"Do not deceive yourself with wit," he answer'd, "god-like man, Though your good name may colour it;
'tis not your swift foot can Outrun me here; nor shall the gloss, set on it with the God, Persuade me to my wrong. Wouldst thou maintain in sure abode
Thine own prize, and slight me of mine?
Resolve this: if our friends,
As fits in equity my worth, will right me with amends,
So rest it; otherwise, myself will enter personally
On thy prize, that of Ithacus, or Ajax, for supply;
Let him on whom I enter rage. But come, we'll order these Hereafter, and in other place. Now put to sacred seas
Our black sail; in it rowers put, in it fit sacrifice;
And to these I will make ascend my so much coveted prize, Bright-check'd Chryses. For conduct of all which, we must choose A chief out of our counsellors. Thy service we must use;
Idomeneus; Ajax, thine; or thine, wise
Ithacus;
Or thine, thou terriblest of men, thou son of Peleus,
Which fittest were, that thou might'st see these holy acts perform'd, For which thy cunning zeal so pleads; and he, whose bow thus storm'd For our offences, may be calm'd." Achillis, with a frown,
Thus answer'd: "O thou impudent! of no good but thine own Ever respectful; but of that, with all craft covetous;
With what heart can a man attempt a service dangerous,
Or at thy voice be spirited to fly upon a foe.
Thy mind thus wretched? For myself, I was not injured so
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILLIADS.

By any Trojan, that my powers should bid them any blows;
In nothing bear they blame of me: Phthia, whose boundless flows
With corn and people, never felt impair of her increase
By their invasion; hills now, and farresounding seas, Pour out their shades and deeps between; but thee, thou frontless man,
We follow, and thy triumphs make with bonfires of our bane:
Thine, and thy brother's vengeance sought, thou dog's eyes, of this Troy
By our exposed lives; whose deserts thou neither dost employ.
With honour nor with care. And now, thou threat'st to force from me
The fruit of my sweat, which the Greeks gave all; and though it be, Compared with thy part, then snatch'd up, nothing; nor ever is At any sack'd town; but of fight, the fetcher in of this,
My hands have most share; in whose toils when I have emptied me
Of all my forces, my amends in liberality.
Though it be little, I accept, and turn pleased to my tent;
And yet that little thou esteem'st too great a continent
In thy incontinent avarice. For Phthia therefore now
My course is; since 'tis better far, than here t' endure that thou Should'st still be ravishing my right, draw my whole treasure dry,
And add dishonour." He replied: "If thy heart serve thee, fly;
Stay not for my cause; others here will aid and honour me;
If not, yet Jove I know is sure; that counsellor is he That I depend on. As for thee, of all our Jove-kept kings Thou still art meet my enemy; strifes, battles, bloody things, Make thy blood-feasts still. But if strength, that these moods build upon,
Flow in thy nerves, God gave thee it; and so 'tis not thine own,
But in his hands still. What then lifts thy pride in this so high?
Home with thy fleet, and Myrmidons; use there their empery;
Command not here. I weigh thee not, nor mean to magnify Thy rough-bewn rages, but, instead, I thus far threaten thee:

Since Phœbus needs will force from Chryseis, she shall go;
My ships and friends shall wait her here, but I will imitate so
His pleasure, that mine own shall take a person, from thy tent Bright-cheek'd Briseis; and so tell strength how eminent My power is, being compared with the all other making fear
To vaunt equality with me, or in proud kind bear Their beards against me." Thetis's so stood vex'd, his heart Bristled his bosom, and two ways dre discursive part;
If, from this thigh his sharp sword did he should make room about Atrides' person, slaughtering him, and his anger out,
And curb his spirit. While these thoughts strived in his blood and mind,
And he his sword drew, down from his Athena stoop'd, and shined
About his temples, being sent by th' Saturnia, who out of her heart had loving been,
And careful for the good of both, stood behind, and took Achilles by the yew curls, and only her look
To him appearance: not a man of rest could see.
He turning back his eye, amazed every faculty;
Yet straight he knew her by her eyes, terrible they were,
Sparkling with ardour, and thus she said:"
Thou seed of Jupiter, Why comest thou? to behold his that boasts our empery?
Then witness with it my revenge, and that insolence die
That lives to wrong me." She retorted:
"I come from heaven to see Thy anger settled, if thy soul will sovereignty
In fit reflection. I am sent from whose affects [gives us both respect, Stand heartily inclined to both.
And cease contention; draw no use words, and such as may Be bitter to his pride, but just; for in what I say,
A time shall come when thrice the of that he forceth now,
He shall propose for recompense of wrongs; therefore throw Reins on thy passions, and serve us." He answer'd: "Though my heart Burn in just anger, yet my soul must conquer th' angry part,
And yield you conquest. Who subdues his earthly part for heaven, Heaven to his prayers subdues his wish." This said, her charge was given Fit honour; in his silver hilt he held his able hand,
And forced his broad sword up; and up he heaven did ascend Minerva, who, in Jove's high roof, that bears the rough shield, took Her place with other deities. She gone, again forsook Patience his passion, and no more his silence could confine His wrath, that this broad language gave:
"Thou ever sheep'd in wine, Dog's face, with heart but of a hart, that nor in th' open eye
Of sight dares thrust into a prease, nor with our noblest lie In secret ambush: These works seem too full of death for thee;
'Tis safer far in th' open host to dare an injury
To any crosser of thy lust. Thou subject-eating king,
Base spirits thou govern'st, or this wrong had been the last foul thing That heaven not lost; yet I vow, and by a great oath swear, Even by this scripture, that, as this never again shall bear*
Green leaves or branches, nor increase with any growth his size, Nor did since first it left the hills, and had his faculties
And ornaments bereft with iron; which now to other end Judges of Greece bear, and their laws, received from Jove, defend; (For which my oath to thee is great) so, whenever need Shall learn with thirst of me thy host, no prayer shall ever breed
Attention in me to their aid, though well-Geserved ways
Afflict thee for them, when to death manslaughtering Hector throws Whole troops of them, and thou torment'st thy vast' mind with conceal Of thy rude rage now, and his wrong that most deserved the right

Of all thy army." Thus, he threw his sceptre 'gainst the ground,
With golden studs stuck, and took seat,
Atrides' breast was drawn'd
In rising choler. Up to both sweet-spoken Nestor stood,
The cunning Pylian orator; whose tongue pour'd forth a flood Of more-than-louey-sweet discourse; two ages were increased Of divers-languaged men, all born in his time and deceased
In sacred Pylos, where he reign'd amongst the third-aged men.
He, well-seen in the world, advised, and thus express'd it then:
"O Gods, our Greek earth will be drawn'd in just tears; rapturous Troy, Her king, and all his sons, will make as just a mock, and joy,
Of these disjunctions; if of you, that all our host excel
In counsel and in skill of fight, they hear this. Come, repel These young men's passions. Y' are not both, put both your years in one, So old as I. I lived long since, and was companion
With men superior to you both, who yet would ever hear My counsels with respect. My eyes yet never witnessed were,
Nor ever will bear of such men as then delighted them;
[pheme,
Phriboth, Exadius, and god-like Poly-Carneus, and Dryas, prince of men, Ægean Theseus,
A man like heaven's immortals form'd;
all, all most vigorous,
Of all men that even those days bred;
most vigorous men, and fought
With beasts most vigorous, mountain beasts, (for men in strength were nought Match'd with their forces) fought with them, and bravely fought them down.
Yet even with these men I conversed, being call'd to the renown
Of their societies, by their suits from Pylos far, to fight
In the Asian kingdom; and I fought, to a degree of might
That help'd even their mights, against such as no man now would dare To meet in conflict; yet even these my counsels still would hear,
And with obedience crown my words. Give you such pain to them;
'Tis better then to wreak your wrath.
Atrides, give not stream

* This simile Virgil directly translates.
To all thy power, nor force his prize, but yield her still his own, As all men else do. Nor do thou encounter with thy crown,
Great son of Peleus, since no king that ever Jove allow'd Grace of a sceptre equals him. Suppose thy nerves endow'd
With strength superior, and thy birth a very goddess gave,
Yet he of force is mightier; since what his own nerves have
Is amplified with just command of many other. King of men, Command thou then thyself; and I with my prayers will obtain Grace of Achilles to subdue his fury; whose parts are Worth our intreaty, being chief check to all our ill in war."
"All this, good father," said the king,
"is comely and good right;
But this man breaks all such bounds; he affects, past all men, height;
All would in his power hold, all make his His hot will for their temperate law; all which he never shall Persuade at my hands. If the Gods have given him the great style Of ablest soldier, made they that his licence to revile Men with vile language?" Thetis' son prevented him, and said:
"Fearful and vile I might be thought, if the exactions laid By all means on me I should bear. Others command to this,
Thou shalt not me; or if thou dost, far my free spirit is
From serving thy command. Beside, this
I affirm (afford) [my sword
Impression of it in thy soul] I will not use On thee or any for a wench; unjustly though thou tak'st
The thing thou gavest; but all things else, that in my ship thou makest Greedy survey of, do not touch without my leave; or do
Add that act's wrong to this, that these may see that outrage too;
And then comes my part; then be sure, thy blood upon my lance Shall flow in vengeance." These high terms these two at variance Used to each other; left their seats; and after them arose
The whole court. To his tents and ships, with friends and soldiers, goes

Angry Achilles. Atreus' son the swift ship launched and put Within it twenty chosen towers, within likewise shut
The Hector, of t' appease the God; the caused to come aboard Fair-cheek'd Chryseis; for the chief, he whom Pallias pour'd Her store of counsels. Ithacus, aboard we last; and then
The moist ways of the sea they sail'd
And now the king of men Bade all the host to sacrifice. They sacricificed, and cast
The offeral of all to the deeps; the ang
God they graced
With perfect hecatombs; some bulls, some goats, along the shore Of the unfruitful sea, inflamed. To hear the thick fumes bore Enwrapped savours. Thus, though all the politic king made show Respects to heaven, yet he himself all the time did pursue
His own affections; the late jar, in which he thunder'd threats Against Achilles, still he fed, and his affi-tions' hearts
Thus vended to Talthybius, and grant
Eurybates, Heralds, and ministers of trust, to all the messages.
"Haste to Achilles' tent; where is Briese's hand, and bring Her beauties to us. If he fail to yield her say your king
Will come means on me with multitudes, that shall the horrider
Make both his presence and your charge so he dares defer."
This said, he sent them with a charge to hard condition.
They went unwillingly, and trod the fearless sea's shore; soon They reach'd the navy and the tents, which the quarter lay
Of all the Myrmidons, and found the chief in their sway
Chief in their sway Set at his black bark in his tent. Nor Achilles glad [any glory
To see their presence; nor themselves Their message, but with reverence stood and fear'd th' offended king, Ask'd not the dame, nor spake a word.
He yet, well knowing the thing
That caused their coming, graced them thus: "Heralds, ye men that bear
The messages of men and gods, you welcome, come ye near."
I nothing blame you, but your king; 'tis he, I know, doth send you for Briseis; she is his. Patroclus, honour'd friend, bring forth the damsel, and these men let lead her to their lord. But, heralds, be you witnesses, before the most adored, before us mortals, and before your most ungentle king, [bring Of what I suffer, that, if war ever hereafter My aid in question, to avert any severest harm I bring. It brings on others, I am 'seused to keep my aid in wane. Since they mine honour. But your king, in tempting mischief, raves. Nor sees at once by present things the future; now like waves Ills follow ills; injustices being never so secure In present times, but after plagues even then are seen as sure. Which yet he sees not, and so soothes his present lust, which, check'd, Would check plagues future; and he might, in succouring right, protect Such as fight for his right at fleet. They still in safety fight, That fight still justly." This speech used, Patroclus did the rite. His friend commanded, and brought forth Briseis from her tent, Gave her the heralds, and away to th' Acheïonic ships they went. She said, and scarce for grief could go. Her love all friends forsook, And wept for anger. To the shore of th' old sea he betook. Himself alone, and casting forth upon the purple sea. His wet eyes, and his hands to heaven advancing, this sad plea Made to his mother: Mother, since you brought me forth to breathe So short a life, Olympus had good right to begin it. My short life honour; yet that right he doth in no degree, But lets Atrides do me shame, and force that prize from me That all the Greeks gave." This with tears he utter'd, and she heard, Set with her old sire in his deeps, and instantly appear'd? Up from the grey sea like a cloud, sate by his side, and said: "Why weeps my son? What grieves thee? speak, conceal not what hath laid Such hard hand on thee, let both know," He, sighing like a storm, Replied: "Thou dost know; why should I things known again inform? We march'd to Thebes, the sacred town of king Eteocles, Sack'd it, and brought to fleet the spoil, which every valiant son Of Greece indifferently shared. Atrides had for share Fair cheek'd Chryseis. After which, his priest that shoots so far, Chryses, the holy fair Chryseis' sire, arrived at th' Acheïonic fleet, With infinite ransom, to redeem the dear imprison'd feet Of his fair daughter. In his hands he held Apollo's crown, [Grecian son, And golden sceptre; making suit to every But most the sons of Atreus, the others' orderers, Yet they least heard him; all the rest received with reverence ears The motion, both the priests and gifts gracing and holding worth His wish'd acceptance. Atrires' son yet (vex'd) commanded forth With rude terms Phoebus' reverend priest; who, angry, made retreat, And pray'd to Phoebus, in whose grace he standing passing great Got his petition. The god an ill shaft sent abroad That tumbled down the Greeks in heaps. The host had no abode That was not visited. We asked a prophet that well knew The cause of all; and from his lips Apollo's prophecies flew, Telling his anger. First myself exhorted to appease The anger'd God; which Atreus' son did at the heart displease, And up he stood, used threats, perform'd. The black-eyed Greeks sent home Chryses to her sire, and gave his God a horseman. Then, for Briseis, to my tents Atrires' heralds came, And took her, that the Greeks gave, all. If then thy powers can frame Wreak for thy son, afford it. Scale Olympus, and implore Joy (if by either word, or fact, thou ever didst restore Joy to his grieved heart) now to help. I oft have heard thee vaunt, In court of Pelus, that alone thy hand was conversant.
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

In rescue from a cruel spoil the black-cloud-gathering Jove, Whom other Godheads would have bound (the Power whose pace doth move The round earth, heaven's great Queen, and Pallas); to whose bands Thou earnest with rescue, bringing up him with the hundred hands To great Olympus, whom the Gods call Briareus, men Ægeon, who his sire surpass'd, and was as strong again, And in that grace sat glad by Jove. Th' immortals stood dismay'd [his aid. At his ascension, and gave free passage to Of all this tell Jove; kneel to him, embrace his knee, and pray If Troy's aid he will ever deign, that now their forces may Beat home the Greeks to fleet and sea; embarking their retreat In slaughter; their pains paying the wreak of their proud sovereign's heat; And that far-ruling king may know, from his poor soldier's harms His own harm falls; his own and all in mine, his best in arms.

Her answer she pour'd out in tears: "O me, my son," said she, "Why brought I up thy being at all, that brought thee forth to be Sad subject of so hard a fate? O would to heaven, that since Thy fate is little, and not long, thou might'st without offence And tears perform it. But to live, thrall to so stern a fate As grants thee least life, and that least so most unfortunate, Grieves me t' have given thee any life. But what thou wishest now, If Jove will grant, I'll up and ask; Olympus crown'd with snow I'll climb; but sit thou fast at fleet, renounce all war, and feed Thy heart with wrath, and hope o. wreak; till which come, thou shalt need A little patience. Jupiter went yesterday to feast Amongst the blameless Æthiopes, in th' ocean's deepen'd breast, All Gods attending him; the twelfth, high heaven again he sees. And then his brass-paved court I'll scale, cling to his powerful knees, And doubt not but to win thy wish." Thus, made she her remove, And left wrath tyring on her son, for his enforced love, Ulysses, with the hecatomb, arrived at Chrysa's shore; And when amidst the haven's deep mouth, they came to use the oar, They straight streak sail, then roll'd them up, and on the hatches threw; The top-mast to the kelseine then, with hail-yards down they drew; Then brought the ship to port with oars; then forked anchor cast; And, 'gainst the violence of storms, for drifting made her fast. All come ashore, they all exposed the holy hecatomb To angry Phsebus, and, with it, Chryseis welcomed home; Whom to her sire, wise Ithacus, that did at th' altar stand, For honour led, and, spoken thus, resign'd her to his hand: "Chryses, the mighty king of men, great Agamemnon, sends Thy loved seed by my hands to shine; and to thy God commends A hecatomb, which my charge is to sacrifice, and seek Our much-sigh-mix'd woe, his recure, invoked by every Greek." Thus he resign'd her, and her sire re-ceived her, highly joy'd. About the altar they stood, then, they orderly employ'd The sacred offering, wash'd their hands, took salt cakes; and the priest, With hands held up to heaven, thus pray'd: "O thou that all things seest, Fauitor of Chrysa, whose fair hand doth guardfully dispose [Tenedos, Celestial Cilla, governing in all power O hear thy priest, and as thy hand, in free grace to my prayers, Shot fervent plague-shafts through the Greeks, now hearten their affairs With health renew'd, and quite remove th' infection from their blood." He pray'd; and to his prayers again the God propitious stood. All, after prayer, cast on salt cakes, drew back, kill'd, flay'd the bees, Cut out and dubb'd with fat their thighs, fair dress'd with doubled leaves, And on them all the sweetbreads prick'd. The priest, with small sere wood, Did sacrifice, pour'd on red wine; by whom the young men stood, And turn'd, in five ranks, spits; on which (the legs enough) they eat The inwards; then in gogots cut the other fit for meat,
And put to fire; which, roasted well, they drew. The labour done,
They served the feast in, that fed all to satisfaction.
Desire of meat and wine thus quench’d, the youth’s crown’d cups of wine Drunk off, and fill’d again to all. That day was held divine.
And spent in prants to the Sun, who heard with pleased ear;
When whose bright chariot stoop’d to sea, and twilight bid the clear,
All soundly on their cables slept, even till the night was worn.
And when the lady of the light, the rosy-finger’d Morn,
Rose from the hills, all fresh arose, and to the camp retired.
Apollo with a fore-light wind their swelling bark inspired.
The beam most hoisted, milk-white sails on his round breast they put,
The mizains strowed with the gale, the ship her course did cut
So swiftly that the parted waves against her ribs did roar; [aloft the sandy shore, Which, coming to the camp, they drew Where, laid on stocks, each soldier kept his quarter as before.
But Peleus’ son, swift-foot Achilles, at a swift step Burn’d in wrath, nor ever came to councils of estate
That make men honour’d; never trod the fierce embattail’d field,
But kept close, and his loved heart pined; what light and cries could yield Thrilling at all parts to the host. And now, since first he told His wrongs to Thetis, twelve fair morns their ensigns did unfold,
And then the ever-living gods mounted Olympus, Jove
First in ascension. Thetis then, remember’d well to move Achilles’ motion, rose from sea, and, by the morn’s first light,
The great heaven and Olympus climb’d; where, in supremest height Of all that many-headed hill, she saw the far-seen son
Of Saturn, set from all the rest, in his free Before whom, on her own knees fall’n, the knees of Jupiter
Her left hand held, her right his chin, and thus she did prefer Her son’s petition: “Father Jove! If ever
I have stood [implored good Aidful to thee in word or work, with this Requite my aid, renown my son, since in so short a race (Past others) thou conﬁnest his life. An insolent disgrace
Is done him by the king of men; he forced from him a prize Won with his sword. But thou, O Jove that art most strong, most wise, Honour my son for my sake; add strength
To the ‘Trojans’ side
By his side’s weakness in his want; and see Troy ampliﬁed
In conquest, so much, and so long, till Greece may give again
The glory reft him, and the more illustrate the free reign
Of his wrong’d honour.” Jove at this sate silent; not a word
In long space pass’d him. Thetis still hung on his knee, implor’d
The second time his help, and said: “Grant, or deny my suit,
Be free in what thou doest; I know, thou canst not sit thus mute
For fear of any; speak, deny, that so I may be sure,
Of all heaven’s Goddesses ’tis I, that only must endure Dishonour by thee.” Jupiter, the great cloud-gatherer, grieving With thought of what a world of griefs this suit ask’d, being achieved; Swell’d, sigh’d, and answer’d: “Works of death thou ursgest. O, at this Juno will storm, and all my powers inflame with tumultuies.
Ever she wrangles, charging me in ear of all the Gods
That I am partial still, that I add the displeasing odds
Of my aid to the Ilians. Begone then, lest she see;
Leave thy request to my care; yet, that trust may hearten thee
With thy desire’s grant, and my power to give it act approve How vain her strife is, to thy prayer my eminent head shall move;
Which is the great sign of my will with all the immortal states; Irrevocable; never falls; never without the
Of all powers else; when my head bows, all heads bow with it still As their first mover; and gives power to any work I will.”
He said; and his black eyebrows bent; above his deathless head
Th’ ambrosian curls flow’d; great heaven shook; and both were severed, Their counsels broken. To the depth of Neptune's kingdom did he dive; The gods from heaven's height arose; and all the Gods received (All rising from their thrones) their Sire, attending to his court. None sate when he rose, none delay'd the furnishing his port Till he came near; all met with him, and brought him to his throne. Nor sate great Juno ignorant, when she beheld alone Old Nereus' silver-footed seed with Jove, that she had brought Counsels to heaven; and straight her tongue had teeth in it, that wrought This sharp invective: "Who was that (thou craftiest counsellor Of all the Gods) that so apart some secret did implore? Ever, apart from me, thou lovest to counsel and decree Things of more close trust than thou thinkest are fit t' impart to me. Whatever thou determinest, I must ever be denied [speech thus replied The knowledge of it by thy will." To her The Father both of men and Gods: 'Have never hope to know My whole intentions, though my wife; it fits not, nor would show Well to thine own thoughts; but what fits thy woman's ear to hear, Woman, nor man, nor God, shall know Before it grace thine ear. Yet what, apart from men and Gods, I please to know, forbear T' examine, or inquire of that." She with the cow's fair eyes, Respected Juno, this return'd: "Austere king of the skies, What hast thou uttered? When did I before this time inquire, Or sift thy counsels? Passing close you are still. Your desire Is served with such care, that I fear you can scarce vouch the deed That makes it public, being seduced by this old sea-god's seed, That could so early use her knees, embracing thine. I doubt, [working out The late act of thy bowed head was for the Of some boon she ask'd; that her son thy partial hand would please With plaguing others." "Wretch!" said he, "thy subtle jealousies Are still exploring; my designs can never 'scape thine eye, [curiosity Which yet thou never canst prevent. Thy Makes thee less cared for at my hands, at horrible the end [suspects intent Shall make thy humour. If it be what 3 Then What then? 'Tis my free will it should to which let way be given With silence. Curb your tongue in time lest all the Gods in heaven Too few be and too weak to help to punish'd insolence, When my inaccessible hands shall fall thee." The sense Of this high threatening made her fear, a silent she sate down, Humbling her great heart. All the Gods in court of Jove did frown At this offence given: amongst who heaven's famous artisan, Ephaistus, in his mother's care, this com speech began: "Believe it, these words will bring wounds, beyond our powers to bear If thus for mortals ye fall out. Ye make tumult here That spoilest our banquet. Evermore we matters put down best. But, mother, though yourself be wise, let your son request His wisdom audience. Give good terms our loved father Jove, For fear he take offence again, and kind banquet prove A wrathful battle. If he will, the heave Lightener can Take you and toss you from your throne your power Olympian Is so surpassing. Soften then with gentle speech his spleen, And drink to him; I know his heart quickly down again." This said, arising from his throne, in loved mother's hand He put the double-handled cup, and said "Come, do not stand On these cross humours; suffer, but through your great bosom grief, And last blows force you; all my aid able to relieve Your hard condition, though these behold it, and this heart Sorrow to think it, "Tis a task dangerous to take part Against Olympus. I myself the proc this still feel. When other Gods would fain have he he took me by the heel, And I hurst me out of heaven. All day was in falling down; At length in Lemnos I strook earth; likewise-falling sun silver bow of our Phoebus; the clear scope and contexture of his work; the full and most beautiful figures of his persons. To those last twelve, then, I must refer you, for all the chief worth of my clear discoveries; and in the mean space I entreat your acceptance of some few new touches in these first. Not perplexing you in first or last with anything handled in any other interpreter, further than I must con- sensibly make congregation with such as have diminished, mangled, and maimed, my most worthily most tendered author.

1 'Aliis prolepses.

2 Κύωσις, εἰμιωσεί τι τῶν (Δίως, &c.) is the vulgar reading, which I read, κύωσιν εἰμιωσεί τι (πάνω Δίως τε τελείως βούλη) because πάνω referred to κύωσιν, &c., is redundant and idle; to the miseries of the Greeks by Jove's counsel, grave, and sententious.

3 'Εγ' οδ θα πρώτα, &c., ex quo guidem primum; Here our common readers would have temporary understood, because διαφή (to which they think the poet must otherwise have reference) is the feminine gender. But Homer understands Jove; as in Taw. verse 223, he expounds himself in these words: αλλα πον Ζείς, &c., which Pindaros Thebanus, in his epitome of these Iliads, rightly observes in these verses:

"Conficiat enim summi sententia Regis,
Ex quo contulerant discordi pectora pugnas Sceptriger Atrides, et bello clarus Achilles."

4 'Ερεσφευγός Ἀχελοι, compocharum Graci all others turn it; but since ερεσφηκομεν signifies properly, fusta acclamationes do significacione approbationis, I therefore accordingly convert it, because the other intimates a comporation of all the Greeks by word; which was not so, but only an inarticulate acclamation or shouts.

5 Αμφιβηθήκον αμφιβοθῆς signifies properly circumambulo, and only metaphorically protego, or tuer, as it is always in this place translated; which suffers alteration with me, since our usual phrase of walking the round in towns of garrison, for the defence of it, fits so well the property of the original.

6 Προσμετρεται enim Deus alicubius Juno. Why Juno should send Pallas is a thing not noted by any; I therefore answer, because Juno is Goddess of state. The allegory, therefore, in the prosopopæia both of Juno and Pallas, is, that Achilles, for respect to the state there present, the rather used that discretion and restraint of his anger. So in divers other places, when state is represented, Juno procures it; as in the eighteenth book, for the state of Patroclus his fetching off. Juno commands the sun to go down before his time, &c.

17 De phatic deprecatione: sidicixit lacrymatus, &c. These tears are called, by our commentators, unworthy, and fitter for children or women than such an hero as Achilles; and therefore Plato is cited in il. de Repub. where he saith, 'Ορθων ἀπο, &c. Meritò cedit clarorum virorum pluribus et medio illorum, &c. To answer which, and justify the fitness of tears generally (as they may be occasioned) in the greatest and most renowned men (omitting examples of Virgil's Æneas, Alexander the Great, &c.), I oppose against Plato, only one precedent of great and most perfect humanity (to whom infinitely above all others we must prostrate our imitations) that shed tears; viz., our All-perfect and Almighty Saviour, who wept for Lazarus. This then, leaving the fitness of great men's tears, generally, utterly unanswerable, these particular tears of unvented anger in Achilles are in him most natural; tears being the highest effects of greatest and most fiery spirits, either when their abilities cannot perform to their wills, or that they are restrained of revenge, being injured, out of other considerations; as now the consideration of the state and gravity of the counsel and public good of the army-curbed Achilles. Who can deny that there are tears of manliness and magnanimity, as well as womanish and pusillanimous? So Diomed wept for cursed heart, when Apollo strook his scourge from him, and hindered his horse-race, having been warned by Pallas before not to resist the deities; and so his great spirits being curbed of revenge for the wrong he received then. So when not-ennought-vented anger was not to be expressed enough by that tear-starting affection in courageous and fierce men, our most accomplished expresser helps the illustration in a simile of his fervour, in most fervent-spirited fowls, resembling the wrathful fight of Sarpedon and Patroclus to two vultures fighting, and crying on a rock; which thus I have afterwards Englished, and here for example inserted:
"Down jump'd he from his chariot; down
leap'd his foe as light;
And as, on some far-seeing rock, a cast of vultures fight,
Fly on each other, strike, and truss; part,
meet, and then stick by,
Tug both with crooked beaks and seres; cry, fight, and fight, and cry.
So fiercely fought these angry kings," &c.

Wherein you see that crying in these eagerly-fought fowls (which is like tears in angry men) is so far from softness or faintness, that to the superlative of hardiness and courage, it expresseth both. Nor must we be so gross to imagine that Homer made Achilles or Diomed blubber, or sob, &c., but, in the very point and sting of their unvented anger, shed a few violent and seething-over tears. What ass-like impudence is it then for any merely vain-glorious and self-loving puff, that everywhere may read these inimitable touches of our Homer's mastery, anywhere to oppose his arrogant and ignorant castigations, when he should rather (with his much better understander Spondanus) submit where he oversees him faulty, and say thus; "Quia tu tamen hoc voluisti, sacro-sanctae tuei sanctorum, me nihil detrahetur."

THE FIRST BOOK OF IOMER'S ILIADS.

THE END OF THE FIRST BOOK.
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.
Jove calls a vision up from Somnus' den
To bid Atrides muster up his men.
The King, to Greeks dissembling his desire,
Persuaded them to their country to retire.
By Pallas' will, Ulysses stays their flight;
And wise old Nestor heartens them to fight.
They take their meat; which done, to arms they go,
And march in good array against the foe.
So those of Troy; when Jove, from the sky,
Of Saturn's son performs the embassy.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
Beta the dream and synod cites;
And catalogue the naval knights.

The other Gods, and knights at arms, all night slept; only Jove
Sweet slumber seized not; he discoursed how best he might approve His vow made for Achilles' grace, and make the Grecians find His miss in much death. All ways cast,
His counsel served his mind
With most allowance; to despatch a harmeful dream to greet
The king of men, and gave this charge:
"Go to the Achive fleet, Pernicious dream, and, being arrived in Agamemnon's tent, [him to convert Deliver truly all this charge. Command His whole host arm'd before these towers; for now Troy's broad-way'd town
He shall take in; the heaven-bossed Gods are now indifferent grown; Juno's request hath won them; Troy now under imminent ills
At all parts labours." This charge heard, the Vision straight fulfil'd;
The ships reach'd, and Atrides' tent, in which he found him laid, Divine sleep pour'd about his powers. He stood above his head Like Nestor, graced of old men most, and this did intimate:
"Sleeps the wise Atreus' tame-horse son? a councillor of state Must not the whole night spend in sleep;
to whom the people are
For guard committed, and whose life stands bound to so much care.
Now hear me, then, Jove's messenger, who, though far off from thee,
Is near thee yet in ruth and care, and gives To arm thy whole host. Thy strong hand the broad-way'd town of Troy Shall now take in; no more the Gods dis sentiously employ Their high-bossed powers; Juno's suit hath won them all to her;
And ill fates overhang these towers, adorn'd by Jupiter.
Fix in thy mind this, nor forget to give in action, when Sweet sleep shall leave thee." Thus he fled; and left the king of men Repeating in discourse his dream, and dreaming still, awake,
Of power, not ready yet for act. O fool, he thought to take
In the next day old Priam's town; now knowing what affairs Jove had in purpose, who prepared, by strong fight, sighs and cares For Grecian and Trojan. The dream gone, his voice still murmured About the king's ears; who sate up, put on him in his bed
His silken inner weed, fair, new; and the in haste arose,
Cast on his ample mantle, tied to his so feet fair shoes,
His silver-bitted sword he hung about his shoulders, took His father's sceptre never stain'd; with then abroad he shook,
And went to fleet. And now great heaven,
Goddess Aurora scaled,
To Jove, and all Gods, bringing light when Agamemnon call'd His heralds, charging them aloud to come to instant court
The thick-hair'd Greeks, The hero call'd; the Greeks made quick res
The Council chiefly be composed of great-minded men,
At Nestor's ships, the Pylian king;
there assembled then,
Thus Atreus' son begun the court: "He friends: A dream divine, Amidst the calm night in my sleep, through my shut eyes shine,
Within my fantasy. His form did passing naturally Resemble Nestor; such attire, a stature just as high.
He stood above my head, and words thus fashion'd did relate:
'Sleeps the wise Atreus'-tame-horse son?
A councillor of state
Most not the whole night spend in sleep;
to whom the people are
For guard committed, and whose life stands bound to so much care.
Now hear me then, Jove's messenger, who, though far off from thee,
Is near thee yet in love and care, and gives command by me
To arm thy whole host. Thy strong hand the broad-way'd town of Troy Shall now take in; no more the Gods disentatively employ Their high-housed powers; Saturnia's suit hath won them all to her;
And ill fates ever-hung these towers, address'd by Jupiter.
Fix in thy mind this. This express'd, he took wing and away,
And sweet sleep left me. Let us then by all our means assay
To arm our army; I will first (as far as fits our right)
Try their addictions, and command with full mind'd ships our flight;
Which if they yield to, oppose you." He sate, and up arose.
Nestor, of sandy Pylos king, who willing to dispose Their counsel to the public good, proposed this to the state:
"Princes and Councillors of Greece, if any should relate
This vision but the king himself, it might be held a tale,
And move the rather our retreat; but since Affirms he saw it, hold it true, and all our best means make To arm our army." This speech used, he first the Council brake.
The other sceptre-bearing States arose too, and obey'd
The people's Rector. Being abroad, the earth was overlaid With flocks to them, that came forth, as when of frequent bees
Swarms rise out of a hollow rock, repairing the degrees
Of their egession endlessly, with ever rising new [still as it faded, grew,
From forth their sweet nest; as their store,
And never would cease sending forth her clusters to the spring.
They still crowd out so; this flock here, that there, belabouring
The loaded flowers; so from the ships and tents the army's store
Troop'd to these princes and the court, along th' unmeasured shore;
Amongst whom, Jove's ambassador,
Fame, in her virtue shined,
Exciting greediness to hear. The rabbles, thus inclined, Hurried together; uproar seized the high court; earth did groan
Beneath the settling multitude; tumult was there alone.
Thrice-three vociferous heralds rose, to check the rout, and get Ear to their Jove-kept governors; and instantly was set
That huge confusion; every man set fast, and clamour ceased;
Then stood divine Atrides up, and in his hand compress'd
His sceptre, th' elaborate work of fiery Mulciber,
His messenger; Who gave it to Saturnian Jove; Jove to His messenger, Argicleus, to Pelops, skill'd in horse;
Pelops to Atreus, chief of men; he, dying, gave it course
To prince Thystes, rich in herds; Thystes to his hand,
Of Agamemnon render'd it, and with it the command
Of many isles and Argos all. On this he leaning, said:
"O friends, great sons of Danaus, Sparta, and thus of the Tartares,
I should return; yet now to mock our hopes built on his vow,
And charge ingloriously my flight, when such an overthrow Of brave friends I have authored. But to his mightiest will We must submit us, that hath razed, and will be razing still Men's footsteps from so many towns, because his power is most,
He will destroy most. But how vile such and so great an host Will show to future times! that, match'd,
With lesser numbers far,
We fly, not putting on the crown of our so long-held war,
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Of which there yet appears no end. Yet should our foes and we Strike truce, and number both our powers;
Troy taking all that be
Her arm'd inhabitants; and we, in tens,
Should all sit down
At our truce banquet: every ten allow'd
One of the town
To fill his feast-cup; many tens would their Attendant want;
So much I must affirm our power exceeds Th' inhabitant.
But their auxiliary bands, those brandishers
Of spears, [our hinderers.
From many cities drawn, are they that are Not suffering well-raised Troy to fall.
Nine years are ended now,
Since Jove our conquest vow'd; and now,
Our vessels rotten grow,
Our tackling fails; our wives, young sons,
Sit in their doors and long
For our arrival; yet the work, that should Have wreak'd our wrong,
And made us welcome, lies unwrought.
Come then, as I bid, all Obey, and fly to our loved home; for now, Nor ever, shall
Our utmost take in broad-way'd Troy.
This said, the multitude
Was all for home; and all men else that What this would conclude Had not discover'd. All the crowd was Shoved about the shore,
In sway, like rude and raging waves,
Roused with the fervent blore
Of th' east and south winds, when they Break from Jove's clouds, and areborne
On rough backs of th' Icarian seas: or like A field of corn
High grown, that Zephyr's vehement gusts
Bring closely underneath,
And make the stiff up-bristled ears do Homage to his breath;
For even so easily, with the breath Atrides Used, was sway'd.
The violent multitude. To fleet with Shouts, and disarray'd,
All rush'd; and, with a fog of dust, their Rude feet dimm'd the day;
Each cried to other, 'Cleanse our ships,
Come, launch, aboard, away.'
The clamour of the runners home reach'd Heaven; and then past fate
The Greeks had left Troy, had not then
The Goddess of estate
Thus spoke to Pallas: "O foul shame,
Thou untamed seed of Jove,
Shall thus the sea's broad back be charged With these our friends' remove?
Thus leaving Argive Helen here? thus Priam graced? thus Troy?
In whose fields, far from their loved home
For Helen's sake, the joy
And life of so much Grecian birth Vanish'd? Take thy way
To our brass-arm'd people; speak them fair;
Let not a man obey
The charge now given, nor launch our ship." She said, and Pallas did
As she commanded; from the tops
Of heaven's steep hill she slid,
And straight the Greeks' swift ships were Reach'd; Ulysses (like to Jove In gifts of counsel) she found out; who That base remove Stirr'd not a foot, nor touch'd a ship; but Grieved at heart to see That fault in others. To him close
The blue-eyed Deity Made way, and said: "Thou wisiest Gre divine Laertes' son,
Thus fly ye homewards, to your ships
Shall all thus headlong ran?
Glory to Priam thus ye leave; glory to His friends,
If thus ye leave her here, for whom Many violent ends
Have closed your Greek eyes, and so
From their so loved home.
Go to these people, use no stay, with Terms overcome
Their foul endeavours, not a man a fall let hoise." Thus spake she; and Ulysses knew Twas Pallas by her voice;
Ran to the runners; cast from him Mantle, which his man
And herald, grave Eurycles, the tri censian
That follow'd him, took up.
Himself Agamemnon went, [des
His incorrupt sceptre took, his scepter
And with it went about the fleet.
A prince, or man of name,
He found right-given, he would rest
With words of gentlest blame:
"Good sir, it fits not you to fly, or
As one afraid,
You should not only stay yourself, but
The people staid.
You know not clearly, though you
The king's words, yet his mind;
He only tries men's spirits now, and,
His trials find
Apt to this course, he will chastise.
You, nor I, heard all
He spake in council; nor durst pre near our General,
Lest we incensed him to our hurt. The anger of a king
Is mighty; he is kept of Jove, and from Jove likewise spring
His honours, which, out of the love of wise Jove, he enjoys."
Thus he the best sort used; the worst, whose spirits brake out in noise, He cudgel'd with his sceptre, child, and said: "Stay, wretch, be still,
And hear thy betters; thou art base, and both in power and skill Poor and unworthy, without name in council or in war. [most irregular,
We must not all be kings. The rule is Where many rule. One lord, one king, propose to thee; and he,
To whom wise Saturn's son hath given both law and empery
To rule the public, is that king." Thus ruling, he restrained
The host from flight; and then again the Council was maintain'd
With such a conourse, that the shore rung with the tumult made;
As when the far-resounding sea doth in his rage invade
His deep-bottom'd waves, whose sides groan with his involved wave,
And make his own breast echo sighs. All safe, and audience gave.
Thersites only would speak all. A most disorder'd store
Of words he foolishly pour'd out, of which his mind held more Than it could manage; anything, with which he could procure Laughing, he never could contain. He should have yet been sure.
To touch no kings; t' oppose their states becomes not jesters' parts.
But he the filthiest fellow was of all that had deserts
In Troy's brave siege; he was squint-eyed, and lame of either foot;
So crook-back'd, that he had no breast; sharp-headed, where did shoot (Here and there spersed) thin mossy hair.
He most of all envied Ulysses and Ajax, whom still his spleen Would chide.
Nor could the sacred King himself avoid his saucy vein;
Against whom since he knew the Greeks did vehement hates sustain,
Being angry for Achilles' wrong, he cried out railing thus:
"Atrides, why complain'st thou now? what wouldst thou more of us?
Thy tents are full of brass; and dames, the choice of all, are thine,
With whom we must present thee first, when any towns resign
To our invasion. Want'st thou then, besides all this, mere gold From Troy's knights to redeem their sons, whom to be dearly sold.
I or some other Greek must take? or wouldst thou yet again
Force from some other lord his prize, to soothe the licks that reign
In thy encroaching appetite? It fits no prince to be [progen
A prince of ill, and govern us, or lead on Bryarpe to ruin. O base Greeks, deserving infamy, By ill's eternal! Greecish girls, not Greeks, ye are: Come, fly Home with our ships; leave this man here to perish with his preys,
And try if we help'd him or not; he wrong'd a man that weighs Far more than he himself in worth, he forced from Thetis' son,
And keeps his prize still. Nor think I that mighty man hath won
The sight of so fair a warly worthy; he's soft, he's too remiss;
Or else, Atrides, his had been thy last of injuries."
Thus he the people's Pastor chid; but straight stood up to him
Divine Ulysses, who, with looks excess grave and grim,
This bitter check gave: "Cease, vain fool to vent thy railing vein
On kings thus, though it serve thee well; nor think thou canst restrain,
With that thy railing faculty, their wills at least degree;
For not a worse, of all this host, came with our King than thee,
To Troy's great siege; then do not take into that mouth of thine
The names of kings; much less revile the dignities that shine
In their supreme states, wresting thus their motion for our home,
To soothe thy cowardice; since ourselves yet know not what will come
Of these designaments: if it be our go, to stay or go.
Nor is it that thou stand'st on; revilest our General so,
Only because he hath so much, not by such as thou
But our heroes. Therefore this thy vein makes me vow
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

(WHICH SHALL BE CURIOUSLY OBSERVED) IF EVER
I SHALL HEAR THIS MADNESS FROM THY MOUTH AGAIN, LET NOT ULYSSES HEAR
THIS HEAD, NOR BE THE FATHER CALLED OF YOUTH
TELEMACHUS,
IF TO THY NAKEDNESS I TAKE AND STRIP THEE NOT, AND THUS WHIP THEE TO FLEET FROM COUNCIL; SEND, WITH SHARP STRIPES, WEeping HENCE THIS GLORY THOU AFFECT'ST TO RAIL." THIS SAID, HIS INSOLENCE
HE SETTLED WITH HIS SCEPTRE; STROOK HIS BACK AND SHOULDERS SO THAT BLOODY WALES ROSE. HE SHRUNK ROUND; AND FROM HIS EYES DID FLOW
MOIST TEARS, AND, LOOKING FIFTY, HE SATE, FEAR'D, SMARTED, DRIED
His BLUBBER'D CHEEKS; AND ALL THE PREASE, THOUGH GRIEVED TO BE DENIED THAT THEY WOULD RETREAT FOR HOME, YET LAUGH'D DELIGHTSOMELY, AND SPAKE EITHER TO OTHER: "O YE GODS, HOW INFINITELY TAKE COUNCLES, GREAT
YSES' VIRTUES IN OUR GOOD! AUTHOR OF IN ORDERING ARMIES, HOW MOST WELL THIS ACT BECAME HIS HEAT,
TO BEAT FROM COUNCIL THIS RUDE FOOL! I THINK HIS SAUCY SPIRIT, HEREAFTER, WILL NOT LET HIS TONGUE ABUSE THE SOVEREIGN SPIRIT, UNTIL FROM SUCH BASE TONGUES AS HIS."
THUS SPAKE THE PEOPLE; THEN
CITY-RAZER Lithacus stood up to speak
AGAIN,
HOLDING HIS SCEPTRE. CLOSE TO HIM GREY-EYED MINERVA STOOD, AND, LIKE A HERALD, SILENCE CAUSED, THAT ALL THE ACHIVE BROAD FROM FIRST TO LAST) MIGHT HEAR AND KNOW
THE COUNSEL; WHEN, INCLINED BOTH THEIR GOOD, ULYSSES SAID: "ATRIDES, NOW I FIND
THESE MEN WOULD RENDER THEE THE SHAME
OF ALL MEN; NOR WOULD PAY THEIR OWN VOWS TO THEE, WHEN THEY TOOK THEIR FREE AND HONOUR'D WAY FROM ARGOS Hither, THAT, TILL TROY WERE BY THEIR BRAVE HANDS RAZED, THEY WOULD NOT TURN HOME; YET, LIKE BABES, AND WIDOWS, NOW THEY HASTE THAT BASE REFUGE. "TIS A SPIRIT TO SEE

ALL CAN WITNESS WELL, (WHOM THESE LATE DEATH-CONFERRING FATES HAVE FAIL'D TO SEND TO HELL) THAT WHEN IN AULIS, ALL OUR FLEET ASSEMBLED WITH A FREIGHT

THE FAIR GROWN HEIGHT
A PLATIN BORE, ABOUT A FOUNT, WHENCE

TO LIGHT BY GREAT OLYMPUS; WHICH, CRAWLING FROM BENEATH
THE ALTAR, TO THE PLATIN CLIMB'D, AND RUTHLESS CRASH'D TO DEATH
A SPARROW'S YOUNG, IN NUMBER EIGHT, THAT IN A TOP-BOUGH LAY
HID UNDER LEAVES; THE DAM THE NINTH, THAT HOVER'D EVERY WAY,
MOURNING HER LOVED BIRTH, TILL AT LENGTH,
THE SERPENT, WATCHING HER,
HER WING 'CAUGHT, AND DEVOUR'D HER TOO
THIS DRAGON, JUPITER, THAT BROUGHT HIM FORTH, TURN'D TO A STONE AND MADE A POWERFUL MAN TO STIR OUR SEALS UP, THAT ADORED, WHEN
OF A FACT SO CLEAN OF ALL ILL AS OUR SACRIFICE, SO FEARFUL AN OSTENT
SHOULD BE THE ISSUE. CALCHAS, THEN, PROPHESIED THIS EVENT:
"WHY ARE YE DUMB, STROOK, FAIR-HAIR

THIS STRANGE OSTENT TO US. TWAS LATE AND PASSING LATELY DONE, BUT THAT GRACE IT FORGEGEOUS TO US, FOR SUFFERING

ENDURE THE HEAT
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Of ravenous war, and, in the tenth, take in this broad-way'd town.'
Thus he interpreted this sign; and all things have their crown
As he interpreted, till now. The rest, then, to succeed
Believe as certain. Stay we all till that most glorious deed
Of taking this rich town, our hands are honour'd with." This said,
The Greeks gave an unmeasured shout;
which back the ships repaid With terrible echoes, in applause of that persuasion [comparision
Divine Ulysses used; which yet held no With Nestor's next speech, which was this: "O shameful thing! ye talk Like children all, that know not war. In what air's region walk Our oaths, and covenants? Now, I see the fit respects of men Are yours? will we do our right hands given, our faiths, our counsels vain,
Our sacrifice with wine, all fled in that profaned flame
We made to bind all; for thus still we vain persuasions frame,
And strive to work our end with words, not joining stratagems
And hands together, though, thus long, the power of our extremes Hath urg'd us to them. Atreus' son, firm as at first hour stand:
Make good thy purpose; talk no more in councils, but command In active field. Let two or three, that by themselves advise,
Pain in their crowning; they are such as are not truly wise;
They will for Argos, ere they know if that which Jove hath said
Be false or true. I tell them all, that high Jove bow'd his head,
As first we went aboard our fleet, for sign we should confer
These Trojans their due fate and death;
almighty Jupiter
All that day darting forth his flames, in an unmeasured light,
On our right hands. Let therefore none once dream of coward flight, Till (for his own) some wife of Troy he sleeps withal, the rape
Of Helen wreaking; and our sights enforced for her escape.
If any yet dare dote on horse, let his dishonour'd haste
His black and well-built bark but touch, that (as he first disgraced

His country's spirit fate, and death, may first his spirit let go.
But be thou wise, king, do not trust thyself, but others. Know
I will not use an abject word. See all thy men array'd
In tribes and nations: that tribes, tribes; nations, may nations aid.
Which doing, thou shalt know what chiefs, what soldiers play the men,
And what the cowards; for they all, will fight in several then, Easy for note. And then shalt thou, if thou destroy'st not Troy, Know if the prophecy's defect, or men thou dost employ
In their approved arts, want in war; or lack of that brave heat Fit for the venturous spirits of Greece, was cause to thy defeat."
To this the king of men replied: "O father, all the gods
Of Greece thou conquer'st in the strife of consultations.
[should make, I would to Jove, Athena, and Phebus, I Of all, but ten such counsellors; then instantly would shake King Priam's city, by our hands laid hold on and laid waste, But Jove hath order'd I should grieve, and to that end hath cast
My life into debates past end. Myself, and Thetis' son:
Like girls, in words fought for a girl, and I th'o'ffence begun:
But if we ever talk as friends, Troy's thus deferred fall
Shall never vex us more one hour. Come then, to victuals all,
That strong Mars all may bring to field,
Each man his lance's steel See sharpen'd well, his shield well lined his horses meted well,
His chariot carefully made strong, that these affairs of death
We all day may hold fiercely out. No man must rest, or breathe;
The bosoms of our targeteers must all be steep'd in sweat;
The lancer's arm must fall dissolved; our chariot-horse with heat Must seem to melt. But if I find one soldier take the chase,
Or stir from fight, or fight not still fix'd in his enemy's face,
Or hid a shipboard, all the world, for force, or price, shall save His hated life; but owls and dogs be his abhorred grave."

VOL. III.
He said; and such a murmur rose, as on a lofty shore
The waves make, when the south-wind comes, and tumbles them before Against a rock, grown near the strand, which diversely beset
Is never free; but, here and there, with varied upproars beat.
All rose then, rushing to the fleet, perfumed their tents, and eat;
Each offering to the immortal gods, and to escape the heat
Of war and death. The king of men an ox of five years' spring
T' almighty Jove slew; call'd the peers; first Nestor, then the king Idomeneus; after them th' Ajas; and the son
Of Tydeus; Ithacus the sixth, in counsel paragon
To Jove himself. All these he bade; but at a martial-cry
Good Menelaus, since he saw his brother
Employ'd at that time, would not stand on invitation,
But of himself came. All about the offering overthrown Stood round, took salt-cakes, and the king himself thus pray'd for all:
'O Jove, most great, most glorious, that in that starry hall, Sitt'st drawing dark clouds up to air, let not the sun go down,
Darkness supplying it, till my hands the palace and the town
Of Priam overthrow and burn; the arms on Hector's breast Dividing; spoiling with my sword thousands, in interest
Of his bad quarrel, laid by him in dust, and eating earth."
He pray'd; Jove heard him not, but made more plentiful the birth Of his sad toils, yet took his gifts. Prayers past, cakes on they threw;
The ox then, to the altar drawn, they kill'd, and from him drew His hide; then cut him up; his thighs (in two heu'm), dubb'd with fat, Prick'd on the sweetbreads; and with wood, leaveless, and kindled at Apposed fire, they burn the thighs; which done, the inwards, slit.
They broil'd on coals and eat; the rest, in giggots cut, they spit, Roast cunningly, draw, sit, and feast; nought lack'd to leave alway'd Each temperate appetite; which served, Nestor began and said:
"Atrides, most graced king of men, now no more words allow,
Nor more defer the deed Jove vows. Let heralds summon now
The brazen-coated Greeks, and us range everywhere the host,
To stir a strong war quickly up." This speech no syllable lost;
The high-voiced heralds instantly he charged to call to arms
The curl'd-head Greeks; they call'd; the Greeks straight answer'd their alarms.
The Jove-kept kings, about the king all gather'd, with their aid Ranged all in tribes and nations. With them the grey-eyed Maid Great Agis (Jove's bright shield) sustain'd, that can be never old, Never corrupted, fringed about with serpents forged of gold.
As many as sufficed to make an hundred fringes, worth
A hundred oxen, every snake all sprawling, all set forth
With wondrous spirit. Through the host with this the Goddess ran,
In fury, casting round her eyes, and furnish'd every man
With strength, exciting all to arms, and fight incessant. None
Now liked their loved homes like the wars.
And as a fire upon
A huge wood, on the heights of hills, that far off hurls his light;
So the divine brass shone on these, thus thrusting on for fight,
Their splendour through the air reach'd heaven. And as about the flood Caister, in an Asian mead, flocks of the airy brood Cranes, geese, or long-neck'd swans, here, there, proud of their pinions fly.
And in their falls lay out such throats, that with their spiritful cry
The meadow shrieks again; so here, these many-nation'd men Flow'd over the Scamandrian field, from tents and ships; the din
Was dreadful, that the feet of men and horse beat out of earth.
And in the flourishing mead they stood, thick as the odorous birth
Of flowers, or leaves bred in the spring; or thick as swarms of flies Throng then to sheep-cotes, when each swarm his erring wing applies To milk dew'd on the milk-maid's pails; all eagerly disposed [heaps closed,
To give to ruin th' Ilians. And as in rude Though huge goatherds are at their food, the goatherds easily yet Sort into sundry herds; so here the chiefs in battle set
Here tribes, here nations, ordering all.
Amongst whom shined the king,
With eyes like lightning-loving Jove, his forehead answering,
In breast like Neptune, Mars in waist,
And as a goodly bull
Most eminent of all a herd, most strong,
most masterful,
So Agamemnon, Jove that day made overheighten clear
That heaven-bright army, and preferr’d to all the heroes there.
Nay Oreathe, Muse, you that dwell in heavenly roofs, (for you Are Goddesses, are present here, are wise, and all things know,
We only trust the voice of name, know nothing), who they were
That here were captains of the Greeks, commanding princes here.
The multitude exceed my song, though fitted to my choice
Ten tongues were, harden’d palates ten, a breast of brass, a voice Infract and trumph-like; that great work, unless the seed of Jove,
The deathless Muse, undertake, maintains a pitch above
All mortal powers. The princes then, and navy that did bring These so inenarrable troops, and all their soils, I sing.

Men of religious Chrysa’s soil, and fat Daulidians,
Panopzaeans, Anemores, and fierce Hyam-polists;
And those that dwell where Cephisus casts up his silken mists;
The men that fair Lilea held, near the Cephisus spring;
All which did forty nine barks to that designment bring.
About th’ entoil’d Phocisian fleet had these their sail assign’d;
And near to the sinister wing the arm’d Boeotians shined.
Ajax the less, Oileus’ son, the Locrians led to war;
Not like to Ajax Telamon, but lesser man
by far,
Little he was, and ever wore a breastplate made of linen,
But for the manage of his lance he general praise did win.
The dwellers of Callurus, of Bessa, Opoën,
The youths of Cynus, Scarphis, and Auigias, lovely men,
Of Tarphius, and of Thronius, near flood Bougriaus’ fall;
Twice-twenty martial barks of these, less Ajax sail’d withal.
Who near Euboea’s blessed soil their habitations had,
Strength-breathing Abants, who their seats in sweet Euboea made,
The Histiaeans rich in grapes, the men of Chalcidea,
The Cerinthans bordering on the sea, of rich Eretria,
Of Dion’s highly-seated town, Charistus, and of Styre,
All these the duke Alphenor led, a flame of Mars his fire,
Surnamed Chalcodontiades, the mighty
Abants’ guide,
Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide, Well-seen in fight, and soon could pierce with far extended darts
The breastplates of their enemies, and reach their dearest hearts.
Forty black men of war did sail in this Alphenor’s charge.
The soldiers that in Athens dwelt, a city built of gold,
The temple of Erithius, whom Jove-sprung Pallas fed,
And plenteous-feeding Tellus brought out of her flowery bed ;
Him Pallas placed in her rich fane, and,
every ended year,
Of bulls and lambs th’ Athenian youths please him with offerings there ; Mighty Menestheus, Pentes’ son, had their divided care ;
For horsemen and for targetteers none could with him compare, Nor put them into better place, to hurt or to defend ;
But Nestor (for he elder was) with him did sole contend ;
With him came fifty sable sail. And out of Salamis Great Ajax brought twelve sail, that with th’ Athenians did combine.
Who did in fruitful Argos dwell, or strong Tryntho keep,
Hermion, or in Asine, whose bosom is so deep,
Treasen, Eton, Epidura, where Bacchus corns his head,
Ægina, and Maset’a’s soil, did follow
Diomed,
And Sthenelus, the dear-loved son of famous Capanthos,
Together with Euryalus, heir of Mecisteus,
The king of Talasonides ; past whom, in deeds of war,
The famous soldier Diomed of all was held
by far.

Four-score black ships did follow these
The men fair Mycense held,
The wealthy Corinth, Cleon that for beauteous site excell’d, Aræthra’s lovely seat, and in Ornitalic plain,
And Sicyma, where at first did king
Adrastus reign,
High-seated Gonoe’sa’s towers, and Hy perius,
That dwelt in fruitful Pellenen, and in divine Ægus,
With all the sea-side borderers, and with Helice’s friends,
To Agamemnon every town her native birth commends,
In double fifty sable barks. With him world of men
Most strong and full of valour went, and he in triumph then Put on his most resplendent arms, since he did overshone
The whole heroic host of Greece, in power of that design.
What did in Lacedemon’s rule th’ un measured concave held,
High Parris’, Sparta’s, Messe’s towers, doves so much extoll’d ; Bryseis and Augia’s ground ; strong La Cetylaon,
Amyicias, Helos’ harbour-town, that Na tune beats upon ;
All these did Menelaus lead (his broth-that in cries
Of war and warious) ; sixty ships conveyed these enemies
To Troy in chief; because their king was chiefly injured there,
In Helen’s rape; and did his best to make them buy it dear.
Who dwelt in Pylos’ sandy soil, in Arene the fair,
In Thrymon, near Alpheus’ flood, and Al full of air,
In Cyprasises, Amphigen, and in Peleon.
The town where all the Iliots dwelt, the famous Doreon,

Because he proudly durst affirm he could

Than that Pierian race of Jove; and Bereft his eyesight, and his song, that

THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

And of his skill to touch his harp dis-furnished his hand.
All these in ninety hollow keels grave
Nestor did command.
The richly-blest inhabitants of the Arcan-dian land,
Below Cylleus' mount (that by Epyrus' tomb did stand) Where dwell the bold near-fighting men, who did in Phaeneus live,
And Orchomen, where flocks of sheep the shepherds clustering drive,
In Ripe, and in Statric, the fair Mantincean
And strong Enispe, that for height is ever weather-blown;
Tegea, and in Symphalus, Parrhasia strongly wall'd, All these Alceus' son to field (king Agapenor) call'd;
In sixty barks he brought them on, and every bark well-mann'd
With fierce Arcadians, skill'd to use the utmost of a band King Agamemnon, on these men, did well-built ships bestow.
To pass the gusty purple sea, that did no sea rises know.
The way did Hermin, Buphrasis, and Elia did remain.
What Olen's cliffs, Allsius, and Myrs in did contain.
Were led to war by twice two dukes and each ten ships did bring,
Which many venturous Epians did serve for burthening.
Beneath Amphimachus his charge, and valiant Thalpius,
Son of Eurytus-Actor one, the other Ctenus, Diores Amaryncides the other did employ;
The fourth divine Polixenus, Agasthenes his joy.
The king of fair Angeiades, who from Dulichius came,
And from Echinaeus' sweet isles, which hold their holy frame
By ample Elis' region, Meges Phylides led;
Whom duke Phyleus, Jove's beloved, begat;
And whilom fled
To large Dulichius, for the wrath that fired his father's breast.
Twice-twenty ships with ebon sails were in his charge address'd.
The warlike men of Cephale, and those of Ithaca, Woody Nestus, and the men of wet Crocylia, Sharp Aegilipha, Samos' isle, Zacynthus, sea-enclosed, Epirus, and the men that hold the continent opposed;
All these did wise Ulysses lead, in counsel peer to Jove;
Twelve ships he brought, which in their course vermillion sterns did move.
Theos, Andromon's well-spoken son, did guide the Aetolians well,
Those that in Pleuron, Olenon, and strong Pylene dwell,
Great Chalcis, that by sea-side stands, and stony Calydon;
(For now no more of Eneus' sons survived; they all were gone);
No more his royal self did live, no more his noble son.
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run.)
All things were left to him in charge, th' Aetolians' chief he was,
And forty ships to Trojan wars the seas with him did pass.
The royal soldier Idomen did lead the Crelians stout,
The men of Gnossus, and the town Gortyna wall'd about,
Of Lictus, and Miletus' towers, of white Lycastus' state,
Of Phaestus, and of Rhytius, the cities fortunate,
And all the rest inhabiting the hundred towns of Crete;
Whom warlike Idomen did lead, co-partner in the fleet
With kill-man Merion. Eighty ships with them did Troy invade.
Tlepolemus Heraclides, right strong and bigly made.
Brought nine tall ships of war from Rhodes, which haughty Rhodians mann'd,
Who dwelt in three disesev'd parts of that most pleasant land,
Which Lyndus and Jalissus were, and bright Camirus, call'd.
Tlepolemus commanded these, in battle unappall'd;
Whom fair Astyoche brought forth, by force of Hercules, [Selle's], Led out of Ephyr with his hand, from river
When many towns of princely youths he level'd with the ground.
Tlepolem, in his father's house for building much renown'd Brought up to head strong state of youth, his mother's brother siew,
The flower of arms, Licynius, that somewhat aged grew;
Then straight he gather'd him a fleet, assembling bands of men,
And fled by sea, to shun the threats that were denounced then
By other sons and nephews of th' Alcid's fortitude.
He in his exile came to Rhodes, driven in with tempests rude.
The Rhodians were distinct in tribes, and great with Jove did stand,
The King of men and Gods, who gave much treasure to their land.
Nireus out of Syma's haven three well-built barques did bring;
Nireus, fair Aglaia's son, and Charopes the king;
Nireus was the fairest man that to fair Ilion came
Of all the Greeks, save Peleus' son, who pass'd for general frame;
But weak this was, not fit for war, and therefore few did guide.
Who died in Cassus, Nisyros, and Caphelus' abide, soils,
In Co, Euryclydes' town, and in Calydes's Phidippus and bold Antiphus did guide to Trojan toils.
(The sons of crowned Thessalus, derived from Hercules).
Who went with thirty hollow ships well-order'd to the seas.
Now will I sing the sackful troops Pelasgian Argos held,
That in deep Alus, Aiope, and soft Trecchina dwell'd.
In Phthia, and in Hellade where live the lovely dames,
The Myrmidons, Hellenians, and Achives, robb'd of fame;
All which the great Aeacides in fifty ships did lead.
For these forgot war's horrid voice, because they lack'd their head.
That would have brought them bravely forth; but now at fleet did lie.
That wind-like user of his feet, fair Thetis' progeny, Wrought for bright-cheek'd Briseis' loss, whom from Lyncessus spoild.
(He is own exploit) he brought away as trophy of his toils,
When that town was depopul'd, he sunk the Theban towers;
Myneta, and Epaphius, he sent to Pluto's bowers,
Who came of king Evenus' race, great Heleipigades;
Yet now he idly lives enraged, but soon must leave his ease.

Of those that dwelt in Phylace, and flowery Pyrason
The wood of Ceres, and the soil that sheep are fed upon Iton, and Atrox built by sea, and Peleus full of grass, Protesilus, while he lived, the worthy captain was,
Whom now the sable earth detains; his tear torn-faced spouse
He woful left in Phylace, and his half-finish'd house.
A fatal Dardian first his life, of all the Greeks, bereft,
As he was leaping from his ship; yet were his men unleft
Without a chief; for though they wish'd to have no other man
But good Protesilus their guide, Podarces yet began To govern them (Iphithis' son, the son of Phylacus).
Most rich in sheep, and brother to short-lived Protesilus,
Of younger birth, less, and less strong; yet served he to direct The companies, that still did more their ancient duke affect.
Twice-twenty jetty sails with him the swelling stream did take.
But those that did in Phere's dwell, at the Bebrian lake,
In Bebe, and in Glaphyra, Iaolcus builded fair.
In thrice six ships to Pergamus did through the seas repair,
With old Admetus' tender son, Eumelus, whom he bred
Of Aeleos, Pelus' fairest child, of all his female seed.
The soldiers that before the siege Methone's vales did hold,
Thaumacii, flowery Melibe, and Olison the cold.
Duke Philoctetes governed, in darts of finest sleight;
Seven vessels in his charge convey'd their honourable freight, [bow;
By fifty rowers in a bark, most expert in the
But he in sacred Lemnos lay, brought miserably low
By torment of an ulcer grown with Hydra's poison'd blood, Whose sting was such, Greece left him there in most impatient mood;
Yet thought they on him at his ship, and chose, to lead his men.
Medon, Oileus' bastard son, brought forth to him by Rhen.
From Tircis, bleak Ithomen’s cliffs, and hapless Oechaly, Eurytas’ city, ruled by him in wilful tyranny,
In charge of Eesculapius’ sons, physician highly praised;
Machon, Pedalirius, were thirty vessels raised;
Who near Hyperia’s fountain dwell, and in Ormenius,
The snowy tops of Titanus, and in Asterius, Evemus’s son, Eurypylus, did lead into the field;
Whose towns did forty black-sail’d ships to that encounter yield.
Who Girtion, and Argissa, held, Orthen, and Leon’s seat,
And chalkly Oloprone, were led by Poly-paste,
The issue of Pirithous, the son of Jupiter.
Him the Athenian Theseus’ friend Hippo-damian did bear,
When he the bristled savages did give Kamnas,
And drove them out of Pelus, as far as Aethicsa.
He came not single, but with him Leonteus, Coro’s son,
And arm of Mars, and Coron’s life Ceneus’ seed begun:
Twice twenty ships attended these.
Guneus next did bring From Cyphus twenty sail and two; the Emians following;
And fierce Peneli, that about Dodone’s frozen mould
Did plant their houses; and the men that did the meadows hold,
Which Tiresius decks with flowers, and his sweet current leads Into the bright Penelus, that hath the silver heads:
Yet with his admirable stream doth not his waves commix;
But glides aloft on it like oil; for ‘tis the flood of Styx,
By which the immortal Gods do swear.
Tenthredon’s honour’d birth, Prothous, led the Magnet’s forth, who near the shady earth
Of Pelus, and Penelus, dwell; forty revengful sail
Did follow him. These were the dukes and princes of avall That came from Greece. But now the man, that overshined them all, Sing, Muse; and their most famous steeds to my recital call,

That both th’ Atrides followed. Fair
Phregetiades
The bravest mares did bring by much;
Eumesius managed these,
Swift of their feet as birds of wings, both of one hair did shine, Both of an age, both of a height, as measured by a line,
Whom silver-bow’d Apollo bred in the Fierian mead,
Both slick and dainty, yet were both in war of wondrous dread.
Great Ajax Telamon for strength pass’d all the peers of war, While vex’d Achilles was away; but he surpass’d him far.
The horse that bore that faultless man were likewise past compare; Yet lay be at the crook’d stern’d ships, and fury was his fare,
For Atreus’ son’s ungracious deed; his men yet pleased their hearts With throwing of the holed stone, with hurling of their darts,
And shooting fairly on the shore; their horse at chariots fed On greatest parsley, and on sedge that in the fens is bred.
On greatest parsley, and on sedge that in
the fens is bred.
His princes’ tents their chariots held, that richly cover’d were;
His princes, amorous of their chief, walk’d storming here and there About the host, and scorn’d to fight; their breaths as they did pass Before them flew, as if a fire fed on the trembling grass;
Earth under-groan’d their high raised feet, as when offended Jove,[drove In Arime, Typhonius with rattling thunder Beneath the earth; in Arime, men say, the grave is still,
Where thunder-tomb’d Typhonius, and is a monstrous hill;
And as that thunder made earth groan, so groan’d it as they past,
They trod with such hard-set-down steps, and so exceeding fast.
To Troy the rainbow-girded Dame right heavy news relates
From Jove, as all to council drew in Priam’s palace-gates,
Resembling Priam’s son in voice, Polites, swift of feet;
In trust whereof, as sentinel, to see when from the fleet
The Grecians sallied, he was set upon the lofty brow
Of aged Aegyesi’s tomb; and this did Iris
show:
"O Priam, thou art always pleased with discreet advice,
And framest thy life to times of peace, when such a war doth rise
As threats inevitable spoil. I never did behold
Such and so mighty troops of men, who trample on the mould
In number like Autumnus' leaves, or like the marine sand,
All ready round about the walls to use a ruining hand.
Hector, I therefore charge thee most, this call to undertake.
A multitude remain in Troy, will fight for Priam's sake,
Of other lands and languages; let every leader then Bring forth well-arm'd into the field his several bands of men."
Strong Hector knew a Deity gave charge to this assay,
Dismiss'd the council straight; like waves,
clusters to arms do sway;
The ports are all wide open set; out rush'd the troops in swarms, Both horse and foot; the city rung with sudden-cried alarms.
A column stands without the town, that high his head doth raise,
A little distant, in a plain tord down with divers ways,
Which men do Batisia call, but the Immortal's
name
Myrine's famous sepulchre, the wondrous active dame.
Here were the auxiliary bands, that came in Troy's defence, Distinguish'd under several guides of special excellence.
The duke of all the Trojan power great helm-deck'd Hector was,
Which stood of many mighty men well-skill'd in darts of brass. [a man,

Phorcys, and fair Ascanius, the Phrygians brought to war, well train'd for battle, and were come out of Ascanian far.
With Methyes, and with Antiphus (Pythoens son's did fight) the men of Melon, whom the fen Gygea brought to light, and those Meionians that beneath the mountain Tmolus sprung. The rude unletter'd Cariboe, that barbarous colours March, and young Amphimachus (Nomion's famous sons), to whom the mountain Phthirorus,

That with the famous wood is crown'd, Miletus, Mycales that hath so many lofty marks for men that love the seas, the crooked arms Maeander bow'd with his so snaky flood, resign'd for conduct the choice youth of all their martial brood, the fool Amphimachus, to field, brought gold to be his wrack, proud-girl-like that doth ever bear her dower upon her back;
Which wise Achilles mark'd, slew him, and took his gold in strife.
At Xanthus' flood; so little Death did fear his golden life.
Sarpidon led the Lycians, and Glaucus unproven, From Lycia, and the gulpy flood of Xanthus far removed.

Commentarius.

1 'Hic est ille, &c. Scil. examina prodantium apum frequentium, &c. In this simile Virgil (using the like in imitation) is preferred to Homer; with what reason I say you see. Their ends are different; Homer intending to express the infinite multitude of soldiers everywhere dispersing; Virgil, the diligence of builders. Virgil's simile is this: I. Aeneid:

"Quales apes astra novas per floras nura Exercet sub sole labor; cum genitis adultus Educat fuscis; aut cum lignumia melula Supunt; et dulci distendunt nectaris cellas; Aut onera accepit venientam; aut, agmine facto, Ignavum fucos pecus a prasopibus ascent: Fervet opus, odorant thymo fragrantia melula."

Now compare this with Homer's, but in my translation; and judge if, to both their ends, there be any such betterness in Virgil's, but that the reverence of the scholar, due to the master (even in these his malignors), might well have contained their lare censure of the poetical fury from these unmannery and hateful comparisons. Especially, since Virgil hath nothing of his own, but only elocation; his invention, matter, and form, being all Homer's; which laid by a man, that which he addeth is only the work of a woman, to netify and polish. Nor do I, alas, but the foremost rank of the most ancient and best learned that ever were, come to the field for Homer; hiding all other poets under his ensign. Hate not me then, but them; to whom, before my book, I refer you. But much the rather I insist on the former simile; for the word ἄρολος, curationem, or consursum, which is noted by Spondanus to contain all the ἄρολος, reddition, or application of the comparison, and is nothing so. For though it be all the reddition Homer expresseth, yet he intends two special parts in the application more, which he leaves to his judicious reader's understanding, as he doth in all his other similes; since a man may pervially (or, as he passeth) discern all that is to be understood. And here, besides the thongs of soldiers expressed in the swarms of bees, he intimates the infinite number in those thongs or companies, issuing from fleet so ceaselessly that there appeared almost no end of their issue; and thirdly, the everywhere dispersing themselves. But Spondanus would excuse Homer for expressing no more of his application, with affirming it impossible that the thing compared, and the comparison, should answer in all parts; and therefore alleges the vulgar understanding of a simile, which is as gross as is vulgar, that a similitude must uno pede semper claudiare. His reason for it is as absurd as the rest; which is this, Si ea inter se omnino responderent, fallerent illud axioma, nullum simile est idem; as though the general application of the compared and the comparison would make them anything more the same, or all; more than the swarms of bees and the throng of soldiers are all one or the same; for answering most aptly. But that a simile must needs halt of one foot still showeth how lame vulgar tradition is, especially in her censure of poetry. For who at first sight will not conceive it absurd to make a simile, which serves to the illustration and ornament of a poem, lame of a foot, and idle? The incredible violence suffered by Homer in all the rest of his most inimitable similes, being expressed in his place, will abundantly prove the stupidity of this tradition; and how injuriously short his interpreters must needs come of him in his strait and deep places, when in his open and fair passages they halt and hang back so.

2. ἐν τῷ διδομένῳ θεόν θεον, &c. hæc quidem clarum (or illustris) factum Deus, as it is by all translated; wherein I note the strange abuse (as I apprehend it) of the word ἀρίσθενος, beginning here, and continuing wheresoever it is found in these Iliads. It is by the transition of δ into δ in derivation, according to the Doric; for which cause our interpreters will needs have Homer intend ἀρίσθενος, which is clarus or illustris, when he himself saith ἀρίσθενος, which is a compound of ἄριστος, which is valde, and δος, and signifies, quem valde ammulumur, or valde ammulamur, according to Scapula. But because ἀρίσθενος is most authentically expounded, impetus mentis ad cultum divinum facit Deus; because he turned so suddenly and miraculously the dragon to a stone. To make it ἀρίσθενος, and say clarum or illustrum facit Deus qui ostendit, or ostenderat, which follows in the verse, and saith thus much in our tongue, God that showed this, made it clear, is very little more than, God that shewed this, shewed it. One way it observes the word (betwixt which, and the other, you see what great difference) and is fair, full, grave; the other alters the original, and is ugly, empty, idle.

3. Αἰσχραμος ἐστὶ οἷς ὑπὲρ ἐναθές Μενελαος, &c. Spontaneum autem et venit vocis bonus Menelaus; and some say bello strenuous Menelaus, which is far estranged from the mind of our Homer, and signifying voces, or feratio, or clamor, though some will have it magnum, ex consequenti, because fits a thing made with clamor. But in bello strenuous (unless it be ironically taken) here straitened beyond suavitate, and is to be expounded vociferationes bonus Menelaus; which agreeeth with that part of his character in the next book, that telleth him to speak in a manner of utterance or voice, which ἄρισθενος, valde stridule, or arguto cum stridore, arguto being commonly and more properly taken in the worse part, and signifieth shrilly, or notisule, squeaking howsoever in the vulgar conversion it is found, that place most grossly abused. To this consideration whereof, being of no importance, I refer you in his place, and in the meantime show you, that, in the first and next verse, Homer (speaking sceptically) breaks open the fountain of his ridiculous humour following, never any interpreter understood, or touched being yet the most ingenious conceit of a person that any man can show in a heroical poem, or in any comic poet. And that you may something perceive he before you read to him in his several places, I will, as I can in haste, give you he here together as Homer at all parts presents him—viz., simple, well-meaning standing still affectedly on telling true small, and shrill-voiced (not sweet, eloquent, as some most against the he would have him), short spoken, after the country the Laconical manner, yet speak thick and fast, industrious in the first, and willing to be employed, and (by motus bellator himself) set still to call every hard service the hardiest; even the wit of Ajax played upon, about which he would be still diligent, and what was wanted of the martial fury and face himself, that he would be bold to suppose out of Ajax, Ajax and he, to any blows; Antiocleus and he for (Antiocleus, old Nestor’s son, a brave, ingenuous, valiant, and excellently formidable person) sometimes valiant, or daring what coward is not? sometimes fall upon sentence and good matter in his speeches (as what meanest capacity of not?) Nor useth our most imitator of nature this cross and deformed mixture of his parts, more to colour avoid too broad a taxation of so eminent a person, than to follow the true life of nature, being often, or always, express so disparent in her creatures. And because the decorum that some poor c have stood upon, to make fools always foolish, cowards at all times cowardly, &c., is far from the variant order of nature, whose principles being contrary, her productions must needs contain the like opposition.

But now to the first: ἀνόητον εἰς τῆς ἡμέρας, &c., spontaneus autem ei venit, &c., about which a passing great piece of work is picked out by our greatest philosophers, touching the unbidden coming of Menelaus to supper or council, which some commend, others condemn in him; but the reason why he staid not the invitation, rendered immediately by Homer, none of them will understand—viz., Ἄλιε γὰρ εἰρήνη τοὺς, &c., scelus enim in animo quantum frater Ipharetal; of which verse his interpreters cry out for the expunction, only because it was never entered in their apprehension, which I more than admire (for the easiness of it) so freely offering itself to their entertainment, and yet using the hoof of Pegasus, only with a touch breaking open (as above said) the fountain of his humour.

For thus I expound it (laying all again together, to make it plain enough for you); Agamemnon, inviting all the chief commanders to supper, left out his brother; but he, seeing how much his brother was troubled about the dream, and busied, would not stand upon invitement, but came of himself. And this being spoken sceptice, or by way of irration, argueth what manner of man he made of him. Ineptus enim (as it is affirmed in Plutarch, 1. Symp, and second question) fuit Menelaus, et locum detit proverbio, qui ad consilium dandum accessisset non vocatus. And to this place he had reference, because a council of war was to be held at this supper. And here, I say, Homer opened the vein of his simplicity, not so much in his going unbidden to supper, and council, as in the reason for it ironically rendered, that he knew his brother was busy, &c. And yet that addition, without which the very sense of our poet is not safe, our interpreters would have razed.
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Paris, betwixt the hosts, to single fight,
Of all the Greeks, dares the most hardy knight.
King Menelaus doth accept his brave, Conditioning that he again should have Fair Helena, with all she brought to Troy,
If he subdued; else Paris should enjoy
Her, and her wealth, in peace. Conquest doth grant
Her dear wreath to the Grecian combatant;
But Venus to her champion's life doth yield Safe rescue, and conveys him from the field Into his chamber, and for Helen sends,
Whom much her lover's foul disgrace offends;
Yet Venus for him still makes good her charms,
And ends the second combat in his arms.

A crooked bow, and sword, and shook two brazen-headed darts;
With which well-arm'd, his tongue provoked the best of Grecian hearts To stand with him in single fight. Wherein when the man, wrong'd most Of all the Greeks, so gloriously saw still before the host:
As when a lion is rejoiced (with hunger half forborn),
That finds some sweet prey, as a hart whose grace lies in his horn, Or sylvan goat, which he devours, though never so pursued
With dogs and men; so Sparta's kin exulted, when he view'd
The fair-faced Paris so exposed to his still thirsted wretch,
Whereof his good cause made him sure
The Grecian front did break,
And forth he rush'd, at all parts arm'd leapt from his chariot, And royally prepared for charge. Whose seen, cold terror shot
The heart of Paris, who retired as head long from the king
As in him he had shunn'd his death. And as a hilly spring
Presents a serpent to a man, full under neath his feet,
Her blue neck, swoln with poison, raise, and her sting out, to greet His heedless entry, suddenly his walk altereth,
Starts back amazed, is shook with fear, at looks as pale as death;
So Menelaus Paris feared; so that divine faced foe
Shrunk in his beauties. Which beheld Hector, he let go
This bitter check at him: "Accurse made but in beauty's scorn, Imposter, woman's man! O heaven, that thou hast not her been born,
Or, being so manless, never lived to be man's noblest state,
The nuptial honour! which I wish, to cause it were a fate
Much better for thee than this shame!
This spectacle doth make A man a monster. Hark how loud Greeks laugh, who did take Thy fair form for a continent of parts as fair.
Thou madest of nature, like their queen.
No soul; an empty shape
Takes up thy being; yet how spite to every shade of good Fills it with ill for as thou art, thou couldst collect a brood
Of others like thee, and far hence fetch ill enough to us, Even to thy father; all these friends make those foes mock them thus In thee, for whose ridiculous sake so seriously they lay All Greece and fate upon their necks. O
O wretch! Not dare to stay Weak Menelaus? But 'twas well; for in him thou hadst tried
What strength lost beauty can infect, and with the more grief died
To feel thou robb'd a worthier man, to wrong a soldier's right.
Your harp's sweet touch, curli'd locks, fine shape, and gifts so exquisite,
Given thee by Venus, would have done your fine dames little good,
When blood and dust had ruffled them; and had as little stood Thyself in stead; but what thy care of all these in thee flies [factions cowardice
We should inflict on thee ourselves. In
In thee hath terrified our host; for which thou well deservest
A coat of tombstone, not of steel, in which, for form, thou servest."

To this thus Paris spake (for form, that might inhabit heaven):
"Hector, because thy sharp reproof is out of justice given,
I take it well; but though thy heart, inward to these affrights,
Cuts through them as an axe through oak, that more used more excites
The workman's faculty, whose art can make the edge go far;
Yet I, less practised than thyself in these extremes of war,
May well be pardon'd, though less bold; in these your worth exceeds;
In others mine. Nor is my mind of less force to the deeds Required in war, because my form more flows in gifts of peace.
Reproach not, therefore, the kind gifts of golden Cypriads.
All heaven's gifts have their worthy price; as little to be scorn'd
As to be won with strength, wealth, state; with which to be adorn'd, Some men would change state, wealth, or strength. But, if your martial heart Wish me to make my challenge good, and hold it such a part Of shame to give it over thus, cause all the rest to rest,
And, 'twixt both hosts, let Sparta's king and me perform our best
For Helen and the wealth she brought; and he that overcomes,
Or proves superior any way, in all your equal dooms,
Let him enjoy her utmost wealth, keep her, or take her home;
The rest strike leagues of endless date, and hearty friends become;
You dwelling safe in gleby Troy, the Greeks retire their force T' Achaia, that breeds fairest dames, and Argos, fairest horse."
He said, and his amendsful words did Hector highly please,
Who rush'd betwixt the fighting hosts, and made the Trojans cease,
By holding up in midst his lance. The Greeks noted not
The signal he for parley used, but at him fiercely shot, Huri'd stones, and still were levelling darts. At last the king of men, Great Agamemnon, cried aloud: "Ar-gives I for shame, contain;
Youths of Achaia, shoot no more; the fair-helm'd Hector shows
As he desired to treat with us." This said, all ceased from blows,
And Hector spake to both the hosts: "Trojans, and hardy Greeks, Hear now what he that stirr'd these wars, for their cessation seeks.
He bids us all, and you, disarm, that he alone may fight
With Menelaus, for us all, for Helen and her right,
With all the dower she brought to Troy; and he that wins the day, [way,
Or is, in all the art of arms, superior any
The queen, and all her sorts of wealth, let him at will enjoy;
The rest strike truce, and let love seal firm leagues 'twixt Greece and Troy."
The Greek host wonder'd at this brave;
Silence flew everywhere;
At last spake Sparta's warlike king: "Now also give me ear, Whom grief gives most cause of reply. I now have hope to free
The Greeks and Trojans of all ills, they have sustain'd for me,
And Alexander, that was cause I stretch'd my spleen so far.
Of both then, which is nearest fate, let his death end the war;
The rest immediately retire, and greet all homes in peace.
Go then (to bless your champion, and give his powers success)
Fetch for the Earth, and for the Sun (the Gods on whom ye call)
Two lambs, a black one and a white, a female and a male;
And we another, for ourselves, will fetch, and kill to Jove.
To sign which rites bring Priam's force, because we well approve
His sons peridious, envious, and (out of practised band)
To faith, when she believes in them) Jove's high truce may profane.
All young men's hearts are still unstaid; but in those well-weigh'd deeds
An old man will consent to pass things past, and what succeeds
He looks into, that he may know, how best to make his way Through both the fortunes of a fact, and will the worst obey." This granted, a delightful hope, both Greeks and Trojans fed,
Of long'd-for rest from those long toils, their tedious war had bred.
Their horses then in rank they set, drawn from their chariots round, Descend themselves, took off their arms, and placed them on the ground, Near one another; for the space 'twixt both the hosts was small.
Hector two heralds sent to Troy, that they from thence might call King Priam, and to bring the lambs, to rate the truce they swore.
But Agamemnon to the fleet Talthybius sent before,
To fetch their lamb; who nothing slack'd, the royal charge was given.
Iris, the rain-bow, then came down, ambassador from heaven.
To white-arm'd Helen. 1 She assumed at every part the grace
Of Helen's last love's sister's shape, who had the highest place
In Helen's love, and had to name Laodice; most fair
Of all the daughters Priam bad, and made the nuptial pair
With Hector, royal sprout of old Antenor's seed. 2 About a weed,
She found queen Helena at home, at work
Woven for herself; it shined like fire, was rich, and full of size,
The work of both sides being alike; which she did comprise
The many labours warlike Troy and brass arm'd Greece endured.
For her fair sake, by cruel Mars and his stern friends procured.
Iris came in joyful haste, and said: " come with me,
Loved nymph, and an admired sight to see.
Greeks and Trojans see,
Who first on one another brought a war, full of tears,
Even thirsty of contentious war. Now even man forbears,
And friendly by each other sits, each leaning on his shield,
Their long and shining lances pitch'd fast by them in the field.
Paris, and Sparta's king, alone must take up all the strife;
And he that conquers only call fair Helen,
Thus spake the thousand-colour'd Dan and to her mind commends
The joy to see her first espoused, her natal towers, and friends;
Which stir'd a sweet desire in her; serve the which she hied, Shadow'd her graces with white veils, and (though she took a pride
To set her thoughts at gaze, and see,
Her clear beauty's flood,
What choice of glory swarm to her (tender womanhood)
Season'd with tears her joys to see, many joys the more offence,
And that perfection could not flow from earthly excellence.
Thus went she forth, and took with her women most of name.
Æthra, Pittheus' lovely birth, and Clymenus, whose fame
Hath for her fair eyes memorized. The reach'd the Scaean towers, Where Priam sat, to see the fight, with his counsellors;
Panthous, Lampus, Clytius, and stately Hecetaon, Thymocles, wise Antenor, and prosperous Ucalegon;
All grave old men; and soldiers they had been, but for age
Now left the wars; yet counsellors they were exceeding sage.
And as in well-grown woods, on trees, or spiny grassshoppers Sit chirping, and send voices out, scarce can pierce our ears. 3
For softness, and their weak faint sounds;
so, talking on the tower, These seniors of the people save; who when they saw the power Of beauty, in the queen, ascend, even those cold-spirited peers,
Those wise and almost wither'd men, found heat this in their years,
That they were forced (through whispering) to say: "What man can blame
The Greeks and Trojans to endure, for so admitted a dance,
So many miseries, and so long? In her sweet composure shine Look, Jove, and God-like Queen. And yet (though ever so divine)
Before we boast, unjustly still, of her enforced prize,
And justly suffer for her sake, with all our Labour and ruin, let her go; the profit of our land Must pass the beauty." Thus, though these could bear so fit a hand On their affections, yet, when all their graves powers were used,
They could not choose but welcome her, and rather they accused The gods than beauty; for thus spake the most-sainted king of Troy:
"Come, lovely daughter, sit by me, and take the worthy joy
Of thy first husband's sight, old friends, and princes near allied,
And name me some of these brave Greeks, as many be beautified.
Come, do not think I lay the wars, endured by us, on thee,
The gods have sent them, and the tears in which they swarm to me.
Sit then, and name this goodly Greek, so tall, and broadly spread,
Who than the rest, that stand by him, is higher by the head;
The bravest man I ever saw, and most majestical,
His only presence makes me think him king amongst them all."
The fairest of her sex replied: "Most most loved, most fear'd, would some ill slaughter had seized me, when I saw The first mean why I wrong'd you thus;
that I had never lost
The sight of these my ancient friends, of him that loved me most;
Of my sole daughter, brothers both, with all those kindly mates,
Of one soul, one age, born with me, though under different fates.

But these booms envious stars deny; the memory of these In sorrow pines these beauteous now, that them did too much please; Nor satisfy they your demand, to which I thus reply: [in empery;
That's Agamemnon, Atreus' son, the great
A king, whom double royalty doth crown, being great and good,
And one that was my brother-in-law, when I contain'd my blood,
And was more worthy; if at all I might be said to be,
My being being lost so soon in all that honour
The good old king admired, and said:
"O Atreus' blessed son, Born under joyful destinies, that hast the empire won
Of such a world of Grecian youths, as I discover here!
I once march'd into Phrygia, that many vines doth bear,
Where many Phrygians I beheld, well-skill'd in use of horse,
That of the two men, like two gods, were the commanded force, Otreus, and great Mygdonus, who on Sangarius' sands
Set down their tents, with whom myself, for my assistant bands,
Was number'd as a man in chief; the cause of war was then Th' Amazon dames, that in their facts affected to be men,
In all there was a mighty power, which yet did never rise,
To equal these Achæan youths, what have the sable eyes."
Then (seeing Ulysses next) he said:
"Loved daughter, what is he That, lower than great Atreus' son, seems by the head to me,
Yet, in his shoulders and big breast, presents a broader show?
His armour lies upon the earth; he up and down doth go,
To see his soldiers keep their ranks, and ready have their arms,
If, in this truce, they should be tried by any false alarms.
Much like a well-grown bell-wether, or feathered ram, he shows,
That walks before a wealthy flock of fair white-fleeced ewes."
High Jove and Leda's fairest seed to Priam thus replies:
"This is the old Laertes' son, Ulysses, call'd the wise;"
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

Who, though unfruitful Ithaca was made his nursing seat,
Yet knows he every sort of sleight, and is in counsels great."
The wise Antenor answer’d her : "‘Tis true, renowned dame;
For, some times past, wise Ithaca to Troy a legate came,
With Menelaus, for your cause; to whom I gave receipt
As guests, and welcomed to my house, with all the love I might.
I learnt the wisdoms of their souls, and humours of their blood;
For when the Trojan counsel met, and these together stood,
By height of his broad shoulders had Atrides eminence,
Yet, set, Ulysses did exceed, and bred more reverence.
And when their counsels and their words they wove in one, the speech Of Atreus’ son was passing loud, small, fast, yet did not reach a To much, being naturally born Laconical; or, nor would
[th’ other, old;]
His humour lie for anything, or was, like But when the prudent Ithaca did to his counsels rise, [earth his eyes;
He stood a little still, and fix’d upon the His sceptre moving neither way, but held it formally,
[wrathful quality,
Like one that vainly doth affect. Of
And frantic ( rashly judging him) you would have said he was,
But when, out of his ample breast, he gave his great voice pass,
And words that flew about our ears, like drifts of winter’s snow,
None thenceforth might contend with him, thought nought admired for show."
The third man, aged Priam mark’d, was Ajax Telamon,
Of whom he ask’d: "‘Tis that lord is so large of limb and bone,
So raised in height, that to his breast I see there reacheth none?"
To him the Goddess of her sex, the large-veil’d Helen, said:
"That lord is Ajax Telamon, a bulwark in their aid.
On th’ other side stands Idomen, in Crete of most command,
And round about his royal sides his Cretan captains stand;
Oft hath the warlike Spartan king given hospitalable due
To him within our Lacene court, and all his retinue.

And now the other Achive dukes I generally discern;
All which I know, and all their names could make thee quickly learn.
Two princes of the people yet, I nowhere can behold,
Castor, the skilful knight on horse, and Pollux, uncontrol’d
For all stand-fights, and force of hand;
both at a burden bred;
My natural brothers; either here they have not followed
From lovely Sparta, or, arrived within the sea-borne fleet,
[shame to meet."
In fear of infancy for me, in broad field Nor so; for holy Tellus’ womb inclosed those worthy men
In Sparta, their beloved soil. The voice-ful heralds then
The firm agreement of the Gods through all the city ring;
Two lambs, and spirit-refreshing wine (the fruit of earth) they bring,
Within a goat-skin bottle closed; Idæus also brought
A massy glittering bowl, and cups, that all of gold were wrought;
Which bearing to the king, they cried:
"Son of Laomedon
Rise, for the well-rode peers of Troy, and brass-arm’d Greeks, in one, Send to thee to descend the field, that they firm vows may make;
For Paris and the Spartan king must fight for Helen’s sake,
With long-arm’d lances; and the man that proves victorious,
The woman and the wealth she brought,
shall follow to his house;
The rest knit friendship, and firm leagues;
we safe in Troy shall dwell,
In Argos and Achaia they, that do in dames excel."
He said; and Priam’s aged joints with chilled fear did shake, Yet instantly he bade his men his chariot ready make.
Which soon they did, and he ascends:
he takes the reins, and guide Antenor calls; who instantly mounts to his royal side,
And, through the Ocean ports to field,
the swift-foot horse they drive.
And when at them of Troy and Greece the aged lords arrive,
From horse, on Troy’s well-feeding soil,
’twixt both the hosts they go.
When straight up-rose the king of men,
up-rose Ulysses too;
The heralds in their richest coats repeat (as was the guise)
The true vows of the Gods term’d theirs, since made before their eyes.
Then in a cup of gold they mix the wine that each side brings,
And next pour water on the hands of both the kings of kings,
Which done, Atrides drew his knife, that evermore he put
Within the large sheath of his sword;
with which away he cut
The wool from both fronts of the lambs, which (as a rite in use Of execration to their heads, that brake the plighted truce)
The heralds of both hosts did give the peers of both; and then,
With hands and voice advanced to heaven, thus pray’d the king of men:
"O Jove, that Ida’st protect, and hast the titles won [all-seeing Sun,
Most glorious, most invincible; and thou
All-hearing, all-recompensing; floods; earth; and powers beneath,
That all the perjuries of men chastise even after death;
Be witnesses, and see perform’d the hearty vows we make;
If Alexander shall the life of Menelaus
He shall from henceforth Helena, with all her wealth, retain,
And we will to our household Gods, hoise sail, and home again.
If by my honour’d brother’s hand, be Alexander slain,
The Trojans then shall his forced queen, with all her wealth, restore,
And pay convenient fine to us, and ours for evermore.
If Priam and his sons deny to pay this,
thus agreed,
[perfidious deed,
When Alexander shall be slain; for that
And for the fine, will I fight here, till dearly they repay,
By death and ruin, the amends, that false hood keeps away."
This said, the throats of both the lambs cut with his royal knife,
He laid them panting on the earth, till,
quite deprived of life,
The steel had robb’d them of their strength;
then golden cups they crown’d,
With wine out of a cistern drawn; which pour’d upon the ground,
They fell upon their humble knees to all the deities,
And thus pray’d one of both the hosts,
that might do sacrifice:

"O Jupiter, most high, most great, and all the deathless powers,
Who first shall dare to violate the late sworn oaths of ours,
So let the bloods and brains of them, and all they shall produce, Flow on the stain’d face of the earth, as now this sacred juice;
And let their wives with bastardice brand all their future race."
Thus pray’d they; but, with wish’d effects their prayers Jove did not grace:
When Priam said: "Lords of both hosts,
I can no longer stay
To see my loved son try his life, and so must take my way To wind-exposed Ilium. Jove yet and heaven’s high States Know only, which of these must now pay tribute to the Fates."
Thus, putting in his coach the lambs, he mounts and reins his horse; Antenor to him; and to Troy, both take their speedy course.
Then Hector, Priam’s martial son, stepp’d forth, and met the ground, With wise Ulysses, where the blows of combat must resound;
Which done, into a helm they put two lots, to let them know Which of the combatants should first his brass-piled javelin throw;
When all the people standing by, with hands held up to heaven, Pray’d Jove the conquest might not be by force or fortune given,
But that the man, who was in right the author of most wrong.
Might feel his justice, and no more these tedious wars prolong,
But, sinking to the house of death, leave them (as long before) Link’d fast in leagues of amity, that might dissolve no more.
Then Hector shook the helm that held the equal dooms of chance, Look’d back, and drew; and Paris first had lot to hurl his lance.
The soldiers all sat down enrank’d, each by his arms and horse
That then lay down and cool’d their hoofs.
And now th’ allotted course Bids fair-hair’d Helen’s husband arm; who first makes fast his greaves With silver buckles to his legs; then on his breast receives
The curets that Lycaon wore (his brother) but made fit [and fasten’d it,
For his fair body; next his sword he took,
All damask'd, underneath his arm; his shield then, grave and great,
His shoulders wore; and on his head his glorious helm he set;
Topp'd with a plume of horse's hair, that horribly did dance,
And seem'd to threaten as he moved; at last he takes his lance,
Exceeding big, and full of weight, which he with ease could use.
In like sort, Sпарia's warlike king himself with arms indues.
Thus arm'd at either army both, they stood bravely in,
Possessing both hosts with amaze, they came so chin to chin,
And with such horrible aspects, each other did salute.
A fair large field was made for them; where wraths, for hugeness mute,
And mutual, made them mutually at either shake their darts Before they threw. Then Paris first with his long javelin parts;
It smote Atrides' orb'y large, but ran not through the brass,
For in it (arching well the shield) the head reflected was.
 Then did the second combatant apply him to his spear,
Which ere he threw, he thus besought Almighty Jupiter:
"O Jove! vouchsafe me now revenge, and that my enemy,
For doing wrong so undeserved, may pay
The pains he forfeited; and let these hands inflict those pains,
By conquering, ay, by conquering dead, him on whom life complains;
That any now, or any one of all the brood of men.
To live hereafter, may with fear from all offence abstain,
Much more from all such foul offence to him that was his host,
And entertain'd him as the man whom he affected most."
This said, he shook and threw his lance; which struck through Paris's shield,
And, with the strength he gave to it, it made the curtsies yield.
His coat of mail, his breast, and all, and drave his entrails in,
In that low region where the guts in three small parts begin;
Yet he, in bowing of his breast, prevented sable death.
This taint he follow'd with his sword, drawn from a silver sheath,
Which lifting high, he strook his helm fast where his plume did stand,
On which it piecemeal brake, and fell from his unhappy hand.
At which he sighing stood, and stared up in the ample sky,
And said: "O Jove, there is no God gives more illiberally
To those that serve thee than thyself, why have I pray'd in vain?
I hope my hand should have revenge the wrongs I still sustain,
On him that did them, and still dares the foul defence pursue;
And now my lance hath miss'd his eye, my sword in shivers flew,
And he 'scape's all." With this, again rush'd upon his guest,
And caught him by the horse-hair plume that dangled on his crest,
With thought to drag him to the Greek, which he had surely done,
And so, besides the victory, had wondered glory won (Because the needle-painted lace, which his helm was tied Beneath his chin, and so about his dark threat implied, Had strangled him); but that, in the Cyprian seed of Jove Did break the string, with which was fast
That which the needle wove, and was the tough thong of a steer;
So the victor's palm Was, for so full a man-at-arms, only an empty helm.
That then he swung about his head, cast among his friends,
Who scattered, and took 't up shouts. Again then he intends To force the life-blood of his foe, and on him amain,
With shaven javelin; when the Quirites that lovers loves, again Attended, and now ravish'd him from encounter quite,
With ease, and wondrously sudden she, a Goddess, might.
She hid him in a cloud of gold, and made him known.
Till in his chamber, fresh and sweetly set him down,
And went for Helen; whom she for Scæa's utmost height,
To which whole swarms of city damsel climb'd to see the sight.

* This place Virgil imitateth To give her errand good success, she took on her the shape
Of bel dame Green, who was brought by Helen, in her rape.
From Lacedemon, and had trust in all her secrets still,
Being old, and had (of all her maids) the main bent of her will,
And spun for her finest wool. Like her.
Love’s Empress came,
Pull’d Helen by the heavenly veil, and softly said: “Madame,
My lord calls for you, you must needs make all your kind haste home; He’s in your chamber, stays, and longs;
sits by your bed; pray come,
’Tis richly made, and sweet; but he more sweet, and looks so clear,
So fresh, and movingly attired, that, seeing,
you would swear
He came not from the dusty fight, but from a courtly dance, Or would to dancing.” This she made a charm for dalliance;
Whose virtue Helen felt, and knew, by her so radiant eyes,
White neck, and most enticing breasts, the defiled disguise.
At which amazed, she answer’d her:
"Unhappy Deity!
Why lovest thou still in these decoits to wrap my fantasy?
Or whither yet, of all the towns given to their lust beside, [my guide, In Phrygia, or Macedon, comest thou to be if there (of divers-language men) thou hast, as here in Troy,
Some other friend to be my shame; since here thy latest joy
By Mendels now subdued, by him shall I be borne.
Home to his court, and end my life in triumphs of his scorn?
And, to this end, would thy decoits my wanton life allure?
Hence, go thyself to Priam’s son, and all the ways are safe
Of Gods, or godlike-minded dames, nor ever turn again
Thy earth-affecting feet to heaven, but for his sake sustain Tolls her: guard, grace him endlessly, till he requite thy grace.
By giving thee my place with him; or take his servant’s place,
If, all dishonourable ways, your favours seek to serve
His never-pleased incontinence; I better will deserve,

Than serve his dotage now. What shame were it for me to feel This lust in him; all honour’d dames would hate me for the deed;
He leaves a woman’s love so shamed, and shows so base a mind,
To feel nor my shame nor his own; griefs of a greater kind Wound me than such as can admit such kind delights so soon.”
The Goddess, angry that, past shame, her mere will was not done, Replied: “Incense me not, you wretch, est, once incensed, I leave Thy cursed life to as strange a hate, as yet it may receive
A love from me; and lest I spread through both hosts such despise,
For those plagues they have felt for thee, that both abjure thee quite,
And setting thee in midst of both, turn all their wrathes on thee,
And dart thee dead; that such a death may wreak thy wrong of me.”
This stroke the fair dame with such fear,
It took her speech away,
And, shadow’d in her snowy veil, she durst not but obey;
And yet, to shun the shame she fear’d, she vanish’d undescribed
Of all the Trojan ladies there, for Venus was her guide.
Arrived at home, her women both fell to their work in haste;
When she, that was of all her sex the most divinely graced,
Ascending to a higher room, though much against her will, [Venus still.
Where lovely Alexander was, being led by The laughter-loving Dame discern’d her moved mind by her grace,
And, for her mirth sake, set a stool, full before Paris’ face,
Where she would needs have Helen sit;
who, though she durst not choose But sit, yet look’d away for all the Goddess’ power could use,
And used her tongue too, and to chide whom Venus soothed so much,
And chid, too, in this bitter kind: “And was thy cowardice such,
So conquer’d, to be seeming alive? O would to God, thy life
Had perish’d by his worthy hand, to whom I first was wife!
Before this, thou wouldst glorify thy valour and thy lace,
And, past my first love’s, boast them far.
Go on, more, and advance Thy braves against his single power; this foil might fall by chance.
Poor conquer'd man: 'twas such a chance, as I would not advise Thy valour should provoke again. Shun him, thou most unwise, [be his prize."
Lest next, thy spirit sent to hell, thy body
He answer'd: "Pray thee, woman, cease, to chide and grieve me thus.
Disgraces will not ever last. Look on their end. On us

COMMENTARIUS.

I 'Iove & apò 'Elêna, &c. Iris autem
Helene, &c. Elegantly and most aptly (saith Spondanus) is Helen called by Homer to the spectacle of this single fight, as being the chief person in cause of all the action. The chief end of whose coming yet, enviously and most vainly, Scaliger's Criticus taxeth; which was her relation to Priam of the persons he noted there; jesting (with his French wit) at this Greek father, and fount of all wit, for making Priam to seek now of their names and knowledges, when nine years together they had lien there before. A great piece of necessity to make him therefore know them before, when there was no such urgent occasion before to bring Priam to note them, nor so calm a convenience in their ordered and quiet distinction. But let his criticism in this be weighed with his other faults found in our master: as, for making lightning in winter before snow or rain; which the most ignorant upland peasant could teach him out of his observations. For which yet his Criticus hath the project impudence to tax Homer; most falsely repeating his words too;
saying ubi ningit, when he saith, νηχτον κατοικήτωρ, ους, &c., patriae, of struens, vel multum imbre, immensum gravandum vel nivem: preparing, or going about those moist impressions in the air, not present act with them. From this, immEDIATELY and most rudely, he ranges Ulysses' reprehension, for killing the woowers with his bow, in the Odyssey.
Then to his late vomit again in the Iliad, the very next word, and envies Achilles horse for speaking (because himself would have all the tongue) when, in Sacred Wits, Balaam's ass could have taught him like hath been heard of. Yet now to Odysseus again with a breath, and challenges Ulysses' ship for suffering Neptune to take it to a rock. Here is strange laying for a master so curiously methodical.
My- with what Graces, with what Muses, may ask, he was inspired, but with what Harpies, what Furies, putting the petid menadom upon Homer? Putidus, eptus, frigidus, puerilis (being terms fit for a scold or a bawd, than a man soften-by learning) he belcheth against him with all the world hath reverenced, and admires as the fountain of all wit, wisdom, and learning. What touch is it to me, that to bear spots of depravations, when great master is thus muddily daubed it? But whoever saw true learning, wisdom, or wit, vouchsafe mansion in any proud, vain-glorious, and braggartly spirit, when their chief act and end is to abandon and abhor it? Language, reading, habit of speaking, or writing in other learning, I grant in this reveler great and abundant; but, in this poetry, redundant I affirm him, and rammish. To conclude, I will use the same words of him, that he of Erasmus, (in calce Epinomidos), which are these (as I convert it):—"Great was his name, but had been greaterly future, would himself have been less; where now, bold with the greatness of his wit, he hath undertaken the more, with much less exactness; and so his confidence, set on by the renown of his name, hath driven him headlong, &c." 2 "Ωνα λέγομεν οὖν τινί. Vocem suavem emittunt, saith the interpreter (intending the grasshoppers, to whom he compareth the old counsellors); but it is here to be expounded, vocem tenuam not suavem (χασμαθες in this place signifying tener) for grasshoppers sing not sweetly, but harshly and faintly, wherein the weak and tender voice of the old counsellors is to admiration expressed. To this Spondeus highly commends as most apt and expressive; but his application in one part doth abuse it in the other right it; and that is, to make the old men resemble grasshoppers for their cold and bloodless spinness, Tithon being for age turned to a grasshopper; but where they were grave and wise counsellors, to make them garrulous, as grasshoppers are stridulous; that application holdeth not in these old men, though some old men are so, these being "ευφωνοι διόπτερα ήτοι, et perdic, comminatores; the word διόπτερα signifying frugis also, which is temperate or full of all moderation, and, so, far from intimating any touch of garrulity. Nor was the conceit of our poet by Spondeus or any other understood in this simile. 3 "Ευφωνής ευφωνες, succincte conciona-cominentur Menelœus; he speaks succinctly, or compendiously, say his interpreters; which is utterly otherwise, in the voice ευφωνες, signifying velociter, properly, modo eorum qui currunt; he spake fast or thick. κατὰ παρ. &c., few words yet, he used, αὔθεν παρ. λεγομεν, sed valde acut, they expound it, when it is valde stridulæ, shrilly, small, or aloud; λεγομεν (as I have noted before) being properly taken in the worse part; and accordingly expounded, maketh even with his simple character at all parts, his utterance being noiseful, small, or squeaking; an excellent pipe for a fool. Nor is the voice or manner of utterance in a man the least key that discovereth his wisdom or folly. And therefore worth the noting is that of Ulysses in the second book—that he knew Pallas by her voice.

squinting their poison through the eyes of my readers, this shall appear to all competent apprehensions, I have followed the original with authentical expositions, ac-according to the proper signification of the word in his place, though I differ therein utterly from others; I have rendered all things of importance with answerable life and height to my author, though with some periphrasis, without which no man can worthily translate any worthy poet. And since the translation itself, and my notes (being impartially conferred) amply approve this, I will still be confident in the worth of my pains, how idly and unworthily soever I be censured. And thus to the last twelve books (leaving other horrible errors in his other interpreters unmoved) with those free feet that entered me, I haste, sure of nothing but my labour.

THE END OF THE THIRD BOOK.
THE FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Thus Gods in council, at the last, decree
That famous Ilion shall expunged be;
And that their own continued faults may prove
The reasons that have so incessant Jove.
Minerva seeks, with more offences done
Against the lately injured Atreus's son [A ground that clearest would make seen their sin],
To have the Lycian Pandarus begin.
He (against the truce with sacred canons bound) Gives Menelaus a dishonour'd wound.
Machaon heals him. Agamemnon then
To mortal war incenseth all his men.
The battles join; and, in the heat of fight,
Cold death shuts many eyes in endless sight.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In Delta is the Gods' Assize;
The Truce is broke; wars freshly rise.

Within the fair-paved court of Jove, he
And the Gods conferred About the sad events of Troy; amongst Whom minister'd
Bless'd Hebe nectar. As they sat, and did Troy's towers behold,
They drank, and pledged each other round
In full-crown'd cups of gold.
The mirth at whose feast was begun by Great Saturnides [Goddesses, in Urging a begun dislike amongst the But chiefly in his solemn Queen, whose Spleen he was disposed To tempt yet further, knowing well what Anger it inclosed,
And how wives' angers should be used.
On which, thus pleased, he play'd:
"Two Goddesses there are that still give Menelaus aid,
And one that Paris loves. The two that Sit from us so far (Which Angive Juno is, and she that rules In deeds of war),
No doubt are pleased to see how well the Late-seen fight did frame;
And yet, upon the adverse part, the Laughter-loving Dame
Made her power good too for her friend;
For, though he were so near
The stroke of death in th' others' hopes,
She took him from them clear.

The conquest yet is questionless the mart ial Spartan king's.
We must consult then what events shall crownd these future things;
If wars and combats we shall still, with even successes strike;
Or (as impartial) friendship plant on both parts. If ye like
The last, and that it will as well delight, as Merely please
Your happy cities, still let stand old Pram's town in peace,
And let the Lacedemon king again his Queen enjoy."

As Pallas and heaven's Queen sat close,
Complotting ill to Troy,
With silent murmurs they received this ill-liked choice from Jove; Gainst whom was Pallas much incensed,
Because the Queen of Love
Could not, without his leave relieve, in that Late point of death
The son of Pram, whom she loathed; her Wrath yet fought beneath Her supreme wisdom, and was curb'd; but Juno needs must ease
Her great heart with her ready tongue,
And said: "What words are these,
Austere, and too much Saturn's son? Why Wouldst thou render still My labours idle, and the sweat of my industrious will
Discontent with so little power? My chariot Horse are tired
With posting to and fro for Greece, and Bringing banes desired
To people-mustering Pram, and his per-fidious sons;
Yet thou protect'st, and join'st with them,
Whom each just Deity shuns,
Go on. but ever go resolved, all other Gods
Have vow'd
To cross thy partial course for Troy, in all That makes it proud."

At this, the cloud-compelling Jove a farfetch'd sigh let fly,
And said: "Thou fury! what offence of Such impurity
Hath Pram or his sons done thee, that,
With so high a hate,
Thou shouldst thus ceaselessly desire to race
And ruinate
So well a builded town as Troy? I think,
Thou wouldest the ports and far-stretch’d walls fly over, and devour Old Priam and his issue quick, and make all Troy thy feast.
And then at length I hope thy wrath and tired spleen would rest;
To which run on thy chariot, that nought be found in me
Of just cause to our future jars. In this yet strengthen thee,
And fix it in thy memory fast; that if I entertain
As peremptory a desire to level with the plain
A city where thy loved live, stand not betwixt my ire
And what it aims at; but give way, when thou hast thy desire,
Which now I grant thee willingly, although against my will.
For not beneath the ample sun, and heaven’s star-bearing hill,
There is a town of earthly men so honour’d in my mind
As sacred Troy; nor of earth’s kings as Priam and his kind,
Who never let my altars lack rich feast of offerings slain,
And their sweet savours; for which grace
I honour them again.”
Dread Juno, with the cow’s fair eyes, replied: “Three towns there are Of great and eminent respect, both in my love and care;
Mycene, with the broad highways; and Argos, rich in horse;
And Sparta; all which three destroy, when they enviest their force,
I will not aid them, nor malign thy free and sovereign will, [their ill,
For if I should be envious, and set against I know my envy were in vain, since thou art mightier far.
But we must give each other leave, and wink at either’s war.
I likewise must have power to crown my works with wished end, Because I am a Deity, and did from thence descend
Whence thou thyself, and th’ elder born; wise
Saturn was our sire;
And thus there is a twofold cause that pleads for my desire, Being sister, and am call’d thy wife; and more, since thy command Rules all Gods else, I claim therein a like superior hand.

All wrath before then now remit, and mutily combine
In either’s empire; I, thy rule, and thou illustrate, mine;
So will the other Gods agree, and we shall all be strong.
And first (for this late plot) with speed let Pallas go among
The Trojans, and some one of them entice to break the truce,
By offering in some treacherous wound the honour’d Greeks abuse.”
The Father both of men and Gods agreed and Pallas sent,
With these wing’d words, to both the hosts Make all haste, and invent Some mean by which the men of Troy against the truce agreed, May stir the glorious Greeks to arms with some inglorious deed.”
Thus charged he her with haste that did before, in haste abound, Who cast herself from all the heights, with which steep heaven is crown’d.
And as Jove, brandishing a star, which men a comet call,
Hurls out his curled hair abroad, that from his brand exhal’d
A thousand sparks to floods at sea, and every mighty host, [trusted most Of all presages and ill-haps a sign might So Pallas fell ’twixt both the camps, as suddenly was lost;
When through the breasts of all that stand, she strook a strong amaze With viewing, in her whole descent, her bright and ominous blaze.
When straight one to another turn’d, as said: “Now thundering Jove (Great Arbiter of peace and arms) will either stabilish love Amongst our nations, or renew such war as never was.”
Thus either army did presage, when Pallas made her pass Amongst the multitude of Troy; we now put on the grace
Of brave Laodocus, the flower of Antenor’s race,
And sought for Lycian Pandarus, a man that, being bred [fit to sit
Out of a faithless family, she thought The blood of any innocent, and break the covenant sworn.
He was Lycaon’s son, whom Jove inter wolf did turn
For sacrificing of a child; and yet in a renown’d [standing first
As one that was inculpable. Him Pa
And round about him his strong troops that bore the shady shields;
He brought them from Æscopus' flood, let through the Lycian fields; Whom standing near, she whisper'd thus:
"Lycson's warlike son,
Shall I despair at thy kind hands to have a favour done?
Nor darest thou let an arrow fly upon the Spartan king?
It would be such a grace to Troy, and such a glorious thing,
That every man would give his gift; but Alexander's hand
Would load thee with them, if he could discover from his stand
His foe's pride stuck down with thy shaft, and he himself ascend
The flaming heap of funeral. Come, shoot him, princely friend.
But first invoke the God of Light, that in thy land want born, [sheaf hath worn, and
And is in archers' art the best that ever
To whom a hundred first-ewed lambs vow thou in holy fire,
When safe to sacred Zelia's towers thy zealous steps retire."

With this the mad-gift-greedy man
Minerva did persuade,
Who instantly drew forth a bow, most admirably made
Of th' amulet of a jumping goat, bred in a steep up-land,
Which archer-like (as long before he took his hidden stand,
The crickle skipping from a rock) into the breast he smote,
And headlong fell'd him from his cliff.

The forehead of the goat
Held out a wondrous goodly palm, that sixteen branches brought;
Of all which, join'd, an useful bow, a skillful bowyer wrought;
Which pick'd and polish'd, both the ends he hid with horns of gold.
And this bow, bent, he close laid down,
And made his soldiers hold
Their shields before him; lest the Greeks, discerning him, should rise
In tumults ere the Spartan king could be his arrow's prise.
Mean space, with all his care he chose,
And from his quiver drew,
An arrow, feather'd best for flight, and yet that never flew;
Strong headed, and most apt to pierce;
Then took he up his bow,
And nock'd his shaft: the ground whence all their future grief did grow.

When—praying to his God the Sun, that was in Lydia bred,
And king of archers, promising that he the blood would shed
Of full an hundred first-fall'n lambs, all offer'd to his name,
When to Zelia's sacred walls from rescued Troy he came,—
He took his arrow by the nock, and to his bended breast*

The oxy sinew close he drew, even till the Upon the bosom of the bow; and as that savage prise
The wind did rise
His strength constrain'd into an orb, as if
The coming of it made a noise, the sinew-forged string Did give a mighty twang; and forth the eager shaft did sing, Affecting speediness of flight, amongst the Active throng.

Nor were the blessed heavenly powers un-Mindful of thy wrong,
O Menelaus; but, in chief, Jove's seed, the Pillager,

The arrow did conferr,
Stood close before, and slack'd the force
With as much care and little hurt, as doth
A mother use,
And keep off from her babe, when sleep doth through his powers diffuse
His golden humour, and th' assaults of rude and busy flies She still checks with her careful hand; for so the shaft she plies
That on the buttons made of gold, which made
Her girdle fast,
And where his curets double were, the fall
Of it she placed.
And thus much proof she put it to: the Buckle made of gold;
The belt is fasten'd, bravely wrought; his curets' double fold;
And last, the charmed plate he wore,
Which help'd him more than all;
And, 'gainst all darts and shafts bestow'd,
Was to his life a wall.
So, through all these, the upper skin the head did only race;
Yet forth the blood flow'd, which did much his royal person grace,
And show'd upon his ivory skin, as doth a purple dye
Laid by a dame of Caïra or lovely Mæony
On ivory, wrought in ornaments to deck the cheeks of horse;
Which in her marriage room must lie;
whose beauties have such force

* Virgil useth these verses.
The Fourth Book of Homer's Iliads.

That they are wish'd of many knights, but are such precious things,
That they are kept for horse that draw the chariots of kings.
Which horse, so deck'd, the charioteer esteems a grace to him;
Like these, in grace, the blood upon thy solid thighs did swim,
O Menelaus, down thy calves and ankles to the ground; [honour'd wound.
For nothing decks a soldier so, as doth an Yet, fearing he had fixed much worse, the hair stood up on end On Agamemnon, when he saw so much black blood descend.
And stifled with the like dismay was Menelaus too,
But seeing th' arrow's stale without, and that the head did go No further than it might be seen, he call'd his spirits again;
Which Agamemnon marking not, but therefore he was slain.
He griped his brother by the hand, and sigh'd as he would break,
Which sigh the whole host took from him, who thus at last did speak:
"O dearest brother, is't for this, that thy death must be wrought, Wrought I this truce? For this hast thou the single combat fought For all the army of the Greeks? For this hath Ilium sworn in fear.
And trod all faith beneath their feet? Yet all this hath not worn
The right we challenged, out of force; this cannot render vain
Our stricken right hands; sacred wine;
nor all our offerings slaim.
For though Olympus be not quick in making good our ill,
He will be sure, as he is slow; and sharplier prove his will.
Their own hands shall be ministers of those plagues they despire, Which shall their wives and children reach,
and all their progenies.
For both in mind and soul I know, that there shall come a day When Ilium, Priam, all his power, shall quite be worn away;
When heaven-inhabiting Jove shall shake his fiery shield at all,
For this one mischief. This, I know, the world cannot recall.
But be all this, all my grief still for thee will be the same,
Dear brother. If thy life must here put out his royal flame,
I shall to sandy Argos turn with infant my face;
And all the Greeks will call for home; o
Priam and his race
Will flame in glory; Helena, untouch'd be still their prey;
And thy bones in our enemies' earth or cursed fates shall lay;
Thy sepulchre be trodden down; the pride of Troy desire Insulting on it. Thus, O thus, let Agamenon's ire
In all his acts be expiate, as now he carries home [overcome His idle army, empty ships, and leaves he put to fear:
Good Menelaus. When this brave breath in their hatred breath, Then let the broad earth swallow me, and take me quick to death."
"Nor shall this ever chance, said he,
and therefore be of cheer, Lest all the army, led by you, your passion
put to fear.
The arrow fell in no such place as death could enter at,
My girdle, curets doubled here, and most trusted plate, Objected all 'twixt me and death, the shapscarce piercing one."
"Good brother," said the king, "I wish were no further gone.
For then our best in medicines skill'd shal one and search the wound, Applying balms to ease thy pains, and so restore thee sound."
This said, divine Talthybius he call'd, a bide him haste Machaon (Æsculapius' son, who most men was graced
With physic's sovereign remedies) to co-and lend his hand
To Menelaus, shot by one well-skil'd the command
Of bow and arrows, one of Troy, or the Lycian aid,
Who much hath glorified our foe, and as much dismay'd.
He heard, and hasted instantly, and as his eyes about
The thickest squadrons of the Greeks find Machaon out.
He found him standing guarded well with well-arm'd men of Thrace;
With whom he quickly join'd, and spake,
"Man of Apollo's race.
Haste, for the king of men commands see a wound impress'd In Menelaus, great in arms, by one structed best
In th' art of archery, of Troy, or of the Lycian bands,
That them with much renown adorns, us with dishonour brands.
Machaon much was moxied with this,
who with the herald dew
From troop to troop alongst the host; and soon they came in view Of hurt Atrides, circled round with all the Grecian kings;
Who all give way; and straight he draws the shaft, which forth he brings Without the fork; the girdle then, plate, eurets, off he pleake,
And views the wound: when first from it the cloturer'd blood he suckes,
The while he linck'd worstously composed,
the skillful leech applied Which loving Chiron taught his sire, he from his sire had tried.
While these were thus employ'd to ease the Atrian martialis,
The Trojans arm'd, and charged the Greeks; the Greeks arm and resist.
Then not asleep, nor mazed with fear, nor shifting off the blows,
You could behold the king of men; but in full speed he goes
To set a glorious sight on foot: and he examples this
With tolling, like the worst, on foot; who therefore did dismiss
His brass-arm'd chariot, and his steeds, with Ptolemeus' son, [Eurymedon;]
Son of Piradies, their guide, the good "Yet," said the king, "attend with them, lest weariness should seize My limbs, surcharged with ordering troops so thick and vast as these."
Eurymedon then rein'd his horse, that trode out neighing by;
The king a footman, and so scourrs the squadrons orderly,
Those of his swiftly-mounted Greeks, that in their arms were fit, Those he put on with cheerful words, and bad them not remit
The least spark of their forward spirits, because the Trojans durst Take these abborders advantages, but let them do their worst;
For they might be assured that Jove would patronize no lies,
And that who, with the breach of truce,
would hurt their enemies,
With vultures should be torn themselves;
that they should rage their town,
Their wives, and children at their breast, led vassals to their own.

But such as he beheld hang off from that increasing fight,
Such would he bitterly rebuke, and with disgrace excite:
"Base Argives, blush ye not to stand as made for bows to darts?
Why are ye thus discomfited, like hinds that have no hearts,
Who, wearied with a long-run field, are instantly emboss'd, Stand still, and in their beastly breasts is all their courage lost?
And so stand you strook with amaze, nor dare to strike a stroke.
Would ye the foe should nearer yet your dasiterd splendor provoke, Even where on Neptune's fomny shore our navies lie in sight,
To see if Jove will hold your hands, and Teach ye how to fight?"

Thus he, commanding, ranged the host,
and passing many a band,
He came to the Cretensian troops, where all did armed stand
About the martial Idomen; who bravely stood before
In vantward of his troops, and match'd for strength a savage boar; Mermiones, his charioteer, the rearguard bringing on. [a sight alone,
Which seen to Atreus' son, to him it was And Idomen's confirmed mind with these kind words he seek's:
"O Idomen! I ever loved thyself past all the Greeks,
In war, or any work of peace, at table, everywhere;
For when the best of Greece besides mix ever, at our cheer,
My good old ardent wine with small, and our inferior mates
Drink even that mix'd wine measured too, thou drink'st, without those rates,
Our old wine neat; and evermore thy bowl stands full like mine,
To drink still, when and what thou wilt.
Then rouze that heart of thine;
And, whatsoever heretofore thou hast assumed to be,
This day be greater." To the king in this sort answer'd he:
"Atrides, what I ever seem'd, the same at every part
This day shall shew me at the full, and I will fit thy heart.
But thou shouldst rather cheer the rest, and tell them they in right Of all good war must offer blows, and should begin the fight, His horse troops with their chariots; foot (of which he chose many, the best and ablest men, and which he ever used.
As rampire to his general power) he in the rear disposed. [the midst enclose
The slothful, and the least of spirit, he
That, such as wanted noble wills, bad need might force to stand.
His horse troops, that the vanguard he Strictly did command
To ride their horses temperately, to keep their ranks, and shun Confusion, lest their horsemanship and courage made them run.
(Too much presumed on) much too far
And, charging so alone,
Engage themselves in their enemy's strength
Where many fight with one.
"Who his own chariot leaves to range
Let him not freely go,
But straight unhorse him with a lance;
'tis much better so.
And with this discipline," said he, "this form, these minds, this trust,
Our ancestors have walls and towns in level with the dust.
Thus prompt, and long inured to arm
This old man did exhort;
And this Atrides likewise took in wonder Cheerful sort,
And said: "O father, would to heaven
That as thy mind remains
In wonted vigour, so thy knees could undergo our pains.
But age, that all men overcomes, hath made his prise on thee;
Yet still I wish that some young man grown old in mind, might be Put in proportion with thy years, and mind, young in age,
Be fitly answer'd with his youth; that as where conflicts rage,
And young men used to thrust for far thy brave exempling hand Might double our young Grecian spirit and grace our whole command.
The old knight answer'd: "I my could wish, O Atreus' son,
I were as young as when I slew by Ereuthalion;
But Gods at all times give not all the gifts to mortal men.
If then I had the strength of youth Miss'd the counsels then
That years now give me; and now you want that main strength of youth; Yet still my mind retains her strength you now said the sooth)
And would be where that strength is used, affordig counsels sage
To stir youth's minds up; 'tis the grace and office of our age;
Let younger sinews, men sprung up whole ages after me,
And such as have strength, use it, and, as strong in honour be."
The king, all this while comforted, arrived next where he found
Well-rode Menestheus (Peteus' son) stand still, environ'd round With his well-train'd Athenian troops; and next to him he spied [bands beside The wise Ulysses, needless too, and all his
Of strong Cephalians; for as yet th' alarm had not been heard
In all their quarters, Greece and Troy were then so newly stir'd,
And then first moved, as they conceived, and they so look'd about
To see both hosts give proof of that they said cause to doubt.
Atrides seeing them stand so still, and spend their eyes at gaze,
Began to chide, "'And why, said he, "dissolved thus in amase, Thou son of Peteus, Jove-nursed king, and thou in wicked sleight
A cunning soldier, stand ye off? Expect ye that the fight Should be by other men begun? Tis fit the foremost band Should show you there; you first should front who first lifts up his hand.
First you can hear, when I invite the princes to a feast, [eat and drink the best;
When first, most friendly, and at will, ye Yet in the fight, most willingly, ten troops ye can behold, Take place before ye." Ithacus at this his brows did fold,
And said: "How hath thy violent tongue broke through thy set of teeth,
To say that we are slack in fight, and to the field of death [were busied then,
Look others should enforce our way, when Even when thou spakest, against the foe to cheer and lead our men?
But thy eyes shall be witnesses, if it content thy will, [do so affect thee still,
And that (as thou pretend'st) these cares The father of Telemachus (whom I esteem so dear, [deeds done here)
And to whom, as a legacy, I'll leave my Even with the foremost band of Troy hath his encounter dared,
And therefore are thy speeches vain, and had been better spared."

He, smiling, since he saw him moved, recall'd his words, and said:
"Most generous Laerces' son, most wise of all our aid,
I neither do accuse thy worth, more than thyself may hold Fit, (that inferiors think not much, being slack, to be control'd)
Nor take I on me thy command; for well I know thy mind Knows how sweet gentle counsels are; and that thou stand'st inclined,
As I myself, for all our good. On then; if now we spake What hath displeased, another time we full amends will make:
And Gods grant that thy virtue here may prove so free and brave,
That my reproves may still be vain, and thy deservings grave."
Thus parted they; and forth he went, when he did leaning find,
Against his chariart, near his horse, him with the mighty mind,
Great Diomedes, Tydeus' son, and Atheneus, the seed
Of Capaneus; whom the king seeing likewise out of deed, Thus cried he out on Diomed: "O me in what a fear
The wise great warrior, Tydeus' son, stands gazings everywhere For others to begin the fight! It was not Tydeus' use To be so daunted, whom his spirit would evermore produce Before the foremost of his friends in these affairs of fright, As they report that have beheld him labour in a fight.
For me, I never knew the man, nor in his presence came: But excellent, above the rest, he was in general fame. And one renown'd exploit of his, I am assured, is true; He came to the Mycenaean court, without arms, and did sue, At godlike Polynices' hands, to have some worthy aid To their designs that 'gainst the walls of sacred Thebes were laid. He was great Polynice's guest, and nobly entertain'd; And of the kind Mycenaean state what he In mere consent; but when they should the same in act approve (By some sinister prodigies, held out to them by Jove),
They were discouraged: thence he went, and safely had his pass
Back to Asopus' flood, renowned for bulrushes and grass.
Yet, once more, their ambassador, the Grecian peers address Lord Tydies to Eteoeles; to whom being given access,
He found him feasting with a crew of Cadmeans in his hall;
Amongst whom, though an enemy, and only one to all;
To all yet he his challenge made at every martial feat,
And easily foil'd all, since with him Minerva
The rank-rode Cadmeans, much incensed
Lodge ambuscades for their foe, in some well-chosen place
By which he was to make return. Twice five-and-twenty men,
And two of them great captains too, the ambush did contain.
The names of those two men of rule were Mænon, Hæmon's son,
And Lycothontes, Keep-field call'd, the heir of Autophon;
By all men honour'd like the Gods; yet these and all their friends
Were sent to hell by Tydies' hand, and had untimely ends.
He trusting to the aid of Gods, reveal'd by augury;
Obeying which, one chief he saved, and did his life apply
To be the heavy messenger of all the others' deaths;
And that sad message, with his life, to Mænon he bequeathed.
So brave a knight was Tydies; of whom a son is sprung, Inferior far in martial deeds, though higher in his tongue."
All this Tydies silent heard, awed by the reverend king:
Which stung hot Sthenelus with wrath, who thus put forth his sting:"
"Atrides I when thou know'st the truth, speak what thy knowledge is,
And do not lie so; for I know, and I will brag in this,
That we are far more able men than both our fathers were:
We took the seven-fold ported Thébes, when yet we had not there
So great help as our fathers had; and fought beneath a wall, Sacred to Mars, by help of Jove, and trusting to the fall
Of happy signs from other Gods, by whom we took the town, Untouch'd 'd our fathers perishing there by follies of their own:
And therefore never more compare our father's worth with ours."
Tydies frown'd at this, and said: "Suppress thine anger's powers, Good friend, and hear why I refrain'd: thou seest I am not moved Against our General, since he did but what his place behoved, Admonishing all Greeks to fight; for, I Troy prove our prize,
The honour and the joy is his. If hence our ruin lies,
The shame and grief for that, as much, in his greatest kinds.
As he then his charge, weigh we ours which is our dauntless minds."
Thus, from his chariot, amply arm'd, he jump'd down to the ground:
The armour of the angry king so horrible did sound,
It might have made his bravest foe let fall his bow.
And as when with the west-wind flaws the sea thruts up her waves,
One after other, thick and high, upon the groaning shores,
First in herself loud, but opposed with banks and rocks she roars,
And, all her back in bristles set, spits every way her foam;
(overcoming So, after Diomed, instantly the field was With thick impressions of the Greeks; and all the noise that grew) (overcoming Ordering and cheering up their men) from only leaders flew.
The rest went silently away, you could not hear a voice,
Nor would have thought, in all their breasts, they had one in their choice:
Their silence uttering their awe of the that they control'd;
Which made each man keep bright his arms, and march, fight still where he should.
The Trojans (like a sort of ewes, penn'd a rich man's fold, Close at his door, till all be milk'd as never baaing hold) Hearing the bleating of their lambs) did all their wide host fill With shouts and clamours; nor observe only one voice, one baaing still;
But show'd mix'd tongues from many land, of men call'd to their aid.
Rude Mars had th' ordering of their spirit of Greeks, the learned Maid.
OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

But Terror follow'd both the hosts, and Flight, and furious Strife
The sister, and the mate, of Mars, that spoil of human life;
And never is her rage at rest, at first she is but small,
Yet after (but a little fed) she grows so vast and tall,
That while her feet move here in earth, her forehead is in heaven.*
And this was she that made, even then, both hosts so deadly given;
Through every troop she stalk'd, and stirr'd rough sighs up as she went;
But when in one field both the foes her fury did content,
And both came under reach of darts, then darts and shields opposed
To darts and shields; strength answer'd strength; then swords and targets closed
With swords and targets; both with pikes; and then did tumult rise
Up to her height; then conquerors' boasts mix'd with the conqueror's cries;
Earth flow'd with blood. And as from hills rain-waters headlong fall,
That all ways eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed, fill a vale
With such a confluence of streams, that on the mountain grounds
Far off, in frightened shepherds' ears, the bustling noise rebounds;
So grew those conflicts, and so shew'd their scuffling to the ear,
With flight and clamour still commix'd, and all effects of fear.
And first renown'd Antilochus slew (fighting, in the face Of all Achæa's foremost bands, with an undaunted grace)
Echecclus Thalysiadès; he was an armed man; Whom, now, in his hair-plumed helmet's crest the dart first smote, then ran Into his forehead, and there stuck; the steel pile making way Quite through his skull; a hasty night shut up his latest day.
His fall was like a fiant-raised tower; like which, lying there undisposed, King Elephenor (who was son to Chalcodon, and led The valiant Abantes) covetous that he might first possess
His arms, laid hands upon his feet; and taileth him from the press

Of darts and javelins hurl'd at him. The action of the king
When, great-in-heart, Agenor saw, he made his javelin sing
To th' other's labour; and along, as he the trunk did wrest,
His side (at which he bore his shield) in bowing of his breast Lay naked, and received the lance; that made him lose his hold
And life together; which, in hope of that he lost, he sold.
But for his sake the fight grew fierce, the Trojans and their foes
Like wolves on one another rush'd, and man for man it goes.
The next of name, that served his fate, great Ajax Telamon Prefer'd so sadly. He was heir to old Anthemion,
And deck'd with all the flower of youth; the fruit of which yet fled,
Before the honour'd nuptial torch could light him to his bed.
His name was Simoisius; for, some few years before, [by the shore
His mother walking down the hill of Ida,
Of silver Simois, to see her parents' flocks, with them
She, feeling suddenly the pains of child-birth, by the stream
Of that bright river brought him forth; and so (of Simois) They call'd him Simoisius. Sweet was that birth of his
To his kind parents, and his growth did all their care employ;
And yet those rites of piety, that should have been his joy
To pay their honour'd years again in affectionate sort,
He could not graciously perform, his sweet life was so short;
Cut off with mighty Ajax' lance. For, as his spirit put on,
He strook him at his breast's right pap, quite through his shoulder-bone,
And in the dust of earth he fell, that was the fruitful soil
Of his friends' hopes; but where he sowl'd, he buried all his tell.
And as a popular shot aloft, set by a river side,
In moist edge of a mighty fen, his head in curls implied,
But all his body plain and smooth, to which a wheelwright puts
The sharp edge of his shining axe, and his soft timber cuts

* Virgil the same of Fame.
From his innate root, in hope to hew out of his bole (compass in the whole,
The fell'firs, or out-parts of a wheel, that To serve some goody chariot; (but, being big and sad, (the useful hope he had And to be haled home through the bogs)
Sticks there, and there the goody plant

So lay, by Jove-bred Ajax' hand, Anthem-ion's forward race,
Nor could through that vast fen of toils be drawn to serve the ends Intended by his body's powers, nor cheer his aged friends.
But now the gay-arm'd Antiphus (a son of Priam) threw
His lance at Ajax through the press, which went by him, and flew On Leucus, wise Ulysses' friend; his groin it smote, as fain
He would have drawn into his spoil the carcass of the slain,
By which he fell, and that by him: it vex'd Ulysses' heart,
Who thrust into the face of fight, well-arm'd at every part, Came close, and look'd about to find an object worth his lance;
Which when the Trojans saw him shake,
and he so near advance,
All shrunk; he threw, and forth it shined, nor fell but where it fell'd;
His friend's grief gave it angry power, and deadly way it held Upon Democoon, who was sprung of Priam's wanian force, Came from Abydos, and was made the master of his horse.
Through both his temples strook the dart,
the wood of one side shew'd,
The pile out of the other look'd, and so the earth he strew'd
With much sound of his weighty arms.
Then back the foremost went;
Even Hector yielded; then the Greeks gave worthy clarmours vent, Effecting then their first dumb powers;
some drew the dead, and spoil'd;
Some follow'd, that, in open flight, Troy might confess it foil'd.'' Apollo, angry at the sight, from top of Ilion cried:
"Turn head, ye well-rode peers of Troy, feed not the Grecians' pride,
They are not charm'd against your points, of steel, nor iron, framed;
Nor fights the fair-hair'd Thetis' son, but sits at fleet inflamed."
So spake the dreadful God from Troy.
The Greeks, Jove's noblest seed Encouraged to keep on the chase; and,
where fit spirit did need,
She gave it, marching in the midst. Then flew the fatal hour [burn'd power;

And came from Ænos; down he fell, and up he held his hands To his loved friends; his spirit wing'd to fly out of his breast;

THE FIFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

King Diomed (by Pallas' spirit inspired With will and power) is for his acts admired. Mere men, and men derived from Deities, And Deities themselves, he terrifies. Adds wounds to tears. His inflamed lance Draws blood from Mars and Venus. In a trance He casts Aeneas, with a weighty stone; Apollo quickens him, and gets him gone. Mars is scourged by Paeon; but by Jove Rebuked for authoring breach of human love.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In Epialon Heaven's blood is shed By sacred rage of Diomed.

Then Pallas breathed in Tydeus' son; to render whom supreme To all the Greeks, at all his parts, she cast a hotter beam On his high mind; his body fell'd with much superior might; And made his complete armour cast a far more complete light. From his bright helm and shield did burn a most unwearied fire, Like rich Autumus' golden lamp,* whose brightness men admire Past all the other host of stars, when, with his cheerful face Fresh wash'd in lotty Ocean waves, he doth the skies enchain. To let whose glory lose no sight, still Pallas made him turn Where tumult most express'd his power, and where the fight did burn. An honest and a wealthy man, inhabited in Troy; Dares, the priest of Muciber, who two sons did enjoy, Idaeus, and bold Phegeus, well-seen in every fight; These (singly from their troops, and horded) assail'd Minerva's knight, Who ranged from fight to fight on foot. All hasting mutual charge, And now drawn near, first Phegeus threw a javelin swift and large,

Whose head the king's left shoulder took, but did no harm at all; Then rush'd he out a lance at him, that had no idle fall, But in his breast stuck 'twixt the paps, and strook him from his horse. Which stern sight when Idaeus saw, distrustful of his force To save his slaughter'd brother's spoil, it made him headlong leap From his fair chariot, and leave all; yet had not 'scaped the heap Of heavy funeral, if the God, great president of fire, Had not (in sudden clouds of smoke, and pity of his sire To leave him utterless unhier'd) given safe pass to his feet. He gone, Tydiles sent the horse and chariot to the fleet. The Trojans seeing Dares' sons, one slain, the other fled, Were strook amazed. The blue-eyed Maid (to grace her Diomed In giving free way to his power) made this so rughful fact A fit advantage to remove the War-god out of act, Who raged so on the Ilion side;—she griped his hand, and said: Mars, Mars, thou ruiner of men, that in the dust hast laid So many cities, and with blood thy godhead dost distain; Now shall we cease to show our breasts as passionate as men, And leave the mixture of our hands, resigning Jove his right, As Rector of the Gods, to give the glory of the fight Where he affecteth, lest he force what we should freely yield? He held it fit, and went with her from the tumultuous field, Who set him in an herby seat on broad Scamander's shore. He gone, all Troy was gone with him, the Greeks drive all before, And every leader slew a man; but first the king of men Deserved the honour of his name, and led the slaughter then,

* This simile likewise Virgil learns of him.

VOL. III.
And slew a leader, one more huge than any man he led,
Great Odysseus, duke of Halizons; quite from the sight of his chariot's head, He struck him with a lance to earth, as first he flight addressed;
It took his forward-turned back, and look'd out of his breast;
His huge trunk sounded, and his arms did echo the resound.
Idomeneus to the death did noble Phaestus wound,
The son of Meon-Borus, that from cloody Terna came;
Who, taking chariot, took his wound, and budded with the same
From his attempted seat; the lance through his right shoulder strook,
And horrid darkness strook through him;
the spoil his soldiers took.
Atrides-Menelaus slew, as he before him fled,
Seamanderius, son of Strophius, that was a huntsman bred;
A skilful huntsman, for his skill Diana's self did teach,
And made him able with his dart infallibly
All sorts of subtlest savages, which many a woody hill
Bred for him, and he much preserved, and all to shew his skill.
Yet not the dart-delighting Queen taught him to shun this dart, Nor all his hitting so far off, the mastery of his art;
His back received it, and he fell upon his breast withal;
His body's ruin, and his arms, so sounded in his fall,
That his affrighted horse flew off, and left him, like his life.
Meriones slew Phereclus, whom she that never was wife,
Yet Goddess of good housewives, held in excellent respect
For knowing all the witty things that grace an architect;
And having power to give it all, the cunning use of hand.
Harmonides, his sire, built ships, and made him understand,
With all the practice it required, the frame of all that skill.
He built all Alexander's ships, that author'd all the ill
Of all the Trojans and his own, because he did not know
The oracle advising Troy (for fear of overthrow)
To meddle with no sea affair, but live by tilling land.
This man Meriones surprised, and drive his deadly hand
Through his right hip; the lance's head ran through the region
About the bladder, underneath th' in-muscles and the bone;
He, sighing, bow'd his knees to death,
and sacrificed to earth.
Phylides stay'd Pedraus flight—Antenor's bastard birth—
Whom virtuous Theano his wife, to please her husband, kept.
As tenderly as those she loved. Phylides near him stept,
And in the fountain of the nerves did drench his fervent lance,
At his head's back-part; and so far the sharp head did advance,
It cleft the organ of his speech, and th' iron, cold as death.
He took betwixt his grinning teeth, and gave the air his breath.
Euryalus, the much renown'd and great Evander's son, [Dolopion,
Divine Hypsenor slew, begot by stout And consecrate Seamander's priest; he had a God's regard
Amongst the people; his hard flight the Grecian follow'd hard,
Rush'd in so close, that with his sword he on his shoulder laid A blow that his arm's brawn cut off; nor there his vigour stay'd,
But drove down, and from off his wrist it hew'd his holy hand,
That gush'd out blood, and down it dropp'd upon the blushing sand; Death, with his purple finger, shut, and violent fate, his eyes.
Thus fought these, but distinguish'd well. Tydides so implies His fury that you could not know whose side had interest
In his free labours, Greece or Troy; but as a flood, increased By violent and sudden showers, let down from hills, like hills Melted in fury, swells and soams, and so he overfills
His natural channel; that besides both hedge and bridge resigns
To his rough confluence, far spread; and lusty flourishing vines Drown'd in his outrage; Tydus' son, so overran the field,
Strew'd such as flourish'd in his way, and made whole squadrons yield.
When Pandar, Lycaon’s son, beheld his ruin’s hand,
With such distress insouciance, make lanes through every band,
He bent his gold-tipp’d bow of horn, and shot him rushing in,
At his right shoulder, where his arms were hollow; forth did spin
The blood, and down his curets ran; then Pandarus cried out:
"Rank-riding Trojans, now rush in. Now, now, I make no doubt
Our bravest foe is mark’d for death; he cannot long sustain
My violent shaft, if Jove’s fair Son did worthily constrain
My foot from Lycia. Thus he braved, and yet his violent shaft [life was saft; Strook short with all his violence, Tydide’s Who yet withdrew himself behind his chariot and steeds,
And call’d to Sthenelus: "Come friend, my wounded should neeeds Thy hand to ease it of this shaft." He hast from his seat,
Before the coach, and drew the shaft; the purple wound did sweat,
And drawn his shirt of mail in blood, and as it bled he pray’d:
"Hear me, of Jove Agiouchus thou most unconquer’d maid,
If ever in the cruel field thou hast assistful stood, [do me good.
Or to my father, or myself, now love, and Give him into my lance’s reach, that thus hath given a wound;
To him thou guard’st, preventing me, and brings that never more
I shall behold the cheerful sun." Thus did the king implore.
The Goddess heard, came near, and took the weariness of fight
From all his nerves and lineaments, and made them fresh and sound,
And said: "Be bold, O Diomed, in every combat shine,
The great shield, maker Tydeus’ strength (that knight, that sire of thine)
By my infusion breathes in thee; and from thy knowing mind
I have removed those erring mists that made it lately blind, That thou mayst difference Gods from men; and therefore use thy skill [a will Against the tempting Deities, if any have To try if thou presumest of that, as thine, that flows from them;
And so assumest above thy right. Where thou discern’st a beam
Of any other heavenly power than she that rules in love,
That calls thee to the change of blows, resist not, but remove:
But if that Goddess be so bold (since she first stir’d this war)
Assault and mark her from the rest with some infamous scar."
The blue-eyed Goddess vanished, and he was seen again
Amongst the foremost; who before, though he were prompt and fain
To fight against the Trojans’ powers, now, on his spirits were call’d With thirce the vigour; lion-like, that hath been lately gall’d.
By some bold shepherd in a field, where his curl’d flocks were laid,
Who took him as he leap’d the fold, not slain yet, but appalled,
With greater spirit, comes again, and then the shepherd hides
(The rather for the desolate place), and in his cote-abides;
His flocks left guardless; which, amazed, shake and shrink up in heaps;
He, ruthless, freely takes his prey, and out again he leaps:
So sprightly, fierce, victorious, the great hero flew Upon the Trojans; and, at once, he two commanders slew, Hyppenar and Astynous; in one his lance he fix’d.
Full at the nipple of his breast; the other smote his back
The neck and shoulder with his sword which was so well laid on It swept his arm and shoulder off. Thes left, he rush’d upon Abas and Polydeus, of old Eurydamas
The hapless sons; who could by dream tell what would come to pass:
Yet, when his sons set forth to Troy, the old man could not read
By their dreams what would chance to them; for both were stricken dead;
By great Tydides. After these, he takes into his rage Xanthus and Tho’in, Phoep’s sons, born to him in his age;
The good old man even pined with years, and had not one son more
To heir his goods; yet Diomed took both, and left him store
Of tears and sorrows in their steads, since he could never see His sons leave these hot wars alive; so this the end must be Of all his labours; what he heap'd, to make his issue great, Authority heir'd, and with her seed fill'd his forgotten seat.
Then snatch'd he up two Priamists, that in one chariot stood.
Echemon, and fair Chromius. As feeding in a wood [leaps upon,
Oxen or steers are, one of which a lion Tears down, and wrings in two his neck;
so, sternly, Tydeus' son Threw from their chariot both these hopes of old Dardanides,
Then took their arms, and sent their horse to those that ride the seas.
Aeneas, seeing the troops thus toss'd, brake through the heat of fight,
And all the whizing of the darts, to find the Lycian knight, Lycaon's son; whom having found, he thus bespake the peer:
"O Pandarus, where's now thy bow?
thy deathful arrows where?
In which no one in all our host but gives the palm to thee;
Nor in the sun-blest Lycian greens, that brighten our archery, Lives any that exceeds thyself. Come, lift thy hands to Jove, [man he prove,
And send an arrow at this man—if but a
That wins such god-like victories, and now affects our host
With so much sorrow; since so much of our best blood is lost
By his high valour; I have fear some God in him doth thrill, [of God is great."
Incensed for want of sacrifice, the wrath Lycaon's famous son replied: "Great counsellor of Troy, [Tydeus' joy:
This man, so excellent in arms, I think is I know him by his fiery shield, by his bright three-plumed casque,
And by his horse; nor can I say, if or some God doth mask
In his appearance; or he be whom I named, Tydeus' son:
But without God, the things he does for certain are not done.
Some great Immortal, that conveys his shoulders in a cloud, Goes by, and puts by every dart at his bold breast bestow'd, [let fly
Or lets it take with little hurt; for I myself A shaft that shot him through his arms, but had as good gone by;
Yet which I gloriously affirm'd had driven him down to hell.
Some God is angry, and with me; for far hence, where I dwell, My horse and chariots idle stand, with which some other way
I might repair this shameful miss: eleven fair chariots stay
In old Lycaon's court, new made, new trimm'd to have been gone, Curtain'd, and arras'd under foot; two horse to every one,
That eat white barley and black oats, and do no good at all:
And these Lycaon (that well knew how these affairs would fall) Charged, when I set down this design, I should command with here,
And gave me many lessons more, all which much better were
That any I took forth myself. The reason
I laid down
Was but the sparing of my horse; since in a sieged town,
I thought our horse-meat would be scant when they were used to have Their mangers full; so I left them, an like a lackey slave Am come to Ilion, confident in nothing but my bow,
That nothing profits me. Two shafts vainly did bestow
At two great princes, but of both none arrows neither slew;
Nor this, nor Atreus' younger son; a little blood I drew,
That served but to incense them more
In an unhappy star
I therefore from my armoury have drawn those tools of war
That day, when, for great Hector's sake
I came to lead the Trojan bands. But In safe return, my country's sight, wife's, my lofty towers, Let any stranger take this head, if to fiery powers
This bow, these shafts, in pieces burst, these hands be not thrown;
Idle companions that they are to me:
my renown."
Aeneas said: "Use no such words;
any other way
Than this, they shall not now be use.
We first will both assay
This man with horse and chariot. Come then, ascend to me.
That thou mayest try our Trojan hero how skil'd in field they be;
And in pursuing those that fly, or fly being pursued,
How excellent they are of foot; and the if Jove conclude
The scape of Tydeus again, and grace him with our flight, Shall serve to bring us safely off. Come,
I'll be first shall fight.
Take thou these fair reins and this scourge;
or, if thou wilt, fight thou,
And leave the horses care to me." He answer'd: "I will now Descend to fight; keep thou the reins, and guide thyself thy horse,
Who with their wonted manager will better wield the force Of the impulsive chariot, if we be driven to fly,
Than with a stranger; under whom they will be much more shy,
And four suspicious horses, wishing thine,)\n grow resty, nor go on To bear us off; but leave engaged for mighty Tydeus' son Themselves and us. Then be thy part thy one-hooved horses' guide, I'll make the fight, and with a dart receive his utmost pride."
With this the gorgeous chariot both thus prepared, ascend,
And make full way at Diomed; which noted by his friend,
"Mine own most-loved mind," said he,
"two mighty men of war
I see come with a pursu'd charge; one's he that hits so far With bow and shaft, Lycaon's son; the other fames the brood Of great Anchises, and the Queen that rules in amorous blood; (Æneas, excellent in arms) come up, and use your steeds,
And look not war so in the face, lest that desire that feeds Thy great mind be the bane of it." This did with anger sting
The blood of Diomed, to see his friend, that chid the king
Before the fight, and then prefer'red his ableste and his mind: [far behind:
To all his ancestors in fight, now come so Whom thus he answer'd: "Urge no flight, you cannot please me so;
Nor is it honest in my mind to fear a coming foe,
Or make a flight good, though with fight;
my powers are yet entire,
And scorn the help-tire of a horse. I will not blow the fire
Of their hot valours with my flight; but east upon the blaze
This body borne upon my knees. I entertain amaze?

Minerva will not see that shame. And since they have begun,
They shall not both elect their ends: and he that escapes shall run, Or stay and take the other's fate. And this I leave for thee;
[to me,
If amply-wise Athena give both their lives Rein our horse to their chariot hard, and have a special heed
To seize upon Æneas' steeds; that we may change their breed,
And make a Grecian race of them that have been long of Troy.
For these are bred of those brave beasts which, for the lovely boy That waits now on the cup of Jove, Jove, that far-seeing God.
Gave Tros the king in recompense; the best that ever trod
The sounding centre, underneath the morning and the sun.
Anchises stole the breed of them; for,
where their sire's did run,
He closely put his mares to them, and never made it known To him that heir'd them, who was then the king Laomedon.
Six horses had he of that race, of which himself kept four,
And gave the other two his son; and these are they that scour
The field so bravely towards us, expert in charge and flight.
If these we have the power to take, our prize is exquisite,
And our renown will far exceed." While these were talking thus,
The fired horse brought th' assailants near,
and thus spake Pandarus:
"Most suffering-minded Tydeus' son,
that hst of war the art,
My shaft, that strook thee, slew thee not,
I now will prove a dart."
This said, he shook, and then he threw, a lance, aloft and large,
That in Tydides' curets stuck, quite driving through his targe;
Then bray'd he out so wild a voice that all the field might hear:
"Now have I reach'd thy root of life, and by thy death shall bear
Our praise's chief prize from the field."
Tydides undismay'd Replied: "Thou err'st, I am not touch'd; but more charge will be laid To both your lives before you part; at least the life of one Shall satiate the throat of Mars." This said, his lance was gone;
Minerva led it to his face, which at his eye ran in,
And, as he stoop'd, strook through his jaws, his tongue's root, and his chin.
Down from the chariot he fell, his gray arms shined and rung,
The swift horse trembled, and his soul for ever charm'd his tongue.
Aeneas with his shield and lance, leapt swiftly to his friend, Afraid the Greeks would force his trunk; and that he did defend,
Bold as a lion of his strength; he hid him with his shield,
Shook round his lance, and horribly did threaten all the field
With death, if any durst make in. Tydides raised a stone With his one hand, of wondrous weight, and pour'd it mainly on The hip of Anchises, wherein the joint doth move
The thigh (tis call'd the huckle-bone) which all in sherds it drove;
Brake both the nerves, and with the edge cut all the flesh away.
It stagger'd him upon his knees, and made the hero stay
His struck-blind temples on his hand, his elbow on the earth;
And there this prince of men had died, if she that gave him birth (Kiss'd by Anchises on the green, where his fair oxen fed), Jove's loving daughter, instantly had not about him spread
Her soft embraces, and convey'd within her heavenly veil (Used as a rampire again all darts that did so hot assail)
Her dear-loved issue from the field. Then Sthenelus in haste, Remembering what his friend advised, from forth the press made fast
His own horse to their chariot, and presently laid hand [command.
Upon the lovely-coated horse Aeneas did
Which bringing to the wondering Greeks, he did their guard command
To his beloved Deipylus, who was his inward friend,
And, of his equals, one to whom he had most honour shown,
That he might see them safe at fleet; then stept he to his own,
With which he cheerfully made in to Tydus' mighty race.
He, mad with his great enemy's rape, was hot in desperate chase
Of her that made it, with his lance, arm'd less with steel than spite,
Well knowing her no Deity that had to do in fight,
Minerva his great patroness, nor, she that razeth towns,
Bellona, but a Goddess weak, and foe to men's renown;
Her, through a world of fight pursued, at last he overtook,
And, thrusting up his ruthless lance, her heavenly veil he strook (That even the Graces wroth themselves at her divine command) Quite through, and hurt the tender bark of her delicious hand.
The rude point piercing through her palm, forth flow'd th' immortal blood;
Blood, such as flows in blessed Gods, that eat no human food, Nor drink of our inflaming wine, and therefore bloodless are,
And call'd Immortals; out she cried, and could no longer bear
Her loved son; whom she cast from her, and in a sable cloud, Phoebus, receiving, hid him close from a the Grecian crowd, Lest some of them should find his death Away flew Venus then,
And after her cried Diomed: "Away thou spoil of men, Though sprung from all-preserving Jove, these hot encounters leave, Is't not enough that silly dames the sorceries should deceive, Unless thou thrust into the war, and robber soldier's right? [thee fear the fight
I think a few of these assaults will make Wherever thou shalt hear it named.
She, sighing, went her way Extremely grieved, and with her griefs the beauties did decay,
And black her ivory body grew. This from a dewy mist Brake swift-foot Iris to her aid, from the darts that hiss'd
At her quick rapture; and to Mars took their plaintive course,
And found him on the right's left hand, him his speedy horse,
And great Mount, lying in a fog. There Queen of all things fair
Her loved brother, on her knees, besought with instant prayer,
His golden riband-bound maned horse lend her up to heaven.
For she was much grieved with a wound a mortal man had given, Tydides, that 'gainst Jove himself durst now advance his arm.
He granted, and his chariot (perplex'd with her late harm)
She mounted, and on her waggones was she that paints the air.
The horse she rein'd, and with a scoure importuned their repair,
That of themselves out-flew the wind, and quickly they ascend Olympus, high seat of the Gods. Th'horse knew their journey's end, Stood still, and from their chariot the windy-footed dame
Dissolved, and gave them heavenly food;
and to Dione came
Her wounded daughter, bent her knees:
she kindly bade her stand,
With sweet embraces help'd her up, stroked her with her soft hand, Calf'd kindly by her name, and ask'd:
"What God hath been so rude, Sweet daughter to chastise thee thus, as if thou wert pursued
Even to the act of some light sin, and deprehended so?
For otherwise, each close escape is in the great let go;
She answer'd: "Naughty Tydeus' son hath been so insolent, Since, he whom most my heart esteems of all my loved descent,
I rescued from his bloody hand. Now battle is not given To any Trojans by the Greeks, but by the Greeks to heaven."
She answer'd: "Daughter, think not much, though it grieve thee; use The patience, whereof many Gods examples may produce,
In many bitter ills received, as well that men sustain
By their afflictions, as by men repaid to them again.
Mars suffer'd much more than thyself by Ephialtes' power,
And Otus', Aloeus' sons; who in a brazen
And in inextricable chains, cast that war-greedy God,
Where twice-six months and one he lived, and there the period
Of his sad life perhaps had closed, if his kind stepdame's eye,
Fair Erebea, had not seen; who told it
Mercury,
And he by stealth enchfranchised him; though he could scarce enjoy
The benefit of franchisement, the chains did so destroy

His vital forces with their weight, So Juno suffer'd more
When, with a three-fork'd arrow's head, Amphithyo's son did gore
Her right breast, past all hope of cure.
Pluto sustain'd no less [bitterness
By that self-maimed, and by a shaft of equal Shot through his shoulder at hell gates;
and there, amongst the dead,
Were be not deathless, he had died; but up to heaven he fled, Extremely tortured, for recure, which instantly he won
At Peon's hand, with sovereign balme;
and this did Jove's great son.
Unblest, great-high-deed-daring man,
that cared not doing ill,
That with his bow durst wound the Gods;
but, by Minerva's will,
Thy wound the foolish Diomed was so profane to give;
Not knowing he that fights with Heaven hath never long to live;
And for this deed, he never shal have child about his knees
To call him father, coming home. Besides, hear this from me,
Strength-triumphant, though thou be strong, and art in strength a tower, Take heed a stronger meet thee not, and that a woman's power Contains not that superior strength, and lest that woman be Adrastus' daughter, and thy wife, the wise Ægiale;
When, from this hour not far, she wakes, even sighing with desire To kindle our revenge on thee, with her enamouring fire,
In choosing her some fresh young friend,
and so drown all thy fame, Won here in war, in her court-peace, and in an opener shame."
This said, with both her hands she cleansed the tender back and palm Of all the sacred blood they lost; and never using balme,
The pain ceased, and the wound was cured of this kind Queen of love.
Juno and Pallas, seeing this, assay'd to anger Jove,
And quit his late-made mirth with them, about the loving Dame,
With some sharp jest, in like sort built,
on her present shame.
Grey-eyed Athena began, and ask'd the Thunderer,
If, nothing moving him to wrath, she boldly might prefer,
What she conceived, to his conceit; and,
not speaking any reply,
She bade him view the Cyprian fruit he loved so tenderly,
Whom she thought, hurt, and by this means, intending to suborn Some other lady of the Greeks (whom lovely veils adorned)
To gratify some other friend of her much-loved Troy,
[the Venerean joy,
As she embraced and stirred her blood to The golden clasp, those Grecian dames upon their girdles wear, Took hold of her delicious hand, and hurt it, she had fear.
The Thunderer smiled, and call’d to him love’s golden Arbitress, And told her those rough works of war were not for her access;
She should be making marriages, embracings, kisses, charms,
Stern Mars and Pallas had the charge of those affairs in arms.
While these thus talk’d, Tydides’ rage still thirsted to achieve, His prize upon Anchises’ son, though well he did perceive.
The Sun himself protected him; but his desires (inflamed
With that great Trojan prince’s blood, and arms so highly famed) Not that great God did reverence. Three rush’d he rudely on,
And thrice, betwixt his darts and death,
the Sun’s bright target shone;
But when upon the fourth assault, much like a spirit, he flew,
The far-off-working Deity exceeding wrathful grew,
And ask’d him: ‘What! Not yield to Gods? thy equals learn to know.
The race of Gods is far above men creeping here below.’
This drug he to some small retreat;
he would not tempt more near.
The wrath of him that stook so far; whose he had now set clear.
Æneas from the stormy field within the holy place
Of Pergamus, where, to the hope of his so sovereign grace,
A goodly temple was advanced; in whose large utmost part
He left him, and to his supply inclined his mother’s heart, Latona, and the dart-pleased Queen; who cured, and made him strong.
The silver-bow’d fair God then threw in the tumultuous throng An image, that in stature, look, and arms, his did create.
Like Venus’ son; for which the Greeks and Trojans made debate, Laid loud strokes on their ox-hide shields, and bucklers easily borne;
Which error Phoebus pleased to urge on Mars himself in scorn: ‘Mars, Mars,’ said he, ‘thou plague of men, smear’d with the dust and blood Of humans and their ruin’d walls, yet thinks thy Godhead good To fright this fury from the field, who next will fight with Jove?’
First in a bold approach he hurt, the moist palm of thy love,
And next, as if he did affect to have a Deity’s power,
He held out his assault on me.” This said, the lofty tower Of Pergamus he made his seat; and Mars did now excite [led to fight
The Trojan forces, in the form of him that The Thracian troops, swift Acanas.
O Priam’s sons,” said he,
“ How long the slaughter of your men can ye sustain to see?
Even till they brave ye at your gates? ye suffer beaten down [we renown
Æneas, great Anchises’ son, whose prowess As much as Hector’s; fetch him off from this contentious prease.”
With this, the strength and spirits of all his courage did increase;
And yet Sarpedon saws him, with this particular taunt [unthankful vaunt, Of noble Hector: “Hector, where is thy And that huge strength on which it built, that thou, and thy allies,
With all thy brothers (without aid of us or our supplies,
And troubling not a citizen) the city safe would hold?
In all which friends’ and brothers’ helps I see not, nor am told Of any one of their exploits (but all held in dismay)
Of Diomed, like a sort of dogs, that at a And entertain no spirit to pinch) we, your assistants here,
Fight for the town as you help’d us; and I, an aiding peer,
No citizen, even out of care, that doth become a man [aid I can;
For men and children’s liberties, add all the Net not of my particular cause; far hence my profit grows,
For far hence Asian Lycia lies, where gulphs Xanthus flows,
And where my loved wife, infant son, and treasure nothing scant,
I left behind me, which I see those men would have that want;
And therefore they that have would keep:
yet I, as I would lose Their sure fruition, cheer my troops, and with their lives propose Mine own life, both to general fight, and to particular cope, entertain no hope With this great soldier; though, I say, I to have such gettings as the Greeks, nor fear to lose like Troy.
Yet thou, even Hector, deedless stand'st, and carest not to employ Thy town-born friends, to bid them stand, to fight and save their wives, Lest as aowler casts his nets upon the silly lives
Of birds of all sorts, so the foe your walls and houses hales,
One with another, on all heads; or such as
'scape their falls,
Be made the prey and prize of them (as willing overthrown)
That help not for you with their forces;
and so this brave-built town Will prove a chaos. That deserves in thee so hot a care.
As should consume thy days and nights, to hearturn and prepare Thy assistant princes; pray their minds to bear their far-brought toils;
To give them worth with worthy fight; in victories and foils
Still to be equal; and thyself, exempling them in all, Need no reproofs nor spurs. All this in thy free choice should fall." This stung great Hector's heart; and yet, as every generous mind Should silent bear a just reproach, and shew what good they find In worthy counsels, by their ends put into present deeds,
Not stomach, nor be vainly shamed; so Hector's spirit proceeds:
And from his chariot, wholly arm'd, he jump'd upon the sand,
On foot so toiling through the host, a dart in either hand,
And all hands turn'd against the Greeks:
the Greeks despaired their worst,
And, thickening their instructed powers, expected all they durst.
Then with the feet of horse and foot, the dust in clouds did rise.
And as, in sacred floors of barns, upon corn-winnowers flies
The chaff, driven with an opposite wind when yellow Ceres dites, Which all the dites' feet, legs, arms, the heads and shoulders white;
So look'd the Grecians grey with dust, the strok'd the solid heaven, Raised from returning chariots, and troop up togethers driven.
Each side stood to their labours firm;
fierce Mars flew through the air,
And gather'd darkness from the fight, and with his best affair, Obey'd the pleasure of the Sun, that wear
the golden sword,
Who bade him raise the spirits of Troy when Pallas ceased 't afford Her helping office to the Greeks; and then his own hands wrought.
Which, from his fan's rich chancel, cured the true Æneas brought,
And placed him by his peers in field; who did with joy admire
To see him both alive and safe, and all his powers entire:
Yet stood not sitting how it chanced another sort of task,
Than stirring th' idle sieve of news, did al their forces ask,
Infamed by Phoebus, harmful Mars, and Eris eagerer far.
The Greeks had none to hearten them their hearts rose with the war;
But chiefly Diomed, Ithacus, and both th Ajaces used Stirring examples and good words; their own fames had infused Spirit enough into their bloods, to make them neither fear
The Trojans' force, nor Fate itself, but still expecting were.
When must was done, what would be more their ground they still made good,
And in their silence, and set powers, like fair still clouds, they stood,
With which Jove crowns the tops of hill in any quiet day, [to drive away
When Boreas and the ruder winds (that us Air's dusky vapours, being loose, in man a whistling gale)
Are pleasingly bound up, and calm, and not a breath exhale;
So firmly stood the Greeks, nor fled for a the Ilions' aid.
Atrides yet coastes through the troop confirming men so staid:
"O friends," said he, "hold up yet minds; strength is but strength of will Reverence each other's good in fight, and shame at things done ill."
Where soldiers shew an honest shame, and love of honour lives,
That ranks men with the first in fight, death fewer liveries gives Than life, or than where Fame’s neglect makes cowards fight at length.
I’ll fight neither doth the body grace, nor shows the mind hath strength.”
He said, and swiftly through the troops a mortal lance did send,
That reft a standard-bearer’s life, renown’d Aeneas’ friend,
Deicoön Perigades, whom all the Trojans loved.
As he were one of Priam’s sons, his mind was so approved
In always fighting with the first. The lance his target took,
Which could not interrupt the blow, that through it clearly struck,
And in his belly’s rim was sheathed, beneath his girdle-stead.
He sounded falling, and his arms with him resounded, dead.
Then fell two princes of the Greeks by great Aeneas’ ire, Diocles’ sons (Orsilochus and Crethon), whose kind sire
In braver guise than Phæra dwell, rich, and of sacred blood.
He was descended lineally from great Alpheus’ flood,
That broadly flows through Pylos’ fields;
Alpheus did beget [was set;
Orsilochus, who in the rule of many men
And that Orsilochus begat the rich Diocles;
Diocles sire to Crethon was, and this Orsilochus.
Both these, arrived at man’s estate, with both th’ Atrides went,
To honour them in th’ Ilion wars; and both were one day sent,
To death as well as Troy; for death hid both in one black hour.
As two young lions (with their dam, sustain’d but to devour Bred on the tops of some steep hill, and in the gloomy deep
Of an inaccessible wood, rush out, and prey on sheep,
Steers, oxen, and destroy men’s stalls, so long that they came short,
And by the owner’s steel are slain; in such unhappy sort Fell these beneath Aeneas’ power. When Menelaus view’d,
Like two tall fir-trees, these two fall, their timeless falls he reed,
And to the first fight, where they lay, a vengeful force he took;
His arms beat back the sun in flames, a dreadful lance he shook;
Mars put the fury in his mind, that by Aeneas’ hands,
Who to make the slaughter good, he might have strew’d the sands.
Antilochus, old Nestor’s son, observing he was bent
To urge a combat of such odds, and knowing the event
Being ill on his part, all their pains (alone sustain’d for him)
Err’d from their end, made after hard, and took them in the trim Of an encounter. Both their hands and darts advanced, and shook,
And both pitch’d in full stand of charge;
when suddenly the look
Of Anchises took note of Nestor’s valiant son,
In full charge too; which, two to one,
made Venus’ issue shun
The hot adventure, though he were a soldier well-approved.
Then drew they off their slaughter’d friends; who given to their beloved,
They turn’d where fight shew’d deadliest hate; and there mix’d with the dead Pylæmen, that the targeters of Paphla-gonia led,
A man like Mars; and with him fell good Mydon that did guide
His chariot, Atymnus’ son. The prince
Pylæmen died
By Menelaus; Nestor’s joy slew Mydon one before [did gone;
The other in the chariot. Atrides’ lance Pylæmen’s shoulder, in the blade. Antilochus did force
A mighty stone up from the earth, and, as he turn’d his horse, Strock Mydon’s elbow in the midst; the reins of ivory
Fell from his hands into the dust; Antilochus let fly
His sword withal, and, rushing in, a blow so deadly laid Upon his temples, that he groan’d, tumble unto earth, and stay’d A mighty while preposterously (because the dust was deep) Upon his neck and shoulders there, even till his toe took keep Of his prized horse, and made them stir and then he prostrate fell.
His horse Antilochus took home, Who Hector had heard tell,
Amongst the uproar, of their deaths, he laid out all his voice, and ran upon the Greeks. Behind came many men of choice, before him march’d great Mars himself, match’d with his female mate, the dread Bellona. She brought on, to fight for mutual fate, a tumult that was wild and mad. He shook a horrid lance, and now led Hector, and anon behind would make the chance. This sight when great Tyndides saw, his hair stood up on end; and him, whom all the skill and power of arms did late attend, now like a man in counsel poor, that travelling, goes amiss, and having pass’d a boundless plain, not knowing where he is, comes on the sudden where he sees a river rough, and raves with his own billows ravished into the king of waves, murmurs with foam, and frights him back; so he, amazed, retired, and thus would make good his amaze: "O friends, we all admired Great Hector, as one of himself, well-darting, bold in war, when some God guards him still from death, and makes him dare so far. Now Mars himself, form’d like a man, is present in his rage, and therefore, whatsoever cause importunes you to wage war with these Trojans, never strive, but gently take your rod, lest in your bosome, for a man, ye ever find a God.” As Greece retired, the power of Troy did much more forward rejoice, and Hector two brave men of war sent to the fields of peace; Menesthes, and Anchialus; one chariot bare them both. [heart, and wroth, Their falls made Ajax Telamon ruthless of Who lighten’d out a lance that smote Amphiwe Sciles, that dwelt in Paeon, rich in lands, and did huge goods possess, but Fate, to Priam and his sons, conducted his supply. The javelin on his girdle strook, and pierced mortally his belly’s lower part; he fell: his arms had looks so trim, that Ajax needs would prove their spoil; the Trojans pour’d on him whole storms of lances, large, and sharp, of which a number stuck in his rough shield; yet from the slain he did his javelin pluck. But could not from his shoulders force the arms he did affect, the Trojans with such drifts of darts the body did protect; and wisely Telamonius fear’d their valorous defence, with such expense so many, and so strong of hand, stood in of deadly prowess; who repell’d, though big, strong, bold, he were, the famous Ajax, and their friend did from his rapture bear, thus this place fill’d with strength of fight, in th’ army’s other prease, Telephus, a tall big man, the son of Hercules, a cruel destiny inspired, with strong desire to prove [son of cloudy Jove; encounter with Sarpedon’s strength, the who, coming on to that stern end, had chosen him his foe; Thus Jove’s great nephew, and his son, against one another go. Telephus, to make his end more worth the will of fate, the mortal state began as if he had her power, and shew’d of too much confidence in man, with this superfluous brave; humour drave “Sarpedon, what necessity or needless thy form to these wars? which in heart I know thou dost abhor, [counsellor? a man not seen in deeds of arms, a Lycian they lie that call thee son to Jove, since Jove bred none so late; the men of elder times were they, that his high power begat, such men as had herculean force. my father Hercules was Jove’s true issue; he was bold; his deeds did well express they sprung out of a lion’s heart. he whilom came to Troy (for horse that Jupiter gave Tros, for Ganymed, his boy), with six ships only and few men, and tore the city down. left all her broadways desolate, and made the horse his own. for thee, thy mind is ill disposed, thy body’s powers are poor, and therefore are thy troops so weak; the soldier evermore follows the temper of his chief; and thou pull’st down a side. but say thou art the son of Jove, and hast thy means supplied.
With forces fitting his descent, the powers that I compel,
Shall throw them hence, and make thy head run ope the gates of hell."

Jove's Lycean issue answer'd him: "Tie-polemus, 'tis true [threw;
Thy father holy liion in that sort over-
Th' injustice of the king was cause, that, where thy father had Used good deserving to his state, he quitted him with bad.

Hesione, the joy and grace of king Laomedon,
Thy father rescued from a whale, and gave to Telamon
In honour'd murtials (Telamon, from whom your strongest Greek Boasts to have issued) and this grace might well expect the like;
Yet he gave taunts for thanks, and kept,
against his oath, his horse,
And therefore both thy father's strength, and justice, might enforce The wretch he took on Troy; but this and thy cause differ far.

Sons seldom heir their fathers' worths:
 thou canst not make his war.

What thou assumest from him, is mine to be on thee imposed."

With this, he threw an ashen dart; and then Tlepolemus loosed Another from his glorious hand. Both at the instant flew.
Both struck, both wounded. From his neck Sarpedon's javelin drew
The life-blood of Tlepolemus; full in the midst it fell;
And what he threaten'd, th' other gave,
that darkness, and that hell.

Sarpedon's left thigh took the lance; it perced the solid bone,
And with his raging head ran through; but Jove preserved his son.
The dart yet vex'd him bitterly, which should have been pull'd out, But none consider'd then so much, so thick came on the root,
And fill'd each hand so full of cause to ply his own defence;
'Twas held enough, both fall'n, that both were nobly carried thence.

Ulysses knew th' events of both, and took it much to heart That his friend's enemy should 'scape; and in a twofold part His thoughts contended, if he should pursue Sarpedon's life, Or take his friend's wark on his men. Fate did conclude this strife,

By whom 'twas otherwise decreed than that Ulysses' steel Should end Sarpedon. In this doubt
Minerva took the wheel
From fickle Chance, and made his mind resolve to right his friend.
With that blood he could surest draw.
Then did Revenge extend Her full power on the multitude; then did he never miss;
[Prytianis, Alastor, Hallus, Chromius, Noemon,
Alexander, and a number more, he slew, and more had slain,
If Hector had not understood; whose power made in amain,
And strook fear through the Grecon troops, but to Sarpedon gave Hope of full rescue, who thus cried: "O
Hector! help and save My body from the spoil of Greece, that to your loved town
My friends may see me borne; and then let earth possess her own
In this soil, for whose sake I left my country's; for no day Shall ever shew me that again, nor to my wife display,
And young hope of my name, the joy of my much thirsted sight;
All which I left for Troy, for them let Troy then do this right.

To all this Hector gives no word; but greedily he strives With all speed to repel the Greeks, and shed in floods their lives,
And left Sarpedon; but what face soever he put on
Of following the common cause, he left this prince alone
For his particular grudge, because, so late he was so plain
In his reproof before the host, and that did he retain;
However, for example sake, he would not shew it then,
And for his shame too, since 'twas just
But good Sarpedon's men Ventured themselves, and forced him out and set him underneath
The goodly beech of Jupiter, where not they did unseath
The ashen lance; strong Pelagon, his friend, most loved, most true, Enforced it from his maimed thigh; with which his spirit flew.
And chinkness over-flew his eyes; yet with a gentle gale,
That round about the dying prince of Boreas did exhale,
He was revived, recomforted, that else had grieved and died.
All this time flight drove to the fleet the Argives, who applied
No weapon 'gainst the proud pursuit, nor ever turn'd a head; They knew so well that Mars pursued, and dreadful Hector led.
Then who was first, who last, whose lives the iron Mars did seize,
And Priam's Hector? Helenus, surnamed Eneopides;
Good Truthas; and Orestes, skill'd in managing of horse; Bold Aeneas; and a man renown'd for martial force;
Treachus, the great Æolian chief; Oresbius, that did wear [and dwelt near Th' Atlantic lake. Cephisides, in Ilyia; by whose seat
The good men of Ezcotia dwelt. This slaughter grew so great,
It flew to heaven. Saturnia discern'd it, and cried out
To Pallas: "O unworthy sight to see a field so fought,
And break our words to Sparta's king, that Ilion should be rased,
And he return revenged; when thus we see his Greeks disgraced,
And bear the harmful rage of Mars! Come, let us use our care,
That we dishonour not our powers." Minerva was as yare
As she at the despite of Troy. Her golden-bridled steeds
Then Saturn's daughter brought abroad;
and Hebe, she proceeds
To address her chariot; instantly she gives it either wheel, Beam'd with eight spokes of sounding brass; the axle-tree was steel;
The fellips incorruptible gold, their upper hands of brass, Their matter most unvalued, their work of wondrous grace;
The waves, in which the spokes were driven, were all with silver bound;
The chariot's seat two hoops of gold and silver strength'd round, Edged with a gold and silver fringe; the team, that look'd before,
Was massy silver; on whose top, gears all of gold it wore,
And golden poitills. Juno mounts, and her hot horses rein'd,
That thirsted for contention, and still of peace complaint'd.

Minerva wrap't her in the robe, that curiously she wove,
With glorious colours, as she sate on th'
avure floor of Jove.
And wore the arms that he puts on, bent to the tearful field.
About her broad-spread shoulders hung his huge and horrid shield,
Fringed round with ever-fighting snakes; through it was drawn to life
The miseries and deaths of fight; in it frown'd bloody Strife,
In it shined sacred Fortitude, in it fell Pursuit flew.
In it the monster Gorgon's head, in which held out to view
Were all the dire ostents of Jove; on her big head she placed His four-plumed glittering casque of gold, so admirably vast
It would a hundred garrisons of soldiers comprehend.
Then to her shining chariot her vigorous feet ascend;
And in her violent hand she takes his grave, huge, solid lance,
With which the conquests of her wrath she useth to advance,
And overturn whole fields of men, to show she was the seed
Of him that thunders. Then heaven's Queen, to urge her horses' speed, Takes up the scourge, and forth they fly:
the ample gates of heaven Rung, and flew open of themselves; the charge whereof is given,
With all Olympus, and the sky, to the dis-tinguish'd Hours,*
That clear, or hide it all in clouds, or pour it down in showers.
This way their scourge-obeying horse made haste, and soon they won The top of all the topful heavens, where aged Saturn's son Sat sever'd from the other Gods; then stay'd the white-arm'd Queen Her steeds, and ask'd of Jove, if Mars did not incense his spleen
With his foul deeds, in ruining so many and so great
In the command and grace of Greece, and in so rude a heat?
At which, she said, Apollo laugh'd, and Venus, who still sue
To that mad God, for violence that never Justice knew;

* The three Hours guardians of Heaven's gate.
For whose impiety, she ask’d, if, with his wished love, Herself might free the field of him? He bade her rather move Athena to the charge she sought, who used of old to be The bane of Mars, and had as well the gift of spoil as he.
This grace she slack’d not, but her horse scourged, that in nature flew Betwixt the cope of stars and earth; and how far at a view
A man into the purple sea may from a hill descry,
So far a high-neighing horse of heaven at every jump would fly.*

Arrived at Troy, where, broke in curls, the two floods mix their force, Scamander and bright Simois, Saturnia stay’d her horse, Took them from chariot, and a cloud of mighty depth diffused About them; and the verdant banks of Simois produced
In nature what they eat in heaven.† Then both the Goddesses March’d, like a pair of timorous doves, in hasting their access To th’ Argive succour. Being arrived, where both the most and best Were heap’d together (shewing all, like hosts at a feast)
Of new-slain carcasses, or beaks, beyond encounter strong
There found they Diomed; and there, ‘midst all th’ admiring throng, Saturnia put on Stentor’s shape, that had a brazen voice, [she made a noise,
And spake as loud as fifty men; like whom And chid the Argives: “O ye Greeks, in name and outward rite [what despite,
But princes only, not in act; what scandal,

* How far a heavenly horse took at one reach or spring, in galloping or running; wherein Homer’s mind is far from being expressed in his interpreters, all taking it for how far Deities were born from the earth; when instantly they came down to earth: νεικων ἀνθρωποιον, &c. tæntum uno satuis conficient, vel, tæntum subulitim propagiuntur, deorum altissimae equi, &c., uno being understood, and the horse’s swiftness highly expressed. The sense, otherwise, is senseless and contradictory.
† Ἀβραμοῦς is the original word, which Scaliger taxeth very learnedly, asking how the horse came by it on those banks, when the text tells him Simois produced it; being willing to express by hyperbole the delicacy of that soil. If not, I hope the Deities could ever command it.

Use ye to honour? All the time the great Aëacides
Was conversant in arms, your foes durst not a foot address Without their ports; so much they fear’d his lance that all control’d,
And now they out-ray to your fleet.” This did with shame make bold
The general spirit and power of Greece; when, with particular note
Of their disgrace, Athena made Tydeus’ issue hot.
She found him at his chariot, refreshing of his wound Inflicted by slain Pandarus; his sweat did so abound,
It much annoy’d him, underneath the broad belt of his shield;
With which, and tired with his toil, his soul could hardly yield
His body motion. With his hand he lifted up the belt,
And wiped away that clotted blood the fervent wound did melt.
Minerva lean’d against his horse, and near their withers laid Her sacred hand, then spake to him: “Believe me, Diomed, Tydeus exemplified not himself in thee his son; not great, [much heat But yet he was a soldier; a man of such
That in his embassy for Theseks, when forbade his mind
To be too venturous, and when feasts his heart might have declined,
With which they welcomed him, he made a challenge to the best,
And foil’d the best; I gave him aid because the rust of rest,
That would have seized another mind, he suffer’d not, but used
The trial I made like a man, and their success refused.
Yet, when I set thee on, thou faint’st; guard thee, charge, exhort
That, I abetting thee, thou shouldst be to the Greeks a fort,
And a dismay to Ilion, yet thou obey’st not thou, nought, Afreid, or slothful, or else both; henceforth renounce all thought That ever thou wert Tydeus’ son.” He answer’d her: “I know Thou art Jove’s daughter, and, for that, in all just duty owe Thy speeches reverence, yet affirm indignantly that fear Doth neither hold me spiritless, nor sloth, I only bear Thy charge in zealous memory, that I should never war
With any blessed Deity, unless (exceeding far The limits of her rule) the Queen, that governs chamber sport,Should press to field; and her thy will enjoin'd my lance to hurt.
But, he whose power hath right in arms,
I knew in person here,
Besides the Cyprian Deity; and therefore did forbear,
And here have gather'd in retreat these other Greeks you see,
With note and reverence of your charge."
"My dearest mind," said she,
"What then was fit is changed. 'Tis true,
Mars hath just rule in war,
But, just war; otherwise he raves, not fights.
He's alter'd far.
He vow'd to Juno, and myself, that his aid should be used Against the Trojans, whom it guards;
And therein he abused
His rule in arms, infringing his word, and made his war unjust.
He is inconstant, impious, mad. Resolve then; firmly trust
My aid of thee against his worst, or any Deity;
Add scourge to thy free horse, charge home; he fights perilously."
This said; as that brave king, her knight, with his horse-guiding friend,
Were set before the chariot, for sign he should descend,
That she might serve for waggoness, she pluck'd the waggoner back,
And up into his seat she mounts; the boughen tree did crack
Beneath the burden; and good cause, it bore so huge a thing.
A Goddess so replete with power, and such a puissant king.
She snatch'd the scourge up and the reins, and shut her heavenly look In Hell's vast helm from Mars his eyes; and full career she took.
At him, who then by new slain the mighty Periphas, Renown'd son to Ochesius, and far the Of all th' Aetolians; to whose spoil the bloody God was run.
But when this man-plague saw th' approach of god-like Tydeus' son,
He let his mighty Periphas lie, and in full charge he ran At Diomed; and he at him. Both near; the God began,
And, thirsty of his blood, he throws a brazen lance that bears Full on the breast of Diomed, above the reins and gears;
But Pallas took it on her hand, and strook the eager lance Beneath the chariot. Then the knight of Pallas doth advance,
And cast a javelin off at Mars, Minerva sent it on,
That, where his arming girdle girt, his belly grazed upon,
Just at the rim, and ranch'd the flesh; the lance again he got,
But left the wound, that stung him so, he laid out such a throat
As if nine or ten thousand men had bray'd out all their breasts.
In one confusion, having felt as many sudden deaths.
The roar made both the hosts amazed. Up flew the God to heaven;
And with him was through all the air as black a tincture driven
To Diomed's eyes, as when the earth half-choked with smoking heat Of gloomy clouds, that still men, and pitchy tempests threaten,
Usher'd with horrid gusts of wind; with such black vapours plumed, Mars flew t' Olympus, and broad heaven,
And there his place resumed.
Sadly he went and sat by Jove, shew'd his immortal blood,
That from a mortal-man-made wound pour'd such an impious flood,
And weeping pour'd out these complaints: "O Father, storm'st thou not To see us take these wrongs from men? extreme griefs we have got Even by our own deep councils, held for gratifying them;
And thou, our council's president, concluded in this extreme
Of fighting ever; being ruled by one that thou hast bred; [full of head
One never well, but doing ill; a girl so
That, though all other Gods obey, her mad moods must command,
By thy indulgence; nor by word, nor any touch of hand,
Correcting her; thy reason Is, she is a spark of thee,
And therefore she may kindle rage in men 'gainst Gods, and she May make men hurt Gods, and those Gods that are besides thy seed.
First in the palm's hit Cyprides; then runs the impious deed
On my hurt person; and, could life give way to death in me, Or had my feet not fetch’d me off, heaps of mortality Had kept me consort.” Jupiter, with a contracted brow, Thus answer’d Mars: “Thou many minds, inconstant changeling thou, Sit not complaining thus by me, whom most of all the Gods, Inhabiting the starry hill, I hate; no periods Being set to thy contentions, brawls, fights, and pitching fields; Just of thy mother Juno’s moods, stiff-neck’d, and never yields, Though I correct her still, and chide, nor can forbear offence, Though to her son; this wound I know tastes of her insolence; But I will prove more natural; thou shalt be cured, because Thou comest of me, but hadst thou been so cross to sacred laws, Being borne to any other God, thou hadst been thrown from heaven Long since, as low as Tartarus, beneath the giants driven.” This said, he gave his wound in charge to Pæon, who applied Such sovereign medicines, that as soon the pain was qualified, And he recure’d; as nourishing milk, when runnet is put in, Runs all in heaps of tough thick curd, though in his nature thin, Even so soon his wound’s parted sides ran close in his recure; For he, all deathless, could not long the parts of death endure. Then Hebe bathed, and put on him fresh garments, and he sate Exulting by his sire again, in top of all his state. So, having, from the spoils of men, made his desired remove, Juno and Pallas reascend the starry court of Jove.

THE END OF THE FIFTH BOOK.
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Gods now leaving an indifferent field,
The Greeks prevail, the slaughter'd Trojans yield.
Hector, by Helenus' advice, retires
In haste to Troy, and Hecuba desires
To pray Minerva to remove from fight
The son of Tydeus, her affected knight,
And vow to her, for favour of such price,
Twelve oxen should be slain in sacrifice.
In mean space Glauces and Tydides meet;
And either other with remembrance meet
Of old love 'twixt their fathers, which inclines Their hearts to friendship; who change arms for signs
Of a continued love for either's life.
Hector, in his return, meets with his wife,
And, taking in his armed arms his son,
He prophesies the fall of Ilium.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In Zetes, Hector prophesies;
Prays for his son; wills sacrifice.

The stern fight freed of all the Gods, conquest with doubtful wings
Flew on their lances; every way the restless field she rings Betwixt the floods of Simois and Xanthus, that confined
All their affairs at Ilion, and round about them shined.
The first that weigh'd down all the field, of one particular side,
Was Ajax, son of Telamon; who, like a bullwark, pined
The Greeks' protection, and of Troy the knotty orders brake, Held out a light to all the rest, and shew'd them how to make Way to their conquest. He did wound the strongest man of Thrace.
The tallest and the biggest set, Eussorian Acamas;
His lance fell on his casque's plumed top, in stooping; the fell head Drave through his forehead to his jaws; his eyes night shadowed.
Tydides slew Teuthranides Axylus, that did dwell
In fair Aristea's well-built towers. He had of wealth a well,
And yet was kind and bountiful; he would a traveller pray
To be his guest, his friendly house stood in the broad highway,
In which he all sorts nobly used; yet none of them would stand
'Twixt him and death; but both himself, and he that had command
Of his fair horse, Calesus, fell lifeless on the ground.
Euryalus, Ophelius and Dresus, dead did wound a town;
Nor ended there his fiery course, which he again begins,[twins,
And ran to it successfully, upon a pair of Æsepus, and bold Pedasus, whom good Bacolion
(That first call'd father, though base born, renown'd Laomedon)
On Nais Abarbarea got, a nymph that, as she fed
Her curled flocks, Bucolion wo'd, and mix'd in love and bed.
Both these were spoil'd of arms and life, by Mecestiades.
Then Polyctetes, for stern death, Astyalus did seize;
Ulysses slew Percius; Teucer Artaion;
Antilochus (old Nestor's joy) Ablerus; the great son
Of Atreus, and king of men, Elatus, whose abode [river flow'd;
He held at upper Pedasus, where Satnus' The great hero Leitus stay'd Phylacus in flight [ref of light.
From further life; Euryptus, Melanthius
The brother to the king of men, Adrestus took alive;
Whose horse, affrighted with the flight, their driver now did drive
Amongst the low-grown tamarisk trees; and at an arm of one
The chariot in the draught-tree brake; the horse brake loose, and ran
The same way other flyers fled, contending all to town;
Himself close at the chariot wheel, upon his face was thrown.
And there lay flat, roll'd up in dust, Atrides inwards drave;
And, holding at his breast his lance, Adrestus sought to save

VOL. III.
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

His head by losing of his feet, and trusting to his knees; [hugs, and offers fees On which the same parts of the king he Of worthy value for his life, and thus pleads their receipt: "A worthy weight "Take me alive, O Atreus' son, and take Of brass, elaborate iron, and gold:* a heap of precious things Are in my father's riches hid, which, when your servant brings News of my safety to his ears, he largely will divide With your rare bounties." Atreus' son thought this the better side, And meant to take it, being about to send him safe to fleet; Which when, far off, his brother saw, he wing'd his royal feet, And came in threatening, crying out: "O soft heart! what's the cause Thou sparest these men thus? have not they observed these gentle laws Of mild humanity to thee, with mighty argument Why thou shouldest deal thus; in thy house, and with all precedent Of honour'd guest-rites entertain'd? not one of them shall fly A bitter end for it from heaven, and much less, dotingly, 'Scape our revengeful fingers; all, even th' infant in the womb, [no other tomb Shall taste of what they merited, and have Than razed Ilion; nor their race have more fruit than the dust." This just cause turn'd his brother's mind, who violently thrust The prisoner from him; in whose guts the king of men impress'd His ashen lance, which (pitching down his foot upon the breast Of him that upwards fell) he drew; then Nestor spake to all: "O friends, and household men of Mars, let not your pursuit fail, With those ye fell, for present spoil; nor, like the king of men, Let any scape unfell'd; but on, despatch them all, and then Ye shall have time enough to spoil." This made so strong their chase, That all the Trojans had been housed, and never turn'd a face, Had not the Priamist Helenus, an augur most of name. [Anchises' fame! Will'd Hector and Æneas thus: "Hector! Since on your shoulders, with good cause, the weighty burthen lies Of Troy and Lycia (being both of noblest faculties For counsel, strength of hand, and apt to take chance at her best In every turn she makes) stand fast, and suffer not the rest, By any way search'd out for 'scape, to come within the ports, Lest, fled into their wives' kind arms, they there be made the sports Of the pursuing enemy: exhort, and force your hands To turn their faces; and, while we employ our ventured hands, Though in a hard condition, to make the other stay, Hector, go thou to Ilion, and our queen-mother pray To take the richest robe she hath; the same that's chiefly dear To her court fancy; with which grace assembling more to her Of Troy's chief matrons, let all go, for fear of all our fates, To Pallas' temple, take the key, unlock the leavy gates, Enter, and reach the highest tower, where her Palladium stands, And on it put the precious veil with pure and reverend hands, And vow to her, besides the gift, a sacrificing stroke [felt the yok Of twelve fat heifers of a year, that never (Most answering to her maiden state), if she will pity us, Our town, our wives, our youngest joy, and him, that plagues them thus, Take from the conflict, Diomed, that fur in a fight, That true son of great Tydeus, that cunning lord of flight, Whom I esteem the strongest Greek; if we have never fled Achilles, that is prince of men, and who a Goddess bred, Like him; his fury flies so high, and men's wrath's commands." Hector intends his brother's will, first through all his bands He made quick way, encouraging; and to fear afraid, All turn'd their heads, and made Great turn. Slaughter stood still dismay'd On their parts, for they thought some God fall'n from the vault of stars, Was rush'd into the Ilions' aid, they met such dreadful wars.
Thus Hector, toiling in the waves, and thrusting back the flood,
Of his ebb'd forces, thus takes leave: "So,
so, now runs your blood.
In his right current; forwards now, Trojans, and far-call'd friends!
Awhile hold out, till, for success to this your brave amends,
I haste to Ilion, and procure our counsellors and wives
To pray, and offer hecatombs, for their states in our lives."
Then fair-helm'd Hector turn'd to Troy, and, as he trode the field,
The black bull's hide, that at his back he wore about his shield,
In the extreme circumference, was with his gait so rock'd.
That, being large, it both at once his neck and ankles knock'd.
And now betwixt the hosts were met,
Hippolochus' brave son, Glauceus, who in his very look hope of some wonder won,
And little Tydeus' mighty heir; who seeing such a man Offer the field, for usual blows, with wonddrous words began:
"What art thou, strong'st of mortal men, that put'st so far before, Whom these fight's never shewed mine eyes? they have been evermore Sons of unhappy parents born, that came within the length
Of this Minerva-guided lance, and durst close with the strength That she inspires in me. If heaven be thy divine abode,
[with any God
And thou a Deity thus inform'd, no more Will I change Iances. The strong son of Dryus did not live Long after such a conflict dared, who godlessly did drive
Nyssaeus' nurses through the hill made sacred to his name,
And called Nyssaeus; with a goad he pitch'd each furious dame,
And made them every one cast down their green and leavy spears.
This th' homicide Lycurgus did; and those ungodly fears,
He put the foes in, seiz'd their God.
Even Bacothe he did drive From his Nyssaeus; who was fain, with huge exclaims, to dive Into the ocean. Theis there in her bright bosom took
The flying Deity; who so fear'd Lycurgus' threats, he shook.
For which the freely-living Gods so highly were incensed;
That Saturn's great son strook him blind, and with his life dispensed But small time after; all because th' immortals loved him not,
Nor loved him since he striv'd with them;
and his end hath begot
Fear in my powers to fight with heaven.
But, if the fruits of earth Nourish thy body, and thy life be of our human birth,
Come near, that thou may'st soon arrive on that life-bounding shore,
To which I see thee hoise such sail."
"Why dost thou so explore."
Said Glauceus, "of what race I am, when like the race of leaves
The race of man is, that deserves no question; nor receives My being any other breath: The wind in autumn strows
The earth with old leaves; then the spring the woods with new endows;
And so death scatters men on earth, so life puts out again Man's leavy issue. But my race, if, like the course of men,
Thou seek'st in more particular terms, 'tis this, to many known:
In midst of Argos, nurse of horse, there stands a walled town, Ephyre, where the mansion-house of Sisyphus did stand,
[land. Of Sisyphus'-Eolides, most wise of all the Glauceus was son to him, and he begat
Bellerophon,
Whose body heaven endued with strength, and put a beauty on,
Exceeding lovely. Praehtus yet his cause of love did hate,
And banish'd him the town; he might;
he ruled the Argive state.
The virtue of the one Jove placed beneath the other's power.
His exile grew, since he denied to be the paramour
Of fair Anteia, Praehtus' wife, who felt a raging fire
Of secret love to him; but he, whom wisdom did inspire
As well as prudence (one of them advising him to shun
The danger of a princess' love, the other not to run
Within the danger of the Gods, the act being simply ill),
Still entertaining thoughts divine, subdued the earthly still.
She, ruled by neither of his wits, prefer'd her lust to both,
And, false to Prætorus, would seem true,
"Prætorus, or die thyself," said she, "or let Bellerophon die.
He urged dishonour to thy bed; which since I did deny,
He thought his violence should grant, and sought thy shame by force."

The king, incensed with her report, resolved upon her course;
But doubted how it should be run; he shunn'd his death direct;
(Holding a way so near not safe) and plotted the effect
By sending him with letters seal'd (that, open'd, touch his life) [his wife].
To Rheus king of Lycia, and father to
He went; and happily he went; the Gods walk'd all his way;
And being arrived in Lycia, where Xanthus do th display
The silver ensigns of his waves, the king of that broad land Received him with a wondrous free and honourable hand.
Nine days he feasted him, and kill'd an ox in every day,
In thankful sacrifice to heaven, for his fair guest; whose stay,
With rosy fingers, brought the world, the tenth well-welcomed morn,
And then the king did move to see the letters he had borne From his loved son-in-law; which seen, he Wrought thus their contents:
Chimaera, the invincible, he sent him to convince,
Sprung from no man, but mere divine; a lion's shape before;
Behind a dragon's, in the midst a goat's shagg'd form, she bore,
And flames of deadly fervency flew from her breast and eyes;
Yet her she sllew; his confidence in sacred prodigies Renderer him victor. Then he gave his second conquest way Against the famous Solymi, when (he himself would say), Reporting it he enter'd on a passing vigorous fight.
His third huge labour he approved against A woman's spite,
That fill'd a field of Amazons; he overcame them all.
Then set they on him sly Deceit, when Force had such a fall;
An ambush of the strongest men, that spacious Lycia bred,
Was lodg'd for him: whom he lodged sure: they never raised a head.
His deeds thus showing him derived from some celestial race,
The knight disdain'd, and made amends, with doing him the grace
Of his fair daughter's princely gift; and with her, for a dower, Gave half his kingdom; and to this, the Lycians on did pour
More than was given to any king; a goodly planted field,
In some parts thick of groves and woods the rest rich crops did yield.
This field the Lycians futurly (of futurly wanderings there
And other errors of their prince, in the unhappy rear Of his sad life) the Errant call'd. Thus his princess brought him forth Three children (whose ends grieved him more, the more they were of worth) Isander, and Hippolochus, and fair Laodamia,
With whom, even Jupiter himself left heaven itself, to lie,
And had by her the man at arms, Sarpedon call'd divine.
The Gods then left him, lest a man should in their glories shine,
And set against him; for his son, Isandrus in a strife light and life Against the valiant Solymi, Mars reft of Laodamia, being envied of all the Goddesses,
The golden-bride-handling Queen, the maiden Patroness, Slew with an arrow; and for this he wander'd evermore
Alone through his Agamemnon field, and fed upon the core
Of his sad bosom, flying all the loathed consorts of men.
Yet had he one survived to him, of those three children,
Hippolochus, the root of me; who sent me here, with charge
That I should always bear me well, and my deserts enlarge
Beyond the vulgar; lest I shamed my race, that far excels'd
All that Ephyra's famous towers, or ample Lycia held.
This is my stock, and this am I." This cheer'd Tydides' heart,
Who pitch'd his spear down, lean'd, and talk'd in this affectionate part:
"Cerites, in thy great ancestor, and in mine own, thou art
A guest of mine, right ancient: king
Oeneus twenty years.
Detain'd, with feasts Bellorophon, whom all the world did praise:
Betwixt whom mutual gifts were given: my grandsire gave to thine
A girdle of Phoenician work, impurled wondrous fine.
Thine gave a two-neck'd jug of gold, which, though I use not here, Yet still it is my gem at home. But, if our fathers were Familiar, or each other knew, I know not, since my sire
Left me a child, at siege of Thebes, where he left his life's fire.
But let us prove our grandsires' sons, and be each other's guests.
To Lycia when I come, do thou receive thy friend with feasts; Peloponnesus, with the like, shall thy wish'd presence greet.
Mean space, shun we each other here, though in the press we meet.
There are enow of Troy beside, and men enow renown'd,
To right my powers, whom ever heaven shall let my lance confound, So are there of the Greeks for thee; kill who thou canst. And now, For sign of amity 'twixt us, and that all these may know
We glory in th' hospitable rites our grandsires did command,
Change we our arms before them all." From horse then both descend,
Join hands, give faith, and take; and then did Jupiter elate
The mind of Glaucus, who, to show his reverence to the state Of virtue in his grandsire's heart, and gran-tulate beside
The offer of so great a friend, exchanged, in that good pride, Curets of gold for those of brass, that did on Diomed shine,
One of a hundred oxen's price, the other but of nine.
By this, had Hector reach'd the ports of Scæa, and the towers.
About him flock'd the wives of Troy, the children, paramours, Inquiring how their husbands did, their fathers, brothers, loves.
He stood not then to answer them, but said: "It now behoves Ye should go all 't implore the aid of heaven, in a distress Of great effect, and imminent." Then hasted he access
To Priam's goodly built court, which round about was run With walking porches, galleries, to keep off rain and sun.
Within, of one side, on a row, of sundrycolour'd stones,
Fifty fair lodgings were built out, for Priam's fifty sons,
And for as fair sort of their wives; and, in the opposite view,
Twelve lodgings of like stone, like height, were likewise built arow,
Where, with their fair and virtuous wives, twelve princes, sons in law
To honourable Priam, lay. And here met Hecuba,
The loving mother, her great son; and with her needs must be The fairest of her female race, the bright Laodice.
The queen girt hard her Hector's hand, and said: "O worthiest son, Why leavest thou field? is't not because the cursed nation

* Φάλαινα, ἔξωθε τοῦ Ζεὺς, Μεθυστέμα σεμίτην Ἰππ., the text hath it; which only I alter of all Homer's original, since Plutarch against the Stoics excuses this supposed folly in Glaucus.
Spondanus likewise encouraging my alterations, which I use for the loved and simple nobility of the free exchange in Glaucus, contrary to others that, for the supposed folly in Glaucus, turned his change into a proverb, χρῦσα χαλκίων, golden for brazen.
Afflict our countrymen and friends? they are their moans that move Thy mind to come and lift thy hands, in his high tower, to Jove.
But stay a little, that myself may fetch our sweetest wine
To offer first to Jupiter; then that these joints of thine
May be refresh’d; for, woe is me, how thou art toil’d and spent!
Thu’ for our city’s general state, thou for our friends far sent,
Must now the press of fight endure; now solitude, to call [us all.
Upon the name of Jupiter; thou only for But wine will something comfort thee; for to a man dismay’d
With careful spirits, or too much with labour overlaid, Wine brings much rescue, strengthening much the body and the mind.”
The great helm-mover thus received the authors of his kind :
“Thy royal mother, bring no wine; lest rather it impair Than help my strength, and make my mind forgetful of th’ affair
Committed to it; and (to pour it out in sacrifice)
I fear with unwash’d hands to serve the pure-lived Deities.
Nor is it lawful, thus imbrued with blood and dust, to prove
The will of heaven, or offer vows to cloud-compelling Jove.
I only come to use your pains (assembling other dames, Matrons, and women honour’d most, with high and virtuous names)
With wine and colours, and a robe most ample, most of price,
And which is dearest in your love, to offer sacrifice
In Pallas’ temple; and to put the precious robe ye bear
On her Palladium; vowing all, twelve oxen of a year, Whose necks were never wrung with yoke, shall pay her grace their lives,
If she will pity our sieged town; pity ourselves, our wives;
Pity our children; and remove, from sacred Ilion,
The dreadful soldier Diomed. And, when yourselves are gone About this work, myself will go, to call into the field,
If he will hear me, Helen’s love; whom would the earth would yield,
And headlong take into her gulf, even quick before mine eyes;
For then my heart, I hope, would cast her load of miseries, Borne for the plague he hath been born, and bred to the deface,
By great Olympus, of Troy, our sire, and all our race.”
This said, grave Hecuba went home, and sent her maids about,
To bid the matrons: she herself descended, and search’d out,
Within a place that breathed perfumes, the richest robe she had;
Which lay with many rich ones more, most curiously made By women of Sidon; which Paris brought from thence, Sailing the broad sea, when he made that voyage of offence,
In which he brought home Helena. That robe, transferr’d so far (That was the undermost), she took; it glitter’d like a star;
And with it went she to the fame, with many ladies more;
Amongst whom fair-check’d Theano unlock’d the folded door;
Chaste Theano, Antenor’s wife, and of Cissus’ race, [king of Thrace, Sister to Hecuba, both born to that great Her th’ Illions made Minerva’s priest; and they they follow’d all
Up to the temple’s highest tower; when on their knees they fall,
With th’ the temple’s highest tower; when on their knees they fall, Lift up their hands, and fill the fame with ladies’ pitiful cries.
Then lovely Theano took the veil, and with it she implies
The great Palladium, praying thus : “Godess of most renown
In all the heaven of Goddesses, great guardian of our town, Reverend Minerva, break the lance of Diomed, cease his grace,
Give him to fall in shameful flight, head long, and on his face,
Before our ports of Ilion, that instantly we may,
Twelve unyoked oxen of a year, in the th’ temple slay,
To thy sole honour; take their blood, and banish our offence;
Accept Troy’s zeal, her wives’, and save our infants’ innocence.”
She pray’d, but Pallas would not grant Mean space was Hector come
Where Alexander’s lodgings were; the many a goody room Had built in them by architects, of Troy's most curious sort,
And were no lodgings, but a house; nor no house, but a court;
Or had all these contain'd in them; and all within a tower,
Next Hector's lodgings and the king's.
The loved of heaven's chief Power, Hector, here enter'd. In his hand a goodly lance he bore, Ten cubits long; the brazen head went shining in before.
Help'd with a burnish'd ring of gold. He found his brother then Amongst the women; yet prepared to go amongst the men,
For in their chamber he was set, trimming his arms, his shield,
His curettes, and was trying how his crooked bow would yield
To his straight arms. Amongst her maids was set the Argive Queen, Commanding them in choicest works. When Hector's eye had seen His brother thus accompanied, and that he could not bear
The very touching of his arms but where the women were,
And when the time so needed men, right cunningly he chid.
That he might do it bitterly, his cowardice
he hid,
That simply made him so retired, beneath an anger, feign'd
In him by Hector, for the hate the citizens sustain'd Against him, for the foil he took in their cause; and again,
For all their general folly in his. So Hector seems to plain
Of his wrath to them, for their hate, and not his cowardice;*
As that were it that shelter'd him in his effeminacies,
And kept him, in that dangerous time from their fits in fight;
For which he chid thus: "Wretched man! so timeless is thy spite That 'tis not honest; and their hate is just,
'gainst which it bends.
War burns about the town for thee; for thee our slaughter'd friends

Besiege Troy with their carasses, on whose heaps our high walls Are overlook'd by enemies; the sad sounds of their falls
Without, are echo'd with the cries of wives and babes within; [cannot win
And all for thee; and yet for them thy honour Head of thine anger. Thou shouldst need no spirit to stir up thine, But thine should set the rest on fire, and with a rage divine Chastise impartially the best, that im-pliously forbears.
Come forth, lest thy fair towers and Troy be burn'd about thine ears."
Paris acknowledged, as before, all just that Hector spake, Allowing justice, though it were for his injustice sake,
And where his brother put a wrath upon him by his art.
He takes it, for his honour's sake, as sprung out of his heart,
And rather would have anger seem his fault than cowardice;
And thus he answer'd: "Since, with right, you join'd me in advice,
And I hear you, give equal ear: It is not any spleen
Against the town, as you conceive, that make it so unseen,
But sorrow for it; which to ease, and by discourse digest
Within myself, I live so close, and yet, since men might wrest
My sad retreat, like you, my wife with her advice inclined
This my addression to the field, which was mine own free mind,
As well as th' instance of her words; for though the foil were mine,
Conquest brings forth her wretches by turns.
Stay then this haste of thine
But till I arm, and I am made a consort for thee straight; — Or go, I'll overtake thy haste." Helen stood at receipt,
And took up all great Hector's powers, t' attend her heavy words,
By which had Paris no reply. This vent her grief affords:
"Brother (if I may call you so, that had been better born
A dog, than such a horrid dame, as all men curse and scorn,
A mischief-maker, a man-plague) O would to God, the day
That first gave light to me, had been a whirlwind in my way,
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

And borne me to some desert hill, or bid me in the rage
Of earth's most far-resounding seas, ere I should thus engage
The dear lives of so many friends: yet since the Gods have been Helpless foreseers of my plagues, they might have likewise seen That he they put in yoke with me, to bear out their award,
Had been a man of much more spirit, and,
or had nobler dared To shield mine honour with his deed; or with his mind had known Much better the upbraids of men; that so he might have shown (More like a man) some sense of grief for both my shame and his.
But he is senseless, nor conceives what any mankind is,
Nor now, nor ever after will; and therefore hangs, I fear, A plague above him. But come near, good brother; rest you here, Who, of the world of men, stands charged with most unrest for me, Vile wretch, and for my lover's wrong;
on whom a destiny
So bitter is imposed by Jove, that all succeeding times
Will put, to our unended shames, in all men's mouths our crimes."
He answer'd: "Helen, do not seek to make me sit with thee;
I must not stay, though well I know thy honour'd love of me.
My mind calls forth to aid our friends, in whom my absence breathes Longings to see me; for whose sakes, the importune thou to deeds
This man by all means, that your care may make his own make haste,
And meet me in the open town, that all may see at last He minds his lover. I myself will now go home, and see My household, my dear wife, and son, that little hope of me;
For, sister, 'tis without my skill, if I shall evermore [right in me, restore.
Return, and see them, or to earth, her
The Gods may stoop me by the Greeks."
This said, he went to see
The virtuous princess, his true wife, whitearm'd Andromache.
She, with her infant son and maid, was climb'd the tower, about The sight of him that sought for her, weeping and crying out.

Hector, not finding her at home, was going forth; retired;
Stood in the gate; her woman call'd, and curiously inquired
Where she was gone; bade tell him true, if she were gone to see His sisters, or his brothers' wives; or whether she should be
At temple with the other dames, t' implore Minerva's ruth.
Her woman answer'd; since he ask'd, and urged so much the truth,
The truth was she was neither gone, to see his brothers' wives,
His sisters, nor t' implore the ruth of Pallas on their lives;
But she (advertis'd of the bane Troy suffer'd, and how vast Conquest had made herself for Greece) like one distraught, made haste
To ample Ilion with her son, and nurse, and all the way
Mourn'd, and dissolved in tears for him,
Then Hector made no stay,
But trod her path, and through the streets, magnificently built,
All the great city pass'd, and came where,
seeing how blood was spilt, Andromache might see him come; who made as he would pass
The ports without saluting her, not knowing where she was.
She, with his sight, made breathless haste, to meet him; she, whose grace Brought him withal so great a dower; she that of all the race Of king Acteon only lived; Acteon whose house stood
Beneath the mountain Placius, environ'd with the wood
Of Thuban Hyppolace, being court to the Cilician land.
She ran to Hector, and with her, tender of heart and hand,
Her son, borne in his nurse's arms; when,
like a heavenly sign,
Compact of many golden stars, the princely child did shine,
Whom Hector call'd Scamandrius; but whom the town did name [same Astyanax, because his sire did only prop the Hector, though grief bereft his speech, ye smiled upon his joy.
Andromache cried out, mix'd hands, and the strength of Troy Thus wept forth her affection: "O nobles in desire,
Thy mind, inflamed with others' good, will set thyself on fire:
Nor pitiest thou thy son, nor wife, who must thy widow be,
If now thou issue; all the field will only run on thee.
Better my shoulders underwent the earth, than thy decease;
For then would earth bear joys no more; then comes the black increase Of griefs (like Greeks on Ilium). Alas, what one survives
To be my refuge? one black day bereft seven brothers’ lives,
By stern Achilles; by his hand my father breathed his last;
His high-wall’d rich Cilician Thebes’ sack’d by him, and laid waste;
The royal body yet he left unspoil’d;
Religion charm’d
That act of spoil; and all in fire he burn’d him complete arm’d;
Built over him a royal tomb; and to the monument
He left of him, th’ Oreades (that are the high descent
Of ægis-bearing Jupiter) another of their own Did add to it, and set it round with elms; by which is said, In theirs, the barrenness of death; yet might it serve beside To shelter the sad monument from all the ruffious pride
Of storms and tempests, used to hurt things of that noble kind,
The short life yet my mother lived he saved, and served his mind
With all the riches of the realm; which not enough esteem’d,
He kept her prisoner; whom small time, but much more wealth, redeem’d;
And she, in sylvan Hypeolace, Cilicia ruled again,
But soon was overruled by death; Diana’s chaste disdain Gave her a lance, and took her life. Yet, all these gone from me, Thou simply render’st all; thy life makes still my father be,
My mother, brothers; and besides thou art my husband too,
Most loved, most worthy. Pity then, dear love, and do not go,
For thou gone, all these go again; pity our common joy, Lest, of a father’s patronage, the bulwark of all Troy.

Thou leavest him a poor widow’s charge:
stay, stay then, in this tower,
And call up to the wild fig-tree all thy retired power;
For there the wall is easiest sealed, and fittest for surprise, [Diomed, thrice And there, th’ Ajaxes, Idomen, th’ Atrides,
Have both survey’d and made attempt; I know not if induced
By some wise augur, or the fact was naturally infused Into their wits, or courage.” To this, great Hector said:
“Be well assured, wife, all these things in my kind cares are weigh’d.
But what a shame and fear it is to think how Troy would scorn
(Both in her husbands, and her wives, whom long-train’d gowns adorn)
That I should cowardly fly off! The spirit I first did breathe Did never teach me that; much less, since the contempt of death Was settled in me, and my mind knew what a worthy was,
Whose office is to lead in fight, and give no danger pass Without improvement. In this fire must Hector’s trial shine;
Here must his country, father, friends, be, in him, made divine.
And such a stormy day shall come (in mind and soul I know)
When sacred Troy shall shed her towers, for tears of overthrow;
When Priam, all his birth and power, shall in those tears be drown’d.
But neither Troy’s posterity so much my soul doth wound, Priam, nor Hecuba herself, nor all my brothers’ woes (Who though so many, and so good, must all be food for foes),
As thy sad state; when some rude Greek shall lead thee weeping hence,
These free days clouded, and a night of captive violence Loading thy temples, out of which thine eyes must never see,
But spin the Greek wives’ webs of task, and their fetch-water be To Argos, from Messeides, or clear Hyperia’s spring;*
Which howsoever thou abhor’st, Fate’s such a shrewish thing

*The names of two fountains: of which one in Thessaly, the other near Argos, or, according to others, in Peloponnese or Lacedaemon.
She will be mistress; whose cursed hands, when they shall crush out cries From thy oppressions (being beheld by other enemies)
Thus they will nourish thy extremes:
'This dame was Hector's wife,
A man that, at the wars of Troy, did breathe the worthiest life Of all their army.' This again will rub thy fruitful wounds,
To miss the man that to thy bands could give such narrow bounds,
But that day shall not wound mine eyes;
the solid heap of night Shall interpose, and stop mine ears against thy plaints, and plight.'
This said, he reach'd to take his son;
who, of his arms afraid,
And then the horse-hair plume, with which he was so overlaid, Nodded so horribly, he cling'd back to his nurse, and cried. (doff'd, and laid aside) Laughter affected his great sire, who His fearful helm, that on the earth cast round about it light;
Then took and kiss'd his loving son, and (balancing his weight)
In dancing him these loving vows to living Jove he used,
And all the other bench of Gods: "O you that have infused Soul to this infant, now set down this blessing on his star:
Let his renown be clear as mine; equal his strength in war;
And make his reign so strong in Troy, that years to come may yield His facts this fame, when, rich in spoils, he leaves the conquer'd field Sown with his slaughters: 'These high deeds exceed his father's worth.'
And let this echo'd praise supply the comforts to come forth
Of his kind mother with my life.' This said, th' heroic sire Gave him his mother; whose fair eyes fresh streams of love's salt fire Billow'd on her soft cheeks, to bear the last of Hector's speech,
In which his vows comprised the sum of all he did beseech
In her wish'd comfort. So she took into her odorous breast
Her husband's gift; who, moved to see her heart so much oppress'd,
He dried her tears, and thus desired:
"Afflict me not, dear wife,
With these vain griefs. He doth not live, that can disjoin my life
And this firm bosom, but my fate; and Fate, whose wings can fly?
Noble, ignoble, Fate controls. Once born, the best must die.
Go home, and set thy housewifery on these extremes of thought;
And drive war from them with thy maids;
keep them from doing nought.
These will be nothing; leave the cares of war to men, and me
In whom, of all the Iliam race, they take their highest degree.'
On went his helm; his princess home, half cold with kindly fears;
When every fear turn'd back her looks,
and every look shed tears.
Foe-slaughtering Hector's house soon reach'd, her many women there Wept all to see her: in his life great Hector's funerals were;
Never look'd any eye of theirs to see their lord safe homeward:
Scaped from the gripes and powers of Greece. And now was Paris come From his high towers; who made no stay, when once he had put on His richest armour, but flew forth; the flints he trod upon Sparkled with lustre of his arms; his long-ebb'd spirits now flow'd
The higher for their lower ebb. *And as a fair steed, proud With full given mangers, long tied up, and now, his head-stall broke;
He breaks from stable, runs the field, and with an ample stroke Measures the centre, neighs, and lifts aloft his wanton head,
About his shoulders shakes his crest, and where he hath been fed,
Or in some calm flood wash'd, or, stung with his high plight, he flies Amongst his females, strength put forth, his beauty beautifies,
And, like life's mirror, bears his gait; so Paris from the tower
Of lofty Pergamus came forth; he shew'd a sun-like power
In carriage of his goodly parts, address'd now to the strife; [he left his wife
And found his noble brother near the place; Him, thus respected, he salutes: "Righ tworthy, I have fear
That your so serious haste to field, my stay hath made forbear,

* His simile, high and expressive; which Virgil almost word for word hath translated
And that I come not as you wish." He answer'd: "Honour'd man, Be confident; for not myself, nor any others, can Reprove in thee the work of fight, at least, not any such As is an equal judge of things; for thou hast strength as much As serves to execute a mind very Important; but Thy strength too readily flies off, enough will is not put To thy ability. My heart is in my mind's strife sad, When Troy (out of her much distress, she and her friends have had By thy procurement) doth deprave thy noblesse in mine ears. But come, hereafter we shall calm these hard conceits of theirs, When, from their ports the foe expulsed, high Jove to them hath given Wish'd peace, and us free sacrifice to all the powers of heaven,"

THE END OF THE SIXTH BOOK.
THE SEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.*

THE ARGUMENT.

Hector, by Helenus’ advice, doth seek Adventurous combat on the boldest Greek.
Nine Greeks stand up, acceptants every one,
But Iot selects strong Ajax Telamon.
Both, with high honour, stand th’ important fight,
Till heralds part them by approached night.
Lastly, they grave the dead. The Greeks erect A mighty wall, their navy to protect;
Which angers Neptune. Jove, by hapless signs,
In depth of night, succeeding woes divines.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In Eta, Priam’s strongest son
Combats with Ajax Telamon.

This said, brave Hector through the ports, with Troy’s bane-bringing knight, Made issue to th’ insatiate field, resolved to fervent fight.
And as the weather-wielder sends to seamen prosperous gales,
When with their sallow-polish’d oars, long lifted from their falls,
Their wearied arms, dissolved with toil, can scarce strike one stroke more;
Like those sweet winds appear’d these lords, to Trojans tired before.
Then fell they to the works of death. By Paris’ valour fell
King Arethous’ hapless son, that did in Arna dwell,
Menesthus, whose renowned sire a club did ever bear,
And of Phylomedusa gat, that had her eyes so clear,
This slaughter’d issue. Hector’s dart strock Eioneus dead;
Beneath his good steel casque it pierced,
above his gorget stead.
Glauce, Hippolochius his son, that led the Lycaic crew,
Iphinnous-Dexiades with sudden javelin
slew,

As he was mounting to his horse; his shoulders took the spear,
And ere he sate, in tumbling down, his powers dissolved were.
When grey-eyed Pallas had perceived the Greeks so fall in fight, From high Olympus’ top she stoop’d, and did on Ilion light.
Apollo, to encounter her, to Pergamus did fly,
From whence he, looking to the field,
wish’d Trojans’ victory.
At Jove’s broad beech these godheads met;
and first Jove’s son objects: “Why, burning in contention thus, do thy extreme affects Conduct thee from our peaceful hill? is it to oversway [Greeks the day?
The doubtful victory of fight, and give the Thou never pitiest perishing Troy: yet now let me persuade,
That this day no more mortal wounds may either side invade.
Hereafter, till the end of Troy, they shall apply the fight, [turn it quite.”
Since your immortal wills resolve to over-Pallas replied: “It likes me well; for this came I from heaven;
But to make either army cease, what order shall be given?”
He said: “We will direct the spirit, that burns in Hector’s breast, To challenge any Greek to wounds, with single powers impress’d;”
Which Greeks, admiring, will accept, and make some one stand out So stout a challenge to receive, with a defence as stout.”
It is confirm’d; and Helenus (king Priam’s loved seed)
By augury discern’d th’ event that these two powers decreed,
And greeting Hector ask’d him this:
“Wilt thou be once advised?
I am thy brother, and thy life with mine is evenly prized.
Command the rest of Troy and Greece, to cease this public fight,
And what Greek bears the greatest mind, to single strokes excite.

* These next four books have not my last hand; and because the rest (for a time) will be sufficient to employ your censure, suspend them of these: spare not the other.
I promise thee that yet thy soul shall not descend to fates;
So heard I thy survival cast, by the celestial States."

Hector with glad allowance gave his brother's counsel ear,
And, fronting both the hosts, advanced just in the midst his spear,
The Trojans instantly successe; the Greeks Atrides stay'd.
The God that bears the silver bow, and war's triumphant Maid,
On Jove's beech like two vultures sat, pleased to behold both parts Flow in to hear, so sternly arm'd with huge shields, helmets, and darts.
And such fresh horror as you see, driven through the wrinkled waves
By rising Zephyr, under whom the sea grows black, and raves;
Such did the hasty gathering troops of both hosts make to hear;
Whose tumult settled, 'twixt them both, thus spake the challenger:
"Hear, Trojans, and ye well-arm'd Greeks, what my strong mind, diffused Through all my spirits, commands me speak: Saturnius hath not used His promised favour for our truce, but, studying both our ills,
Will never cease, til Mars, by you, his ravenous stomach fills With ruin'd Troy, or we consume your mighty sea-born fleet.
Since then the general peers of Greece in reach of one voice meet,
Amongst you all, whose breast includes the most insipid mind,
Let him stand forth as combatant, by all the rest design'd.
Before whom thus I call high Jove, to witness of our strife:—
If he with home-thrust iron can reach th' exposure of my life, Spoiling my arms, let him at will convey them to his tent,
But let my body be return'd, that Troy's two-sex'd descent
May want it in the funeral pile. If I can slaughter him, Apollo honouring me so much, I'll spoil his conquer'd limb,
And bear his arms to Ilium, where in Apollo's shrine [body I'll resign I'll hang them, as my trophies due; his
To be disposed by his friends in flamy funerals,
And honour'd with erected tomb, where Hellespontus falls Into Ægeum, and doth reach even to your naval road,
That, when our beings in the earth shall hide their period, Survivors, sailing the black sea, may thus his name renew:
'This is his monument, whose blood long since did fates imbrue, Whom, passing far in fortitude, illustrate Hector slew,'
'This shall posterity report, and my fame never die." [they shamed to deny,
This said, dumb silence seized them all;
And fear'd to undertake. At last did Menelaus speak,
Check'd their remissness, and so sigh'd, as if his heart would break:
"Ay me! But only threatening Greeks, not worthy Grecian names!"
This more and more, not to be borne, makes grow our huge defames,
If Hector's honourable proof be entertain'd by none. [symbolized in one,
But you are earth and water all, which,
Have frained your faint unferous spirits; ye sit without your hearts, Grossly inglorious; but myself will use acceptive darts,
And arm against him, though you think
I arm against too much odds;
But conquer's garlands hang aloft, amongst th' immortal Gods."
He arm'd, and gladly would have fought: but, Menelaus, then,
By Hector's far more strength, thy soul had fled th' abodes of men,
Had not the kings of Greece stood up, and thy attempt restrain'd;
And even the king of men himself, that in such compass reign'd,
Who took him by the bold right hand, and sternly plac'd him back:
"Mad brother, 'tis no work for thee, thou seek'st thy wilful wrack:
Contain, though it despite thee much, nor for this strife engage Thy person with a man more strong, and whom all fear t' enrage;
Yea whom Æneas himself, in men-renowning war,
Maketh doubt t' encounter, whose huge strength surpasseth thine by far.
Sitt thou then by thy regiment; some other Greek will rise (Though he be dreadless, and no war will his desires suffice,

* O verò Phrygia, neque enim Phryget saith his imitator.
That makes this challenge to our strength
Our valours to avow;
To whom, if he can scape with life, he will Be glad to bow."
This drew his brother from his will, who Yielded, knowing it true,
And his glad soldiers took his arms; when Nestor did pursue
The same reproof he set on foot, and thus Supplied his turn:
"What huge indignity is this! How will
Our country mourn!
Old Peleus that good king will weep, that Worthy counsellor,
That trumpet of the Myrmidons, who much did as he did for All men of name that went to Troy; with Joy he did inquire
Their valour and their toughness, and I Made him admire.
But, that ye all fear Hector now, if his great arms shall hear, How will he lift his hands to heaven, and Pray that death may bear His griefed soul into the deep! O would
To heaven's great king,
Mars, and the God of light, that now
My youthful spring*
Did flourish in my willing veins, as when At Phaedo's towers,
About the streams of Jardanus, my gather'd Pylean powers,
And dart-employ'd Arcadians, fought, near Raging Cefalon:
Amongst whom, first of all stood forth great Ereuthalion,
Who in his arms of Areithous wore, brave
Areithous,
And, since he still fought with a club, surnamed Clavigerus,
All men, and fair-girt ladies both, for Honour call'd him so.
He fought not with a keep-off spear, or
With a far-shot bow,
But, with a massy club of iron, he brake
Through armed bands.
And yet Lycuragus was his death, but not
With force of lands;
With sleight (encountering in a lane, where His club wanted sway)
He thrust him through his spacious waist;
Who fell, and upwards lay,
In death not bowing his face to earth; his Arms he did despoil,
Which iron Mars bestow'd on him; and Those, in Mars his toil.

Lycuragus ever after wore; but, when he Aged grew,
Enforced to keep his peaceful house, their Use he did renew.
[loved well;
On mighty Ereuthalion's limbs, his soldier,
And with those arms he challenged all,
That did in arms excel;
All shock, and stood dismay'd, none durst
His adverse champion make.
Yet this same forward mind of mine, of Choice, would undertake
To fight with all his confidence; though Youngest enemy
With him, I,
Of all the army we conduct; yet I fought Minerva made me so renowned, and that Most tall strong peer
I slew; his big bulk lay on earth, extended Here and there, everywhere.
As it were covetous to spread the centre
Of that my youth were now as fresh, and all My powers as sound,
Soon should bold Hector be impugn'd:
Yet you that most are crown'd
With fortitude of all our host, even you Methinks are slow,
Not free, and set on fire with lust, to Encounter such a foe." (for the first;
With this, nine royal princesses rose. Atrides Then Diomed; th' Ajaxes then, that did
Th' encounter first;
King Idomen and his consorts; Mars-like Meriones;
Evmemon's son, Eurypylus; and Andræ-
Whom all the Grecians Thoas call'd, Sprung of Andræmon's blood;
And wise Ulysses; every one, proposed for Combat, stood.
Again Gerenius Nestor spake: "Let Lots be drawn by all;
His hand shall help the well-arm'd Greeks, on whom the lot doth fall,
And to his wish shall he be help'd, if he Escape with life
The harmful danger-breathing fit of this Adventurous strife."
Each mark'd his lot, and cast it in to Agamemnon's casque.
The soldiers pray'd, held up their hands
And this of Jove did ask,
With eyes advanced to heaven: "O Jove
So lead the herald's hand,
That Ajax, or great Tydeus' son, may our Wish'd champion stand,
Or else the king himself that rules the rich Myenian land."
This said, old Nestor mix'd the lots
Of the foremost lot survey'd With Ajax Telamon was sign'd, as all the Soldiers pray'd;
THE SEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

One of the heralds drew it forth, who brought and shew'd it round,
Beginning at the right hand first, to all the most renown'd;
None knowing it, every man denied; but when he forth did pass
To him which mark'd and cast it in, which famous Ajax was,
He stretch'd his hand, and into it the herald put the lot, [duke denied not,
Who, viewing it, th' inscription knew; the But joyfully acknowledged it, and threw it at his feet,
And said: "O friends, the lot is mine, which to my soul is sweet;
For now I hope my fame shall rise, in noble Hector's fall.
But, whilst I arm myself, do you on great Saturnius call,
But silently, or to yourselves, that not a Trojan hear;
Or openly, if you think good, since none alive we fear.
None with a will, if I will not, can my bold powers afield,
At least for plain fierce swing of strength, or want of skill in fight;
For I will well prove that my birth, and breed in Salamine
Was not all consecrate to meat, or mere effects of wine."

This said, the well-given soldiers pray'd; up went to heaven their eye:
"O Jove, that Ida dost protect, most happy, most divine, Send victory to Ajax' side; fame, grace his goodly limb;
Or (if thy love bless Hector's life, and thou hast care of him), Bestow on both like power, like fame."
This said, in bright arms shone
The good strong Ajax; who, when all his war attire was on, March'd like the hugely-figured Mars, when angry Jupiter
With strength, on people proud of strength, sends him forth to infer Wreakful contention, and comes on with presence full of fear;
So th' Acheive rampire, Telamon, did twixt the hosts appear;
Smiled; yet of terrible aspect; on earth, with ample pace,
He boldly stalk'd, and shook aloft his dart with deadly grace.
It did the Greeks well to see; but heart-quake's the joints
Of all the Trojans. Hector's self felt thoughts, with horrid points, Tempt his bold bosom; but he now must make no counterflight,
Nor, with his honour, now refuse, that had provoked the fight.
Ajax came near; and like a tower, his shield his bosom bard'd,
The right side brass, and seven ox-hides within it quilted hard;*
Old Tythius, the best currier, that did in Hylin dwell,
Did frame it for exceeding proof, and wrought it wondrous well.
With this stood he to Hector close, and with this brave began:
"Now, Hector, thou shalt clearly know,
Thus meeting man to man,
What other leaders arm our host, besides great 'Theiss' son,
Who with his hardy lion's heart hath armies overrun;
But he lies at our crook'd-sterne fleet, a rival with our king
In height of spirit; yet to Troy he many knights did bring, Coequal with 'Axidies, all able to sustain
All thy bold challenge can import: begin then, words are vain."
The helm-graced Hector answer'd him:
"Renowned Telamon,
Prince of the soldiers came from Greece,
Assay not me like one
Young and immortal, with great words, as to an Amazon dame;
I have the habit of all fights, and know
The bloody frame
Of every slaughter; I well know the ready right hand charge,
I know the left, and every sway of my secureful targe;
I triumph in the cruelty of fixed combat fight,
And manage horse to all designs; I think then with good right
I may be confident as far as this my challenge goes,
Without being taxed with a vaunt, borne out with empty shows.
But, being a soldier so renown'd, I will not work on thee
With least advantage of that skill I know doth strengthen me,
And so, with privity of slight, win that for which I strive,
But at thy best, even open strength, if my endeavours thrive."

* Hinc illud: Dominus clypei septemplicia Ajax.
Thus sent his long javelin forth: it strock his foe's huge shield Near to the upper skirt of brass, which was the eighth it held.
Six folds th' untamed dart strook through, and in the seventh tough hide
The point was check'd: then Ajax threw;
his angry lance did glide Quite through his bright orbicular targe, his cuirass shirt of mail,
And did his manly stomach's mouth with dangerous taint assail;
But, in the bowing of himself, black death too short did strike.
Then both, to plack their javelins forth, encounter'd lion-like,
Whose bloody violence is increased by that raw food they eat,
Or boars whose strength wild nourishment doeth make so wondrous great.
Again Priamides did wound in midst his shield of brass,
Yet pierced not through the upper plate,
the head reflected was.
But Ajax, following his lance, smote through his target quite,
And stay'd bold Hector rushing in; the lance held way outright,
And hurt his neck; out gush'd the blood;
yet Hector ceased not so,
But in his strong hand took a flint, as he did backwards go,
Black, sharp, and big, laid in the field;
development the sevenfold targe it smit Full on the boss, and round about the brass did ring with it.
But Ajax a far greater stone lift up, (whelming round,) [to wound,
With all his body laid to it] he sent it forth And gave unmeasured force to it; the round stone broke within His huddled target; the love'd knees to languish did begin;
And he lean'd, stretch'd out on his shield;
but Phoebus raised him straight.
Then had they laid on wounds with swords,
in use of closer fight; Unless the heralds (messengers of Gods and godlike men)
The one of Troy, the other Greece, had held betwixt them then Imperial sceptres; when the one, Iteus, grave and wise,
Said to them: 'Now no more, my sons;
the Sovereign of the skies Doth love you both; both soldiers are, all witness with good right;
But now night lays her mace on earth; 'tis good I obey the night.'
At the court of Priam we should know
Whose black blood, near Scamander's stream, inhuman Mars hath shed;
Their souls to hell descended are. It fits thee then, our king,
To make our soldiers cease from war; and, by the day's first spring,
Let us ourselves, assembled all, the bodies bear to fire,
With mules and oxen near our fleet; that when we home retire,
Each man may carry to the sons of fathers slaughtered here,
Their honour'd bones. One tomb for all, for ever, let us rear, Circling the pile without the field; at which we will erect Walls, and a ravelin, that may safe our fleet and us protect.
And in them let us fashion gates, solid, and barded about,
Through which our horse and chariots may well get in and out.
Without all, let us dig a dike, so deep it may avail
Our forces 'gainst the charge of horse, and foot, that come to assail.
And thus the attempts, that I see swell, in Troy's proud heart, shall fail.

The kings do his advice approve. So Troy doth court convenant
At Priam's gate, in th' lion tower, fearful and turbulent, Amongst all, wise Antenor spake: "Trojans, and Dardan friends,
And peers' assistants, give good ear to what my care commends
To your consents, for all our good. Resolve, let us restore
The Argive Helen, with her wealth, to him she had before.
We now defend but broken faiths: if, therefore, ye refuse, [we use."
No good event can I expect of all the wars we have erased; and Alexander spake, husbando'th Argive queen:
"Antenor, to mine ears thy words harsh and ungracious been.
Thou canst use better, if thou wilt; but if these truly fit Thy serious thoughts, the Gods with age have reft thy graver wit.
To warlike Trojans I will speak: I clearly do deny [render willingly,
To yield my wife, but all her wealth I'll Whatever I from Argos brought, and vow to make it more; [I may restore."
Which I have ready in my house, if peace

Priam, surnamed Dardanides, godlike, in counsels grave, In his son's favour well-advised, this resolution gave:
"My royal friends of every state, there is sufficient done,
For this late council we have call'd, in th' offer of my son.
Now then let all take needful food, then let the watch be set,
And every court of guard held strong; so, when the morn doth wet
The high-raised battlements of Troy, Idaeus shall be sent To th' Argive fleet, and Atreus' sons, to unfold my son's intent, From whose fact our contention springs; and, if they will, obtain Respite from heat of fight, till fire consume our soldiers slain;
And after our most fatal war let us imporuntune still, Till Jove the conquest have disposed to his unconquer'd will."
All heard, and did obey the king; and, in their quarters, all,
That were to set the watch that night, did to their supper's fall.
Idaeus in the morning went, and th' Achean peers did find
In council at Atreus' ship; his audience was assign'd.
And, in the midst of all the kings, the vocal herald said:
"Atreids, my renowned king, and other kings, his aid, Propose by me, in their commands, the offer Paris makes,
From whose joy all our woes proceed. He princely undertakes
That all the wealth he brought from Greece (would he had died before)
He will, with other added wealth, for your amends restore;
But famous Menelaus' wife he still means to enjoy, [peers of Troy.
Though he be urged the contrary, by all the And this besides I have in charge, that, if it please you all,
They wish both sides may cease from war, that rites of funeral
May on their bodies be perform'd, that in the fields lie slain;
And after, to the will of Fate, renew the fight again."
All silence held at first; at last Tydides made reply:
"Let no man take the wealth, or dame; for now a child's weak eye

VOL. III.
May see the imminent black end of Priam’s empery.”
This sentence, quick and briefly given, the Greeks did all admire.
Then said the king: “Herald, thou hear’st in him the voice entire
Of all our peers, to answer thee, for that of Priam’s son.
But, for our burning of the dead, by all means I am won
To satisfy thy king therein, without the slenderest gain Made of their spoiled carcasses; but freely, being slain,
They shall be all consumed with fire. To witness which I cite High thundering Jove, that is the king of Juno’s bed’s delight.”
With this, he held his sceptre up, to all the sky-throned Powers;
And grave Idaeus did return to sacred Ilium’s towers,
Where Ilions and Dardanians, did still their counsels ply, Expecting his return. He came, and told his legacy,
All, whirlwind-like, assembled then, some bodies to transport,
Some to how trees. On th’ other part, the Argives did exhort Their soldiers to the same affairs. Then did the fire they did run; Smite the broad fields, ascending heaven, and th’ ocean smooth did run;
When Greece and Troy mix’d in such peace, you scarce could either know.
Then wash’d they off their blood and dust, and did warm tears bestow
Upon the slaughtered, and in cars convey’d them from the field.
Priam commanded none should mourn, but in still silence yield
Their honour’d carcasses to fire, and only grieve in heart.
All burn’d; to Troy Troy’s friends retire, to fleet the Grecian part.
Yet doubtful night obscured the earth, the day did not appear,
When round about the funeral pile, the Grecians gather’d were.
The sable they circled with a tomb, and by it raised a wall, High towers, to guard the fleet and them;
and in the midst of all
They built strong gates, through which the horse and chariots passage had;
Without the rampire a broad dike, long and profound, they made,
On which they pallisadest pitch’d; and thus the Grecians wrought.
Their huge works in so little time were to perfection brought,
That all Gods, by the Lightener set, the frame thereof admired;
Mongst whom the earthquake-making God, this of their king inquired:
“Father of Gods, will any man of all earth’s grassy sphere,
Ask any of the Gods’ consents to any actions there,
If thou wilt see the shag-hair’d Greeks with headstrong labours frame
So huge a work, and not to us due offerings first enframe?
As far as white Aurora’s dews are sprinkled through the air,
Fate will renown the hands of Greece, for this divine affair;
Men will forget the sacred work, the Sun and I did raise
For king Laomedon (bright Troy) and they will bear the praise.” Jove was extremely moved with him, and said: “What words are these, Thou mighty shaker of the earth, thou Lord of all the seas?
Some other God, of far less power, might hold conceits dismay’d
With this rare Grecian stratagem,* and thou rest well appai’d:
For it will glorify thy name, as far as light extends;
Since, when these Greeks shall see again their native soil and friends,
The bulwark batter’d, thou mayst quell their threats devour it with thy waves,
And cover, with thy fruitless sands, the fatal shore of graves;
That, what their fiery industries have divinely wrought
In raising it, in raising it thy power will prove it naught.” Thus spake the Gods among themselves set was the fervent Sun;
And now the great work of the Grecians was absolutely done,
Then slew they oxen in their tents, and strength with food revived, When out of Lemnos a great fleet
odorous wine arrived,
Sent by Euneus, Jason’s son, borne by Hysipyle.
The fleet contain’d a thousand tun, which must transported be

THE END OF THE SEVENTH BOOK.
THE EIGHTH BOOK
OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

When Jove to all the Gods had given command,
That none to either host should helpful stand,
To Ida he descends, and sees from thence Juno and Pallas haste the Greeks' defence;
Whose purpose, his command, by Iris given, Doth intervent. Then came the silent even,
When Hector charg'd his files should consume the night,
Lest Greeks in darkness took suspected flight.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In Theta, gods a Council have,
Troy's conquest, glorious Hector's brave.

The cheerful Lady of the light, deck'd
In saffron robe,
Dispersed her beams through every part
Of this enfloured globe.
When thundering Jove a court of Gods Assembled by his will,
In top of all the topful heights, that crown
Th' Olympian hill,
He spake, and all the Gods gave ear:
"Hear how I stand inclined,
That God nor Goddess may attempt t' infringe my sovereign mind, But all give suffrage that with speed I may these discords end.

What God soever I shall find endeavour to Or Troy or Greece, with wounds to heaven
He, shamed, shall rescind;
Or, taking with him his offence, I'll cast Him down as deep
As Tartarus, the brood of night, where Barathrum doth steep
Torment in his profoundest sinks, where is The floor of brass,
And gates of iron; the place, for depth, as Far doth hell surpass,
As heaven for height exceeds the earth; then Shall he know from thence How much my power, past all the Gods,
Hath sovereign eminence.
Endanger it the whiles and see: let down
Our golden chain,
And at it let all deities their utmost Strengths constrain,

To draw me to the earth from heaven; you Never shall prevail,
Though, with your most contention, you
Dare my state assail.
But when my will shall be disposed, I draw you all to me,
Even with the earth itself, and seas, you Shall enforced be;
Then will I to Olympus' top our virtuous Engine bind,
And by it everything shall hang, by my Command inclined.
So much I am supreme to Gods, to me
Supreme as much."
The Gods sat silent, and admired; a dreadful speech was such.
At last his blue-eyed daughter spake
"O great Saturnides,
O father, O heaven's highest king, we Know we the excess
Of thy great power, compared with all yet the bold Greeks' estate
We needs must mourn, since they must Fall beneath so hard a fate;
For, if thy grave command enjoin, we will Abstain from fight.
But to afford them such advice, as may Relieve their plight,
We will, with thy consent, be bold; then
All may not sustain
The fearful burden of thy wrath, and with Their shame's be slain."
He smiled, and said: "Be confident, the art Beloved of me;
I speak not this with serious thoughts, but Will be kind to thee."
This said, his brass-hooveed winged horse
He did to chariot bind,
Whose crests were fringed with manes
Gold; and golden garments shined
On his rich shoulders; in his hand he held
A golden scourage.
Divinely fashioned, and with bows that Willing speed did urge Mid way betwixt the earth and heaven to Ida then he came,
Abounding in delicious springs, and number
Of beasts untame.
Where, on the mountain Gargarus, man
Did a fane erect.
To his high name, and altars sweet; there
His horse he check'd, Dissolved them from his chariot, and in a cloud of jet
He cover'd them, and on the top took his Triumphant seat;
Beholding Priam's famous town, and all
The fleet of Greece.
The Greeks took breakfast speedily, and Arm'd at every piece.
So Trojans, who though fewer far, yet all
To fight took arms.
Dire need enforc'd them to avert their Wives' and children's harms.
All gates flow open; all the host did issue,
Foot and horse,
In mighty tumult; straight one place
Adjourn'd each adverse force.
Then shields with shields met, darts with darts, strength against strength opposed;
The boss-plied targets were thrust on, and Thunder'd as they closed
In mighty tumult; groan for groan, and Breath for breath did breathe.
Of men then slain, and to be slain; earth
Flow'd with fruits of death.
While the fair morning's beauty held, and day increased in height,
Their javelins mutually made death transport an equal freight,
But when the hot meridian point, bright Phoebus did ascend, [extend,
Then love his golden balances did equally And, of long-rest-conferring death, put in two bitter fates.
For Troy and Greece; he held the midst;
The day of final dates
Fell on the Greeks; the Greeks' hard lots Sink to the flowery ground,
The Trojans leapt as high as heaven;
Then did the claps resound
Of his fierce thunder; lightning leapt amongst each Grecian troop;
The sight amazed them; pallid fear made Boldest stomachs stoop.
Then Idomen do not abide, Atrides
Went his way,
And both th' Aenae; Nestor yet, against His will did stay,
That grave protector of the Greeks, for Paris with a dart
Enraged one of his chariot horse; he smote
The upper part
Of all his skull, even where the hair, that Made his foretop, sprung.
The hurt was deadly, and the pain so sore
The courser stung (Pierced to the brain), he stamp'd and Plunged. One on another bears, Entangled round about the beam; then Nestor cut the gears

With his new-drawn authentic sword:
Meanwhile the fiery horse
Of Hector brake into the press, with their Bold master's force;
Then good old Nestor had been slain, had Diomed not espied.
Who to Ulysses, as he fled, Importunately Cried:
"Thou that in counsels dost abound, O Laertiades,
Why flest thou? Why thus, coward-like,
Shun'st thou the honour'd prize?
Take heed thy back take not a dart: stay,
Let us both intend
To drive this cruel enemy, from our dear Aged friend."
He spake, but wary Ithacus would find
No patient ear,
But fled forthright, even to the fleet: yet,
Though he single were,
Brave Diomed mix'd amongst the fight,
And stood before the steeds
Of old Neleides, whose estate thus kingly
He accedes:
"O father, with these youths in fight,
Thou art unequal placed,
Thy willing sinews are unknit, grave age
Pursues thee fast,
And thy unruly horse are slow; my chariot
Therefore use,
And try how ready Trojan horse, can fly
Him that pursues,
Pursue the fierer, and every way perform
The varied fight;
I forced them from Anchises' son, well-
Skill'd in cause of flight.
Then let my squire lead hence thy horse;
Mine thou shalt guard, whilst I,
By thee advanced, assay the fight; that Hector's self may try
If my lance dote with the defects, that fail
The best minds in age,
Or find the palsy in my hands, that doth Thy life engage."
This noble Nestor did accept, and Diomed's two friends, [ascends Eurymedon, that valour loves, and Sthenclus, Old Nestor's coach: of Diomed's horse
Nestor the charge sustains.
And Tydides' son took place of fight:
Neleides held the reins,
And scourged the horse, who swiftly ran direct in Hector's face; Whom fierce Tydides bravely charged, but,
He turn'd from the chase,
His javelin Enipeus smit, mighty Thebreas' son,
And was great Hector's charioteer; it Through his breast did run Near to his pap; he fell to earth, back flew his frightened horse,
His strength and soul were both dissolved.
Hector had deep remorse
Of his mishap; yet left he him, and for another sought;
Nor long his steeds did want a guide; for straight good fortune brought Bold Archilochus, whose like did from Iphidias spring;
He made him take the reins and mount:
then souls were set on wing;
Then high exploits were undergone; then Trojans in their walls
Had been infolded like meek lambs, had Jove wink’d at their falls, Who hurl’d his horrid thunder forth, and made pale lightnings fly [did apply.
Into the earth, before the horse that Nestor
A dreadful flash burnt through the air, that savour’d sulphur-like,
Which down before the chariot the dazed horse did strike.
The fair reins fell from Nestor’s hands, who did in fear entreat [furys’ heat:
Renown’d Tydides into flight to turn his “For know’st thou not,” said he, “our aid is not supplied from Jove?
This day he will give fame to Troy, which when it fits his love
We shall enjoy: let no man tempt his unresisted will, he exceeds him still.”
Though he exceed in gifts of strength; for “Father,” replied the king, “‘tis true; but both my heart and soul
Are most extremely grieved to think how Hector will control
My valour with his vaunts in Troy, that I was terror-sick
With his approach; when he boasts, let earth devour me quick.
“Ah, warlike Tydeus’ son,” said he, “what needless words are these?
Though Hector should report thee faint, and amorous of thy ease,
The Trojans, nor the Trojan wives, would never give him trust, Whose youthful husbands thy free hand hath smother’d so in dust.
This said, he turn’d his one-hooved horse to flight, and troop did take,
When Hector and his men, with shouts, did greedily pursuit make,
And pour’d on darts that made air sigh:
then Hector did exclaim:
“O Tydeus’ son, the kings of Greece do most renown thy name
With highest place, feasts, and full cups;
who now will do thee shame;
Thou shalt be like a woman used, and they will say: ‘Depart, Immortal Minion, since to stand Hector thou hadst no heart.’
Nor canst thou scale our turrets’ tops, nor lead the wives to fleet Of valiant men, that wife-like fear’st my adverse charge to meet.
This two ways moved him: still to fly, or turn his horse and fight.
Thrice thrust he forward to assault, and every time the fright
Of Jove’s fell thunder drove him back, which he proposed for sign [To shew the change of victory] Trojans should victors shine.
Then Hector comforted his men: “All my adventurous friends,
Be men, and, of your famous strength, think of the honour’d ends.
I know benevolent Jupiter, did by his bed profess
Conquest and high renown to me, and to O fools, to raise such silly forts, not worth the least account,
Nor able to resist our force; with ease our horse may mount, Quite over all their hollow dike: but when their fleet I reach, Let Memory to all the world a famous bonfire teach,
For I will all their ships inflame, with whose infernate smoke,
Fear-shrunk, and hidden near their keels the conquer’d Greeks shall choke.” Then cherish’d he his famous horse: “O Xanthus, now,” said he,
“And thou Podargus, Æthon too, and Lampus, dear to me,
Make me some worthy recompense, for a much choice of meat, Given you by fair Andrastea; bread of the purest wheat
And with it, for your drink, mix’d wine, make ye wished cheer,
Still serving you before myself, her husband young and dear.
Pursue, and use your swiftest speed, that we may take for prize
The shield of old Neleides, which Far lifts to the skies, Even to the handles telling it to be massy gold.
And from the shoulders let us take,
Diomed the bold,
The royal cuirass Vulcan wrought, which art so exquisite.
These if we make our sacred spoil, I do not, but this night,

Even to their navy to enforce the Greeks' unturned flight."
This Juno took in high disdain, and made Olympus shake
As she but stirr'd within her throne; and thus to Neptune spake:
"O Neptune, what a spite is this! thou God so huge in power, Afflicts it not thy honour'd heart, to see rude spoil devour These Greeks that have in Helice, and Aege offer'd thee [them the victors be.
So many and such wealthy gifts? Let if well that are the aids of Greece, would beat home these of Troy.
And hinder broad-eyed Jove's proud will, it would abate his joy."
He, angry, told her she was rash, and he would not be one,
Of all the rest, should strive with Jove, whose power was match'd by none.
Whereas they confer'd thus, all the space the trench contain'd before (From that part of the fort that flank'd the navy-anchoring shore)
Was fill'd with horse and targeteers, who there for refuge came,
By Mars-swift Hector's power engaged; Jove gave his strength the fame;
And he with spoilful fire had burn'd the fleet, if Juno's grace
Had not inspired the king himself, to run from place to place,
And stir up every soldier's power, to some illustrious deed. [purple weed

Of all the fleet; from whence his speech might with more ease be driven
To Ajax' and Achilles' ships, whose chief charge was given
The vanguard and the rear-guard both, both for their force of hand,
And trusty bosoms. There arrived, thus urged he to withstand,
Th' insulting Trojans: 'O what shame, ye empty-hearted lords,
Is this to your admired forms! where are your glorious words,
In Lemnos vaunting you the best of all the Greek host?
'Ye are the strongest men,' ye said, 'we will command the most,
Eating most flesh or high-born'd beoves, and drinking cups full-crown'd.
And every man a hundred foes, two hundred, will confound;
Now all our strength, dared to our worst,
one Hector cannot tame,
Who presently with horrid fire, will all our fleet inflame.
O Father Jove, hath ever thy most unsuffer'd hand Afflicted, with such spoil of souls, the king of any land,
And taken so much fame from him? when I did never fall (Since under most unhappy stars, this fleet was under sail), Thy glorious altars, I protest, but, above all the Gods,
Have burnt fat altars of beoves to thee, and pray'd to raise th' abodes
Of rape-defending Ilions. Yet grant, almighty Jove, One favour; that we may at least with life from hence remove,
Not under such inglorious hands, the hands of death employ:
And, where Troy should be stoop'd by Greece, let Greece fall under Troy.
To this even weeping king, did Jove remorseful audience give,
And shook great heaven to him, for sign his men and he should live.
Then quickly cast he off his hawk, the eagle prince of air,
That perfects his unsnatched vows; who seized in her repair
A sucking hind calf, which she truss'd in her enforcive seres,
And by Jove's altar let it fall, amongst th' amazed peers,
Where the religious Achive kings, with sacrifice did please
The author of all oracles, divine Saturnides.
Now, when they knew the bird of Jove, they turn'd courageous head.
When none, though many kings put on, could make his vaunt, he led Tydides to renew'd assault, or issued first the dike,
Or first did fight; but, far the first, stone dead his lance did strike Arm'd Agelaus, by descent surnamed Phractonides;
He turn'd his ready horse to flight, and Diomed's lance did seize His back betwixt his shoulder-blades, and look'd out at his breast;
He fell, and his arms rang his fall. Th' Atrides next address'd Themselves to fight; th' Ajaxes next, with vehement strength ended;
Idomeneus and his friend, stout Merion, next pursued;
Of armies fatal to her wrath. Saturnia whipp'd her horse,
And heaven-gates guarded by the Hours, cop'd by their proper force;
Through which they flew: whom when Jove saw (set near th' Italian springs) Highly displeased, he Iris call'd, that hath the golden wings,
And said: "Fly, Iris, turn them back, let them not come at me,
Our meetings, severely disposed, will nothing gracious be.
Beneath their o'ershrown chariot I'll shiver their proud steeds, Hurl down themselves, their wagon break, and, for their stubborn deeds,
In ten whole years they shall not heal the wounds I will impress With horrid thunder; that my maid may know when to address Arms 'gainst her father. For my wife, she doth not so offend,
"Tis but her use to interrupt whatever I intend."
Iris, with this, left Ida's hills, and up t' Olympus flew,
Met near heaven-gates the Goddesses, and thus their haste withdrew:
"What course intend you? Why are you wrapp'd with your fancies' storm?
Jove likes not ye should aid the Greeks, but threats, and will perform,
To crush in pieces your swift horse beneath their glorious yokes, Hurl down yourselves, your chariot break, and those impoison'd strokes His wounding thunder shall imprint in your celestial parts,
In ten full springs ye shall not cure; that she that tames proud hearts (Thyself Minerva) may be taught to know for what, and when,
Thou dost against thy father fight; for sometimes children
May with discretion plant themselves against their fathers wills, But not where humours only rule, in works beyond their skills.
For Juno, she offends him not, nor vexeth him so much,
For 'tis her use to cross his will, her impudence is such,*
The habit of offence in this she only doth contract,
And so grieves or ineceanseth less, though nee'er the less her fact.

But thou most grievest him, dogged dame, whom he rebukes in time,
Least allions should pervert thy will, and pride too highly climb In thy bold bosom, desperate girl, if seriously thou dare Lift thy unwieldy lance 'gainst Jove, as thy pretences are."
She left them, and Saturnia said: "Ay me, thou seed of Jove,
By my advice we will no more unfit contention move
With Jupiter, for mortal men; of whom, let this man die,
[with destiny:
And that remain live, whoever he pursues
And let him, plotting all events, dispose of either host,
As he thinks fittest for them both, and may become us most."
Thus turn'd she back, and to the Hours her rich-man'd horse resign'd, Who them t' immortal mangers bound;
the chariot they inclined Beneath the crystal walls of heaven; and they in golden thrones Consorted, other Deities, replete with passions.
Jove, in his bright-wheel'd chariot, his fiery horse now beats
Up to Olympus, and aspired the Gods' eternal seats.
Great Neptune loosed his horse, his car upon the altar placed,
And heavenly-linen coverings did round about it cast.
The Far-seer used his throne of gold:
the vast Olympus shook Beneath his feet: his wife, and maid, apart their places took,
Nor any word afforded him: he knew their thoughts, and said:
"Why do ye thus torment yourselves?
you need not sit dismay'd With the long labours you have used in your victorious fight, Destroying Trojans, 'gainst whose lives you heap such high despite.
Ye should have held your glorious course;
for, be assured, as far As all my powers, by all means urged, could have sustain'd the war,
Not all the host of Deities should have retired my hand
From vow'd infictions on the Greeks;
much less you two withstand.
But you, before you saw the fight, much less the slaughter there, Had all your shining lineaments possess'd with aspen fear,
THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

And never had your chariot borne their charge to heaven again, But thunder should have smitten you both,
    had you one Trojan slain.
    Both Goddesses let fall their chins upon their ivory breasts,  [Troy's unrests.
Set next to Jove, contriving still, afflicted Pallas for anger could not speak; Saturnia, contrary, [made this bold reply:
    'Not-to-be-suffer'd Jupiter, what need'st thou still enforce Thy matchless power? we know it well;
but we must yield remorse
To them that yield us sacrifice: nor need'st thou thus deride Our kind obedience, nor our griefs, but bear our powers applied To just protection of the Greeks, that anger tomb not all,  [stand, should fail."
In Troy's soul gulf of perjury, and let them
    "Grieve not," said Jove, "at all done yet; for, if thy fair eyes please,
This next red morning they shall see the great Saturnides Bring more destruction to the Greeks; and Hector shall not cease,  [Aecides,
Till he have roused from the fleet swift-foot
In that day, when before their ships, for his Patroclus slain,  [so the Fates ordain.
The Greeks in great distress shall fight; for I weigh not thy displeased spleen, though to th' extremest bounds
Of earth and seas it carry thee, where endless night confounds Japet, and my dejected Sire, who sit so far beneath,  [winds that breathe,
The never see the flying sun, nor hear the Near to profoundest Tartarbus: nor, thither if thou went,  [more impudent.
Would I take pity of thy moods, since none
To this she nothing did reply. And now Sol's glorious light  [drowsy night.
Fell to the sea, and to the land drew up the
The Trojans grieved at Phoebus' fall, which all the Greeks desired,
And sable night, so often wish'd, to earth's firm throne aspir'd.
    Hector (intending to consult) near to the gulph flood,  [exempt from blood, Far from the fleet, led to a place, pure and The Trojan forces: from their horse all lighted, and did hear Th' oration Jove-loved Hector made; who held a goodly spear, Eleven full cubits long, the head was brass, and did reflect
A wanton light before him still, it round about was deck'd
With strong hoops of new-burnish'd gold:
on this he lean'd, and said:
    "Hear me, my worthy friends of Troy, and you, our honour'd aid.
A little since, I had conceit we should have made retreat,
By light of the infamous fleet, with all the Greeks' eschate;
But darkness hath prevented us, and saft, with special grace,
These Achives and their shore-haled fleet.
    Let us then render place To sacred Night; our supper's dress; and from our chariots free
Our fair-maned horse, and meat them well; then let there convoy'd be,
From forth the city presently, oxen and well-fed sheep.
Sweet wine, and bread; and fell much wood, that all night we may keep Plenty of fires, even till the light bring forth the lovely morn,
And let their brightness glaze the skies, that night may not suborn
The Greeks' escape, if they for flight the sea's broad back would take;
At least they may not part with ease, but,
as retreat they make,
Each man may hear a wound with him, to cure when, he comes home, Made with a shaft or sharpen'd spear; and others fear to come,
With charge of lamentable war, 'gainst soldiers bred in Troy.
Then let our heralds through the town their offices employ To warn the youth, yet short of war, and time-white fathers, past,
That in our god-brief towers they see strong courts of guard be placed,
About the walls, and let our dames yet flourishing in years,
That, having beauties to keep pure, are most inclined to fears (Since darkness in distressful times more dreadful is than light)
Make lofty fires in every house; and thus,
    the dangerous night,
Held with strong watch, if th' enemy have ambuscades laid Near to our walls (and therefore seem in flight the more dismay'd, Intending a surprise, while we are all without the town)  [man's renown.
They every way shall be impugn'd, to every Perform all this, brave Trojan friends;
what now I have to say Is all express'd; the cheerful morn shall other things display.
It is my glory (putting trust in Jove, and other Gods)
That I shall now expulse these dogs fates sent to our abodes,
Who bring ostents of destiny, and black their threatening fleet.
But this night let us hold strong guards; to-morrow we will meet (With fierce-made war) before their ships, and I'll make known to all If strong Tydides from their ships can drive me to their wall,
Or I can pierce him with my sword, and force his bloody spoil.
The wished mom shall shew his power, if he can shun his foil
I running on him with my lance. I think, when day ascends,
He shall lie wounded with the first, and by him many friends.
O that I were as sure to live immortal, and sustain
No failities with increasing years, but evermore remain Adored like Pallas, or the Sun, as all doubts die in me That heaven's next light shall be the last the Greeks shall ever see."
This speech all Trojans did applaud; who from their traces loosed
Their sweating horse, which severally with headstalls they reposed,
And fasten'd by their chariots; when others brought from town
Fat sheep and oxen, instantly, bread, wine; and hewed down Huge store of wood. The winds transfer'd into the friendly sky
Their supper's savour; to the which they sat delightfully,
And spent all night in open field; fires round about them shined.
As when about the silver moon, when air is free from wind,
And stars shine clear, to whose sweet beams, high prospects, and the brows
Of all steep hills and pinnacles, thrust up themselves for shows,
And even the lowly valleys joy to glitter in their sight,
When the unmeasured firmament bursts to disclose her light,
And all the signs in heaven are seen, that glad the shepherd's heart;
So many fires disclosed their beams, made by the Trojan part,
Before the face of Ilion, and her bright turrets show'd.
A thousand courts of guard kept fires, and every guard allow'd Fifty stout men, by whom their horse eat cuts and hard white corn,
And all did wishfully expect the silver-throned morn.

THE END OF THE EIGHTH BOOK.
THE NINTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

To Agamemnon (urging hopeless flight)
Stand Diomed, and Nestor oppose.
By Nestor's counsel, legates are dismiss'd
To Thetis' son; who still denies 'tis assist.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Iota sings the Embassy,
And great Achilles' stern reply.

So held the Trojans sleepless guard; the Greeks to flight were given,
The feeble consort of cold fear, strangely infused from heaven;
Grief, not to be endured, did wound all Greeks of greatest worth.
And as two lateral-sited winds, the West wind and the North,
Meet at the Thracian sea's black breast,
Joyn in a sudden bore, [upon the shore]
Tumble together the dark waves, and pour A mighty deal of frost and weed, with Which men manure ground;
So Jove and Troy did drive the Greeks,
And all their minds confound.
But Agamemnon most of all was tortured at his heart, [bade them cite, apart, Who to the voiceful heralds went, and Each Grecian leader severally, not openly proclaim.
[Together came.
In which he labour'd with the first; and all They sadly sate. The king arose, and pour'd out tears as fast As from a lofty rock a spring doth his black waters east,
And, deeply sighing, thus bespake the Achives: "O my friends, Princes, and leaders of the Greeks, heaven's adverse king extends His wrath, with too much detriment, to my so just design,
Since he hath often promised me, and bound it with the sign Of his bent forehead, that this Troy our vengeful hands should race,
And safe return; yet, now engaged, he plagues us with disgrace, When all our trust to him hath drawn so much blood from our friends.
My glory, nor my brother's weak, were the proposed ends,
For which he drew you to these toils, but your whole country's shame, Which had been huge to bear the rape of so divine a dame,
Made in despite of our revenge. And yet not that had moved
Our powers to these designs, if Jove had not our drifts approved;
Which since we see he did for blood, 'tis desperate fight in us To strive with him; then let us fly; 'tis flight he urgeth thus.
Long time still silence held them all; at last did Diomed rise *
"Atrides, I am first must cross thy indirect advice,
As may become me, being a base king, in this our martial court.
Be not displeased then; for thyself didst broadly misreport
In open field my fortitude, and call'd me faint and weak,
Yet I was silent, knowing the time; loth any rites to break
That appertain'd thy public rule; yet all the Greeks knew well,
Of every age, thou didst me wrong. As thou then didst retell
My valour first of all the host, as of a man dismay'd;
So now, with fit occasion given, I first blame thee afraid.
Inconstant Saturn's son hath given inconstant spirits to thee, [degree :]
And, with a sceptre over all, an eminent But with a sceptre's sovereign grace, the chief power, fortitude (To bridle thee), he thought not best thy breast should be ended.
Unhappy king, think'st thou the Greeks are such a silly sort,
And so excessive impotent, as thy weak words import?
If thy mind move thee to be gone, the way is open, go;
Mycenian ships now ride near, that brought thee to this woe;
The rest of Greece will stay, nor stir till Troy be overcome
With full egression; or if not, but (doters of their home)
And in the royal right of things is no impair to thee.
Nor shall it stand with less than right, that they invited be
To supper by thee; all thy tents are amply stored with wine,
Brought daily in Greek ships from Thrace;
and to this grace of thine
All necessaries thou hast fit, and store of men to wait;
And, many meeting there, thou mayst hear every man’s conceit,
And take the best. It much concerns all Greeks to use advice [our enemies
Of gravest natures, since so near our ships Have lighted such a sort of fires, with which what man is joy’d?
Look, how all bear themselves this night so live, or be destroy’d.”
All heard, and follow’d his advice.
There was appointed then Seven captains of the watch, who forth did march with all their men.
The first was famous Thrasymed, adviceful Nestor’s son:
[Merion ;
Ascalaphus; and Ialmenus; and mighty Alpheus; and Deiphobus; and lovely Lycomedes, an hundred soldiers led,
Old Creon’s joy. These seven bold lords
In every sever’d company, and every man his pike,
Some placed on the rampire’s top, and some amidst the dike.
All fires made, and their supplers took,
Atrides to his tent [sufficient Invited all the peers of Greece, and food Apposed before them, and the peers ap posed their hands to it.
Hunger and thirst being quickly quench’d, to counsel still they sit.
And first spake Nestor, who they thought of late advised so well,
A father grave, and rightly wise, who thus his tale did tell :
“Most high Atrides, since in thee I have intent to end,
From thee will I begin my speech, to whom Jove doth command
The empire of so many men, and puts into thy hand [mayst well command
A sceptre, and establish’d laws, that thou And counsel all men under thee. It there-therefore doth behave Thyself to speak most, since of all, thy speeches most will move;
And yet to hear, as well as speak; and then perform as well
A free just counsel; in thee still must stick what others tell,

* Continued thus in the edition of 1598:—
And lest this madness soon, observe what reasons
I pursue:
We fight with love of Jove, with which one man may worlds subdue.”
This speech was liked, which Nestor mark’d, who like a right old man Would fain prefer his graver years; and therefore thus began :—

110 THE NINTH BOOK OF HOMER’S I LIADS.
For me, what in my judgment stands the most convenient
I will advise, and am assured advice more competent Shall not be given; the general proof, that hath before been made Of what I speak, confirms me still, and now may well persuade,
Because I could not then, yet ought, when thou, most royal king,
Even from the tent, Achilles' love didst violently bring,
Against my counsel, urging thee by all means to relent; [venture the event,
But thou, obeying thy high mind, would Dishonouring our ablest Greek, a man th' immortals grace. [now embrace Again yet let's deliberate, to make him Affection to our general good, and bring his force to field;
Both which kind words and pleasing gifts must make his virtues yield."
"O father," answered the king, "my wrongs thou tell'st me right.
Mine own offence mine own tongue grants:
one man must stand in fight
For our whole army; him I wrong'd; him Jove loves from his heart,
He shows it in thus honouring him; who, living thus apart,
Proves us but number, for his want makes all our weakness seen.
Yet after my confess'd offence, soothing my humorous spleen, I'll sweeten his affects again, with presents infinite, openly recite:
Which, to approve my firm intent, I'll Seven sacred tripods, free from fire; ten talents of fine gold;
Twenty bright caldrons; twelve young horse, well-shaped, and well contrôll'd,
And victors too, for they have won the prize at many a race,
That man should not be poor that had but what their winged pace Hath added to my treasury, nor feel sweet gold's defect. [were the most select, Seven Lesbian ladies he shall have, that
And in their needles rarely skill'd, whom, when he took the town Of famous Lesbos, I did choose; who won the chief renown
For beauty from their whole fair sex; amongst whom I'll resign [of mine Fair Briseis, and I deeply swear (for any fact That may discourage her receipt) she is untouch'd, and rests
As he resign'd her. To these gifts (if love to our requests
Vouchsafe performance, and afford the work, for which we wait,
Of winning Troy) with brass and gold he shall his navv freight;
And, entering when we be at spoil, that princely hand of his Shall choose him twenty Trojan dames, excepting Tyndaris,
The fairest Pergamus enfolds; and, if we make retreat
To Argos, call'd of all the world the Navel, or chief sac,
He shall become my son-in-law, and I will honour him
Even as Creastes, my sole son, that doth in honours swim.
Three daughters in my well-built court un-married are, and fair;
Laodice, Chrysothemis, that hath the golden hair,
And Iphimassa; of all three the worthiest let him take All jointureless to Peleus' court; I will her jointure make,
And that so great as never yet did any maid prefer.
Seven cities right magnificent, I will bestow Enope, and Cardamyle, Hira for herbs renown'd,
The fair Æpea, Pedasus that doth with grapes abound, Antea girdled with green meads, Phera, surnamed Divine;
All whose bright turrets on the seas, in sandy Pylos shine.
Th' inhabitants in flocks and herds are wondrous confluent,
Who like a God will honour him, and him with gifts present,
And to his throne will contribute what tribute he will rate.
All this I gladly will perform, to pacify his hate.
Let him be mild and tractable; 'tis for the God of ghosts To be unreuled, implacable, and seek the blood of hosts,
Whom therefore men do much abhor; then let him yield to me, I am his greater, being a king, and more in years than he."
"Brave king," said Nestor, "these rich gifts must make him needs relent, Choose then fit legates instantly to greet him at his tent.
But stay; admit my choice of them, and let them straight be gone.
Jove-loved Phœnix shall be chief, then
Ajax Telamon,
And prince Ulysses; and on them let these Grave Odysseus and Eurybates. Come, lords, take water straight,
Make pure your hands, and with sweet words appease Achilles' mind, Which we will pray the king of Gods may gently make inclined."
All liked his speech; and on their hands
the heralds water shed,
The youths crowned cups of sacred wine to all distributed.
But leaving sacrificed, and drunk to every man's content,
With many notes by Nestor given, the legates forward went.
With courtship in fit gestures used, he did prepare them well,
But most Ulysses, for his grace did not so much excel.
Such rites be seen ambassadors; and Nestor urged these,
That their most honours might reflect en-rage Achaed,ic.
That went along the shore, and pray'd the God that earth doth bind
In brackish chains, they might not fail, but bow his mighty mind.
The quarter of the Myrmidons they reach'd, and found him set Delighted with his solemn harp, which curiously was fret
With works concealed, through the verge;
the bawdrick that embraced His lotty neck was silver twist; this, when his hand laid waste Aetion's city, he did choose as his especial prize, [exercise.
And, loving sacred music well, made it his
To it he sung the glorious deeds of great heroes dead,
And his true mind, that practice fail'd;
sweet contemplation fed.
With him alone, and opposite, all silent sat his friend,
Attentive, and beholding him, who now his song did end.
Th' ambassadors did forwards press, re-nown'd Ulysses led,
And stood in view. Their sudden sight his admiration bred,
Who with his harp and all arose; so did Memoeus' son
When he beheld them: their receipt Achilles thus begun:
"Health to my lords: right welcome men, assure yourselves ye be;
Though some necessity, I know, doth make you visit me,
Incensed with just cause'gainst the Greeks."
This said, a several seat
With purple cushions he set forth, and did their ease intreat,
And said: "Now, friend, our greatest bowl, with wine ummix'd and neat, Appose these lords, and of the depth let every man make proof,
These are my best-esteemed friends, and underneath my roof;"
Patroclus did his dear friend's will; and he that did desire
To cheer the lords, come fain from fight, set on a blazing fire
A great brass pot, and into it a chine of mutton put,
And fat goat's flesh. Automedon held,
while he pieces cut,
To roast and boil, right cunningly; then of a well-fed swine [it wondrous fine.
A huge fat shoulder he cuts out, and spits His good friend made a goody fire; of which the force once past,
He laid the spit low, near the coals, to make it brown at last,
Then sprinkled it with sacred salt, and took it from the racks.
This roasted and on dresser set, his friend

And to divinest Ithacus took his opposed

Who cast sweet incense in the fire to all the deities.
Thus fell they to their ready food: hunger and thirst alay'd; [they stay'd Ajax to Phoenix made a sign, as if too long Before they told their legacy. Ulysses saw him wink,
And, filling the great bowl with wine, did to Achilles drink:
"Health to Achilles: but our plights stand not in need of meat,
Who late sup'd at Atrides' tent, though for thy love we eat
Of many things, whereof a part would make a complete feast.
Nor can we joy in these kind rites, that have our hearts oppress'd, O prince, with fear of utter spoil. 'Tis made a question now,
If we can save our fleet or not, unless thy-

Thy powers with wonted fortitude. Now
Troy and her consorts, Bold of thy want, have pitch'd their tents close to our fleet and forts,
And made a firmament of fires; and now no more, they say,
Will they be prison'd in their walls, but force their violent way Even to our ships; and Jove himself hath with his lightnings show'd Their bold adventures happy signs; and Hector grows so proud
Of his huge strength, borne out by Jove,
That fearfully he raves,
Presuming neither men nor Gods can interrupt his braves.
Wild rage invades him, and he prays that soon
The sacred morn
Would light his fury; boasting then our streamers shall be torn,
And all our naval ornaments fall by his conquering stroke,
Our ships shall burn, and we ourselves lie stilled in the smoke.
And I am seriously afraid, heaven will perform his threats.
And that 'tis fatal to us all, far from our native seats,
To perish in victorious Troy. But rise, though it be late,
Deliver the afflicted Greeks from Troy's tumultuous hate.

Consider these affairs in time, while thou mayst use thy power,
And have the grace to turn from Greece fate's unrecover'd hour.
O friend, thou know'st thy royal sire fore-warn'd what should be done,
That day he sent thee from his court to honour Atreus's son:
'My son,' said he, 'the victory let Jove and Pallas use
At their high pleasures, but do thou no honour means refuse
That may advance her. In fit bounds contain thy mighty mind, Nor let the knowledge of thy strength be factiously inclined,
Contriving mischiefs. Be to fame and general good profess'd.
The more will all sorts honour thee;
Benignity is best.'
Thus charged thy sire, which thou forget'st;
Yet now those thoughts appease,
That torture thy great spirit with wrath;
Which if thou wilt successe,
The king will merit it with gifts; and if thou wilt give ear, I'll tell how much he offers thee, yet thou sitt'st angry here:

Vol. III.
THE NINTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

But if thy hate to him be more than his gifts may repress,
Yet pity all the other Greeks, in such extreme distress,
Who with religion honour thee; and to their desperate ill
Thou shalt triumphant glory bring; and Hector thou maist kill,
When pride makes him encounter thee, fill'd with a baseful sprite,
Who vaunts our whole fleet brought not one, equal to him in fight."
Swift-foot Aecides replied: "Divine
Laertes' son,
'Tis requisite I should be short, and show what place hath won Thy serious speech, affirming nought but what you shall approve Establish'd in my settled heart, that in the rest I move
No murmur nor exception; for, like bell mouth I loathe,
Who holds not in his words and thoughts one indistinguish'd troth.
What fits the freeness of my mind, my speech shall make display'd:
Nor Atreus' son, nor all the Greeks, shall win me to their aid;
Their suit is wretchedly enforced, to free their own despairs,
And my life never shall be hired with thankless desperate prayers;
For never had I benefit, that ever foil'd the foe;
Even share hath he that keeps his tent, and With equal honour cowards die, and men most valiant,
The much performer, and the man that can of nothing vaunt.
No overplus I ever found, when, with my mind's most strife
To do them good, to dangerous fight I have opposed my life.
But even as to unfeather'd birds the careful dam brings meat,
Which when she hath bestow'd, herself hath nothing left to eat;
So, when my broken spleas have drawn the nights' extremest length,
And ended many bloody days with still-employed strength,
To guard their weakness, and preserve their wives' contents infract,
I have been rob'd before their eyes:
twelve cities I have sack'd Assail'd by sea, eleven by land, while this siege held at Troy;
And of all these, what was most dear, and most mght crown the joy Of Agamemnon, he enjoy'd, who here behind remain'd;
Which when he took, a few he gave, and many things retain'd,
Other to optimates and kings he gave, who hold them fast,
Yet mine he forceth; only I sit with my loss disgraced.
But so he gain a lovely dame, to be his bed's delight,
It is enough: for what cause else do Greeks and Trojans fight?
Why brought he hither such an host?
was it not for a dame?
Of fair-hair'd Helen? And doth love alone the hearts inflame
Of the Atrides to their wives, of all the men that move?
Every discreet and honest mind cares for his private love,
As much as they; as I myself loved Briseis as my life, [her for my wife.
Although my captive, and had will to take Whom since he forced, preventing me, in vain he shall prolong Hopes to appease me, that know well the depthness of my wrong.
But, good Ulysses, with thyself, and all you other kings,
Let him take stomach to repel Troy's fiery threatenings,
Much hath he done without my help, built him a goodly fort,
Cut a dike by it, pitched with pales, broad and of deep import;
And cannot all these helps repress this kill-man Hector's fright?
When I was arm'd amongst the Greeks, he would not offer fight Without the shadow of his walls; but to the Scean ports,
Or to the holy beach of Jove, come back'd with his consorts;
Where once he stood my charge alone, and hardly made retreat,
And to make new proof of our powers, the doubt is not so great.
To-morrow then, with sacrifice perform'd
't imperial Jove
And all the Gods, I'll launch my fleet, and all my men remove;
Which (if thou wilt use so thy sight, or think'st it worth respect)
In foremost of the main, thine eyes shall see, with sails erect Amidst the fishy Hellespont, help'd with laborious oars.
And if the sea-god send free sail, then fruitful Phthian shores Within three days we shall attain, where I have store of prize Left, when with prejudice I came to these indigities.
There have I gold as well as here, and store of ruddy brass, Dames slender, elegantly girt, and steel as bright as glass.
These will I take as I retire, as shares I firmly save,
Though Agamemnon be so base to take the gifts he gave.
Tell him all this, and openly, I on your honours charge,
That others may take shame to hear his lusts command so large,
And, if there yet remain a man he hopeth to deceive (Being the dyd for endless impudence) that man may learn to leave His trust and empire. But alas, though, like a wolf he be,
Shameless and rude, he durst not take my prize, and look on me.
I never will partake his works, nor counsels, as before, I shall never more He once deceived and injured me, and he Tye my affections with his words. Enough is the increase.
Of one success in his deceits; which let him joy in peace,
And bear it to a wretched end. Wise Jove hath reft his brain
To bring him plagues, and these his gifts
I, as my feet, disdain.
Ev'n in the numbness of calm death I will revengeful be,
Though ten or twenty times so much he would bestow on me,
All he hath here, or anywhere, or Orchomen contains,
To which men bring their wealth for strength; or all the store remains In circuit of Egyptian Thebes, where much hid treasure lies, Whose walls contain an hundred ports, of so admired a size,
Two hundred soldiers may a-front with horse and chariots pass.
Nor, would he amplify all his like sand, or dust, or grass,
Should he reclaim me, till his wretch paid me for all the pains
That with his contumely burn'd, like poison, in my veins.
Nor shall his daughter be my wife, although she might contend With golden Venus for her form; or if she did transcend

Blue-eyed Minerva for her works; let him

Than in another nation; and there delight With those goods that my father got, much rather than die here.
Not all the wealth of well-built Troy

All that Apollo's marble fane in rocky

I value equal with the life that my free breast enfold.
Sheep, oxen, tripods, crest-deck'd horse, though lost, may come again,
But when the white guard of our teeth no longer can contain
Our human soul, away it flies, and, once gone, never more
To her frail mansion any man can her lost powers restore.*
And therefore since my mother-queen,
famed for her silver feet,
Told me two fates about my death in my

My true mind in my country likes to satisfy my love
Where the same stars have influence, the self-same air doth move,
That may engender like affects, and to one end conduce
Two that are one, and take a wife, without all laws' delight
Equal in honour; all consents inclining to our joys,
That should by holy rites of kind, be partners in our choice.
Thus my old father's well-got wealth shall well delight my youth
Not match'd for pomp; the high are proud, rich are not rich in truth:
Nor all the wealth Troy held before the arms
she now enfolds;
Nor what Apollo's rocky fane in rocky Pythos holds,
I value equal to my life, spent with a pleasant
mind:
Oxen, sheep, tripods, crest-deck'd horse, fortune or strength may find;
But of an human soul no prize nor conquest can be made.
When the white forms of his speech are forced

The one, that, if I here remain t’assist our victory,
My safe return shall never live, my fame shall never die;
If my return obtain success, much of my fame decays,

But death shall linger his approach, and I
This being reveal’d, ’twere foolish pride, t’ abridge my life for praise.
Then with myself, I will advise others to hoise their sail,
For, ‘gainst the height of Lion you never shall prevail; Jove with his hand protecteth it, and makes the soldiers bold.
This tell the King in every part, for so grate legates should,
That they may better counsels use, to save their fleet and friends
By their own valours; since this course, drown’d in my anger, ends, Phoenix may in my tent repose, and in the morn steer course
For Phthia, if he think it good; if not, I’ll use no force;
All wonder’d at his stern reply; and Phoenix, full of fears His words would be more weak than just, supplied their wants with tears:
“If thy return incline thee thus, Peleus’ renowned joy,
And thou wilt let our ships be burn’d with harmful fire of Troy, Since thou art angry, O my son, how shall I after be

Nor hadst the habit of discourse, that makes men so renown’d.
In all which I was set by him, t’ instruct thee as my son,
That thou might’st speak, when speech was fit; and do, when deeds were done;
Not sit as dumb, for want of words; idle, for skill to move.
I would not then be left by thee, dear son,
begot in love,
No, not if God would promise me, to raze the prints of time Carved in my bosom and my brows, and grace me with the prime Of manly youth, as when at first I left sweet Helle’s shore
Deck’d with fair dames, and fled the grudge my angry father bore;
Who was the fair Amyntor call’d, surnamed Ormenus."
And for a fair-haired harlot’s sake, that his effects could please.

And from my father’s tuins we drank exceeding store of wine.
Nine nights they guarded me by turns, their fires did ceaseless shine,
One in the porch of his strong hall, and in the portal one.
Before my chamber; but when day beneath the tenth night shone,
I brake my chamber’s thick-framed doors, and through the hall-guard pass’d, Unseen of any man or maid. Through Greece then, rich and vast,
I fled to Phthia, nurse of sheep, and came to

And govern’d the Dolopians, and made thee what thou art, O thou that like the Gods art framed:
since, dearest to my heart,
I used thee so, thou loved’st none else; nor anywhere wouldst eat, Till I had crown’d my knee with thee, and carved thee tenderest meat.

And given thee wine so much, for love, that, in thy infancy [continual eye] (Which still discretion must protect, and a My bosom lovingly sustaint the wine thine could not bear. Then, now my strength needs thine as much, be mine to thee as dear. Much have I suffer’d for thy love, much labour’d, wished much, Thinking, since I must have no heir (the Gods’ decrees are such) I would adopt thyself my heir: to thee my heart did give [I hoped to live. What any sire could give his son: in thee O mitigate thy mighty spirits; it fits not one that moves The hearts of all, to live unmoved, and succour hates for loves. The Gods themselves are flexible; whose virtues, honours, powers, Are more than thine; yet they will bend their breasts as we bend ours. Perfumes, besiege devotions, savours of offerings burn’d, And holy rites, the engines are with which their hearts are turn’d, By men that pray to them; whose faiths their sins have falsified. For prayers are daughters of great Jove, flame, wrinkled, ruddy-eyed, And ever following injury, who, strong and sound of feet, Flies through the world, afflicting men. Being prayers yet (To all that love that seed of Jove), the certain blessing get To have Jove hear, and help them too; but if he shall refuse, And stand inflexible to them, fly to Jove, and use Their powers against him; that the wrongs he doth to them may fall On his own head, and pay those pains whose cure he fails to call. Then, great Achilles, honour thou this sacred seed of Jove, And yield to them, since other men of greater minds they move. If Agamemnon would not give the selfsame gifts he vows, bent brows But offer others afterwards, and in his still Entomb his honour and his word, I would not thus exhort, With wrath appeased, thy aid to Greece, though plagued in heaviest sort; But much he presently will give, and after yield the rest. T’ assure which he hath sent to thee the men thou lovest best, And most renown’d of all the host, that they might soften thee. Then let not both their pains and prayers lost and despised be, Before which none could reprehend the tumult of thy heart, But now to rest inexcipate were much too rude a part. Of ancient worthies we have heard, when they were more displeased, To their high names, with gifts and prayers they have been still appeared. For instance, I remember well a fact perform’d of old, Which to you all, my friends, I’ll tell: The Curets wars did hold With the well-fought Abolians, where mutual lives had end About the city Calydon. Th’ Abolians did defend Their flourishing country, which to spoil the Curets did contend. Diana, with the golden throne, with Oeneus much incensed, Since with his plenteous land’s first fruits she was not reverenced, (Yet other Gods, with hecatombs, had feasts, and she alone, Great Jove’s bright daughter, left unsevered, or by oblivion, Or undue knowledge of her dues) much hurt in heart she swore; And she, enraged, excited much, she sent a sylvan boar From their green groves, with wounding tusks; who usually did spoil King Oeneus’ fields, his lofty woods laid prostrate on the soil, Rent by the roots trees fresh adorn’d with fragrant apple flowers. Which Meleager (Oeneus’ son) slew, with assembled powers Of hunters, and of fiercest hounds, from many cities brought; For such as was that with few lives his death could not be bought, Heaps of dead humans, by his rage, the funeral piles applied. Yet, slain at last, the Goddess sigh’d about his head and hide, A wondrous tumult, and a war betwixt the Curets wrought [Meleager fought, And brave Abolians: all the while fierce Ill-fared the Curets; near the walls none durst advance his crest, Though they were many: but when wrath inflamed his haughty breast (Which oft the firm mind of the wise with passion doth infest)
Since 'twixt his mother-queen and him arose a deadly strife,
He left the court, and privately lived with his lawful wife,
Fair Cleopatra, female birth of bright
Marpessa's pain, [did reign,
And of Idaus; who of all terrestrial men
At that time, king of fortitude, and for Marpessa's sake,
'Gainst wanton Phoebus, king of flames, his bow in hand did take,
Since he had ravish'd her, his joy; whom her friends after gave The surname of Alcyone, because they could not save Their daughter from Alcyone's fate. In Cleopatra's arms
Lay Meleager, feeding on his anger, for the harms
His mother pray'd might fall on him; who,
for her brother slain
By Meleager, grieved, and pray'd the Gods to wreck her pain,
With all the horror could be pour'd upon her furious birth.
Still knuck'd she with her impious hands
the many-feeding earth,
To urge stern Pluto and his Queen t'incline their vengeful ears, Fell on her knees, and all her breast dwell'd with her fiery tears,
To make them sacrifice her son, whose wrath enraged her thus.
Erinny's, wandering through the air, heard,
out of Erebus,
Prayers fit for her unpleased mind. Yet
Meleager lay Obscured in fury. Then the fruit of the tumultuous fray
Rung through the turrets as they scaled;
then came th' Aetolian peers To Meleager with low suits, to rise and free their fears;
Then sent they the chief priests of Gods, with offer'd gifts t'atone His differing fury, bade him choose, in sweet-soil'd Calydon,
Of the most fat and yieldy soil, what with an hundred steers
Might in a hundred days be plough'd, half that rich vintage bears,
And half of naked earth to plough; yet yield'd not his ire.
Then to his lofty chamber-door, ascends his royal sire
With ruthless plains, shook the strong bars; then came his sisters' eries;
His mother then; and all intreat; yet still more stiff he lies;
His friends, most reverend, most esteem'd;
yet none impression took,
Till the high turrets where he lay, and his strong chamber, shook
With the invading enemy, who now forced dreadful way [dismity,
Along the city. Then his wife, in pitiful Besought him, weeping; telling him the miseries sustain'd
By all the citizens, whose town the enemy had gain'd;
Men slaughter'd; children bondsclaves made; sweet ladies forced with lust; Fires climbing towers, and turning them to heaps of fruitless dust.
These dangers soften'd his steel heart;
up the stout prince arose, Indeed his body with rich arms, and freed
the Aetolians' woes,
His smother'd anger giving air; which gifts did not assuage, But his own peril. And because he did disengage
Their lives for gifts, their gifts he lost.
But for my sake, dear friend,
Be not thou bent to see our plights to these extremes descend,
Ere thou assist us; be not so by thy ill angel turn'd
From thine own honour. It were shame to see our navy burn'd, And then come with thy timeless aid. For offer'd presents, come,
And all the Greeks will honour thee, as of celestial room.
But if without these gifts thou fight, forced by thy private woe, Thou wilt be nothing so renown'd, though then repel the foe."
Achilles answer'd the last part of this citation thus:
"Phoebus, renown'd and reverend, the honours urged on us
We need not. Jove doth honour me, and to my safety sees,
And will, whilsts I retain a spirit, or can command my knees.
Then do not thou with tears and woes impassion my affects,
Becoming gracious to my foe. Nor fits it the respects
Of thy vow'd love to honour him that hath dishonour'd me,
Lest such loose kindness lose his heart that yet is firm to thee.
It were thy praise to hurt with me the hurer of my state,
Since half my honour and my realm thou mayst participate,
Let these lords then return th' event, and do thou here repose,
And, when dark sleep breaks with the day, our counsels shall disclose
The course of our return or stay." This said, he with his eye
Made to his friend a covert sign, to hasten instantly
A good soft bed, that the old prince, soon as the peers were gone, Might take his rest; when, soldier-like, brave Ajax Telamon
Spake to Ulysses, as with thought Achilles was not worth
The high direction of his speech, that stood so sternly forth Unmoved with th' other orators, and spake, not to appease
Pelides' wrath, but to depart. His arguments were these : "High-issued Laertides, let us insist no more
On his persuasion: I perceive the world would end before Our speeches' end in this affair. We must with utmost haste Return his answer, though but bad. The peers are elsewhere placed,
And will not rise till we return. Great Thetis' son hath stored Proud wrath within him, as his wealth, and will not be implored, Rude that he is; nor his friends' love, respects, do what they can, Wherein past all, we honour'd him. O unremorseful man,
Another for his brother slain, another for his son, [hath done
Accepts of satisfaction; and he the deed Lives in beloved society long after his amends,
To which his foe's high heart, for gifts, with patience condescends;
But thee a wild and cruel spirit the gods for plague have given,
And for one girl, of whose fair sex we come to offer seven,
The most exempt for excellence, and many a better prize.
Then put a sweet mind in thy breast, respect thy own allies, Though others make thee not remiss: a multitude we are,
Sprung of thy royal family, and our supremest care
Is to be most familiar, and hold most love with thee
Of all the Greeks, how great an host soever here there be."

He answer'd: "Noble Telamon, prince of our soldiers here,
Out of thy heart I know thou speak'st, and as thou holdest me dear;
But still as often as I think, how rudely I was used,
good, refused,
And, like a stranger, for all rites, fit for our durst be so profane [private bane,

To violate his sacred place; not for my But since wreek'd virtue's general laws he shameless did infringe;
For whose sake I will loose the reins, and give mine anger swinge, Without my wisdom's least impace. He is a fool, and base,
That pities vice-plagued minds, when pain, not love of right, gives place.
And therefore tell your king, my lords, my just wrath will not care
For all his cares, before my tents and navy charged are.
By warlike Hector, making way through flocks of Grecian lives, Enlighten'd by their naval fire; but when his rage arrives
About my tent, and sable bark, I doubt not but to shiled Them and myself; and make him fly the there strong bounded field.
This said, each one but kiss'd the cup,
and to the ships retired; Ulysses first. Patroclus then the men and maids required
To make grave Phocis' bed with speed, and see he nothing lacks:
They straight obey'd, and laid thereon the subtile fruit of flax,
And warm sheep-fells for covering; and there the old man slept, [station kept.
Attending till the golden Morn his usual Achilles lay in th' inner room of his tent richly wrought, [Lesbos brought,
And that fair lady by his side, that he from Bright Diomed, Phorbas' seed. Patroclus did embrace
The beauteous Iphis, given to him, when his bold friend did race
The lofty Syrus that was kept in Enechi's hold. [man with cups of gold
Now at the tent of Atreus' son, each Received th' ambassadors return'd. All cluster'd near to know What news they brought; which first the king would have Ulysses show:
"Say, most praiseworthy Ithacus, the Grecians' great renown,
Will he defend us? or not yet will his proud stomach down?"
Ulysses made reply: "Not yet will he appeased be,
But grows more wrathful, prizing light thy offer'd gifts and thee,
And wills thee to consult with us, and take some other course
To save our army and our fleet, and says, with all his force,
The morn shall light him on his way to Phthia's wished soil,
For never shall high-seated Troy be sack'd with all our toil;
Jove holds his hand 'twixt us and it: the soldiers gather heart.
Thus he replies, which Ajax here can equally impart,
And both these heralds: Phoenix stays, for so was his desire,
To go with him, if he thought good; if not, he might retire;"
All wonder'd he should be so stern; at last bold Diomed spake:
"Would God, Atrides, thy request were yet to undertake;
And all thy gifts unoffer'd him, he's proud enough beside,
But this ambassage thou hast sent will make him burst with pride.
But let us suffer him to stay, or go, at his desire,
Fight when his stomach serves him best, or when Jove shall inspire.
Meanwhile, our watch being strongly held, let us a little rest
After our food; strength lives by both, and virtue is their guest.
Then, when the rosy-finger'd Morn holds out her silver light, Bring forth thy host, encourage all; and be thou first in fight."
The kings admired the fortitude, that so divinely moved
The skilful horseman, Diomed, and his advice approved.
Then with their nightly sacrifice each took his several tent,
Where all received the sovereign gifts soft Somnus did present.

THE END OF THE NINTH BOOK.
THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

The god Atrides, watching, wakes the other peers,
And (in the fort, consulting of their fear)
Two kings they send, most stout, and honour'd most,
For royal scouts, into the Trojan host;
Who meeting Dolon, Hector's booted spy,
Take him, and learn how all the quarters lie.
He told them, in the Thracian regiment
Of rich King Rhesus, and his royal tent,
Striving for safety: but they end his strife,
And rid poor Dolon of a dangerous life.
Then with digressive wiles they use their force
On Rhesus' life, and take his snowy horse.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Kappa the night exploits applies:
Rhesus' and Dolon's tragedies.

The other princes at their ships soft-finger'd sleep did bind,
But not the General; Somnus' silks bound to his labouring mind,
That turn'd and return'd many thoughts.
And as quick lightnings* fly,
From well-deck'd Juno's sovereign, out of the thicken'd sky,
Preparing some exceeding rain, or hail,
Or down-like snow that suddenly makes all the fields look old,
Or opes the gulfy mouth of war with his ensulphur'd hand,
In dazzling flashes pour'd from clouds, on any punish'd land;
So from Atrides' troubled heart, through his dark sorrows, flew Redoubled sighs; his entrails shook, as often as his view Admir'd the multitude of fires, that girt the Phrygian shade,
And heard the sounds of fires, and shawms,
And tumults soldiers made.
But when he saw his fleet and host kneel to his care and love,
He rent his hair up by the roots as sacrifice to Jove,

* These are the lightnings before snow, &c., that Scaliger's Criticis so unworthily taxeth;
citing the place falsely, as in the Third book's annotations, &c.

Burnt in his fiery sighs, still breathed out of his glorious heart,
And first thought good to Nestor's care his sorrows to impart,
To try if royal diligence, with his approved advice,
Might fashion counsels to prevent their threaten'd miseries.
So up he rose, attired himself, and to his strong feet tied Rich shoes, and cast upon his back a ruddy lion's hide,
So ample it his ankles reach'd, then took his royal spear.
Like him was Menelaus plac'd with an industrious fear, Nor sat sweet slumber on his eyes, lest bitter fates should quite,
The Greeks' high favours, that for him resolved such endless fight.
And first a freckled panther's hide hid his broad back athwart; his head his brazen helm did arm; his able hand his dart;
Then made he all his haste to raise his brother's head as rare,
That he who most excell'd in rule might help t' effect his care.
He found him, at his ship's crook'd stern, adorning him with arms;
Who joy'd to see his brother's spirit awaked without alarms,
Well weighing the importance of the time and first the younger space:
"Why, brother, are ye arming thus?
it is to undertake
The sending of some venturous Greek, to explore the foe's intent?"
Alas, I greatly fear, not one will give that work consent, Exposed alone to all the fears that flow in the gloomy night.
He that doth this must know death well in which ends every fright."
"Brother," said he, "in these affairs we both must use advice,
Jove is against us, and accepts great Hector's sacrifice.
For I have never seen, nor heard, in one day, and by one,
So many high attempts well urged, as Hector's power hath done."
Against the hapless sons of Greece; being chiefly dear to Jove, and without cause, being neither fruit of any Goddess' love, Nor helpful God; and yet I fear the deepness of his hand, Ere it be razed out of our thoughts, will many years withstand. But, brother, his thee to thy ships, and Idomen disease, With warlike Ajax; I will haste to grave Neleides, Exhorting him to rise, and give the sacred watch command, For they will specially embrace incitement at his hand; And now his son their captain is, and Idomen's good friend, Bold Merion, to whose discharge we did that charge commend. "Command'st thou then," his brother ask'd, "that I shall tarry here Attending thy resolved approach, or else the message bear, And quickly make return to thee?" He answer'd: "Rather stay, Lest otherwise we fail to meet, for many a different way Lies through our labyrinthian host. Speak ever as you go, Command strong watch, from sire to son urge all to observe the foe, Familiarly, and with their praise, exciting every eye. Not with unseason'd violence of proud We must our patience exercise, and work ourselves with them, Jove in our births combined such cares to either's diadem." Thus he dismiss'd him, knowing well his charge before: he went Himself to Nestor, whom he found in bed within his tent, By him his damask cuirass hung, his shield, a pair of darts, His shining casque, his arming waist; in these he led the hearts Of his apt soldiers to sharp war, not yielding to his years. He quickly started from his bed, when to his watchful ears Untimely feet told some approach; he took his lance in hand, And spake to him: "Ho, what art thou that walk'st at midnight? stand, Is any wanting at the guards, or lack'st thou any peer? Speak, come not silent towards me; say, what intend'st thou here?"

He answer'd: "O Neleides, grave honour of our host, Tis Agamemnon thou may'st know, whom Jove afflieth most Of all the wretched men that live; and will, whilst any breath Gives motion to my toiled limbs, and bears me up from death. I walk the round thus, since sweet sleep cannot inclose mine eyes, Nor shut those organs care breaks ope for our calamities. My fear is vehemence for the Greeks; my heart, the fount of heat, With his extreme affects made cold, without my breast doth beat; And therefore are my sinews strook with trembling; every part Of what my friends may feel hath act in my dispersed heart. But, if thou think'st of any course may to our good redound (Since neither thou thyself canst sleep), come, walk with me the round: In way whereof we may confer, and look to every guard: Lest watching long, and weariness with labouring so hard, Drown their oppressed memories of what they have in charge. The liberty we give the foe, alas, is very large, Their camp is almost mix'd with ours, and we have forth no spies To learn their drifts: who may peradventure this night intend surprise?" Grave Nestor answer'd: "Worthy king, let good hearts bear our ill: Jove is not bound to perfect all this busy Hector's will; But I am confidently given, his thoughts are much dismay'd [our aid, With fear lest our distress incite Achilles to And therefore will not tempt his fate, nor ours, with further pride. But I will gladly follow thee, and stir up more beside; Tydides, famous for his lance; Ulysses, Telamon, And bold Phyleus' valiant heir. Or else, if any one Would haste to call king Idomen, and Ajax, since their sail Lie so removed, with much good speed, it might our haste avail. But, though he be our honour'd friend, thy brother I will blame, Not fearing if I anger thee: it is his utter shame
He should commit all pains to thee, that should himself employ,
Past all our princes, in the care, and cure of our annoy;
And be so far from needing spurs to these his due respects,
He should apply our spirits himself, with prayers and urged affects.
Necessity (a law to laws, and not to be endured) Makes proof of all his faculties, not sound if not injured."
"Good father," said the king, "sometimes you know I have desired
You would improve his negligence, too oft to case retired.
Nor is it for defect of spirit, or compass of his brain, [should abstain]
But with observing my estate, he thinks, he Till I commanded, knowing my place; unwilling to assume,
For being my brother, anything might prove he did presume.
But now he rose before me far, and came t' avoid delays,
And I have sent him for the man yourself desired to raise.
Come, we shall find them at the guards we placed before the fort,
For thither my direction was they should with speed resort."
"Why now," said Nestor, "none will grudge, nor his just rule withstand.
Examples make excitements strong, and sweeten a command."
Thus put he on his arming truss, fair shoes upon his feet,
About him a mandillion, that did with buttons meet,
Of purple, large and full of folds, curl'd with a warmful nap,
A garment that 'gainst cold in nights did soldiers use to wrap;
Then took he his strong lance in hand, made sharp with proved steel,
And went along the Grecian fleet. First at Ulysses' keel
He call'd, to break the silken fumes that did his senses bind.
The voice through th' organs of his ears straight rung about his mind.
Forth came Ulysses, asking him: "Why stir ye thus so late?
Sustain we such enforcive cause?" He answer'd, "Our estate
Both force this perturbation; vouchsafe it, worthy friend,
And come, let us excite one more, to counsel of some end
To our extremes, by fight, or flight." He back, and took his shield,
And both take course to Diomed: they found him laid in field,
Far from his tent; his armour by; about him was dispread
A ring of soldiers, every man his shield beneath his head;
His spear fix'd by him as he slept, the great end in the ground,
The point, that brisled the dark earth, cast a reflection round
Like pallid lightnings thrown from Jove; thus this hero lay, head had stay
And under him a big ox-hide; his royal On arm's hangings, rolled up; whereon he slept so fast,
That Nestor stirr'd him with his foot, and child to see him cast
In such deep sleep, in such deep woes; and ask'd him why he spent All night in sleep, or did not hear the Trojans near his tent?
Their camp drawen close upon their dike, small space 'twixt trees and foes?
He, starting up, said, "Strange old man, that never taketh repose, Thou art too patient of our toil: have we not men more young,
To be employ'd from king to king? thine age hath too much wrong."
"Said like a king," replied the sire, "for I have sons renown'd,
And there are many other men, might go this toilsome round;
But, you must see, imperious Need hath all at her command.
Now on the eager razor's edge,* for life or death, we stand.
Then go (that art the younger man) and if thou love my ease,
Call swift-foot Ajax up thyself, and young Phyleides."
This said, he on his shoulders cast a yellow lion's hide, Big, and reach'd earth; then took his spear, and Nestor's will applied, Raised the heroes, brought them both. All met; the round they went.
And found not any captain there asleep or negligent.
But waking, and in arms, gave ear to every lowest sound.
And as keen dogs keep sheep in cotes, or folds of hurdles bound,

* Εύκλειτο Ιορδανών δέος. This went into a proverb, used by Theocritus, in De Inventis, out of Homer.
And grin at every breach of air, envious of all that moves;
Still listening when the ravenous beast stalks through the hilly graves;
Their men and dogs stand on their guards, and mighty tumults make,
Sleep wanting weight to close one wink; so did the captains wake,
That kept the watch the whole sad night, all with intentive ear Converted to the enemy’s tents, that they might timely hear
If they were stirring to surprise; which Nestor joy’d to see.
"Make so, dear sons, maintain your watch, sleep not a wink," said he,
"Rather than make your fames the scorn of Trojan perjury."
This said, he foremost pass’d the dike, the others seconded;
Even all the kings that had been call’d to council from the bed,
And with them went Meriones, and Nestor’s famous son; [consultation.
For both were call’d by all the kings to Beyond the dike they chose a place, near as they could from blood,
Where yet appear’d the falls of some, and whence, the crimson flood Of Grecian living being pour’d on earth by Hector’s furious chase,
He made retreat, when night repour’d grim darkness in his face.
There sat they down, and Nestor spake:
"O friends, remains not one
That will rely on his bold mind, and view the camp alone,
Of the proud Trojans, to approve if any straggling mate
He can surprise near th’ utmost tents, or learn the brief estate
Of their intentions for the time, and mix like one of them [renown’d extreme
With their outguards, explicating if the They force on us will serve their turns, with glory to retire,
Or still encamp thus far from Troy? This may he well inquire, And make a brave retreat untouch’d; and this would win him fame
Of all men canopied with heaven, and every man of name
In all this host shall honour him with an enriching meed, A black ewe and her sucking lamb (rewards that now exceed All other best possessions, in all men’s choice requests); [and royal feasts,"
And still be bidden by our kings to kind
All reverenced one another’s worth; and none would silence break, Lest worse should take place of speech; at last did Diomed speak:
"Nestor, thou ask’st if no man here have heart so well inclined To work this stratagem on Troy? yes, I have such a mind.
Yet, if some other prince would join, more probable will be The strengthen’d hope of our exploits: two may together see (One going before another still) sly danger every way;
One spirit upon another works, and takes with firmer stay
The benefit of all his powers; for though th’ other might enforce.
This offer every man assumed; all would with Diomed go;
The two Ajaxes, Merion, and Menelaus
But Nestor’s son enforced it much; and hardy Ithocus,
Who had to every venturous deed a mind as venturous.
Amongst all these thus spake the king:
"Tydites, most beloved, Choose thy associate worthy; a man the most approved For use and strength in these extremes. Many thou seest stand forth; But choose not thou by height of place, but by regard of worth, Lest with thy nice respect of right to any man’s degree, Thou wrong’st thy venture, choosing one least fit to join with thee, Although perhaps a greater king." This spake he with suspect That Diomed, for honour’s sake, his brother would select. Then saith Tydites:  "Since thou givest my judgment leave to choose, How can it so much truth forget Ulysses to refuse, That bears a mind so most exempt, and vigorous in th’ effect Of all high labours, and a man Pallas doth most respect?
We shall return through burning fire, if I with him combine, He sets strength in so true a course, with counsels so divine." Ulysses, loth to be esteem’d a lover of his praise, With such exceptions humbled him as did him higher raise;
And said: "Tydides, praise me not more than free truth will bear, Nor yet impair me; they are Greeks that give judicial ear. But come, the morning hastens, the stars are forward in their course, Two parts of night are past, the third is left t' employ our force."
Now borrow'd they for haste some arms: bold Thrasymedes lent Adventurous Diomed his sword (his own was at his tent), His shield, and helm tough and well-worn'd, without or plume or crest, And call'd a morion, archers' heads it used to invest. Meriones lent Ithacus his quiver and his bow, [man did bestow His helmet fashion'd of a hide; the work Much labour in it, qualling it with bowstrings, and without With snowy tusks of white-mouth'd boars 'twas armed round about Right cunningly, and in the midst an armory cap was placed, That with the fix'd ends of the tusks his head might not be rased. This, long since, by Autolycus was brought from Eleon, [was Ormenus' son. When he laid waste Amaryntor's house, that In Scandria, to Cytherius, surnamed Amphiladas, Autolycus did give this helm; he, when he feasted was By honour'd Molus, gave it him, as present of a guest: [bespoist: Molus to his son Merion did make it his With this Ulysses arm'd his head; and thus they, both address'd, Took leave of all the other kings, To them a glad oment, As they were entering on their way, Minerva did present, A hestrahaw consecrate to her, which they could ill discern Through sable night; but, by her elange, they knew it was a helm. Ulysses joy'd, and thus invoked: "Hear me, great seed of love, That ever dost my labours grace with presence of thy love, And all my motions dost attend: still love me, sacred dame, Especially in this exploit, and so protect our fame We both may safely make retreat, and thrive t'l employ Our boldness in some great affair baneful to them of Troy."
Then pray'd Illystrate Diomed: "Vouch-safe me likewise ear, O thou uncour'd Queen of arms: be with thy favours near, As to my royal father's steps, thou went'st a bounteous guide, When th' Archives and the peers of Thebes he would have pacified, Sent as the Greeks' ambassador, and left them at the flood Of great Æsopus; whose retreat thou madest to swim in blood Of his enambah'd enemies; and, if thou so protect [beifer most select, My bold endeavours, to thy name an That never yet was tamed with yoke, broad-fronted, one year old, I'll burn in zealous sacrifice, and set the horns in gold." The Goddess heard; and both the kings their dreadless passage bore Through slaughter, slaughter'd carcasses, arms, and discoulour'd gore. Nor Hector let his princes sleep, but all to council call'd, And ask'd, "What one is here will vow, and keep it unappall'd, To have a gift fit for his deed, a chariot and two horse, That pass for speed the rest of Greece? What one dares take this course, For his renown, besides his gifts, to mix amongst the foe, And learn if still they hold their guards, or with this overthrow Determine flight, as being too weak to hold us longer war?" All silent stood; at last stood forth one Dolon, that did dare This dangerous work, Æumedes' heir, a herald much renown'd. This Dolon did in gold and brass exceedingly abound, But in his form was quite deform'd, yet passing swift to run; Amongst five sisters, was he left Æumedes' only son. And he told Hector, his free heart would undertake t' explore The Greeks' intentions, "But," said he, "thou shalt be sworn before, By this thy sceptre, that the horse of great Æacides, And his strong chariot bound with brass, thou wilt (before all these) Resign me as my valour's prize; and so I rest unmoved To be thy spy, and not return before I have approved
THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

(For venturing to Atrides' ship, where their consultations are held)
If they resolve still to resist, or fly as quite expell'd."
He put his sceptre in his hand, and call'd the thunderer's God, Saturn's husband, to his oath, those horse should not be rode By any other man than he; but he for ever joy
To his renown, their services, for his good done to Troy.
Thus swore he, and forswore himself: yet made base Dolon bold;
Who on his shoulders hung his bow, and did about him fold
A white wolf's hide, and with a helm of weasels' skins did arm
His weasel's head, then took his dart, and never turn'd to harm
The Greeks with their related drifts; but being past the troops
Of horse and foot, he promptly runs, and as he runs he stoops
To undermine Achilles' horse. Ulysses straight did see,
And said to Diomed: "This man makes footing towards thee,
Out of the tents. I know not well, if he be good or base,
Bent to our fleet, or come to rob the slaughter'd enemy,
But let us suffer him to come a little further on,
And then pursue him. If it chance, that By his more swiftness, urge him still to run upon our fleet,
And (lest he scape us to the town) still let thy javelin meet
With all his offers of retreat." Thus stepp'd they from the plain Amongst the slaughter'd carcasses. Dolon came on amain, Suspecting nothing; but once past, as far as mules outdraw Oxen at plough, being both put on, neither admitted law,
To plough a deep-soil'd furrow forth, so far was Dolon past.
Then they pursued; which he perceived, and stay'd his speedless haste, Subtly supposing Hector sent to countermand his spy;
But, in a javelin's throw or less, he knew them enemy.
Then laid he on his nimble knees, and they pursued like wind.
As when a brace of greyhounds are laid in with bare or hind,
Close-mouth'd and skill'd to make the best of their industrious course, Serve either's turn, and, set on hard, lose neither ground nor force;
So constantly did Tydeus' son, and his town-raising peer, Pursue this spy, still turning him, as he was wading near His covert, till he almost mix'd with their out-courts of guard.
Then Pallas prompt'ed Diomed, lest his due worth's reward
Should be impair'd if any man did vaunt he first did sheathe
HIS sword in him, and he be call'd but second in his death.
Then spake he, threatening with his lance:
"Or stay, or this comes on,
And long thou cannot run before thou be by death outgone."
This said he, he threw his javelin forth; which miss'd as Diomed would,
Above his right arm making way, the pile stuck in the mould.
He stay'd and trembled, and his teeth did chatter in his head.
They came in blowing, seized him fast; he, weeping, offered
A wealthy ransom for his life, and told them he had brass, Much gold, and iron, that fit for use in many labours was,
From whose rich heaps his father would a wondrous portion give.
If, at the great Achaian fleet, he heard his son did live.
Ulysses bade him cheer his heart." Think not of death," said he,
"But tell us true, why runn'st thou forth, When others sleeping be? Is it to spoil the carcasses? or art thou chosen sent to them?
'T explore our drifts? or of thyself seek'st thou some wish'd event?"
He trembling answer'd: "Much reward did Hector's oath propose,
And urged me, much against my will, to endeavour to disclose
If you determined still to stay, or bent your course for flight,
As all dismay'd with your late foil, and wearied with the fight.
For which exploit, Pelides' horse and chariot he did swear, [to hear
I only ever should enjoy." Ulysses smiled
So base a swain have any hope so high a price t' aspire, And said, his labours did affect a great and precious hire,
And that the horse Pelides reign’d no mortal hand could use
But be himself, whose matchless life a Goddess did produce.

"But tell us, and report but truth, where left’st thou Hector now?
Where are his arms? his famous horse?
on whom doth he bestow
The watch’s charge? where sleep the kings? intend they still to lie Thus near encamp’d, or turn sufficed with their late victory?"

"All this," said he, "I’ll tell most true.
At This’ monument
Hec, with all our princes sits, t’ advise of this event;
Who choose that place removed, to shun the rude confused sounds
The common soldiers throw about: but, for our watch and rounds, Whereof, brave lord, thou makest demand, none orderly we keep.
The Trojans, that have roofs to save, only abandon sleep,
And privately without command each other they exhorted, [this slender sort
To make prevention of the worst; and in
Is watch and guard maintain’d with us: th’ auxiliary bands Sleep soundly, and commit their cares into the Trojan’s hands,
For they have neither wives with them, nor children to protect;
The less they need to care, the more they succour dull neglect.
"But tell me," said wise Ithacus, "are all these foreign powers Appointed quarters by themselves, or else commix’d with yours?"

"And this," said Dolon, "too, my lords, I’ll seriously unfold.
The Paeon with the crooked bows, and Cares, quarters hold Next to the sea; the Lelges, and Caucans, join’d with them,
And brave Pelasgians. Thyrbier’s mead, removed more from the stream.
Is quarter to the Lycians, the lofty Mysian force.
The Phrygians and Meonians, that fight with armed horse.
But what need these particulars? if ye intend surprise
Of any in our Trojan camp, the Thracian quarter lies Utmost of all, and uncommi’d with Trojan regiments,
That keep the voluntary watch: new pitch’d are all their tents.

King Rhesus, Eleneus’ son, commands them, who hath steeds More white than snow; huge, and well-shaped; their fiery pace exceeds
The winds in swiftness; these I saw; his chariot is with gold
And palid silver richly framed, and wondrous to behold;
His great and golden armour is not fit a man should wear,
But for immortal shoulders framed: come then, and quickly bear
Your happy prisoner to your fleet; or leave him here fast bound, Till your well-urg’d and rich return prove my relation sound."

Tytodes dreadful reply: "Think not of passage thus,
Though of right acceptable news thou hast advertised us,
Our hands are holds more strict than so;
and should we set thee free
For offer’d ransom, for this scape, thou still wouldst scouting be About our ships, or do us scathe in plain opposed arms, thy harms.
But, if I take thy life, no way can we repent
With this, as Dolon reach’d his hand to use a suppliant’s part,
And stroke the beard of Diomed, he strook his neck athwart
With his forced sword, and both the nerves he did in sander wound,
And suddenly his head, deceived, fell speaking on the ground.
His weasel’s helm they took, his bow, his wolf’s skin, and his lance.
Which to Minerva Ithacus did zealously advance,
With lifted arm into the air; and to her thus he spake:
"Goddess, triumph in thine own spoils; to thee we first will make Our invocations, of all powers throne’d on th’ Olympian hill;
Now to the Thracians, and their horse, and beds, conduct us still."

With this, he hung them up aloft upon a tamarisk bough
As eyeful trophies, and the sprigs that did about it grow
He prioned from the leavy arms, to make it easier view’d
When they should hastily retire, and be perhaps pursued.
Forth went they through black blood and arms, and presently aspir’d
The guardless Thracian regiment, fast bound with sleep, and itired."
Their arms lay by, and triple ranks they, as they slept, did keep,
As they should watch and guard their king; who, in a fatal sleep, Lay in the midst; their chariot horse, as they couchfellows were,
Fed by them; and the famous steeds, that did their general bear,
Stood next him, to the hinder part of his rich chariot tied.
Ulysses saw them first, and said: 'Tydides, I have spied
The horse that Dolon, whom we slew, assured us we should see.
Now use thy strength; now idle arms are most unfit for thee;
Prize thou the horse; or kill the guard, and leave the horse to me.'
Minerva, with the azure eyes, breathed strength into her king,
Who filled the tent with mixed death: the souls, he set on wing,
Issued in groans, and made air swell into her stormy flood.
Horror and slaughter had one power; the earth did blush with blood.
As when a hungry lion flies, with purpose to devour,
On flocks unkept, and on their lives doth freely use his power;
So Tydides did call the foe; twelve souls before him flew; he slew, Ulysses waited on his sword, and ever as he drew them by their strengthless heels out of the horses' sight,
That, when he was to lead them forth, they should not with afright Boggle, nor snore, in treading on the bloody carcasses;
For being new come, they were unused to such stern sights as these.
Through four ranks now did Diomed the king himself attain,
Who, snoring in his sweetest sleep, was like his soldiers slain.
An ill dream by Minerva sent that night stood by his head, quer'd Diomed,
Which was Oenides' royal son, uncon-
Meanwhile Ulysses loosed his horse, took all their reins in hand,
And led them forth; but Tydeus' son did in contention stand.
With his great mind to do some deed of more audacity;
If he should take the chariot, where his rich arms did lie, on his back,
And draw it by the beam away, or bear it or if, of more dull Thracian lives, he should their bosoms sack.
In this contention with himself, Minerva did suggest
And bade him think of his retreat; lest from their tempted rest
Some other God should stir the foe, and send him back dismay'd.
He knew the voice, took horse, and fled: the Trojans' heavenly aid, Apollo with the silver bow, stood no blind sentinel.
To their secure and drowsy host, but did discover well
Minerva following Diomed; and, angry with his act,
The mighty host of Ilion he enter'd, and awaked
The counsellor of the king, a counsellor of Hracc, [the desert place, Hippocoon; who when he rose, and saw Where Rhesus' horse did use to stand, and th' other dismal harms,
Men struggling with the pangs of death, he shriek'd out thick alarms, Call'd 'Rhesus! Rhesus!' but in vain; then still, 'Arm! arm! I' he cried.
The noise and tumult was extreme on every startled side Of Troy's huge host; from whence in throngs all gather'd, and admired
Who could perform such harmful facts, and yet be safe retired.
Now, coming where they slew the scout, Ulysses stay'd the steeds, Tydides lighted, and the spoils, hung on the tamarisk reeds,
He took and gave to Ithacus, and up he got again.
Then flew they joyful to their fleet. Nestor did first attain
The sounds the horse-hoofs strook through air, and said: 'My royal peers,
Do I but dote, or say I true? methinks about mine ears
The sounds of running horses beat, O would to God they were Our friends thus soon return'd with spoils: but I have hearty fear, Lest this high tumult of the foe doth their distress intend.'
He scarce had spoke, when they were come; both did from horse descend; All, with embraces and sweet words, to heaven their worth did raise.
Then Nestor spake: 'Great Ithacus, even heap'd with Grecian praise,
How have you made these horse your prize? pierced you the dangerous host,
Where such gems stand? or did some God your high attempts accost,
And honour'd you with this reward? why, they be like the rays
The Sun effuseth. I have mix'd with Trojans all my days;
And now, I hope you will not say, I always lie ahoard,
Though an old soldier I confess; yet did all Troy afford [possess'd.
Never the like to any sense that ever I
But some good God, no doubt, hath met, and your high valours bless'd;
For he that shadows heaven with clouds loves both as his delights,
And she that supplies earth with blood cannot forbear your sights.” Ulysses answer'd: “Honour'd sire, the willing Gods can give Horse much more worth than these men yield, since in more power they live, These horse are of the Thracian breed;
their king, Tydides slew,
And twelve of his most trusted guard; and of that meaner crew
A scout for thirteenth man we kill'd, whom Hector sent to spy [fight or fly.”

Thus, follow'd with whole troops of friends, they with applause pass'd
The spacious dike, and in the tent of Diomed they placed
The horse without contention, as his deserv

Which, with his other horse set up, on yellow wheat did feed.
Poor Dolon's spoils Ulysses had; who shrined them on his stern,
As trophies vow'd to her that sent the good-aboding hern.
Then enter'd they the mere main sea, to cleanse their honour'd sweat
From off their feet, their thighs and necks;
and, when their vehement heat Was calm'd, and their swoln hearts re-fresh'd, more curious baths they used, Where odorous and dissolving oils* they through their limbs diffused.
Then, taking breakfast, a big bowl, fill'd with the purest wine, They offer'd to the maiden Queen, that hath the azure eyne.

THE END OF THE TENTH BOOK.
THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Atrides and his other peers of name
Lead forth their men; whom Eris doth inflame.
Hector (by Iris' charge) takes deathless breath, Whilest Agamemnon plies the work of death,
Who with the first bears his imperial head,
Himself, Ulysses, and King Diomed, Eurypylus, and Asclepius' son,
(Enforc'd with wounds) the furious skirmish
Which mortal sight when great Achilles views,
A little his desire of fight reneweth;
And forth he sends his friend, to bring him word.
From old Neleides, what wounded lord
He in his chariot from the skirmish brought;
Which was Machaon, Nestor then besought.
He would persuade his friend to wreak their harms,
Or come himself, deck'd in his dreadful arms.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Lambda presents the General,
In fight the worthiest man of all.

Aurora out of restful bed did from bright Tithon rise,
To bring each deathless essence light, and use, to mortal eyes;
When Jove sent Eris to the Greeks, sustaing in her hand.
Stern signs of her designs for war. She took her horrid stand.
Upon Ulysses' huge black bark, that did at anchor ride.
Amidst the fleet, from whence her sounds might ring on every side,
Both to the tents of Telamon, and th' authors of their smarts.
Who held, for fortitude and force, the navy's utmost parts.
The red-eyed Goddess, seated there, thunder'd the Orthian song.
High, and with horror, through the ears of all the Grecian throng.
Her verse with spirits invincible did all their breasts inspire.
Blew out all darkness from their limbs, and set their hearts on fire:
And presently was bitter war more sweet a thousand times.
Than any choice in hollow keels to greet their native climes.

Atrides summon'd all to arms, to arms himself disposed.
First on his legs he put bright greaves, with silver buttons closed;
Then with rich cuirass arm'd his breast, which Cyprus bestow'd.
To gratify his royal guest; for even to Cyprus flow'd.
'Th' unbounded fame of those designs the Greeks proposed for Troy,
And therefore gave he him those arms, and wish'd his purpose joy.
Ten rows of azure mix'd with black, twelve golden like the sun.
Twice ten of tin, in beaten paths, did through this armour run.
Three serpents to the gorge crept, that like three rainbows shined.
Such as by Jove are fix'd in clouds, when wonders are divined.
About his shoulders hung his sword;
Whereof the hollow hilt
Was fashioned all with shining bars, exceeding richly girt;
The scabbard was of silver plate, with golden hangers grace'd.
Then took he up his weighty shield, that round about him cast.
Defensive shadows; ten bright zones of gold-affected brass.
Were driven about it; and of tin, as full of glass as glass.
Swell'd twenty bosses out of it; in centre of them all.
One of black metal had engraven (full of extreme appal,)
An ugly Gorgon, compassed with Terror and with Fear.
At it a silver bawdrick hung, with which he used to hear.
Wound on his arm, his ample shield; and in it there was woven
An azure dragon, curl'd in folds, from whose one neck was eleven Three heads contorted in an orb. Then placed he on his head.
His four-plumed casque; and in his hands two darts he managed.
Arm'd with bright steel that blazed to heaven. Then Juno, and the maid.
That conquers empires, trumpets served to summon out their aid.
In honour of the General, and on a sable cloud,
To bring them furious to the field, sate
Thundering out aloud.
Then all enm goût’d their charioteers, to Rank their chariot horse
Close to the dike. Forth march’d the foot, Whose front they did re enforce.
With some horse troops. The battle then
Was all of charioteers, Lined with light horse. But Jupiter dis Turb’d this form with fears.
And from air’s upper region did bloody vapours rain,
For sad ostent much noble life should ere
They times be slain.
The Trojan host at Illus’ tomb was in Battalia led.
By Hector and Polydamas, and old An Chises’ seed.
Who god-like was esteem’d in Troy, by Grave Antenor’s race
Divine Agenor, Polybus, unmarried Aca Proportion’d like the states of heaven. In Front of all the field,
Troy’s great Priamides did bear his all Ways equal shield,
Still plying ‘th order of his power. And
As amidst the sky
We sometimes see an ominous star blaze
Clear and dreadfully, Then run his golden head in clouds, and Straight appear again;
So Hector otherwhiles did grace the vant
Guard, shinning plain,
Then in the rear-guard hid himself, and Labour’d everywhere
To order and encourage all; his armour
Was so clear,
And he applied each place so fast, that,
Like a lightning throwed
Out of the shield of Jupiter, in every eye be Shone.
And as upon a rich man’s crop of barley or
Of wheat,
Opposed for swiftness at their work, a sort
Of reapers sweat,
Bear down the furrows speedily, and thick
Their handfuls fall;
So at the joining of the hosts ran slaughter
Through them all;
None stoop’d to any fainting thought of Soul inglorious flight,
But equal bore they up their heads, and Fare like wolves in flight.
Stern He or, with such weeping sights,
Rejoiced to feed her eyes.
Who only shew’d herself in field, of all the Deities;

The other in Olympus’ tops sat silent, and Refined.
That Jove to do the Trojans grace should bear so fix’d a mind.
He cared not, but, enthroned apart,
Triumphant sat in sway
Of his free power, and from his seat took pleasure to display.
The city so adorn’d with towers, the sea
With vessels fill’d,
The splendour of refugent arms, the killer
And the kill’d.
As long as bright Aurora ruled, and Sacred day increased,
So long their darts made mutual wounds,
And neither had the best;
But when, in hill-environ’d vales, the Timber-feller takes A sharp set stomach to his meat, and dinner ready makes,
His sinews fainting, and his spirits become Surcharged and dull;
Time of accustom’d ease arrived, his hands
With labour full:
Then by their valours Greeks brake through The Trojan ranks, and cheer’d
Their general squadrons through the host;
Then first of all appear’d
The person of the king himself; and then
The Trojans lost
Host: Bianor by his royal charge, a leader in the Who being slain, his charioteer, Uileus, did alight,
And stood in skirmish with the king; the king did deadly smite His forehead with his eager lance, and Through his helm it ran, Enforcing passage to his brain, quite Through the hanner’d pan;
His brain mix’d with his clotter’d blood,
His body strew’d the ground.
There left he them, and presently he Other objects found;
Isus and Antiphus, two sons king Priam
did beget
One lawful, th’ other wantonly. Both in One chariot met
Their royal foe; the baser born, Isus, was Charioteer,
And famous Antiphus did fight; both
Which king Peleus’ heir, (Whilome in Ida keeping flocks), did depend and bind
With plant osiers; and, for price, them to sire resign’d.
Atrides, with his well-aim’d lance, smote
Isus on the breast
Above the nipple; and his sword a mortal Wound impress’d
THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Beneath the ear of Antiphus; down from their horse they fell.
The king had seen the youths before, and now did know them well, Remembering them the prisoners of swift Aerides, [Ida's foody lesa.
Who brought them to the sable fleet from And as a lion having found the furrow of a blind,
Where she hath calved two little twins, at will and ease doth grind Their joints snatch'd in his solid jaws, and crusheth into mist
Their tender lives; their dam, though near, not able to resist,
But shook with vehement fear herself, flies through the oaken chace
From that fell savage, drawn'd in sweat, and seeks some covert place;
So when with most unmatched strength the Grecian General bent
'Gainst these two princes, none durst aid their native king's descent,
But fled themselves before the Greeks; and where these two were slain, Pisander and Hippolochus (not able to restrain Their headstrong horse, the silken reins being from their hands let fall)
Were brought by their unruly guides before the General.
Antimachus begat them both, Antimachus that took Rich gifts, and gold, of Helen's love, and would by no means brook
Just restitution should be made of Menc Laos' wealth, Bereft him, with his ravish'd queen, by Alexander's stealth.
Atrides, lion-like, did charge his sons, who on their knees
Fell from their chariot, and besought regard to their degrees.
Who, being Antimachus his sons, their father would afford [house did hoard
A worthy ransom for their lives, who in his Much hidden treasure, brass, and gold, and steel, wrought wondrous choice.
Thus wept they, using smoothing terms, and heard this rugged voice Breathe from the unrelenting king: "If you be of the breed
Of stout Antimachus, that stay'd the honourable deed [decreed,
The other peers of Ilion in council had To render Helen and her wealth; and would have basely slain
My brother and wise Ithacus, ambassadors t' attain
The most due motion; now receive wreak for his shameful part."
This said, in poor Pisander's breast he fix'd his wreakful dart,
Who upward spread th' oppressed earth; his brother crouch'd for dread.
And, as he lay, the angry king cut off his arms and head,
And let him like a football lie for every man to spurn. [his valour turn,
Then to th' extremest heat of fight he did
And led a multitude of Greeks, where foot did foot subdue, Horse slaughter'd horse. Need feather'd flight, the batter'd centre flew In clouds of dust about their ears, raised from the horses' hooves,
That beat a thunder out of earth as horrible as Jove's.
The king, persuading speedy chace, gave his persuasions way
With his own valour, slaughtering still. As in a stormy day
In thick-set woods a ravenous fire wraps in his fierce repair
The shaken trees, and by the roots doth toss them into air;
Even so beneath Atrides' sword flew up Troy's flying heels,
Their horse drew empty chariots, and sought their thundering wheels
Some fresh directors through the field, where least the pursuit drives.
Thick fell the Trojans, much more sweet to vultures than their wives.
Then Jove drew Hector from the darts, from dust, from death and blood,
And from the tumult; still the king firm to the pursuit stood,
Till at old Ilius' monument, in midst of all the field,
They reach'd the wild fig-tree, and long'd to make their town their shield.
Yet there they rested not; the king still cried, 'Pursue, pursue,'
And all his unreproved hands did blood and dust imbrue.
But when they came to Scæa's ports, and to the beech of Jove,
There made they stand; there every eye, fix'd on each other, strove
Who should outlook his mate amazed; through all the field they fled.
And as a lion, when the night becomes most deaf and dead,
Invades ox herds, affrighting all, that he of one may wreak
His dreadful hunger, and his neck he first of all doth break,
Then laps his blood and entrails up; so Agamemnon plied
The manage of the Trojan chace, and still the last man died,
The other fled, a number fell by his imperial hand,
Some grovelling downwards from their horse, some upwards strew'd the sand.
High was the fury of his lance: but, having beat them close Beneath their walls, the both worlds' Sire did now again repose
On fountain-flowing Ida's tops, being newly slid from heaven,
And held a lightning in his hand; from thence this charge was given To Inc with the golden wings: "Thaumantia, fly," said he,
"And tell Troy's Hector, that as long as he enraged shall see
The soldier-loving Atreu's son amongst the foremost fight, [must excite Depopulating troops of men, so long he
Some other to resist the foe, and he no arms advance;
But when he wounded takes his horse, attain'd with shaft or lance,
Then will I fill his arm with death, even till he reach the fleet.
And peaceful night treads busy day beneath her enrag'd feet."
The wind-foot swift Thaumantia obey'd, and used her wings
To famous Ilion, from the mount enchased with silver springs,
And found in his bright chariot the hardy Trojan knight,
To whom she spake the words of Jove, and vanish'd from his sight.
He leapt upon the sounding earth, and shook his lengthful dart,
And everywhere he breathed exhorts, and stirr'd up every heart.
A dreadful fight he set on foot. His soldiers straight turn'd his head.
The Greeks stood firm. In both the hosts, the field was perfected.
But Agamemnon, foremost still, did all his side exceed.
And would not be the first in name unless the first in deed.
Now sing, fair Presidents of verse, that in the heavens embody Who first encounter'd with the king, of all the adverse power, Iphidamas, Antenor's son, ample and bigly set,
Brought up in pasture-springing Thrace, that doth soft sheep beget,
In grave Cisseus' noble house, that was his mother's sire,
Fair Thaeno; and when his breast was heighten'd with the fire
Of gaysome youth, his grandsire gave his daughter to his love.
Who straight his bridal-chamber left. Fame with affection strove,
And made him furnish twelve fair ships, to lend fair Troy his hand.
His ships he in Percope left, and came to Troy by land.
And now he tried the fame of Greece, encountering with the king,
Who threw his royal lance and miss'd. Iphidamas did fling.
And strook him on the arming waist, beneath his coat of brass, Which forced him stay upon his arm, so violent it was:
Yet pierced it not his well-wrought zone; but when the lazy head Tried hardness with his silver waist, it turn'd again like lead.
He follow'd, grasping the ground end, but with a lion's wife
That wrest away a hunter's staff, he caught it by the pile.
And pluck'd it from the easter's hand, whom with his sword he strook Beneath the ear, and with his wound his timeless death he took.
He fell and slept an iron sleep; wretched young man, he died.
Far from his newly-married wife, in aid of foreign pride,
And saw no pleasure of his love; yet was he jointure great, [in his retreat
An hundred oxen gave he her, and vow'd Two thousand head of sheep and goats, of which he store did leave.
Much gave he of his love's first-fruits, and nothing did receive.
When Coon (one that for his form might feast an amorous eye,
And elder brother of the slain) beheld this tragedy, Deep sorrow sat upon his eyes, and (standing laterally,
And to the General indiscern'd) his javelin he let fly.
That twixt his elbow and his wrist transfixed his armless arm;
The bright head shined on the other side. The unexpected harm Impress'd some horror in the king; yet so he ceased not fight.
But rush'd on Coon with his lance, who made what haste he might, Seizing his slaughter'd brother's foot, to draw him from the field,
And call'd the ablest to his aid, when under his round shield
The king's brass javelin, as he drew, did strike him helpless dead:
Who made Iphidamas the block, and cut off Coon's head.
Thus under great Atrides' arm Antenor's issue thrived,
[ mansion dwelt.
And, to suffice precissé fate, to Pluto's
He with his lance, sword, mighty stones, pour'd his heroic wreak
On other squadrons of the foe, whiles yet warm blood did break Through his cleft veins; but when the wound was quite exhaust and crude,
The cager anguish did approve his princely fortitude.
As when most sharp and bitter pangs distract a labouring dame, Which the divine Llthyæ, that rule the painful frame
Of human child-birth, pour on her; th' Llthyæ that are The daughters of Saturnia; with whose extreme repair
The woman in her travail strives to take the worst it gives
With thought it must be, 'tis love's fruit, the end for which she lives,
The mean to make herself new born: what comforts will redound;
So Aga-nemnon did sustain the torment of his wound.
Then took he his chariot, and to fleet bade haste his charioteer,
But first pour'd out his highest voice to purchase every ear :
"Princes and leaders of the Greeks, brave friends, now from our fleet Do you expel this boisterous sway. Jove will not let me meet Illustrate Hector, nor give leave that I shall end the day
In fight against the Ilion power; my wound is in my way."
This said, his ready charioteer did scourge his spritful horse,
That freely to the scible fleet perform'd their fiery course,
To bear their wounded sovereign apart the martial threat,
Sprinkling their powerful breasts with foam,
and snowing on the dust.
When Hector heard of his retreat, thus he for fame contends:
"Trojans, Dardanians, Lycians, all my close-fighting friends, Think what it is to be renown'd, be soldiers all of name,
Our strongest enemy is gone, Jove vows to do us fame,
Then in the Grecian faces drive your onehooved violent steeds,
And far above their best be best, and glorify your deeds."
Thus as a dog-given hunter sets upon a brace of boars
His white-tooth'd hounds, puffs, shouts, breathes terms, and on his emprise pours
All his wild art to make them pinch; so Hector urged his host
To charge the Greeks, and, he himself most bold and active most,
He brake into the heat of fight, as when a tempest raves,
Stoops from the clouds, and all on heapes doeth cuff the purple waves.
Who then was first, and last, he kill'd, when Jove did grace his deed?
Asseus, and Autonous, Opys, and Clytus' seed Prince Dolops, and the honour'd sire of sweet Enyalus, [ponous, Opheltes, Agelaus next, and strong Hip-Orus, Eseymus, all of name. The common soldiers fell,
As when the hollow flood of air in Zephyr's cheeks doth swell,
And sparseth all the gather'd clouds white Notus' power did draw, Wapas waves in waves, huris up the froth beat with a vehement flaw;
So were the common soldiers wrack'd in troops by Hector's hand.
Then ruin had enfeoff such works as no Greeks could withstand:
Then in their fleet they had been housed, had not Laertes' son Stirr'd up the spirit of Diomed, with this impression:
"Tyndias, what do we sustain, forgetting what we are?
Stand by me, dearest in my love. 'Twere horrible impair
For our two valours to endure a customary flight,
To leave our navy still engaged, and but by fits to fight."
He answer'd: "I am bent to stay, and anything sustain;
But our delight to prove us men will prove but short and vain,
For Jove makes Trojans instruments, and virtually then Wields arms himself: our cross affairs are not 'twixt men and men."
This said, Thymbraeus with his lance he tumbled from his horse, Near his left nipple wounding him. Ulysses did enforce Fair Mollion, minion to this king that Diomed subdued.
Both sent they thence till they return’d, who now the king pursued
And furrow’d through the thicken’d troops.
As when two chased boars
Turn head against kennels of bold hounds, and race way through their gores;
So turn’d from flight, the forward kings show’d Trojans backward death:
Nor fled the Greeks, but by their wills, to get great Hector breath.
Then took they horse and chariot from two bold city foes, Merops Perseus’ mighty sons. Their father could disclose, Beyond all men, hid auguries, and would not give consent
To their egression to these wars, yet willfully they went,
For Fates that order sable death, enforced their tragedies.
Tydides slew them with his lance, and made their arms his prise.
Hyproechus, and Hippodocus, Ulysses reft of light.
But Jove, that out of Ida look’d, then equalised the fight,
A Grecian for a Trojan slow one, then paid tribute to the Fates.
Yet royal Diomed slow one, even in those even debates,
That was of name more than the rest, Peon’s renowned son, (hip did run;
The prince Agastophus; his lance into his
His squire detain’d his horse apart, that hinder’d him to fly,
Which he repent’d at his heart; yet did his feet apply
His scape with all the speed they had amongst the foremost bands,
And there his loved life dissolved. This Hector understands,
And rush’d with clamour on the king, right soundly seconded
With troops of Trojans: which perceived
By famous Diomed,
The deep conceit of Jove’s high will stiffen’d his royal hair,
Who spake to near-fought Ithacus: "The fate of this affair Is bent to us: come let us stand, and bound his violence."
Thus threw he his long javelin forth, which smote his head’s defence Full on the top, yet pierc’d no skin; brass took repulse with brass;
His helm (with three folds made, and sharp) the gift of Phoebus was.
The blow made Hector take the troop, sunk him upon his hand,
And struck him blind. The king pursued before the foremost band
His dart’s recovery, which he found laid on the purple plain;
By which time Hector was revived, and, taking horse again,
Was far commiss’d within his strength, and fled his dark covert, and triumph’d:
He follow’d with his thirsty lance, and this elusive brave:
"Once more be thankful to thy heels, proud dog, for thy escape.
Mischief sat near thy bosom now; and now another rape
Hath thy Apollo made of thee, to whom thou well mayst pray,
When through the singing of our darts thou find’st such guarded way.
But I shall meet with thee at length, and bring thy latest hour,
If with like favour any God be factor of my power.
Meanwhile some other shall repay, what I suspend in thee."
This said, he set the wretched soul of Peon’s issue free, Whom his late wound not fully slew. But Priam’s amorous birth
Against Tydides bent his bow, hid with a bill of earth, Part of the ruinated tomb for honour’d Ilius built, (and richly gilt.
And as the cuirass of the slain, engraven Tydides from his breast had spoil’d, and from his shoulders raft
His target and his solid helm, he shot, and his keen shaft (That never flew from him in vain) did nail unto the ground
The king’s right foot; the spleenful knight laugh’d sweetly at the wound, Crept from his covert, and triumph’d: "Now art thou maim’d," said he,
"And would to God my happy hand had so much honour’d me
To have infix’d it in thy breast, as deep as in thy foot, Even to thy expulsive of thy soul: then blest had been my shoot
Of all the Trojans; who had then breathed from their long unrests, Who fear thee, as the braying goats abhor the king of beasts."

THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.
Undaunted Diomed replied: "You braver with your bow, you slick-hair'd lover, you that hunt and fleer at wenches so; Demigod thou but stand in arms with me, thy silly archery [little suffer I] Would give thee little cause to vaunt. As in this royal exploit of thine, perform'd when thou wert hid, As if a woman, or a child that knew not what it did, Had touch'd my foot. A coward's steel hath never any edge. But mine, 't' assure it sharp, still lays dead carcasses in pledge; Touch it, it rends lifeless straight, it strikes the fingers' ends Of hopeless widows in their cheeks, and children blind of friends. The subject of it makes earth red, and air with sighs inflames, And leaves limbs more embraced with birds than with enamour'd dames." Lance-famed Ulysses now came in, and stood before the king, Kneeld opposite, and drew the shaft: the eager pain did sting Through all his body; straight he took his royal chariot there, And with direction to the fleet did charge his charioteer. Now was Ulysses desolate, fear made no friend remain, He thus spake to his mighty mind: "What doth my state sustain? If I should fly this odds in fear, that thus comes clustering on, 'Twere high dishonour; yet 'twere worse, to be surprised alone. 'Tis love that drives the rest to flight; but that's a faint excuse. Why do I tempt my mind so much? Pale cowards fight refuse. He that affects renown in war must like a rock be fix'd, Wound, or be wounded: valour's truth puts no respect betwixt. In this contention with himself, in flew the shady bands Of targeteurs, who sieged him round with mischief-filled hands. As when a crew of gallants watch the wild muse of a boar, Their dogs put after in full cry, he rusheth on before, Whets, with his lather-making jaws, his crooked tusks for blood. And, holding firm his usual haunts, breaks through the deepen'd wood, They charging, though his hot approach be never so abhor'd; So, to assail the Jove-loved Greek, the Ilions did accord, And he made through them: first he hurt, upon his shoulder blade, Deiops, a blameless man at arms; then sent to endless shade Thoon and Eunomus; and strook the strong Chersidamas, As from his chariot he leap'd down, beneath his targe of brass; Who fell, and crawld upon the earth with his sustaining palms, And left the fight: nor yet his lance left dealing martial aims, But Socus' brother by both sides, young Carops, did impress. Then princely Socus to his aid made brotherly access, And, coming near, spake in his charge: "O great Laertes' son, Insatiate in sly stratagems, and labours never done, This hour, or thou shalt boast to kill the two Hippasides And prise their arms, or fall thyself in my resolved access." This said, he threw quite through his shield his fell and well-driven lance, Which held way through his cuirasses, and on his ribs did glance, Flowing the flesh amongst his sides; but Pallas did repel [knowing well All inward passage to his life. Ulysses, The wound undecided (setting back his foot to form his stand) Thus spake to Socus: "O thou wretch, thy death is in this hand, That stay'st my victory on Troy, and where thy charge was made In doubtful terms (or this or that) this shall thy life invade." This frighted Socus to retreat, and, in his faint reverse, The lance betwixt his shoulders fell, and through his breast did pierce, Down fell he sounding, and the king thus play'd with his miseseas: "O Socus, you that make by birth the two Hippasides, Now may your house and you perceive death can outfly the flier. Ah wretch, thou canst not 'scape my vows. Old Hippasus thy sire, Nor thy well-honour'd mother's hands, in both which lies thy worth, Shall close thy wretched eyes in death, but vultures dig them forth,
And hide them with their darksome wings;
but when Ulysses dies, Divinest Greeks shall tomb my corse with all their obsequies.

Now from his body and his shield the violent lance he drew,
That princely Socus had infix'd; which drawn, a crimson dew Fell from his bosom on the earth; the wound did dare him sore.

And when the furious Trojans saw Ulysses' forced gore,
Encouraging themselves in gross, all his destruction vowed.

Then he retired, and summon'd aid.
Thrice shouted he aloud,
As did denote a man engaged. Thrice Menelaus' ear
Observed his aid-suggesting voice, and Ajax being near,
He told him of Ulysses' shouts, as if he were enclos'd [might be disposed From all assistance, and advised their aids Against the ring that circled him, lest, charged with troops alone, (Though valiant) he might be oppress'd, whom Greece so built upon.

He led, and Ajax seconded: they found their Jove-loved king Circled with foes. As when a den of bloody lucerns cling About a goodly-palmea hart, hurt with a hunter's bow,
Whose scope his nimble feet enforce,
whilst his warm blood doth flow,
And his light knees have power to move;
but, master'd of his wound,
Embos'd within a shady hill, the lucerns charge him round,
And tear his flesh; when instantly fortune sends in the powers
Of some stern lion, with whose sight they fly, and he devours;
So charged the Ilians Ithacus, many and mighty men.
[ Ajax then,
But then made Menelaus in, and horrid Bearing a target like a tower, close was his violent stand, [the royal hand,
And every way the foe dispersed; when, by Kind Menelaus led away the hurt Laertes' son, Till his fair squire had brought his horse:
victorious Telamon
Still ploied the foe, and put to sword a young Priamides,
Doryclus, Priam's bastard son; then did his lance impress Pandocus, and strong Piraus, Lysander and Paleretes.

As when a torrent from the hills, swoln with Saturnian showers, Falls on the fields, bears blasted oaks, and wither'd rosin flowers, Loose weeds, and all dispersed silth, into the ocean's force;
So matchless Ajax beat the field, and slaughter'd men and horse.

Yet had not Hector heard of this, who fought on the left wing
Of all the host, near those sweet herbs
Scamander's flood doth spring,
Where many foreheads trode the ground, and where the skirmish burn'd Near Nestor and king Idomen; where Hector overturn'd
The Grecian squadrons, authoring high service with his lance,
And skilful manage of his horse. Nor yet the discrepancy
He made in death betwixt the hosts had made the Greeks retire, If fair-hair'd Helen's second spouse had not repress'd the fire Of bold Maechaon's fortitude, who with a three-fork'd head
In his right shoulder wounded him. Then had the Grecians dread, Lest, in his strength declined, the foe should slaughter their hurt friend.
Then Crete's king urged Neleides his chariot to ascend,
And getting near him, take him in, and bear him to their tents.
"A surgeon is to be preferr'd, with physic ornaments,
Before a multitude; his life gives hurt lives native bounds,
With sweet inspersion of fit balms, and perfect search of wounds."
Thus spake the royal Idomen. Neleides obey'd, [Greek convey'd
And to his chariot presently the wounded
The son of Æsculapius, the great physician.
To fleet they flew. Cebriones perceived the slaughter done
By Ajax on the other troops, and spake to Hector thus:
"While we encounter Grecians here, stern Telamonius
Is yonder raging, turning up in heaps our horse and men;
I know him by his spacious shield. Let us turn chariot then,
Where, both of horse and foot, the fight most hotly is proposed,
In mutual slaughters. Hark, their throats from cries are never closed."
This said, with his shrill scourage he strook the horse, that fast ensued Stung with his lashes, tossing shields, and carcasses imbrued.
The chariot tree was drown'd in blood, and th' arches by the seat Dispurpled from the horses’ hooves, and from the wheelbends beat.
Great Hector long’d to break the ranks, and startle their close fight
Who horribly amazed the Greeks, and plied their sudden fright
With busy weapons, ever wing’d; his lance, sword, weighty stones.
Yet charged he other leaders’ bands, not dreadful Telamon’s;
With whom he wisely shunn’d foul blows. But Jove (that weighs above All human powers) to Ajax’ breast divine repressions drove,
And made him shun who shunn’d himself: he ceased from fight amazed, Casting on his back his seven-fold shield, and round about him gazed.
Like one turn’d wild, look’d on himself in his distant retreat, Knee before knee did scarcely move. As when from herds of neat, Whole threaves of boors and mongrels chase a lion skulking near,
Loth he should taint the well-prized fat of any stall-fed steer,
Consuming all the night in watch, he, greedy of his prey,
Oft thrusting on, is oft thrust off, so thick the javelins play
On his bold charges, and so hot the burning fire-brands shine,
Which he (though horrible) abhors, about his glowing eyes,
And early his great heart retires; so Ajax from the foe,
For fear their fleet should be inflamed, ‘gainst his swoln heart did go,
As when a dull mill ass comes near a goodly field of corn,
Kept from the birds by children’s cries, the boys are overborne
By his insensible approach, and simply he will eat;
About whom many wands are broke, and And still the self-providing ass doth with their weakness bear,
Not stirring till his paunch be full, and scarcely then will stir:
So the huge son of Telamon amongst the Trojans fared,
Bore showers of darts upon his shield, yet scorn’d to fly as scared,
And so kept softly on his way; nor would he mend his pace
For all their violent pursuits, that still did arm the chase
With singing lances. But, at last, when their cur-like presumes More urged the more forborne, his spirits did rarely their fumes,
And he revoked his active strength, turn’d head, and did repel
The horse-troops that were now made in, twixt whom the fight grew fell:
And by degrees he stole retreat, yet with such puissant stay
That none could pass him to the fleet. In both the armies’ sway
He stood, and from strong bands received sharp javelins on his shield,
Where many stuck, thrown on before, many fell short in field, Ere the white body they could reach, and stuck, as telling how They purposed to have pierced his flesh. His peril pierced now
The eyes of prince Eurypylus, Evemon’s famous son,
Who came close on, and with his dart strook dute Apisison, Whose surname was Phausiades, even to the concrete blood
That makes the liver; on the earth, out gush’d his vital flood.
Eurypylus made in, and eased his shoulders of his arms;
Which Paris seeing, he drew his bow, and wreak’d in part the harms
Of his good friend Phausiades, his arrow he let fly [attained thigh;
That smote Eurypylus, and brake in his Then took he troop to shun black death, and to the flyers cried:
“Princes, and leaders of the Greeks, stand and repulse the tide
Of this our honour-wracking chase. Ajax is drown’d in darts,
I fear past ‘seape; turn, honour’d friends, help out his venturous parts.”
Thus spake the wounded Greek; the sound cast on their backs their shields,
And raised their darts; to whose relief Ajax his person wields.
Then stood he firmly with his friends, retiring their retire,
And thus both hosts indifferent join’d, the fight grew hot as fire.
Now had Neleides’ sweating steeds brought him and his hurt friend Amongst their fleet. Α’escades, that wisly did intend.
THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

Standing astern his tall-neck’d ship, how deep the skirmish drew Amongst the Greeks, and with what ruth the inscription grew, Saw Nestor bring Machaon hurt, and from within did call, [form celestial,
His friend Patroclus; who, like Mars in Came forth with first sound of his voice, first spring of his decay,
And ask’d his princely friend’s desire.

"Dear friend," said he, "this day I doubt not will enforce the Greeks, to swarm about my knees;
I see unsuffer’d need employ’d in their extremities.
Go, sweet Patroclus, and inquire of old Neleides Whom he brought wounded from the fight; by his back parts I guess
It is Machaon; but his face I could not well descry, They pass’d me in such earnest speed.”
Patroclus presently Obey’d his friend, and ran to know. They now descended were,
And Nestor’s squire, Euryomedon, the horses did unger;
Themselves stood near th’ extremest shore, to let the gentle air
Dry up their sweat; then to the tent, where Hecamed the fair Set chairs, and for the wounded prince a potion did prepare.
This Hecamed, by war’s hard fate, fell to old Nestor’s share,
When Thetis’ son sack’d Tenedos; she was the princely seed
Of worthy king Arsinous, and by the Greeks decreed
The prize of Nestor; since all men in counsel he surpass’d.
First, a fair table she apposed, of which the feet were graced With bluish metal mix’d with black; and on the same she put A brass fruit-dish, in which she served a wholesome onion cut
For pittance to the potion, and honey newly wrought, And bread, the fruit of sacred meal. Then to the board she brought A right fair cup with gold studs driven, which Nestor did transfer From Ilyos; on whose swelling sides four handles fixed were,
And upon every handle sat a pair of doves of gold.
Some billings, and some pecking meat; two gilt feet did uphold

The antique body; and withal so weighty was the cup
That, being proposed brimful of wine, one scarce could lift it up, Yet Nestor drunk in it with ease, spite of his years’ respect.
In this the goddess-like fair dame a potion did confer
With good old wine of Pramniius, and scraped into the wine Cheese made of goat’s milk, and on it spersed flour exceeding fine.
In this sort for the wounded lord the potion she prepared,
And bade him drink. For company, with him old Nestor shared.
Thus physically quench’d they thirst, and then their spirits revived With pleasant conference. And now Patroclus, being arrived, Made stay at th’ entry of the tent. Old Nestor, seeing it, Rose, and received him by the hand, and faim would have him sit,
He set that courtesy aside, excusing it with haste,
Since his much-to-be-reverenced friend sent him to know who past (Wounded with him in chariot) so swiftly through the shore;
"Whom now," said he, "I see and know, and now can stay no more;"
You know, good father, our great friend is apt to take offence, Whose fiery temper will inflame sometimes with innocence."
He answer’d: "When will Peleus’ son some royal pity show
On his thus wounded countrymen? ah, is he yet to know How much affliction tires our host? how our especial aid, [miserably laid?
Tainted with lances, at their tents are Ulysses, Diomed, our king, Euryppylus, Machaon
All hurt, and all our worthiest friends; yet no compassion
Can supple thy friend’s friendless breast: doth he reserve his eye Till our fleet burn, and we ourselves one after other die?
Alas, my forces are not now as in my younger life.
Oh would to God I had that strength I used in the strife Betwixt us and the Elians, for oxen to be driven When Ithymon’s lofty soul was by my valour given As sacrifice to destroy, Hyphroclus’ strong
son,
That dwelt in Ellis, and fought first in our contention;
We foraged, as proclaimed foes, a wondrous wealthy boot,
And he, in rescue of his herds, fell breathless at my foot.
All the Dorps boors with terror fled. Our prey was rich and great;
Twice five and twenty flocks of sheep; as many herds of neat;
As many goats, and nasty swine, a hundred fifty mares.
All sorrel, most with suckling foals, and these soon-money’d wares.
We drove into Neleus’ town, fair Pylos, all by night.
My father’s heart was glad to see so much good fortune quite.
The forward mind of his young son, that used my youth in deeds,
And would not smoother it in moods. Now drew the Sun’s bright steeds Light from the hills; our heralds now acclited all that were.
Endamaged by the Ellians; our princes did appear;
Our boot was parted; many men th’
Epeians much did owe,
That, being our neighbours, they did spoil;
afflictions did so flow On us poor Pyrians, though but few. In brake great Hercules
To our suit, confirmed late years, and wholly did suppress.
Our hapless princes. Twice-six sons ren-nown’d Neleus bred, [and dead,
Only myself am left of all, the rest subdued
And this was it that made so proud the base Epeian bands,
On their near neighbours, being oppress’d, to lay injurious hands.
A herd of oxen for himself, a mighty flock of sheep,
My sire selected, and made choice of shepherds for their keep;
And from the general spoil he call’d three hundred of the best.
The Ellians sought him infinite, most plagued of all the rest.
Four wager-winning horse he lost, and chariots interventional, Being led to an appointed race. The prize that was presented
Was a religious three-foot urn; Augeas was the king.
That did detain them, and dismiss’d their keeper sorrowing
For his loved charge, lost with foul words.
Then both for words and deeds My sire being worthily incensed, thus justly he proceeds.
To satisfaction, in first choice of all our wealthy prise;
And, as he shared much, much he left his subjects to suffice.
That none might be oppress’d with power, or want his portion due.
Thus for the public good we shared, Then we to temples drew Our complete city, and to heaven we thankful rites did burn
For our rich conquest. The third day ensuing our return
The Ellians flew on us in heaps, their general leaders were
The two Moliones, two boys, untrained in the fear
Of horrid war, or use of strength. A certain city shines
Upon a lofty prominent, and in th’ extreme Of sandy Pylos, seated where Alpheus’ floud doth run.
And call’d Thryessa; this they sieged, and gladly would have won.
But, having pass’d through all our fields,
Minerva as our spy
Fell from Olympus in the night, and arm’d us instantly;
Nor muster’d she unwilling men, nor unprepared for force.
My sire yet would not let me arm, but hid away all my horse.
Esteming me no soldier yet; yet shined I nothing less
Amongst our gallants, though on foot;
Minerva’s mightiness
Led me to fight, and made me bear a soldier’s worthy name.
There is a flood falls into sea, and his crook’d course doth frame
Close to Arena, and is call’d bright Minyas’ stream.
There made we halt, and there the sun cast many a glorious beam
On our bright armours, horse and foot insead together there.
Then march’d we on. By fiery noon we saw the sacred clear Of great Alpheus, where to Jove we did fair sacrifice;
And to the azure God, that rules the under-liquid skies,
We offer’d up a solemn bull; a bull t’
Alpheus’ name;
And to the blue-eyed Maid we burn’d a heifer never tame.
Now was it night; we supp’d and slept, but about the flood, in arms.
The foe laid hard siege to our town, and shook it with alarms,
But, for prevention of their spleens, a mighty work of war Appeard behind them; for as soon as Phoebus’ fiery car
Cast night’s soul darkness from his wheels (invoking reverend Jove, And the unconquer’d Maid his birth) we did th’ event approve,
And gave them battle. First of all, I slew (the army saw)
The mighty soldier Mulius, Augens’ son-in-
And spoil’d him of his one-hooved horse; his eldest daughter was Bright Agamede, that for skill in simples did surpass, And knew as many kind of drugs, as earth’s broad centre bred:
Him charg’d I with my brass-arm’d lance, the dust received him dead.
I, leaping to his chariot, amongst the foremost press’d,
And the great-hearted Elians fled frightened, seeing their best.
And lostest soldier taken down, the general of their horse.
I follow’d like a black whirlwind, and did for prize enforce Full fifty chariots, every one furnish’d with two arm’d men, Who eat the earth, slain with my lance; and I had slaughter’d then
The two young boys, Mollones, if their world-circling sire, Great Neptune, had not saft their lives, and cover’d their retire
With unpierced clouds. Then Jove bestow’d a haughty victory Upon us Pylians; for so long we did the chase apply, Slaughtering and making spoil of arms, till sweet Buprasius’ soil, [recoil; Alesius, and Olenia, were fam’d with our For there Minerva turn’d our power, and there the last I slew As, when our battle join’d, the first. The Pylians then withdrew
To Pylos from Buprasius. Of all th’ immortals then, They most thank’d Jove for victory; Nestor the most of men.
Such was I ever, if I were employ’d with other peers,
And I had honour of my youth, which dies not in my years.

But great Achilles only joys hability of act
In his brave prime, and doth not deign t’ impart it where ‘tis lack’d.
No doubt he will extremely mourn, long after that black hour
Wherein our ruin shall be wrought, and rue his ruthless power.
O friend! my memory revives the charge Menoeceus gave
Thy towardness, when thou sett’st forth, to keep out of the grave
Our wounded honour. I myself and wise Ulysses were
Within the room, where every word then spoken we did hear,
For we were come to Peleus’ court, as we did mustering pass Through rich Achaea, where thy sire, renown’d Menoeceus, was, Thyself and great Aesicles, when Peleus the king
To thunder-loving Jove did burn an ox for offering,
In his court-yard. A cup of gold, crown’d with red wine, he held On th’ holy incensory pour’d. You, when the ox was fell’d,
Were dressing his divided limbs; we in the portal stood.
Achilles seeing us come so near, his honourable blood
Was stook with a respective shame; rose, took us by the hands, Brought us both in, and made us sit, and used his kind commands
For seemly hospitable rites, which quickly were appos’d.
Then, after needfulness of food, I first of all disclosed
The royal cause of our repair; moved you and your great friend
To consort our renown’d designs; both straight did condescend.
Your fathers knew it, gave content, and grave instruction.
To both your valours. Peleus charg’d his most unequall’d son
To govern his victorious strength, and shine past all the rest In honour, as in mere main force. Then were thy partings blest
With dear advices from thy sire; ‘My loved son,’ said he, ‘Achilles, by his grace of birth, superior is to thee.
And for his force more excellent, yet thou more ripe in years;
Then with sound counsels, age’s fruits, employ his honour’d ears,
Command and overrule his moods; his nature will obey his good assay.
In any charge discreetly given, that doth Thus charged thy sire, which thou forgettest. Yet now at last approve,
With forced reference of these, th’ attraction of his love;
Who knows if sacred influence may bless thy good intent, [his full consent?] And enter with thy gracious words, even to The admonition of a friend is sweet and vehement.
If any oracle he shun, or if his mother-queen Hath brought him some instinct from Jove, that fortifies his spleen, Let him resign command to thee of all his Myrmidons, [our confusions, And yield by that means some repulse to Adorning thee in his bright arms, that his resembled form May haply make thee thought himself, and calm this hostile storm;
That so a little we may ease our overcharged hands, Draw some breath, not expire it all. The foe but faintly stands Beneath his labours; and your charge being fierce, and freshly given, They easily from our tents and fleet may to their walls be driven."
This moved the good Patroclus’ mind; who made his utmost haste T’ inform his friend; and as the fleet of Ithacus he past
(At which their markets were disposed, councils, and martial courts, And where to th’ altars of the Gods they made divine resorts)
He met renown’d Euryppylus, Evemon’s noble son, Haling, his thigh hurt with a shaft, the liquid sweat did run Down from his shoulders and his brows, and from his raging wound Forth flow’d his melancholy blood, yet still his mind was sound.
His sight in kind Patroclus’ breast to sacred pity turn’d,
And (nothing more immortal for true ruth) thus he mourn’d :
"Ah wretched progeny of Greece, princes, dejected kings,
Was it your fates to nourish beasts, and stretch the outcast wings

Of savage vultures here in Troy? Tell me Evemon’s fame, Do yet the Greeks withstand his force, whom yet no force can tame?
Or are they hopeless thrown to death by his resistless lance?"
"Divine Patroclus," he replied, "no more can Greece advance Defensive weapons; but to fleet they head-long must retire;
For those that to this hour have held our fleet from hostile fire,
And are the bulwarks of our host, lie wounded at their tents,
And Troy’s unvanquishable power, still as it toils, augments.
But take me to thy black-stern’d ship, save me, and from my thigh Cut out this arrow; and the blood, that is enorged and dry,
Wash with warm water from the wound; then gentle salves apply,
Which thou know’st best; thy princely friend hath taught thee surgery, Whom, of all Centaurs the most just, Chiron did institute. [prosecute, Thus to thy honourable hands my case I Since our physicians cannot help: Machaon at his tent [and patient; Needs a physician himself, being leech And Podalirius, in the field, the sharp conflict sustains."
Strong Meneetesides replied: "How shall I ease thy pains?
What shall we do, Eurypylus? I am to use all haste, [have past,
To signify to ‘Theis’ son occurscent that At Nestor’s honourable suit. But be that work achieved [ments unrelied."
When this is done, I will not leave thy tort This said, swath his back he cast, beneath his breast, his arm, And nobly help’d him to his tent. His servants, seeing his harm, Dispread ox-hides upon the earth, whereon Machaon lay. [clearly wash’d away Patroclus cut out the sharp shaft, and With lukewarm water the black blood; then ’twixt his hands he bruised A sharp and mitigatory root; which when he had infused Into the green, well-cleansed wound the pains he felt before Were well, and instantly allay’d; the wound did bleed no more.
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Trojans at the trench their powers engage,
Though greeted by a bird of bad presage.
In both parts they strive, their power to scale,
And Prince Sarpedon forcest down the pal.
Great Hector from the ports tears out a stone,
And with so dead a strength he sets it gone
At those broad gates the Grecians made to guard
Their tents and ships, that, broken, and unbarr'd,
They yield way to his power; when all contend
To reach the ships; which all at last ascend.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

My works the Trojans all the grace,
And doth the Grecian fort deface.

PATIOCLUS thus employ'd in cure of hurt
Eurylypus;
Both hosts are all for other wounds doubly contentious;
One all ways labouring to expel, the other to invade.
Nor could the broad dike of the Greeks, nor that strong wall they made
To guard their fleet, be long unraised; because it was not raised
By grave direction of the Gods, nor were their deities praised (When they begun) with hecatombs, that then they might be sure (Their strength being season'd well with heaven's) it should have force t'endure,
And so, the safeguard of their fleet, and all their treasure there, Infallibly had been confirm'd; when, now, their bulwarks were Not only without power of check to their assaulting foe (Even now, as soon as they were built) but apt to overthrow;
Such as, in very little time, shall bury all their sight
And thought that ever they were made.
As long as the despite
Of great Æacides held up, and Hector went not down,
And that by those two means stood safe
King Priam's sacred town,
So long their rampire had some use, though now it gave some way;
But when Troy's best men suffer'd fate, and many Greeks did pay
Dear for their sufferance, then the rest home to their country turn'd.
The tenth year of their wars at Troy, and Troy was sack'd and burn'd.
And then the Gods fell to their fort; then they their powers employ
To ruin their work, and left less of that than they of Troy, Neptune and Phoebus tumbled down, from the Idalian hills,
An inundation of all floods, that thence the broad sea fills
On their huge rampire; in one glut, all these together roar'd, [the adored,
Rhesus, Heptaporus, Rhodius, Scamander
Caressus, Sinois, Grecicus, Æsepus; of them all Apollo open'd the rough mouths, and made their lusty fall
Ravish the dusty champion, where many a helm and shield,
And half-god race of men were strew'd:
and, that all these might yield Full tribute to the heavenly work, Neptune and Phoebus war
Jove to unburthen the black worms of clouds, fill'd by the sun,
And pour them into all their streams, that quickly they might send The huge wall swimming to the sea. Nine days their lights did spend To nights in tempests; and when all their utmost depth had made, Jove, Phoebus, Neptune, all came down, and all in state did wade
To ruin of that impious fort. Great Neptune went before, Wrought with his trident, and the stones, trunks, roots of trees, he tore
Out of the rampire; toss'd them all into the Hellespont, Even all the proud toil of the Greeks, with which they durst confront
The to-be shunned Deities, and not a stone remain'd
Of all their huge foundations, all with the earth were plain'd.
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Which done, again the Gods turn’d back the silver-flowing floods
By that vast channel, through whose vaults they pour’d abroad their broods,
And cover’d all the ample shore again with dusty sand.
And this the end was of that wall, where now so many a hand
Was empliﬁed of stones and darts, contending to invade;
Where clamour spent so high a throat;
And where the fell blows made
The new-built wooden turrets groan.
And here the Greeks were pent,
Tamed with the iron whip of Jove, that terrors vehement Shook over them by Hector’s hand; who was in every thought
The terror-master of the ﬁeld, and like a whirlwind fought,
As fresh as in his morn’s ﬁrst charge, And as a savage boar;
Or lion, hunted long, at last, with hounds
Is compass’d round; they charge him close, and stand
Their hearts, where every dart an iron shower;
His glorious heart yet nought appall’d, and forcing forth his way,
Here overthrows a troop, and there a running ring doth stay Him utter passage; when, again, that stay he overthrows,
And then the whole ﬁeld frees his rage; so Hector wearsies blows,
Runs out his charge upon the fort, and all his force would force
To pass the dike; which, being so deep, they could not get their horse
To venture on, but trample, snore, and on the very brink
To neigh with spirit, yet still stand off; nor would a human think
The passage safe; or, if it were, ’twas less safe for retreat,
The dike being everywhere so deep; and, where ’twas least deep, set With stakes exceeding thick, sharp, strong, that horse could never pass; Much less their chariots after them; yet for the foot there was Some hopeful service, which they wish’d.
Polydamas then spake:
“Hector, and all our friends of Troy, we indiciestly make Offer of passage with our horse; ye see the stakes, the wall, Impossible for horse to take; nor can men ﬁght at all,
The place being strait, and much more apt to let us take our bane Than give the enemy. And yet, if Jove decree the wane
Of Grecian glory utterly, and so bereave their hearts
That we may freely charge them thus, and then will take our parts
I would with all speed wish th’ assault, that ugly shame might shed (Thus far from home) these Grecians’ bloods. But, if they once turn head And singly on us from their fleet, when in so deep a dike our host is like
We shall lie struggling not a man of all
To live and carry back the news. And therefore, be it thus:
Here leave we horse kept by our men, and all on foot let us Hold close together, and attend the grace of Hector’s guide;
And then they shall not bear our charge, nor our conquest shall be dyed
In their lives’ purples.” This advice pleased Hector, for ’twas sound;
Who ﬁrst obey’d it, and full-arm’d betook him to the ground.
And then all left their chariots when he was seen to lead, Rushing about him, and gave up each charioteer and steed
To their directors to be kept, in all proclivity of their event;
There, and on that side of the dike. And thus the rest prepare Their onset: in ﬁve regiments they all their power divide,
Each regiment allow’d three chiefs; of all which even the pride
Served in great Hector’s regiment; for all were set on ﬁre (Their passage beaten through the wall) with hazardous desire That they might once but ﬁght at ﬂeet.
With Hector captains were Polydamas, and Cebriones, who was his charioteer;
But Hector found that place a worse.
Wore Paris, and Alcaeus, Agenor. The command
The third strong phalanx had, was given to The augur Helenus,
Deiphobus, that god-like man, and mighty Even Asius Hyrtacides, that from Arisba rode
The huge bay horse, and had his house where river Sellea’s ﬂow’d.
The twelfth book of Homer's Iliads.

The fourth charge good Æneas led, and with him were combined Archemus, and Acamas, Antenor's dearest kind, And excellent at every fight. The fifth brave company Sarpedon had to charge, who chose, for his command's supply, Asteropoeus great in arms, and Glaucus; for both these Were best of all men but himself; but he was fellowless. Thus fitted with their well-wrought shields, down the steep dike they go, And (thirsty of the wall's assault) believe in overthrow, Not doubting but with headlong falls to tumble down the Greeks

From their black navy. In which trust, all on; and no man seeks To cross Polydamus' advice with any other course, But Asius Hyrtacides, who (proud of his bay horse) Would not forsake them, nor his man, that was their manager, (Fool that he was) but all to fleet; and little knew how near An ill death sat him, and a sure; and that he never more Must look on lofty Ilion; but looks, and all before, Put on th' all-covering mist of fate, that then did hang upon The lance of great Deucalides;* he fatally rush'd on The left hand way, by which the Greeks, with horse and chariot, Came usually from field to fleet; close to the gates he got, Which both unbarr'd and ope he found, that so the easier might An entry be for any friend that was behind in flight; Yet not much easier for a foe, because there was a guard Maintain'd upon it, past his thought; who still put for it hard, Eagerly shouting; and with him were five more friends of name, That would not leave him, though none else would hunt that way for fame (In their free choice) but he himself, Orestes, Iamenes, And Acamas, Asiates, Thoon, Oenomus, Were those that follow'd Asius. Within the gates they found Two eminently valorous, that from the race renown'd Of the right valiant Lapithes derived their high descent; Fierce Leontius was the one, like Mars in detriment.* The other mighty Polypet, the great Pirithous' son. These stood within the lofty gates, and nothing more did shun The charge of Asius and his friends, than two high hill-bred oaks, Well-rooted in the binding earth, obey the airy strokes Of wind and weather, standing firm 'gainst every season's spite. Yet they pour on continued shouts, and bear their shields upright; When in the mean space Polypet and Leontus cheer'd Their soldiers to the fleet's defence. But when the rest had heard The Trojans in attempt to scale, clamour and flight did flow Amongst the Grecians: and then, the rest dismay'd, these two Met Asius entering, thrust him back, and fought before their doors. Nor fared they then like oaks that stood, but as a brace of boars, Couch'd in their own bred hill, that hear a sort of hunters' shout, And hounds in hot trail coming on, then from their dens break out, Traverse their force, and suffer not, in wildness of their way, About them any plant to stand, but thickets offering stay Break through, and rend up by the roots, what gnashes into air, Which tumult fills with shouts, hounds, horns, and all the hot affair Beats at their bosoms; so their arms ring with assailing blows, And so they stirr'd them in repulse, right well assured that those Who were within, and on the wall, would add their parts, who knew They now fought for their tents, fleet, lives, and fame, and therefore threw Stones from the walls and towers, as thick as when a drift wind shakes Black clouds in pieces, and plucks snow, in great and plumy flakes

* Such maketh Virgil Pandarus and Bivias.
From their soft bosoms, till the ground be wholly clothed in white;
So earth was hid with stones and darts, darts from the Trojan fight, Stones from the Greeks; that on the helms and bosy Trojan shields Kept such a rapping, it amazed great Asius, who now yielded, Sighs, beats his thighs, and in a rage his fault to Jove applies:
"O Jove," said he, "now clear thou showest thou art a friend to lies, Pretending, in the flight of Greece, the making of it good,
To all their ruins, which I thought could never be withstood;
Yet they, as yellow wasps, or bees (that having made their nest Th'gaping cranny of a hill) when for a hunter's feast, Hunters come hot and hungry in, and dig for honeycombs,
They fly upon them, strike and sting, and from their hollow homes
Will not be beaten, but defend their labour's fruit, and brood;
No more will these be from their port, but either lose their blood (Although but two against all us) or be our prisoners make.
All this, to do his action grace, could not firm Jove persuade,
Who for the general counsel stood, and, 'gainst his singular brave, Bestow'd on Hector that day's fame. Yet he and these behave Themselves thus nobly at this port; but how at other ports,
And all along the stony wall, sole force, 'gainst force and forts,
Raged in contention 'twixt both hosts, it was no easy thing,
Had I the bosom of a God, to tune to life and sing.
The Trojans fought not of themselves, a fire from heaven was thrown That ran amongst them, through the wall, mere added to their doom.
The Greeks held not their own; weak grief went with her witter'd hand,
And dipp'd it deep in their spirits; since they could not command
Their forces to abide the field, whom harsh necessity.
(To save those ships should bring them home) and their good forts' supply,

Drave to th' expulsive fight they made; and this might stoop them more Than need itself could elevate; for even Gods did deplore
Their dire estates, and all the Gods that were their aids in war,
Who, though they could not clear their clients, yet were their friends thus far.
Still to uphold the better sort; for then did Polypæt pass
A lance at Damascus, whose helm was made with cheeks of brass, Yet had not proof enough, the pile drove through it and his skull,
His brain in blood drows'd, and the man, so late so spiritual,
Fell now quite spiritless to earth. So emptied he the veins
Of Pylus, and Ormenus' lives. And then Leontæus gains
The life's end of Hipponæus, Antimachus his son; [his end begun His lance fell at his girdle-stead, and with another end. Leontæus left him, and through the prease (His keen sword drawn) ran desperately upon Antipætes, And lifeless tumbled him to earth. Nor could all these lives quench His fiery spirit, that his flame in Menon's blood did drench, And raged up even to Iamen's, and young Orestes' life; All hearp'd together made their peace in that red field of strife.
Whose fair arms while the victors spoil'd, the youth of Ilion (Of which there served the most and best) still boldly built upon The wisdom of Polydamas, and Hector's matchless strength,
And follow'd, fill'd with wondrous spirit, with wish and hope at length.
The Greeks' wall won, to fire their fleet. But, having pass'd the dike,
And willing now to pass the wall, this prodigy did strike
Their hearts with some deliberate stay: a high-flew eagle soar'd
On their troops' left hand, and sustain'd a dragon, all engorged,
In her strong seres, of wondrous size, and yet had no such cheek
In life and spirit but still she fought; and turning back her neck
So stung the eagle's gorge, that down she cast her fervent prey Amongst the multitude; and took upon the winds her way,
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Crying with anguish. When they saw a branded serpent sprawl
So full amongst them from above, and They took it an extant from him, stood Polydamas thought just, and spake :
"Hector, you know, applause
Of honour hath been far from me; nor Or in affairs of court, a man employ'd in To blanch things further than their truth,
And therefore for that simple course your
To me in councils ; yet again, what shows
I must discover. Let us again, and make
For this day's honour, and not now attempt For this, I fear, will be th' event, the So full with our affair in hand. As this Upon the left wing of our host, implying our control, Hover'd above us, and did truss within her golden seres
A serpent so embrued and big, which yet, Kept life and fervent spirit to fight, and Nor did the eagle's lyric feed; so though we thus far prease
Upon the Grecians, and perhaps may overrun their wall,
Our high minds aiming at their fleet, and that we much appall
Their trussed spirits; yet are they so serpent-like disposed That they will fight, though in our seres, and will at length be lost
With all our outeries, and the life of many a Trojan breast [our nest Shall with the eagle fly, before we carry to Them, or their navy." Thus expounds the augur this ostent, Whose depth he knows, and these should fear. Hector, with countenance bent, Thus answer'd him : "Polydamas, your depth in augury
I like not, and know passing well thou dost not satisfy Thyself in this opinion; or if thou think'st it true, Thy thoughts the Gods blind; to advise, and urge that as our due,
That breaks our duties; and to Jove, whose vow and sign to me
Is pass'd directly for our speed; yet light-wing'd birds must be,
By thy advice, our oracles, whose feathers little stay
My serious actions. What care I, if this, or 'tis other, way Their wild wings sway them; if the right, on which the sun doth rise,
Or, to the left hand, where he sets? 'Tis Jove's high counsel flies
With those wings that shall bear up us; Jove's, that both earth and heaven, Both men and Gods, sustains and rules. One augury is given To order all men, best of all: Fight for thy country's right.
But why fear'st thou our further charge? For though the dangerous fight Straw all men here about the fleet, yet thou need'st never fear
To bear their fates; thy wary heart will never trust thee where An enemy's look is; and yet fight, for, if thou darest abstain,
Or whisper into any ear an abstinence so vain
As thou advisest, never fear that any foe shall take Thy life from thee, for 'tis this lance." This said, all forwards make, Himself the first; yet before him exulting clamour flew,
And thunder-loving Jupiter from lofty Ida
A storm that ushers their assault, and made them charge like him.
It drive directly on the fleet a dust so fierce and dim
That it amazed the Grecians, but was a grace divine
To Hector and his following troops, who wholly did incline
To him, being now in grace with Jove, and so put boldly on To raise the rampire; in whose height they fiercely set upon
The parapets, and pull'd them down, razed every foremost flight,
And all the buttresses of stone, that held their towers upright,
They tore away with crows of iron, and hoped to ruin all.
The Greeks yet stood, and still repair'd the fore-fights of their wall
With hides of oxen, and from thence, they pour'd down stones in showers Upon the underminers' heads. Within the foremost towers

THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Both the Ajaees had command, who answer'd every part,
Th' assaulters, and their soldiers, repress'd, and put in heart;
Repairing valour as their wall; spake some fair, some reproved, Whoever made not good his place; and thus they all sorts moved:
"O countrymen, now need in aid would have excess be spent, [excellent,
The excellent must be admired, the meanest
The worst do well. In changing war all should not be alike, Nor any idle; which to know fits all, lest Hector strike
Your minds with frights, as ears with threats. Forward be all your hands, Urge one another. This doubt down, that now betwixt us stands, Jove will go with us to their walls." To this effect aloud Spake both the princes; and as high, with this, th' expulsion flow'd.
And as in winter time, when Jove his cold sharp javelins throws Amongst us mortals; and is moved to white
With his snows;
The winds asleep, he freely pours, till highest prominents,
Hill tops, low meadows, and the fields
That crown with most contents
The toils of men, seaports, and shores, are hid, and every place,
But floods, that snow's fair tender flakes, as their own brood, embrace;
So both sides cover'd earth with stones, so both for life contend,
To show their sharpness; through the wall
Uprear stood up an end.
Nor had great Hector and his friends the rampire overrun,
If heaven's great Counsellor, high Jove, had not inflamed his son Sarpedon (like the forest's king when he on oxen flies)
Against the Grecians; his round targe he to his arm applies, Brass-leaved without, and all within thick
Ox hides quilted hard,
The verge nail'd round with rods of gold;
and, with two darts prepared,
He leads his people. As ye see a mountain Lion fare,
Long kept from prey, in foreing which, his high mind makes him dare Assault upon the whole full fold, though guarded never so
With well-arm'd men, and eager dogs; away he will not go,

But venture on, and either snatch a prey,
or be a prey;
So far adivine Sarpedon's mind, resolved to force his way Through all the fore-fights, and the wall; yet since he did not see (mind as he, Others as great as he in name, as great in He* spake to Glauceus: "Glaucus, say,
why are we honour'd more Than other men of Lycia, in place; with greater store Of meats and cups; with goodlier roofs;
delightsome gardens; walks;
More lands and better; so much wealth, that court and country talks
Of us and our possessions, and every way we go:
Gaze on us as we were their Gods? This where we dwell is so;
The shores of Xanthus ring of this; and shall we not exceed As much in merit as in noise? Come, be we great in deed
As well as look; shine not in gold, but in the flames of fight;
That so our next-armed Lycians may say;
'See, these are right
Our kings, our rulers; these deserve to eat and drink the best;
These govern not ingloriously; these, thus exceed the rest,
Do more than they command to do, O friend, if keeping back
Would keep back age from us, and death, and that we might not wrack
In this life's human sea at all, but that deerring now
We shun'd death ever, nor would I half this vain valour show Nor glorify a folly so, to wish thee to advance;
But since we must go, though not here;
and that, besides the chance
Proposed now, there are infinite fates of other sorts in death,
Which, neither to be fled nor scaped, a man must sink beneath;
Come, try we, if this sort be ours, and either render thus Glory to others, or make them resign the like to us."
This motion Glaucus shifted not, but without words obey'd.
Foreright went both, a mighty troop of Lycians followed.

* Sarpedon's speech to Glaucus, neither equalled by any (in this kind) of all that have written.
Which by Menestheus observed, his hair stood up on end,
For, at the tower where he had charge, he saw calamity bend Her horrid brows in their approach. He threw his looks about
The whole fights near, to see what chief might help the misery out Of his poor soldiers, and beheld where both th’ Ajaces fought,
And Teucer newly come from fleet; whom it would profit nought
To call, since tumult on their helms, shields, and upon the ports,
Laid such loud claps; for every way, de-defences of all sorts Were adding, as Troy took away; and clamour flew so high Her wings strook heaven, and drown’d all voice; the two dukes yet so nigh,
And at the offer of assault, he to th’ Ajaces sent Thoos the herald with this charge: “Run to the regiment
Of both th’ Ajaces, and call both, for both were better here, Since here will slaughter, instantly, be more enforced than there.
The Lycian captains this way make, who in the fights of stand Have often show’d much excellence: yet if laborious hand
Be there more needful than I hope, at least afford us some;
Let Ajax Telemonius and th’ archer Teucer
come.”
The herald hasted and arrived; and both th’ Ajaces told,
That Petesus’ noble son desired their little labour would Employ himself in succouring him. Both their supplies were best, Since death assail’d his quarter most; for th’ it fiercely press’d
The well-proved mighty Lycian chiefs. Yet if the service there Allow’d not both, he pray’d that one part of his charge would bear,
And that was Ajax Telemon, with whom he wish’d would come. [his room
The archer Teucer. Telemon left instantly
To strong Lycomedes, and will’d Ajax Oiliades
With him to make up his supply, and fill with courage
The Grecian hearts till his return; which should be instantly
When he had well relieved his friend.
With this the company

Of Teucer he took to his aid; Teucer, that did descend
(As Ajax did) from Telamon. With these two did attend Pandion, that bore Teucer’s bow. When to Menestheus’ tower
They came, amongst the wall, they found him, and his hearten’d power, Toiling in making strong their fort. The Lycian princes set Black whirlwind-like, with both their powers, upon the parapet.
Ajax, and all, resisted them. Clamour amongst them rose.
The slaughter Ajax led; who first the last dear sight did close Of strong Epicles, that was friend to Jove’s great Lycian son. [marble stone
Amongst the high munition heap, a mighty Lay highest, near the pinnacle, a stone of such a paise
That one of this time’s strongest men with both hands could not raise,
Yet this did Ajax rouse and throw, and all in sherds did drive
Epicles’ four-topp’d casque and skull; who (as ye see one dive In some deep river) left his height; life left his bones withal.
Teucer shot Glaucus, rushing up yet higher on the wall, Where naked he discern’d his arm, and made him steal retreat From that hot service, lest some Greck, with an insulting threat, Beholding it, might fright the rest. Sarpedon much was grieved
At Glaucus’ parting, yet fought on, and his great heart relieved
A little with Alcmæon’s blood, surnamed Thestorides,
Whose life he hurt’d out with his lance;
which following through the press,
He drew from him. Down from the tower
Alcmæon dead it strook;
His fair arms ringing out his death. Then fierce Sarpedon took
In his strong hand the battlement, and down he tore it quite,
The wall strip’d naked, and broad way for entry and full fight
He made the many. Against him Ajax and Teucer made;
Teucer the rich belt on his breast did with a shaft invade;
But Jupiter avenged death, who would not see his son
Die at the tails of th’ Achei’s ships. Ajax did fetch his run,
THE ARGUMENT.

NEPTUNE [in pity of the Greeks' hard plight]
Like Calchas, both th' Ajaces doth excite,
And others: to repel the charging foe.
Idomeneus bravely doth bestow
His kingly forces, and doth sacrifice
Oblivions to the Destinies,
With divers other. Fair Deiphobus,
And his prophetic brother Helenus,
Are wounded. But the great P ri amides,
Gathering his forces, heartens their address
Against the enemy; and then the field:
A mighty death on either side doth yield.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
The Greeks, with Troy's bold power diamay'd,
Are cheer'd by Neptune's secret aid.

Jove helping Hector, and his host, thus close to th' Achive fleet,
He let them then their own strengths try,
And season there their sweet
With ceaseless toils and grievances. For now he turn'd his face, Look'd down, and view'd the far-off land
Of well-rode men in Thrace,
Of the renown'd milk-nourish'd men, the Hippomeniagins,
Long-lived, most just, and innocent; and close-fought Mystians:
Nor turn'd he any more to Troy his ever-shining eyes,
[the Deities,
Because he thought not any one, of all
When his care left th' indifferent field,
Would aid on either side.
But this security in Jove the great Sea-Rector spied,
Who sat aloft on th' utmost top of shady Samotheace,
And view'd the fight. His chosen seat stood in so brave a place.
That Priam's city, th' Achive ships, all Ida, don appeared [therefore seated there.
To his full view; who from the seas
He took much ruth to see the Greeks by Troy sustain such ill,
And, mightily incensed with Jove, stoop'd straight from that steep hill, That shook as he flew off, so hard his parting press'd the height.
The woods, and all the great hills near, trembled beneath the weight

Of his immortal moving feet. Three steps he only took,
Before he far-off Aegae reach'd; but, with the fourth, it shook With his dread entry. In the depth of those seas he did hold His bright and glorious palace, built of never-rusting gold;
And there arrived, he put in coach his branched-footed steeds,
All golden-maneed, and paced with wings;
and in golden weeds
He clothed himself. The golden scourge, most elegantly done,
He took, and mounted to his seat; and then the God begun
To drive his chariot through the waves.
From whirlpits every way
The whales exulted under him, and knew
Their king; the sea
For joy did open; and, his horse so swift
And lightly flew,
The under axletree of brass no drop of water drew.
And thus these deathless coursers brought their king to th' Achive ships.
Twixt th' timber cliffs and Tenedos, a certain cavern creeps
Into the deep sea's gully breast, and there
th' Earth-shaker stay'd
His forward steeds, took from them coarch,
And heavenly fodder laid In reach before them; their brass hooves he girt with gyves of gold,
Not to be broken, nor dissolved, to make them firmly hold
A fit attendance on their king; who went to th' Achive host,
Which, like to tempests or wild flames, the clustering Trojans toss'd Insatiably valorous, in Hector's like command,
High sounding, and resounding shouts;
for hope cheer'd every hand
To make the Greek fleet now their prize, and all the Greeks destroy.
But Neptune, circler of the earth, with fresh heart did employ The Grecian hands. In strength of voice and body he did take Calchas' resemblance, and, of all, th'
Ajaces first bespoke,
Who of themselves were free enough;

"Ajax, you alone
Sustain the common good of Greece, in
The memory of fortitude, and flying Shameful flight.
Elsewhere the desperate hands of Troy
Could give me no affright.
The brave Greeks have withstood their Worst; but this our mighty wall
Being thus transcended by their power,
Grave fear doth much appal
My careful spirits, lest we feel some fatal Mischief here;
Where Hector, raging like a flame, doth
In his charge appear,
And boasts himself the best God's son.
Be you conceited so,
And fire so, more than human spirits, that God may seem to do
In your deeds, and, with such thoughts
Cheer'd, others to such exhort,
And such resistance; these great minds
Will in as great a sort Strengthen your bodies, and force check to All great Hector's charge,
Though ne'er so spirit-like; and though Jove still (past himself) enlarge
His sacred actions. Thus he touch'd,
With his fork'd sceptre's point,
The breasts of both; fill'd both their Spirits, and made up every joint With power responsive; when, hawk-like,
Swift, and set sharp to fly,
That fiercely stooping from a rock, inac-CESSible and high,
Cuts through a field, and sets a fowl (not Ever putting up)
Hard, and gets ground still; Neptune so
Left these two, either's mind Beyond themselves raised. Of both which,
Oileus first discern'd.
The masking Deity, and said: "Ajax, some God hath warn'd
Our powers to fight, and save our fleet.
He put on him the hue
Of th' augur Calchas. By his pace, in Leaving us, I knew, Without fall question, twas a God; the Gods are easily known;
And in my tender breast I feel a greater Spirit blown,
To execute affairs of fight; I find my Hands so free [feather'd under me]."
To all high motion; and my feet seem This Telamonius thus received: "So, to My thoughts, my hands
Burn with desire to toss my lance; each Foot beneath me stands

Bare on bright fire, to use his speed; my Heart is raised so high
That to encounter Hector's self, I long Insatiable.
While these thus talk'd, as overjoy'd
With study for the fight,
(Which God had stirr'd up in their spirits)
The same God did excite
The Greeks that were behind at fleet, re-Freshing their free hearts
And joints, being even dissolved with toil;
And (seeing the desperate parts Play'd by the Trojans past their wall) grief Strook them, and their eyes
Sweat tears from under their sad lids;
Their instant destinies Never supposing they could escape. But Neptune, stepping in,
With ease stirr'd up the able troops, and Did at first begin
With Teucer, and Penelus, th' hero
Leitus,
Deipyrus, Meriones, and young Antilo-
All expert in the deeds of arms; "O Youths of Greece," said he,
"What change is this? In your brave Fight, I only look'd to see Our fleet's whole safety; and, if you Neglect the harmful field,
Now shines the day when Greece to Troy
Must all her honours yield.
O grief! so great a miracle, and horrible to sight,
As now I see, I never thought could have Profaned the light.
The Trojans brave us at our ships, that Have been heretofore
Like faint and fearful deer in woods, dis-Tracted evermore
With every sound, and yet escape not, but Prove the torn-up fare
Of lynxes, wolves, and leopards, as never Born to war.
Nor durst these Trojans at first siege, in Any least degree,
Expect your strength; or stand one shock
Of Grecian chivalry,
Yet now, far from their walls, they dare
Fight at our fleet maintain,
All by our General's cowardice, that doth Infect his men
Who, still at odds with him, for that will Needs themselves neglect.
And suffer slaughter in their ships. Suppose
There was defect
(Beyond all question) in our king, to wrong Aeacides,
And he, for his particular wnek, from all Assistance cease.
THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

We must not cease t’ assist ourselves.
Forgive our General then,
And quickly too. Apt to forgive are all good-minded men.
Yet you, quite void of their good minds, give good, in you quite lost,
For ill in others, though ye be the worthiest of your host.
As old as I am, I would scorn, to fight with one that flies,
Or leaves the fight as you do now. The General slothful lies,
And you, though slothful too, maintain with him a fight of spleen.
Out, out, I hate ye from my heart; ye rotten-minded men.
In this ye add an ill that’s worse than all your sloth’s dislikes. [sion strikes,
But as I know to all your hearts my repres-So thither let just shame strike too; for while you stand still here a mighty flight swarms at your fleet, great Hector rage there,
Hath burst the long bar and the gates.”
Thus Neptune roused these men.
And round about th’ Ajaces did their phalanxes maintain Their station firm; whom Mars himself, had he amongst them gone,
Could not disparage; nor Jove’s Maid that sets men fiercer on:
For now the best were chosen out, and they received th’ advance
Of Hector and his men so full, that lane was lined with lance, Shields thickened with opposed shields, targets to targets nailed,
Helms stuck to helms, and man to man grew, they so close assault’d, Plumed casques were hang’d in either’s plumes, all join’d so close their stands, Their lances stood, thrust out so thick by such all-daring hands,
All bent their firm breasts to the point, and made sad fight their joy
Of both. Troy all in heaps strook first, and Hector first of Troy.
And as a round piece of a rock, which with a winter’s flood
Is from his top torn; when a shower, pour’d from a barren cloud, Hath broke the natural bond it held within the rough steep rock;
And, jumping, it flies down the woods, resounding every shock,
And on, unchecked, it headlong leaps, till in a plain it stay,
And then, though never so impell’d, it stirs not any way.

So Hector, hereto throsted threats, to go to sea in blood,
And reach the Greelan ships and tents, without being once withstand.
But when he fell into the strengths the Grecians did maintain,
And that they fought upon the square, he stood as fitter’d then;
And to the adverse sons of Greece laid on with swords and darts, Whose both ends hurt, that they repell’d his worst; and he converts His threats, by all means, to retreats; yet made as he retired, Only I encourage those behind; and thus those men inspired:
Troyans! Dardanians! Lyceans! All warlike friends, stand close;
The Greeks can never bear me long, though tower-like they oppose.
This lance, be sure, will be their spoil; if even the best of Gods, High thundering Juno’s husband, stirs my spirit with true abodes.”
With this all strengths and minds he moved; but young Deiphobus, Old Priam’s son, amongst them all was chiefly virtuous.
He bore before him his round shield, tripp’d lightly through the prease, at all parts cover’d with his shield; and him Meriones Charged with a glittering dart, that took his bull-bide orbly shield, Yet pierced it not, but in the top itself did piecemeal yield.
Deiphobus thrust forth his targe, and fear’d the broken ends
Of strong Meriones his lance, who now turn’d to his friends;
The great hero scorn’d much by such a chance to part
With lance and conquest, forth he went to fetch another dart, Left at his tent. The rest fought on, the clamour heighten’d there Was most unmeasured. Teucer first did shew the massacre,
And slew a goodly man at arms, the soldier Imbrius, [at Pedasus
The son of Mentor, rich in horse; he dwelt Before the sons of Greece sieged Troy from whence he married Medesimaste, one that sprung of Priam’s bastard-bed.
But when the Greek ships, double-ear’d, arrived at Ilios,
To Ilios he return’d, and proved beyond comparison
Amongst the Trojans; he was lodged with Priam, who held dear
His natural sons no more than him; yet him, beneath the car,
The son of Telamon attain’d, and drew his lance. He fell, As when an ash on some hill’s top (itself topp’d wondrous well)
The steed hews down, and he presents his young leaves to the soil;
So fell he, and his fair arms groan’d, which Teucer long’d to spoil,
And in he ran; and Hector in, who sent a shining lance
At Teucer, who, beholding it, slipp’d by, and gave it chance
On Actor’s son, Amphilochus, whose breast it stook; and in [intent to win Flew Hector, at his sounding fall, with full
The tempting helmet from his head; but Ajax with a dart
Reach’d Hector at his rushing in, yet touch’d not any part About his body: it was hid quite through with horrid brass;
The boss yet of his targe it took, whose firm stuff stay’d the pass,
And he turn’d safe from both the trunks;
both which the Grecians bore
From off the field. Amphilochus Menestheus did restore,
And Suchis, to th’ Achaian strength.
Th’ Ajaces (that were pleased Still meet with most hot services) on Trojan Imbrius seized.
And as from sharply-bitten hounds, a brace of lions force
A new-slain goat, and through the woods bear in their jaws the corse Aloft, lift up into the air; so, up into the skies,
Bore both th’ Ajaces Imbrius, and made his arms their prise;
Yet, not content, Oilliades, enraged to see their deed
His much-beloved Amphilochus, he hew’d off Imbrius’ head;
Which, swinging round, bowl-like he toss’d amongst the Trojan press,
And full at Hector’s feet it fell. Amphilochus’ decease, Being nephew to the God of waves, much vex’d the Deity’s mind,
And to the ships and tents be march’d, yet more to make inclined The Grecians to the Trojan bane. In hastening to which end, Idomeneus met with him, returning from a friend,
Whose ham late hurt, his men brought off;
and having given command
To his physicians for his cure, much fired

Neptune encounter’d, and but thus his forward spirit moved:
"Idomeneus, prince of Crete! O whither now are fled Those threats in thee, with which the rest the Trojans menaced?"
"O Thoas," he replied, "no one of all

And, (fear disanimating none) all do our Nor can our barns accuse our sloth, not

That, far from home, in hostile fields, and with inglorious fate,
Some Greeks should perish. But do thou,
O Thoas, that of late Hast proved a soldier, and wast wont, where thou hast sloth beheld, To chide it, and exhort to pains, now hate to be repell’d,
And set on all men." He replied, "I would to heaven, that he,
Whoe’er this day doth abstain from battle

May never turn his face from Troy, but

That virtue co-augmented thrives in men of
But we have singly match’d the great."
This said, the God again,
With all his conflicts, visited the venturous fight of men.
The king turn’d to his tent; rich arms put on his breast, and took Two darts in hand, and forth he flew. His haste on made him look Much like a fiery meteor, with which Jove’s

THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Abodes that ever run before tempest and plagues to men;
So, in his swift pace, shaw'd his arms. He was encounter'd then
By his good friend Meriones yet near his tent; to whom Thus spake the power of Idomeneus: "What reason makes thee come, Thou son of Molus, my most loved, thus leaving fight alone?
Isn't for some wound? The javelin's head, still sticking in the bone, Desirest thou case of? Bring'st thou news?
or what is it that brings Thy presence hither? Be assured, my spirit needs no stings
To this hot conflict. Of myself thou seest
I come, and loth,
For any tent's love, to deserve the hateful taint of sloth."
He answer'd: Only for a dart, he that retreat did make,
(Were any left him at his tent) for, that he had, he brake
On proud Deiphobus his shield. "Is one dart all?" said he,
"Take one and twenty, if thou like, for in my tent they be;
They stand there shining by the walls. I took them as my prise
From those false Trojans I have slain.
And this is not the guise
Of one that loves his tent, or fights afar off with his foe;
But since I love fight, therefore doth my martial star bestow, Besides those darts, helms, targets boss'd, and corsets bright as day.
"So I," said Merion, "at my tent, and sable bark, may say,
I many Trojan spoils retain, but now not near they be.
To serve me for my present use; and therefore ask I thee.
Not that I lack a fortitude to store me with my own;
[men renown,
For ever in the foremost fights, that render I fight, when any fight doth stir. And this perhaps may well Be bid to others, but thou know'st, and I to thee appeal."
"I know," replied the king, "how much thou weigh'st in every worth, What need'st thou therefore utter this? If we should now choose forth
The worthiest men for ambuscades, in all our fleet and host, (For ambuscades are services that try men's virtues most.
Since there the fearful and the firm will, as they are, appear,
The fearful altering still his hue, and rests not anywhere,
Nor is his spirit capable of th' ambush constancy,
But riseth, changeth still his place, and croucheth curiously.
On his bent haunches; half his height scarce seen above the ground, For fear to be seen, yet must see; his heart, with many a bound, Offering to leap out of his breast, and,
ever fearing death,
The coldness of it makes him gnash, and half shakes out his teeth; Where men of valour neither fear, nor ever change their looks,
From lodging th' ambush till it rise; but,
since there must be strokes, Wish to be quickly in their midst) thy strength and hand in these Who should reprove? For if, far off, or fighting in the praece, Thou shouldst be wounded, I am sure the dart that gave the wound Should not be drawn out of thy back, or make thy neck the ground;
But meet thy belly, or thy breast, in thrusting further yet
When thou art furthest, till the first, and before him, thou get.
But on; like children let not us stand bragging thus, but do;
Lest some hear, and past measure chide, that we stand still and woo.
Go, choose a better dart, and make Mars yield a better chance."
This said, Mars-swift Meriones, with haste, a brazen lance Took from his tent, and overtook, most careful of the wars, [ha]rmful Mars, Idomeneus. And such two, in field, as
And Terror, his beloved son, that without terror fights,
And is of such strength that in war the frighter he affrights.
When, out of Thrace, they both take arms against th' Ephyran bands, Or 'gainst the great-souled Phlegians, nor favour their own hands, But give the grace to others still. In such sort to the fight, March'd these two managers of men, in armours full of light.
And first spake Merion: "Oa which part, son of Deucalion, Serves thy mind to invade the fight? Is't best to set upon
The Trojans in our battle’s aid, the right or left-hand wing,
For all parts I suppose employ’d? To this the Cretan king Thus answer’d: "In our navy’s midst are others that assist;
The two Ajaxes; Teucer too, with shafts the exprest;
Of all the Grecians, and, though small, is great in fights of stand;
And these (though huge he be of strength) will serve to fill the hand
Of Hector’s self, that Priamist, that studier for blows.
It shall be call’d a deed of height for him (even suffering threos For knocks still) to outlabour them, and, bettering their tough hands, Enflame our feet. If Jove himself cast not his firebrand
Amongst our navy, that affair no man can bring to field. [yield Great Ajax Telamonius to none alive will That yields to death, and whose life takes Ceres’ nutritions,
That can be cut with any iron, or push’d with mighty stones;
Not to Αæacides himself he yields for combats set, Though clear he must give place for pace and free swing of his feet.
Since then, the battle (being our place of most care) is made good
By his high valour, let our aid see all powers be withstanded
That charge the left wing, and to that let us direct our course, Where quickly feel we this hot foe, or make him feel our force." This order’d, swift Meriones went, and forewent his king,
Till both arrived where one enjoin’d. When, in the Greeks’ left wing,
The Trojans saw the Cretan king, like fire in fortitude;
And his attendant, in bright arms so gloriously induced,
Both cheering the sinister troops: all at the king address’d,
And so the skirmish at their sterns on both parts were increased,
That, as from hollow bustling winds engender’d storms arise,
When dust doth chiefly clog the ways which up into the skies
The wanton tempest ravisheth, begetting night of day;
So came together both the foes, both lusted to assay,
And work with quick steel either’s death.
Man’s fierce corrupress, Fight,
Set up her bristles in the field with lances long and light,
Which thick fell foul on either’s face. The splendour of the steel,
In new-scout’sd curts, radiant casques, and burnish’d shields, did see Th’ assailer’s eyes up. He sustain’d a huge spirit, that was glad To see that labour, or in soul that stood not stricken sad.
Thus these two disdaining Gods, old Saturn’s mighty sons, [pressions, Afflicted these heroic men with huge op-Jove honouring Αæacides (to let the Greeks still try Their want without him) would bestow,
Yet still the victory
On Hector, and the Trojan power; yet for Αæacides, And honour of his mother-queen, great Goddess of the seas,
He would not let proud Ilion see the Grecians quite destroy’d,
And therefore from the hoary deep he suffer’d so employ’d Great Neptune in the Grecian aid; who grieved for them, and storm’d Extremely at his brother Jove. Yet both one Goddess form’d, And one soil bred, but Jupiter precedence took in birth,
And had more knowledge:* for which cause, the other came not forth
Of his wet kingdom, but with care of not being seen t’ excite
The Grecian host, and like a man appear’d, and made the fight.
So these Gods made men’s valours great, but equal’d them with war
As harmful as their hearts were good; and stretch’d those chains as far
On both sides as their limbs could bear, in which they were involved Past breach, or loosing, that their knees might therefore be dissolved.

* The empire of Jove exceed’d Neptune’s (saith Plut. upon this place) because he was more ancient, and excellent in knowledge and wisdom: and upon this verse, viz. Αντ Ζεύς σπέρματος, &c. sets down this his most worthy to be noted opinion: viz. I think also that the blessedness of eternal life, which God enjoys is this: that by any past time he forgets not notions presently apprehended: for otherwise, the knowledge and understanding of things taken away, immortality should not be life, but time, &c. (Plut. de Iside et Osiride.)

Of Æyctes, son-in-law to prince Æneas' sire, Hippodamia marrying; who most enflamed the fire
Of her dear parents' love, and took precedence in her birth
Of all their daughters, and as much exceeded in her worth (For beauty answer'd with her mind, and both with housewifery)
All the fair beauty of young damsels that used her company,
And therefore, being the worthiest dame, the worthiest man did wed
Of ample Troy. Him Neptune stoop'd beneath the royal force
Of Idomen, his sparkling eyes deluding, and the course Of his illustrious lineaments so out of nature bound,
That back nor forward he could stir, but, as he grew to ground,
Stood like a pillar, or high tree, and neither moved, nor feared;
When straight the royal Cretan's dart in his mid breast appear'd,
It brake the curets, that were proof to every other dart,
Yet now they cleft and ran; the lance stuck shaking in his heart;
His heart with panting made it shake; but Mars did now remit
The greatness of it, and the king, now quitting the brag fit Of glory in Deiphbus, thus terribly exclaim'd: [are evenly famed, "Deiphbus, now may we think that we
That three for one have sent to Dis. But come, change blows with me, Thy vaunts for him thou slew'st were vain.
Come, wretch, that thou may'st see What issue Jove hath. Jove begot Minos, the strength of Crete; [beget
Minos begot Deucalion; Deucalion did Me Idomen, now Cretan's king, that here my ships have brought
To bring thyself, thy father, friends, all Ilion's pomp, to nought." Deiphbus at two ways stood, in doubt to call some one, [chance alone.
With some retreat, to be his aid, or try the
At last, the first seem'd best to him, and back he went to call Achilles' son to friend, who stood in troop the last of all,
Where still he served; which made him still incense against the king,
That, being amongst his best their peer, he graced not anything

His wrong'd deserts. Deiphbus spake to him, standing near:
"Æneas, prince of Trojans, if any touch appear
Of glory in thee, thou must now assist thy sister's lord,
And one that to thy tenderest youth did careful guard afford,
Alcathous, whom Creta's king hath chiefly slain to thee,
His right most challenging thy hand. Come, therefore, follow me."
This much excited his good mind, and set his heart on fire Against the Cretan, who child-like dissolved not in his ire,
But stood him firm. As when in hills a strength-Reliing boar, Alone, and hearing hunters come, whom tumult flies before,
Up-thrusts his bristles, whets his tusks, sets fire on his red eyes,
And in his brave-prepared repulse doth dogs and men despise;
So stood the famous-for-his-lance, nor shunn'd the coming charge That resolute Æneas brought. Yet, since the odds was large,
He call'd with good right to his aid war-skill'd Ascalaphus, Aphareus, Meriones, the strong Deipyrus,
And Nestor's honourable son: "Come near, my friends," said he,
"And add your aids to me alone. Fear taints me worthily, Though firm I stand, and show it not. Æneas great in fight,
And one that bears youth in his flower, that bears the greatest might, Comes on with aim direct at me. Had I his youthful limb
To bear my mind, he should yield fame, or I would yield it him."
This said, all held, in many souls, one ready helpful mind, Clapp'd shields and shoulders, and stood close. Æneas, not inclined With more presumption than the king, call'd aid as well as he:
Divine Agenor; Helen's love who follow'd instantly,
And all their forces following them; as, after bell-wethers
The whole flocks follow to their drink which sight the shepherd cheers.
Nor was Æneas joy less moved to see such troops attend
His honour'd person; and all these fought close about his friend;
But two of them, past all the rest, had strong desire to shed
The blood of either; Idomen, and Cythear's seed.
Æneas first bestowed his lance, which far other seeing shunn'd,
And that, thrown from an idle hand, stuck trembling in the ground.
But Idomen's, discharged at him, had no such vain success.
Which Æneas' entrails found, in which it did impress
His sharp pike to his fall; his palms tore his returning earth.
Idomeneus straight stepp'd in, and pluck'd his javelin forth,
But could not spoil his goodly arms, they press'd him so with darts.
And now the long toil of the fight had spent his vigorous parts,
And made him less apt to avoid the foe that should advance,
Or, when himself advanced again, to run and fetch his lance,
And therefore in stiff fights of stand he spent the cruel day.
When, coming softly from the slain, Deiphobus gave way
To his bright javelin at the king, whom he could never brook;
But then he lost his envy too. His lance yet deadly took Aesculapius, the son of Mars; quite through his shoulder flew,
The violent head, and down he fell. Nor yet by all means knew Wide-throated Mars his son was fall'n, but in Olympus' top Sat copied with golden clouds; Jove's counsel had shut up Both him and all the other Gods from that time's equal task.
Which now, about Aesculapius, strive set.
His shining casque
Deiphobus had forced from him, but instantly leap'd in [long javelin, Mars-swift Meriones, and strook, with his
The right arm of Deiphobus, which made his hand let fall
The sharp-topp'd helmet; the press'd earth resounding therewithal.
When, vulture-like, Meriones rush'd in again and drew,
From out the low part of his arm his javelin, and then flew Back to his friends. Deiphobus, faint with the blood's excess Fall'n from his wound, was carefully convey'd out of the press
By his kind brother by both sides, Polites, till they got
His horse and chariot that were still set fit for his retreat,
And bore him now to Ilium. The rest fought fiercely on,
And set a mighty fight on foot. When next, Anchises' son Aphphasis Calachorides, that ran upon him, strook
Just in the throat with his keen lance; and straight his head forsook
His upright carriage; and his shield, his helmet, and all, with him Fell to the earth; where ruinous death made prise of every limb.
Antilochus, discovering well that Thoon's heart took check,
Let fly, and cut the hollow vein, that runs up to his neck,
Along his back part, quite in twain; down in the dust he fell,
Upwards, and, with extended hands, bade all the world farewell.
Antilochus rush'd nimbly in, and, looking round, made prise
Of his fair arms; in which affair his round-set enemies
Let fly their lances, thundering on his advanced target,
But could not get his flesh. The God that shakes the earth took charge
Of Nestor's son and kept him safe; who never was away, [lance did play,
But still amongst the thickest foes his busy Observing ever when he might, far off, or near, offend;
And watching Asius' son, in prease he spied him, and did send,
Close coming on, a dart at him, that smote in midst his shield,
In which the sharp head of the lance the blue-hair'd God made yield,
Not pleased to yield his pupil's life; in whose shield half the dart Stuck like a tuncheon burn'd with fire; on earth lay th' other part.
He, seeing no better end of all, retired in fear of worse,
But him Meriones pursued; and his lance found full course
To th' other's life. It wounded him betwixt the privy parts
And made, where, to wretched men that war's most violent smarts Must undergo, wounds chiefly vex. His dart Meriones Pursued, and Adamas so strived with it, and his miscase,
THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

As doth a bullock puff and storm, whom in disdain'd bands
The upland herdsmen strive to cast; so, fall'n beneath the hands
Of his stern foe, Asiaes did struggle, pant, and rave.
But no long time; for when the lance was pluck'd out, up he gave His tortured soul. Then Troy's turn came; when with a Thracian sword
The temples of Deipyrus did Helenus afford
So huge a blow, it struck all light out of his cloudy eyes,
And cleft his helmet; which a Greek, there fighting, made his prise,
It fell so full beneath his feet. Atrides grieved to see That sight, and, threatening, shook a lance at Helenus, and he
A bow half drew at him; at once out flew both shaft and lance.
The shaft Atrides' eurets struck; and far away did glance,
Atrides' dart of Helenus the thrust out bow-band struck,
And, through the hand, stuck in the bow.
Agamen's hand did pluck
From forth the nailed prisoner the javelin quickly out;
And fairly, with a little wool, enwrapping round about
The wounded hand, within a scarf he bore it, which his squire Had ready for him. Yet the wound would needs he should retire.
Pisander, to revenge his hurt, right on the king ran he. [on thee,
A bloody fate suggested him to let him run
O Menelaur, that he might, by thee, in dangerous war
Be done to death. Both coming on, Atrides' lance did err.
Pisander struck Atrides' shield, that brake at point the dart
Not running through; yet he rejoiced as playing a victor's part.
Atrides, drawing his fair sword, upon Pisander flew;
Pisander, from beneath his shield, his goodly weapon drew,
Two-edged, with right sharp steel, and long, the handle olive-tree,
Well-polish'd; and to blows they go.
Upon the top strook he Atrides' horse-hair'd-feather'd helm; Atrides on his brow, Above th' extreme part of his nose, laid such a heavy blow

That all the bones crash'd under it, and out his eyes did drop
Before his feet in bloody dust; he after, and shrunk up His dying body, which the foot of his triumphant foe Open'd, and stood upon his breast, and off his arms did go,
This insult used the while: 'At length forsake our fleet'
Thus ye false Trojans, to whom war never enough is sweet.
Nor want ye more impieties, with which ye have abused
Me, ye bold dogs, that your chief friends so honourably used.
Nor fear you hospitable Jove, that lets such thunders go,
But build upon't, he will unbuild your towers that clamber so,
For ravishing my goods, and wife, in flower of all her years,
And without cause; nay, when that fair and liberal hand of hers Had used you so most lovingly. And now again ye would Cast fire into our fleet, and kill our princes if ye could.
Go to, one day you will be curb'd, though never so ye thirst Rude war, by war. O father Jove, they say thou art the first In wisdom of all Gods and men, yet all this comes from thee,
And still thou gratifiest these men, how lewed soe'er they be,
Though never they be cloy'd with sins, nor can be satiate,
As good men should, with this vile war
Satiety of sleep and love, satiety of ease,
Of music, dancing, can find place; yet harsh war still must please Past all these pleasures, even past these.
They will be cloy'd with these Before their war joys. Never war gives Troy satiety's."

This said, the bloody arms were off, and to his soldiers thrown,
He mixing in first fight again. And then Harpalicon,
Kind king Polyphem's son, gave charge;
who to those wars of Troy
His loved father followed, nor ever did enjoy
His country's sight again. He strook the target of Atrites' son Full in the midst; his javelin's steel yet had no power to run
The target through; nor had himself the heart to fetch his lance, But took him to his strength, and cast on every side a glance, Lest any his dear sides should dart. But Merion, as he fled, Sent after him a brazen lance, that ran his eager head Through his right hip, and all along the bladder’s region Beneath the bone; it settled him, and set his spirit gone Amongst the hands of his best friends; and like a worm he lay Stretch’d on the earth, which his black blood infurmed, and flow’d away. His corse the Paphlagonians did sadly wait upon, [Hion; Reposed in his rich chariot, to sacred The king his father following, dissolved in kindly tears, And no wreck sought for his slain son. But, at his slaughterers Incensed Paris spent a lance, since he had been a guest To many Paphlagonians; and through the prease it press’d. There was a certain augur’s son, that did for wealth excel, And yet was honest; he was born, and did at Corinth dwell; Who, though he knew his harmful fate, would needs his ship ascend; His father, Polydus, oft would tell him that his end Would either seize him at his house, upon a sharp disease, Or else among the Grecian ships by Trojans slain. Both these Together he desired to shun; but the disease, at last, And lingering death in it, he left, and war’s quick stroke embraced. The lance betwixt his ear and cheek ran in, and drave the mind Of both those bitter fortunes out. Night strook his whole powers blind. Thus fought they, like the spirit of fire; nor Jove-loved Hector knew How in the fleet’s left wing the Greeks his down-put soldiers slew Almost to victory; the God that shakes the earth so well Help’d with his own strength, and the Greeks so fiercely did impel. Yet Hector made the first place good, where both the ports and wall (The thick rank of the Greek shields broke) he enter’d, and did shall Where on the gray sea’s shore were drawn (the wall being there but slight) Protesilaus’ ships, and those of Ajax, where the fight Of men and horse were sharpest set. There the Boeotian bands, Long-robb’d Ialans, Locrians, and, brave men of their hands, The Phthian and Epeian troops did sprite-fully assail [could not prevail The god-like Hector rushing in; and yet To his repulse, though choicest men of Athens there made head; Amongst whom was Menestheus chief, whom Phaidias followed; Stichius and Bias, huge in strength. The Epeian troops were led By Meges’ and Phylides’ cares, Amphion, Dracius. [Menepolusus Before the Phthians Medon march’d, and And these, with the Boeotian powres, bore up the fleet’s defence. Oileus by his brother’s side stood close, and would not thence For any moment of that time. But, as through fallow fields Black oxen draw a well-join’d plough, and either evenly yields. His thrify labour, all heads couched so close to earth they plow The fallow with their horns, till out the sweat begins to flow, The stretch’d yokes crack, and yet at last the furrow forth is driven: So toughly stood these to their task, and made their work as even. But Ajax Telamonius had many helpful men That, when sweat ran about his knees, and the labour flow’d, would then Help bear his mighty seven-fold shield when swift Oliades The Locrians left, and would not make those merurous fights of prease. Because they wore no bright steel casques nor bristled plumes for show, Round shields, nor darts of solid ash; but with the trusty bow, And jacks well-joined with soft wool, the came to Troy, and were, In their fit place, as confident as those that fought so near; And reach’d their fess so thick with shafts that these were they that brake The Trojan orders first; and then, the brave arm’d men did make

For, I must needs affirm, I fear, the debt of yesterday (Since war is such a God of change) the Grecians now will pay,
And since thou’st insatiate man of war remains at fleet, if there
We tempt his safety, no hour more his hot soul can forbear.”
This sound stuff Hector liked, approved, jump’d from his chariot,
And said: “Polydamas make good this place, and suffer not One prince to pass it; I myself will there go, where you see Those friends in skirmish, and return (when they have heard from me Command that your advice obeys) with utmost speed.” This said, With clay-bright arms, white plume, white scarf, his goodly limbs array’d, He parted from them, like a hill, removing,
all of snow,
And to the Trojan peers and chiefs he flew,
to let them know
The counsel of Polydamas. All turn’d, and did rejoice,
To haste to Panthus’ gentle son, being call’d by Hector’s voice;
Who, through the forefights making way, look’d for Deiphobus,
King Helenus, Asides, Hyrtasian
Asius,
Of whom, some were not to be found unhurt, or deceased,
Some only hurt, and gone from field. As further he address’d,
He found within the fight’s left wing the fair-haired Helen’s love
By all means moving men to blows; which could by no means move Hector’s forbearance; his friends’ miss so put his powers in storm:
But thus in wonted terms he chid: “You with the finest form, Impostor, woman’s man, where are, in your care marked, all these?
Deiphobus, King Helenus, Asius Hyrtas-cides,
Othryoneus, Acamas? Now haughty Ilion Shakes to his lowest groundwork. Now just ruin falls upon Thy head past rescue.” He replied:
“Hector, why chidest thou now?
When I am guiltless? Other times, there are for ease I know, Than these; for she that brought thee forth, not utterly left me Without some portion of thy spirit, to make me brother thee.
But since thou first brought’st in thy force,
to this our naval fight,
I and my friends have ceaseless fought, to do thy service right.
But all those friends thou seek’st are slain;
excepting Helenus,
Who parted wounded in his hand, and so Deiphobus; Jove yet averted death from them. And now lead thou as far As thy great heart affects, all we will second any war
That thou endurest; and I hope, my own strength is not lost; Though least, I’ll fight it to his best; nor further fights the most.”
This calm'd hot Hector's spleen; and both turn'd where they saw the face Of war most fierce, and that was where Their friends made good the place
About renown'd Polydamas, and god-like Polypet, Palmus, Ascanius, Morus that Hippotion
did beget,
And from Ascania's wealthy fields but even the day before Arrived at Troy, that with their aid they kindly might restore Some kindness they received from thence. And in fierce sight with these, Phalesce and tall奥林匹克 stood, and bold Cebriones.
And then the doubt that in advice Polydamas disclosed,
To fight or fly, Jove took away, and all to fight disposed.
And as the floods of troubled air to pitchy storms increase
That after thunder sweeps the fields, and ravishe up the seas.
Encountering with abhorred roars, when the engrossed waves
Boil into foam, and endlessly one after other raves;
So rank'd and guarded th' Ilians march'd; some now, more now, and then More upon more, in shining steel; now captains, then their men.
And Hector, like man-killing Mars, advanced before them all His huge round target before him, through thickened, like a wall,
With hides well couch'd with store of brass; and on his temples shined
His bright helm, on which danced his plume; and in this horrid kind, (All hid within his world-like shield) he every troop assay'd
For entry, that in his despite stood firm and undismay'd.
Which when he saw, and kept more off,
Ajax came stalking then,
And thus provoked him: "O good man, why fright'st thou thus our men?

Come nearer, Not art's want in war makes us thus navy-bound,
But Jove's direct scourge; his arm'd hand makes our hands give you ground.
Yet thou hopest, of thyself, our spoil, But we have likewise hands
To hold our own, as you to spoil; and err thy countermands Stand good against our ransack'd fleet, your hugely-peopled town
Our hands shall take in, and her towers from all their heights pull down.
And I must tell thee, time draws on, when, flying, thou shalt cry
To Jove and all the Gods to make thy fair-maned horses fly
More swift than falcons, that their hoofs may rouse the dust, and bear Thy body, bid, to Ilion." This said, his bold words were Confirm'd as soon as spoke. Jove's bird, the high-flew eagle, took
The right hand of their host; whose wings high acclamations strook From forth the glad breasts of the Greeks. Then Hector made reply:
"Vain-spoken man, and glorious, what hast thou said? Would I
As surely were the son of Jove, and of great Juno born, Adorn'd like Palins, and the God that lifts to earth the morn,
As this day shall bring harmful light to all your host; and thou
If thou darest stand this lance, the earth before the ships shall strow, Thy bosom torn up, and the dogs, with all the fowl of Troy, Be satiate with thy fat and flesh." This said, with shouting joy
His first troops follow'd; and the last their shouts with shouts repel'd.
Greeces answer'd all, nor could her spirits from all show rest conceal'd.
And to so infinite a height all acclamations strove.
They reach'd the splendid, stuck about the unreach'd throne of Jove.

COMMENTARIUS.

Ἀγνόν Ἀγυπτικόν, &c., illustrium Hippomologerum: Πλαταχέπων, lacte versentium, &c. Laurentius Valla, and Eobanus Hessus (who I think translated Homer into hexameters out of Valla's prose) take Ἀγνόν, the epithet to Ἡγεμόνος, for a nation so called, and Ἡγεμόνος, Πλαταχέπων ἄδικων to translate, ut quia sine utibus divitiis equo vicit dat lacte: intending genus Agororum, which he takes for those just men of life likewise which Homer commends; utterly mistaking ἰχθύς, signifying πρωτός or ιχθυῖα, whose genitive case plural is used here; and the word, epithet to ἰχθύς, together signifying ιχθυῖα, Hippomolopous, and they being bred, and continually fed with milk (which the next word γαρδαίρᾳ signifies) Homer calls most just, long-lived, and innocent, in the words ἀλλὰ τὰ κεκατονήμικα ἀθρόοὑς—ὅσοι signifying λαγάνων ἂν ἄπειθετο, and πῶς ἐλθ, but of some inqu; being a compound ex a priv.; and πῶς victus; and from thence had Valla his interpretation, ut quae sine ullis divittis; but where is equino lucto? But not to shew their errors, or that I understand how others take this place different from my translation, I use this note, so much as to intimate what Homer would have noted, and doth teach; that men brought up with that gentle and soft-spirit-begetting milk are long lived, and in nature most just and innocent. Which kind of food the most ingenuous and grave Plutarch, in his oration De Esu Carnium, seems to prefer before the food of flesh, where he saith: By this means also tyrants laid the foundations of their homicides, for (as amongst the Athenians) first they put to death the most notorious or vilest sycophant Epitbreus, so the second, and third; then, being accustomed to blood, they slew good like bad, as Niceratus, the emperor Theramenes, Polemarchus the philosopher, &c. So, at the first, men killed some harmful beast or other, then some kind of fowl, some flesh; till taught by these, and stirred up with the lust of their palates, they proceeded to slaughter of the laborious ox, the man-clothing or adorning sheep, the house-guarding cock, &c., and by little and little cloysed with these, war, and the food of men, men fell to.

*Ἀφένετε ἄρα Μικρὰς, &c. Circum autem Ajaes, &c. To judgment of this place, Spondanus calleth all sound judgments to condemnation of one Pamedes, a judge of games on Olympus, whose brother Amphidamas being dead, Gannicor his son celebrated his funerals, calling all the most excellent to contention, not only for strength and swiftness, but in learning likewise, and force of wisdom. To this general contention came Homer and Hesiodus, who casting down verses on both parts, and of all measures (Homer by all consents questionless obtaining the garland), Panathed bade both recite briefly their best; for which Hesiodus cited these verses, which, as well as I could, in haste, I have translated out of the beginning of his Second Book of Works and Days:

When Atlas birth (the Pleiades) arise,
Harvest begin; plough, when they leave the skies.
Twice twenty nights and days these hide their heads.
The year then turning, leave again their beds.
And show when first to what the harvest steel.
This likewise is the field's law, where men dwell near Neptune's empire, and where, far away,
The winding valleys by the flowing sea,
And men inhabit the fat region.
There naked plough, naked sow, naked cut down,
If Ceres' labours thou wilt timely use,
That timely fruits, and timely revenues,
Serve thee at all parts, lest, at any, Need send thee to others' grudging doors to feed, &c.*

These verses, howsoever Spondanus stands for Homer's, in respect of the peace and thrift they represent, are like enough to carry it for Hesiodus, even in these times' judgments. Homer's verses are these:

—Thus Neptune roused these men.
And round about th' Ajaxes did their phalanxes maintain.
Their station firm, whom Mars himself had be Could not dispart, nor Jove's Maid that sets men fiercer on.
For now the best were chosen out, and they received th' advance
Of Hector and his men so full, that lance was lined with lance,
Shields thickned with opposed shields, targets to targets nail'd,
Helm stuck to helms, and man to man grew they so close assaile'd, Plumed casques were hang'd in either plumes,
Their lances stout, thrust home so thick, by such all-daring hands.
All bent their arm brteasts to the point, and Made sad] fight their joy
Of both. Troy all in heaps strook first, and Hector first of Troy,
And as a round piece of a rock, &c.
Which martial verses, though they are as high as may be for their place and end of our Homer, are yet infinitely short of his best in a thousand other places. Nor think I the contention at any part true, Homer being affirmed by good authors to be a hundred years before Hesiodus; and by all others much the other. Hesiodus being near in blood to him. And this, for

THE FOURTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Avoiding, to behold the skirmish, brings
Old Nestor, and the other wounded kings.
Juno (receiving of the Cyprian dame Her Ceston, whence her sweet enticements came) Descends to Sonnus, and gets him to bind
The persons of Jove with sleep, to free her mind.
Neptune assists the Greeks, and of the foe
Slaughter inflicts a mighty overthrow.
Ajax so sore strikes Hector with a stone,
It makes him spit blood, and his sense sets gone.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In E with sleep, and bed, heaven's Queen
Even Jove himself makes overseen.

Not wine, nor feasts, could lay their soft chains on old Nestor's ear To this high clamour; who required Machon's thoughts to bear
His care in part, about the cause; 'For, methink, still,' said he,
'The cry increases. I must needs the watch-tower mount to see Which way the flood of war doth drive.
Still drink thou wine, and eat, Till fair-hair'd Hecamed hath given a little water heat
To cleanse the quittance from thy wound.'
This said, the goodly shield Of warlike Thrasymed, his son, who had his own in field,
He took, snatch'd up a mighty lance, and so stopt forth to view Cause of that clamour. Instantly th' unworthy cause he knew,
The Grecians wholly put in rout, the Trojans routing still,
Close at the Greeks' backs, their wall razed. - The old man mourn'd this ill;
And, as when with unwieldy waves the great sea foreseeles winds That both ways murmur, and no way her certain current finds,
But pants and swells confusedly, here goes,
and there will stay,
Till on it air casts one firm wind, and then it rolls away;

So stood old Nestor in debate, two thoughts at once on wing
In his discourse, if first to take direct course to the king,
Or to the multitude in fight. At last he did conclude
To visit Agamemnon first. Mean time both hosts imbued
Their steel in one another's blood, nought wrought their healths but harms, Swords, huge stones, double-headed darts, still thumping on their arms.
And now the Jove kept kings, whose wounds were yet in cure, did meet Old Nestor, Diomed, Ithacus, and Atreus' son, from fleet
Bent for the fight which was far off, the ships being drawn to shore On heaps at first, till all their sterns a wall was raised before;
Which, though not great, it yet sufficed to hide them, though their men Were something strait; for whose scope, in form of battle then,
They drew them through the spacious shore, one by another still,
Till all the bosom of the strand their sable bulks did fill,
Even till they took up all the space 'twixt both the promontories.
These kings, like Nestor, in desire to know for what those cries Became so violent, came along, all leaning on their darts,
To see, though not of power to fight; sad and suspicious hearts
Distempering them, and, meeting now
Nestor, the king in fear Cried out: 'O Nestor our renown! why shows thy presence here,
The harmful fight abandoned? now
Hector will make good
The threatening vow he made, I fear, that,
till he had our blood,
And fired our fleet, he never more would turn to Ilion.
Nor is it long, I see, before his whole will will be done.
O Gods, I now see all the Greeks put on Achilles' ire Against my honour; no mean left to keep our fleet from fire.'

* This first verse (after the first four syllables) is to be read as one of our tens.
He answer'd: "'Tis an evident truth, not Jove himself can now, With all the thunder in his hands, prevent our overthrow. The wall we thought invincible, and trusted more than Jove, Is scaled, razed, enter'd; and our powers (driven up) past breathing, prove A most inevitable fight; both slaughters so commix'd, That for your life you cannot put your diligent thought betwixt The Greeks and Trojans; and as close their throats cleave to the sky. Consult we then, if that will serve. For fight advise not I; It fits not wounded men to fight." Atrides answer'd him: [a tired limb, "If such a wall as cost the Greeks so many And such a dye be pass'd, and razed, that, as yourself said well, We all esteem'd invincible, and would past doubt repel The world from both our fleet and us; it doth directly show, That here Jove vows our shames and deaths, I evermore did know His hand from ours when he help'd us, and now I see as clear That, like the blessed. Gods, he holds our hatred enemies dear, Supports their arms, and pinions ours. Conclude then, 'tis in vain To strive with him. Our ships drawn up, now let us launch again, And keep at anchor till calm night; that then, perhaps, our foes May calm their storms, and in that time our scape we may dispose. 'It is not any shame to fly from ill, although by night. Known ill he better does that flies, than he it takes in fight.'"
Ulysses frown'd on him, and said: "Accursed, why talk'st thou thus? Would thou hadst led some barbarous host, and not commanded us Whom Jove made soldiers from our youth, that age might scorn to fly From any charge it undertakes, and every dazzled eye The honour'd hand of war might close. Thus wouldst thou leave this town, For which our many miseries felt entitle it our own? Peace, lest some other Greek give ear, and hear a sentence such As no man's palate should profane; at least that know how much His own right weigh'd, and being a prince, and such a prince as bears Rule of so many Greeks as thou. This counsel loathes mine ears: Let others toil in fight and cries, and we so light of heels Upon their very noise, and groans, to hoise away our keels. Thus we should fit the wish of Troy, that, being something near The victory, we give it clear; and we were sure to bear A slaughter to the utmost man: for no man will sustain A stroke, the fleet gone; but at that, look still, and wish him slain. And therefore, prince of men, be sure, thy censure is unfit."" O Ithacus," replied the king, "thy bitter terms have smit My heart in sunder. At no hand, 'gainst any prince's will Do I command this. Would to God, that any man of skill To give a better counsel would, or old, or younger man: My voice should gladly go with his." Then Diomed began: "The man not far is, nor shall ask much labour to bring in, That willingly would speak his thoughts, if spoken they might win Fit car; and suffer no impair, that I discover them, Being youngest of you: since my sire, that heir'd a diadem, May make my speech to diadems decent enough, though he Lies in his sepulchre at Thebes. I boast this pedigree: 2 Porthens three famous sons begot, that in high Calydon And Pleuron kept, with state of kings, their habitatior; Agrius, Melas, and the third the horseman Oeneus, that excell'd in actions; My father's father, that excell'd in actions The other two. But these kept home, my father being driven With wandering and adventurous spirits, for so the King of heaven And th' other Gods set down their wills, and he to Argos came, Where he began the world, and dwelt; there marrying a dame, One of Adrasus' female race, he kept a royal house, For he had great demesnes, good land, and, being industrious,
He planted many orchard-grounds about his house, and bred Great store of sheep. Besides all this, he was well qualified,
And passed all Argives, for his spear. And these digressive things Are such as you may well endure, since (being derived from kings, And kings not poor nor virtueless) you cannot hold me base,
Nor scorn my words, which oft, though true, in mean men meet disgrace.
However, they are these in short: Let us be seen at fight,
And yield to strong necessity, though wounded, that our sight
May set those men on that, of late, have to Achilles’ spleen.
Been too indulgent, and left blows; but be we only seen,
Not come within the reach of darts, lest wound on wound we lay;
Which reverend Nestor’s speech implied, and so far him obey’d.
This counsel gladly all observed, went on, Atrides led [followed,
Nor Neptune this advantage lost but closely
And like an aged man appear’d t’ Atrides; whose right hand
He seized, and said: “Atrides, this doth passing fitly stand
With stern Achilles’ wreakful spirit, that he can stand astern
His ship, and both in fight and death the Grecian bane discern,
Since not in his breast glows one spark of any human mind,
But be that his own bane. Let God by that loss make him find How vile a thing he is. For know, the blest Gods have not given Thee ever over, but perhaps the Trojans may from heaven Receive that justice. Nay, ’tis sure, and thou shalt see their falls, Your fleet soon freed, and for fights here they glad to take their walls.”
This said, he made known who he was, and parted with a cry
As if ten thousand men had join’d in battle then, so high
His throat flew through the host; and so this great earth-shaking God Cheer’d up the Greek hearts, that they wish’d their pains no period.
Saturnia from Olympus’ top saw her great brother there,
And her great husband’s brother too, exciting everywhere
The glorious spirits of the Greeks; which as she joy’d to see,
So, on the fountful Ida’s top, Jove’s sight did disagree
With her contentment, since she fear’d that his hand would descend,
And check the Sea-god’s practices. And this she did contend;
How to prevent, which thus seemed best:
To deck her curiously,
And visit the Idalian hill, that so the Lightener’s eye
She might enamour with her looks, and his high temples steep,
Even to his wisdom, in the kind and golden juice of sleep.
So took she chamber, which her son, the God of Ferrary, With firm doors made, being joined close and with a privy key That no God could command but Jove; where, enter’d she made fast
The shining gates; and then upon her lovely body cast Ambrosia, that first made it clear, and after laid on it (so wondrous sweet An odorous, rich, and sacred oil, that was That ever, when it was but touch’d, it sweated heaven and earth.
Her body being cleansed with this, her tresses she let forth,
And comb’d, her comb dipp’d in the oil, then wrapp’d them up in curls;
And, thus her deathless head adorn’d, a heavenly veil she hurst
On her white shoulders, wrought by her that rules in housewiferies,
Who wove it full of antique works, of most divine device;
And this with goodly claps of gold she fasten’d to her breast.
Then with a girdle, whose rich sphere a hundred studs impress’d,
She girt her small waist. In her ears, tenderly pierced, she wore Pears, great and orient: on her head, a wreath not worn before Cast beams out like the sun. At last, she to her feet did tie Fair shoes. And thus entire attired, she shined in open sky, Call’d the fair Paphian Queen apart from th’ other Gods, and said:
“Loved daughter! should I ask a grace, should I or be obey’d, Or wouldst thou cross me, being incensed, since I cross thee and take The Greeks’ part, thy hand helping Troy?”
She answer’d, “That shall make No difference in a different cause. Ask, ancient Deity, What most contents thee. My mind stands inclined as liberally To grant it as thine own to ask; provided that it be A favour fit and in my power." She, given deceitfully,
Thus said: "Then give me those two powers, with which both men and Gods Thou vanquishest. Love and Desire; for now the periods
Of all the many-feeding earth, and the original
Of all the gods, Oceanus, and Thetis whom we call Our mother, I am going to greet. They nursed me in their court,
And brought me up, receiving me in most respectful sort.
From Phaëton, when Jove under earth and the unfruitful seas
[to appease
Cast Saturn. These I go to see; intending Jars grown betwixt them, having long abstained from speech and bed;
Which jars, could I so reconcile, that in their anger's stead
I could place love, and so renew their first society,
I should their best loved be esteemed, and honour'd endlessly."
She answer'd: "Tis not fit, nor just,
thy will should be denied, Whom Jove in his embraces holds." This spoken, she untied,
And from her odorous bosom took, her Ceston, in whose sphere
Were all entertainments to delight, all loves, all longings were.
Kind conference, fair speech, whose power
the wisest doth inflame.
This she resigning to her hands, thus urged her by her name:
"Receive this bridle, thus fair-wrought,
and put it 'twixt thy breasts, Where all things to be done are done; and whatsoever rests
In thy desire return with it." The great-eyed Juno smiled,
And put it 'twixt her breasts. Love's Queen, thus cunningly beguiled, To Jove's court flew. Saturnia, straight stooping from heaven's height, Pieria and Emathia, those countries of delight.
Soon reach'd, and to the snowy mounts, where Thracian soldiers dwell,
Approaching, pass'd their tops untouched.
From Athos then she fell,
Pass'd all the broad sea, and arrived in Lemnos, at the towers
Of godlike Thoas, where she met the Prince of all men's powers, Death's brother, Sleep; whose hand she took, and said: "Thou king of men, Prince of the Gods too, if before thou heard'st my suit, again Give helpful ear, and through all times I'll offer thanks to thee.
Lay slumber on Jove's fiery eyes, that I may comfort me
With his embraces; for which grace I'll grace thee with a throne [done
Incorruptible, all of gold, and elegantly By Mulciber, to which he forged a foot-stock for the ease
Of thy soft feet, when wine and feasts thy golden honours please."
Sweet Sleep reply'd: "Saturnia, there lives not any God, Besides Jove, but I would becalm; ay, if it were the flood.
That fathers all the Deities, the great
Oceanus;
But Jove we dare not come more near than he commandeth us.
Now you command me as you did, when Jove's great-minded son, Achilles, having sack'd the town of stubborn Ilius, Took sail from thence; when by your charge I pour'd about Jove's mind A pleasing slumber, calming him, till thou dravest up the wind,
In all his cruelties, to sea, that set his son ashore
In Cous, far from all his friends. Which, waking, vex'd so sore
The supreme godhead, that he cast the gods about the sky,
And me, above them all, he sought, whom he had utterly Hurl'd from the sparkling firmament, if all-gods-taming Night (Whom, flying, I besought for aid) had suffer'd his despite,
And not preserved me; but his wrath with my offence dispensed,
For fear 't offend her, and so ceased, though never so incensed.
And now another such escape, you wish I should prepare."
She answer'd: "What hath thy deep rest to do with his deep care?
As though Jove's love to Ilius in all degrees were such As 'twas to Hercules his son, and so would storm as much For their displeasure as for his? Away, I will remove Thy fear with giving thee the dame, that thou didst ever love,
One of the fair young Graces born, divine
Pasithea."
This started Somnus into joy, who answer'd: "Swear to me,
By those inviolable springs, that feed the Stygian lake,
With one hand touch the nourishing earth, in the other take
The marble sea, that all the gods, of the infernal state, [nesses, and rate]
Which circle Saturn, may to us be with-What thou hast vow'd: that with all truth, thou wilt bestow on me,
The dame I grant I ever loved, divine
Pasithea."
She swore, as he enjoin'd, in all, and strength'd all his joys
By naming all th' infernal Gods, surnam'd the Titanois.
The oath thus taken, both took way, and made their quick repair
To the town, and isle, all hid in liquid air:
At Lecton first they left the sea, and there the land they trod;
The fountul nurse of savages, with all her woods, did nod
Beneath their feet: there Somnus stay'd, est Jove's bright eye should see;
And yet, that he might see to jove, he climb'd the goodliest tree That all th' Italan mountain bred, and curst her progeny,
A fir it was, that shot past air, and kiss'd
the burning sky;
There sate he hid in his dark arms, and in the shape withal
Of that continual prating bird, whom all the Deities call Chalcis, but men Cymministis name. Sa-turnia tripp'd apace,
Up to the top of Gargarus, and shew'd her heavenly face
To Jupiter, who saw, and loved, and with as bot a fire,
Being curious in her tempting view, as when with first desire (The pleasure of it being stolen) they mix'd in love and bed;
And, gazing on her still, he said: "Satturnia, what hath bred
This haste in thee from our high court, and whither tends thy gait,
That, void of horse and chariot, fit for thy sovereign state, Thou lacquey'st here?" Her studied fraud replied: "My journey now Leaves state and labours to do good; and where in right I owe All kindness to the Sire of gods, and our good mother Queen
That nursed and kept me curiously in court (since both have been Long time at discord) my desire is to atone their hearts;
And therefore go I now to see those earth's extremest parts.
For whose far-seat I spared my horse the scaling of this hill,
And left them at the foot of it; for they must taste their fill Of travail with me, and must draw my coach through earth and seas.
Whose far-intended reach, respect, and care not to displease Thy graces, made me not attempt, without thy gracious leave."
The cloud-compelling God her guile in this sort did receive:
"Juno, thou shalt have after leave, but, ere soon, thou shalt sinay, Convert we our kind thoughts to love, that now doth every way Circle with victory my powers, nor yet with any dame, [bosom so inflame Woman, or goddess, did his fires my As now with thee. Not when it loved the parts so generous Ixnion's wife had, that brought forth the wise Phriouthus;
Nor when the lovely dame Acrisius' daughter stirr'd
My amorous powers, that Perseus bore to all men else preferr'd;
Nor when the dame, that Phenix got, surprised me with her sight,
Who the divine-soul'd Rhadamath and Minos brought to light;
Nor semele, that bore to me the joy of mortal men,
The sprightly Bacchus; nor the dame that Thebes renowned then,
Aclemin, the bore 'Hercules; Latona, so
renown'd;
Queen Ceres, with the golden hair; nor thy fair eyes did wound My entrails to such depth as now with thirst of amorous ease."
The cunning dame seem'd much incensed, and said: "What words are these, Unsufferable Saturn's son? What I here! in Ida's height!
Desirest thou this? how fits it us? or what if in the sight Of any god thy will were pleased, that he the rest might bring To witness thy incontinence? 'twere a dishonour'd thing.
I would not shew my face in heaven, and rise from such a bed.
But, if love be so dear to thee, thou hast a chamber-seat.
Which Vulcan purposely contrived with all fit secrecy;
There sleep at pleasure." He replied: "'I fear not if the eye Of either god or man observe, so thick a cloud of gold;
I can behold, I'll cast about us that the sun, who furthest Shall never find us." This resolved, into his kind embrace
He took his wife. Beneath them both fair
Tellus strew'd the place
With fresh-sprung herbs, so soft and thick that up aloft it bore Their heavenly bodies; with his leaves, did dewy lotos store
Th' Elysian mountain; saffron flowers and hyacinths help'd make
The sacred bed; and there they slept; when suddenly there brake
A golden vapour out of air, whence shining dews did fall,
In which they wrapt them close, and slept till Jove was tamed within.
Mean space flew Somnus to the ships, found Neptune out, and said:
"Now cheerfully assist the Greeks, and give them glorious head,
At least a little, while Jove sleeps; of whom through every limb
I pour'd dark sleep, Saturnia's love hath so illud him."

This news made Neptune more secure in giving Grecians heart,
And through the first fights thus he stirr'd
the men of most desert:
"Yet, Grecians, shall we put our ships, and conquer, in the hands Of Priam's Hector by our sloop? He thinks so, and commands
With pride according; all because Achilles keeps away.
Alas, as we were nought but him we little need to stay On his assistance, if we would our own strengths call to field,
And mutually maintain repulse. Come on then, all men yield To what I order. We that bear best arms in all our host,
Whose heads sustain the brightest helms, whose hands are bristled most With longest lances, let us on. But stay, I'll lead you all;
Nor think I but great Hector's spirits will suffer some appall, Though they be never so inspired. The abest of us then,
That on our shoulders worst shields bear, exchange with worser men That fight with better." This proposed, all heard it, and obey'd.
The kings, even those that suffer'd wounds,
Ulysses, Diomed,
And Agamemnon, help'd t' instruct the complete army thus:
To good gave good arms, worse to worse, yet none were mutinous.
Thus, arm'd with order, forth they flew;
the great Earth-shaker led,
A long sword in his sinewy hand, which when he brandish'd
It lighten'd still, there was no law for him and it; poor men Must quake before them. These thus man'd, illustrious Hector then His host brought up. The blue-hair'd god and he stretch'd through the prease A grievous fight; when to the ships and tents of Greece the seas Brake loose, and raged. But when they join'd, the dreadful clamour rose To such a height, as not the sea, when up the North-spirit blows Her raging billows, bellows so against the beaten shore; [with violent blure Nor such a rustling keeps a fire, driven Through woods that grow against a hill; nor so the fervent strokes
Of almost-bursting winds resound against a grove of oaks;
As did the clamour of these hosts, when both the battles closed.
Of all which noble Hector first at Ajax' breast disposed
His javelin, since so right on him the greatsoul'd soldier bore;
Nor miss'd it, but the handwicks both that his broad bosom wore,
To hang his shield and sword, it strook;
both which his flesh preserved.
Hector, disdainning that his lance had thus as good as swerved, Trode to his strength; but, going off, great Ajax with a stone,
One of the many props for ships, that there lay trampl'd on.
Strook his broad breast above his shield, just underneath his throat,
And shook him piecemeal; when the stone sprung back again, and smote Earth, like a whirlwind, gathering dust with whirling fiercely round, for favour of his unspent strength, in settling on the ground. And as when Jove's bolt by the roots rends from the earth an oak, His sulphur casting with the blow a strong unsavoury smoke, And on the fall a plant none dare look but with amazed eyes, (Jove's thunder being no laughing game) so bow'd strong Hector's thighs, And so with tost-up heels he fell, away his lance he flung, His round shield follow'd, then his helm, and out his armour rung. The Greeks then shouted, and ran in, and hoped to hale him off, And therefore pour'd on darts in storms, to keep his aid aloof; But none could hurt the people's guide, nor stir him from his ground; Sarpedon, prince of Lycia, and Glaucus so renown'd, Divine Agenor, Venus's son, and wise Polydamas, (neglective was Rush'd to his rescue, and the rest. No one Of Hector's safety. All their shields, they couthe'd about him close, Raised him from earth, and (giving him, in their kind arms, repose) From off the labour carried him, to his rich chariot, And bore him mourning towards Troy. But when the flood they got Of gally Xanthus, that was got by deathless Jupiter, There took they him from chariot, and all besprinkled there His temples with the stream. He breathed, look'd up, assaying to rise, And on his knees stay'd spitting blood. Again then closed his eyes, And back again his body fell. The main blow had not done Yet with his spirit. When the Greeks saw worthy Hector gone, Then thought they of their work, then charged with much more cheer the foe. And then, far first, Oliades began the overthrow. He darted Satnus Enops' son, whom famous Nais bore As she was keeping Enops' flocks on Satnus' river's shore. And strook him in his belly's rim, who upwards fell, and raised A mighty skirmish with his fall. And then Panthoedse seized Prothenor Arelycides, with his revengeful spear, On his right shoulder, strook it through, and laid him breathless there; For which he insolently brag'd, and cried out: "Not a dart From great-soul'd Panthus' son, I think, shall ever vainlier part, But some Greek's bosom it shall take, and make him give his ghost." This brag the Grecians stomach'd much; but Telamonius most, Who stood most near Prothenor's fall, and out he sent a lance, Which Panthus' son, declining, scaped, yet took it to sad chance Archilocho, Antenor's son, whom heaven did destinate To that stern end; 'twist neck and head the javelin wrought his fate, And ran in at the upper joint of all the back long bone, Cut both the nerves; and such a load of strength laid Ajax on, As that small part he seized outweigh'd all th' under limbs, and strook His heels up, so that head and face the earth's possessions took, When all the low parts sprung in air; and thus did Ajax quit Panthoedse's brave: "Now, Panthus' son, let thy prophetic wit Consider, and disclose a truth, if this man do not weigh Even with Prothenor. I conceive, no one of you will say That either he was base himself, or sprung of any base; (by his face) Antenor's brother, or his son, he should be One of his race, past question, his likeness shews he is." This spake he, knowing it well enough, The Trojans storm'd at this. And then slew Acamas, to save his brother yet engaged, Bceotius, dragging him to spoll; and thus the Greeks enraged: "O Greeks, even born to bear our darts yet ever breathing threats, Not always under tears and toils ye see our fortune sweats, But sometimes you drop under death. See now your quick among Our dead, intranced with my weak lance to prove I have ere long Revenged my brother. 'Tis the wish of every honest man His brother, slain in Mars his field, may rest wreak'd in his fane."
THE FOURTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

This stirr'd fresh envy in the Greeks, but urged Penelus most, Who hurt'd his lance at Acamas; he scaped; nor yet it lost The force he gave it, for it found the stock-rich Phorbas' son, Ilionus, whose dear sire, past all in Ilion, Was loved of Hermes, and enrich'd, and to him only bore His mother this now slaughter'd man. The dart did undergo His eye-lid, by his eye's dear roots, and out the apple fell. The eye pierced through; nor could the nerve that stays the neck repel His strong-wing'd lance, but neck and all gave way, and down he dropp'd. Penelus then unsheathed his sword, and from the shoulders chop'd His lackless head; which down he threw, the helm still sticking on, And still the lance fix'd in his eye; which not to see alone Contented him, but up again he snatch'd, and shew'd it all, With this stern brave: "Ilians, relate brave Ilionus' fall To his kind parents, that their roofs their tears may overrun; [genor's son, For so the house of Promachus, and Ale-Must with his wife's eyes overflow, she never seeing more. Her dear lord, though we tell his death; when to our native shore We bring from ruin'd Troy our fleet, and men so long forgone." This said, and seen, pale fear possess'd all those of Ilion, And every man cast round his eye to see where death was not, That he might fly him. Let not then his graced hand be forgot, O Muses, you that dwell in heaven, that first imbraced the food With Trojan spoil, when Neptunus thus had made their irons yield. First Ajax Telamonius the Myssian captain slew, [threw Great Hyrtius Gyrtiades. Antilochus o'er-Phalces and Mermer, to their spoil. Me-riones gave end [did send To Morus and Hippotion. Tence to fate Prothoon and Periphetes. Atvides' javelin chanced Duke Hyperenor, wounding him in that part that is placed Betwixt the short ribs and the bones, that to the triple gut. Have pertinence; the javelin's head did cut out his entrails cut, His forced soul breaking through the wound; night's black hand closed his eyes. Then Ajax, great Oileus' son, had divers victories; For when Saturnius suffer'd flight, of all the Grecian race Not one with swiftness of his feet could so enrich a chase.

COMMENTARIUS.

1 Ὅργανα λαῶν. Princeps populorum (the end of Ulysses' speech in the beginning of this book) which ascription our Spond. takes to be given in scorn, and that all Ulysses' speech is overmuch, or stomach, which is spoken altogether seriously and bitterly to this title at the end, which was spoken ῥήμα, moliert, or banegy, of purpose to make Agamemnon bear the better the justice of his other austerity. 2 Καὶ ἔγει γένος ὅργανα εἰς ὅ τι γεγονὸς glorior esse. The long digression that follows this in the speech of Diomed (being next to Agamemnon's reply to Ulysses) bewrays an affection he had by all anything-fit-means to talk of his pedigree; and by reason of that humour, hath shewn his desire elsewhere to learn the pedigrees of others, as in the Sixth Book, in his inquiry of Glaucus' pedigree. And herein is expressed part of his character. 3 Ἐπίθειμος ὅ τι, εἰσαγωγὴ μετάλων, &c. Overpassing, for speed, many things in this book that cry out for the praise of our Homer, and note of that which in most readers I know will be lost, I must only insist still on those parts that (in my poor understanding) could never yet find apprehension in any of our commentators or translators, as in this simile again of the whirlwind, to which the stone that Ajax hurled at Hector is resembled. Valla and Eobanus, Sale in French, so understanding, Hector turned about with the blow, like a whirlwind. Valla's words are these (translating ἔπιθειμος ὅ τι, εἰσαγωγὴ μετάλων, νῦν ὁ ὁρμή πάνω which, ad verbum, say thus much in every common translation: Trychum autem sicuit concussit feriens, rotatusque est undique. Quo ictu Hector velut turbo, quem Strombun dicunt, rotato corpore, & c. Eobanus converting it thus:—

—Steit ille tremens, cur turbo rotatus.

Which, though it harp upon the other, makes yet much worse music, saying, Hector stood trembling, being wheeled about like a whirlwind. He stood, yet was turned about violently. How gross both are, I think the blindest see, and must needs acknowledge a monstrous unworthiness in these men to touch our Homer, esteeming it an extreme loss to the world to have this and the like undiscovered. For, as I apprehend it, being expressed no better than in my silly conversion (and the stone, not Hector, likened to the whirlwind) it is above the wit of a man to imitate our Homer’s wit for the most fiery illustration both of Ajax’ strength and Hector’s; of Ajax, for giving such a force to it as could not spend itself upon Hector, but turn after upon the earth in that whirlwind-like violence; of Hector, for standing it so solidly; for without that consideration the stone could never have recoiled so fiercely. And here have we a ruled case against our plain and smug writers that, because their own unworthiness will not let them rise themselves, would have every man grovel like them, their feathers not passing the pitch of every woman’s capacity. And, indeed, where a man is understood, there is ever a proportion between the writer’s wit and the writer’s (that may speak with authority) according to my old lesson in philosophy: Intellectus in ipsa intelligibilia transit. But herein this case is ruled against such men, that they affirm these hyperbolic or superlative sort of expressions and illustrations are too bold and bombasted; and out of that word is spun that which they call our fustian; their plain writing being stuff nothing so substantial but such gross crotches, or hair-patch, as every goose may eat oaks through. Against which, and all these plebeian opinions, that a man is bound to write to every vulgar reader’s understanding, you see the great Master of all eloquence hath written so darkly that almost three thousand suns have not discovered him, no more in five hundred other places than here; and yet all pervial enough, you may well say, when such a one as I comprehend them. But the chief end why I extend this annotation is only to intreat your note here of Homer’s manner of writing, which, to utter his after-store of matter and variety, is so press, and puts on with so strong a current, that it far overruns the most laborious pursuer, if he have not a poetical foot and poesy’s quick eye to guide it. The verse in question I refer you to before, which says χρυσός, signifying a stone of a handful, or that with one hand may be raised and cast, spoken of before, and (here being understood) shook Hector at all parts, in striking him, and like a whirlwind wheeled or whirled about; wherein he speaks not of boding to the earth again, and raising a dust with his violent turnings, in which the conceit and life of his simile lies, but leaves it to his reader, and he leaves it to him. Notwithstanding he utters enough to make a stone understand it, how stupidly soever all his interpreters would have Hector (being struck into a trembling, and almost dead) turn about a thousand times, and conclude then with this question: What fault is it in me, to furnish and adorn my verse (being his translator) with translating and adding the truth and fulness of his conceit, it being as like to pass my reader as his, and therefore necessary? If it be no fault in me, but fit, then may I justly be said to better Homer, or not to have all my invention, matter, and form, from him, though a little I enlarge his form? Virgil, in all places where he is compared and preferred to Homer, doth nothing more. And therefore my assertion in the Second Book is true, that Virgil hath in all places, wherein he is compared and preferred to Homer by Scaliger, & c., both his invention, matter, and form, from him.

THE END OF THE FOURTEENTH BOOK.
THE FIFTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Jove waking, and beholding Troy in flight, Chides Juno, and sends Iris to the fight.
To charge the Sea-god to forsake the field; And Phoebus to invade it, with his shield.
Recovering Hector's bruised and crazed powers.
To file he goes, and makes new conquerors,
The Trojans giving now the Grecians chase.
Even to their fleet. Then Ajax turns his face,
And sends, with many Trojan lives, his ire;
Who then brought brands to set the fleet on fire.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Jove sees in O his oversight,
Chides Juno, Neptune calls from fight.

The Trojans, beat past pale and dike, and numbers prostrate laid,
All got to chariot, fear-driven all, and fear'd as men dismay'd.
Then Jove on Ida's top awakened, rose from Saturnia's side, Stood up, and look'd upon the war; and all inverted spied
Since he had seen it; th' Ilions now in rout, the Greeks in fight;
King Neptune, with his long sword, chief;
great Hector put down quite,
Laid flat in field, and with a crown of princes compassed,
So stopp'd up that he scarce could breathe, his mind's sound habit fled,
And he still spitting blood. Indeed, his hurt was not set on By one that was the weakest Greek. But him Jove look'd upon With eyes of pity; on his wife with horrible aspect,
To whom he said: "O thou in ill most cunning architect,
All arts and comments that exceed'st I not only to enforce Hector from fight, but, with his men, to shew the Greeks a course.
I fear, as formerly, so now, these ills have with thy hands
Their first fruits sown, and therefore could load all thy limbs with bands.
Forgett'st thou, when I hang'd thee up, how to thy feet I tied Two anvils, golden manacles on thy false wrists implied,

And let thee mercilessly hang from our refined heaven.
Even to earth's vapours; all the gods in great Olympus given To mutinies about thee, yet (though all stood staring on)
None durst dissolve thee, for these hands (had they but seized upon Thy friend) had headlong thrown him off from our star-bearing round, Till he had tumbled out his breath, and piece-meal dash'd the ground.
Nor was my angry spirit calm'd so soon,
for those foul seas, On which, inducing northern flaws, thou shipwreck'dst Hercules,
And toss'd him to the Coan shore, that thou shouldst tempt again
My wrath's importance, when thou seest, besides, how grossly vain My powers can make thy policies; for from their utmost force
I freed my son, and set him safe in Argos, nurse of horse.
These I remember to thy thoughts, that thou mayst shun these slights,
And know how badly bed-sports thrive, procured by base deceits."
This frighted the offending queen, who with this state excused Her kind unkindness: "Witness earth, and heaven so far diffused, Thou Flood whose silent gliding waves the under ground doth bear, (Which is the great'st and graviest oath, that any God can swear) Thy sacred head; those secret joys, that our young bed gave forth, (By which I never rashly swore) that he who shakes the earth
Not by my counsel did this wrong to Hector and his host;
But (pitying th' oppressed Greeks, their fleet being nearly lost) Relieved their hard condition, yet utterly impell'd
By his free mind; which since I see is so offensive held
To thy high pleasure, I will now advise him not to tread
But where thy tempest-raising feet, O
Jupiter, shall lead."
Jove laugh'd to hear her so submiss, and said: "My fair-eyed love,
If still thus thou and I were one (in counsels held above)
Neptune would still in word and fact be ours, if not in heart.
If then thy tongue and heart agree, from hence to heaven depart,
To call the excellent-in-bows, the Rainbow, and the Sun,
That both may visit both the hosts; the Grecian army one;
And that is Iris; let her haste, and make the sea-god cease
'T assist the Greeks, and to his court retire from war in peace;
Let Phoebus, on the Trojan part, inspire with wonted power Great Hector's spirits, make his thoughts forget the late stern hour,
And all his anguish, setting on his whole recover'd man
To make good his late grace in fight, and hold in constant wane
The Grecian glories, till they fall, in flight before the fleet.
Of wox'd Achilles; which extreme will prove the mean to greet Thee with thy wish, for then the eyes of great Aesculapius [so near him press] (Made witness of the general ill, that doth
Will make his own particular look out, and by degrees [no extremities Abate his wrath, that, though himself for Will seem reflected; yet his friend may get of him the grace To help his country in his arms; and he shall make his place
For his full presence with his wrath, which shall be well for run;
For I will first renown his life with slaughter of my son, Divine Sarpedon, and his death great Hector’s power shall wreak, Ending his evils. * Then, at once, out shall the fury break
Of fierce Achilles: and, with that, the flight now felt shall turn,
And then last, till in wrathful flames the long-sieged Ilion burn.
Minerva's counsel shall become grave mean to this my will;
Which no god shall neglect before Achilles
Of slaughter for his slaughter'd friend; even Hector's slaughter thrown Under his anger; that these facts may then make fully known

My vow's performance, made of late: and, with my bowed head, Confirm'd to Thebaid, when her arms embraced my knees, and pray'd
That to her city-raising son I would all honour shew.
This heard, his charge she seem'd to intend, and to Olympus flew.
But, as the mind of such a man that hath a great way gone,
And either knowing not his way, or then would let alone
His purposed journey, is distract; and in his vexed mind Resolves now not to go, now goes, still many ways inclined;
So reverend Juno headlong flew, and 'gainst her stomach strived, 1
For, being amongst th' immortals, God in high heaven soon arrived, All rising, welcoming with cups her little absence thence,
She all their courtships overpass'd with solemn negligence, Save that which fair-cheek'd Themis show'd, and her kind cup she took,
For first she ran and met with her, and ask'd: "What troubled look
She brought to heaven? She thought, for truth, that Jove had terrified Her spirits strangely since she went." The fair-arm'd Queen replied:
"That truth may easily be supposed; you, goddess Themis, know His old severity and pride; but you bear out with show,
And like the banquet's arbiter amongst th' Immortals fare, Though well you hear amongst them all, how bad his actions are;
Nor are all here, nor anywhere, mortals, nor gods, I fear, Entirely pleased with what he does, though thus ye banquet here."
Thus took she place, displeased; the feast in general [to colour all, Bewraying privy spleens at Jove; and then,
She laugh'd, but merely from her lips; for over her black brows
Her still-bent forehead was not clear'd; yet this her passion's throes Brought forth in spite, being lately school'd:
"Alas, what fools are we
That envy Jove! or that by act, word, thought, can fantasy Any resistance to his will! he sits far off, nor cares, Nor moves, but says he knows his strength, to all degrees compares

* "Ending his ends" in the folio.—Ed.
THE FIFTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

His greatness past all other gods, and that in fortitude,
And every other godlike power, he reigns past all indued.
For which great eminence all you Gods, whatever ill he does, Sustain with patience. Here is Mars, I think, not free from woes,
And yet he bears them like himself. The great God had a son, [all men won Whom he himself yet justifies, one that from Just surname of their best beloved, Acastaphus ; yet he
By Jove’s high grace to Troy, is slain.”
Mars started horribly,
As Jove knew he would, at this, beat with his hurl’d-out hands
His brawny thighs, cried out, and said:
“O you that have commands
In these high temples, bear with me, if I revenge the death
Of such a son. I’ll to the fleet, and though I sink beneath
The fate of being shot to hell, by Jove’s fell thunder-stone,
And lie all grimed amongst the dead with dust and blood, my son Revenge shall honour. Then he charged Fear and Dismay to join
His horse and chariot. He got arms, that over heaven did shine.
And then a wrath more great and grave in Jove had been prepared Against the gods than Juno caused, if Pallas had not cared More for the peace of heaven than Mars; who leapt out of her throne, Rapt up her helmet, lance, and shield, and made her fate’s porch groan
With her egression to his stay, and thus his rage defers:
“Furious and foolish, th’ art undone; hast thou for aught thine ears?
Heard’st thou not Juno being arrived from heaven’s great King but now?
Or wouldst thou he himself should rise, forced with thine rage, to show
The dreadful power she urged in him, so justly being stiff’d?
Know, thou most impudent and mad, thy wrath had not inferred Mischief to thee, but to us all. His spirit had instantly Left both the hosts, and turn’d his hands to upcars in the sky:
Guilty and guiltless both to wrack in his high rage had gone.
And therefore, as thou lovest thyself, cease fury for thy son;

Another, far exceeding him in heart and strength of hand,
Or is, or will be shortly slain. It were a work would stand Jove in much trouble, to free all from death
That would not die.”
This threat even nail’d him to his throne;
when heaven’s chief Majesty
Call’d bright Apollo from his lane, and Iris that had place
Of internuncless from the Gods, to whom she did the grace.
Of Jupiter, to this effect: “It is Saturnius’ will,
That both, with utmost speed, should stoop to the Italian hill,
To know his further pleasure there. And this let me advise,
When you arrive, and are in reach of his resolute eyes,
His pleasure heard, perform it all, of whatsoever kind.”
Thus moved he back, and used her throne. Those two oustripped the wind,
And Ida all-enchased with springs they soon attain’d, and found Where far-discriming Jupiter, in his repose, had crown’d
The brows of Gargarus, and wrapt an odoriferous cloud
About his bosom. Coming near, they stood. Nor now he show’d His angry countenance, since so soon he saw they made th’ access
That his loved wife enjoin’d; but first the fair ambassadress
He thus commanded: “Iris, go to Neptune, and relate Our pleasure truly, and at large. Command him from the fate
Of human war, and either greet the gods’ society, [he deny,
Or the divine sea make his seat. If proudly
Let better counsels be his guides, than such as bid me war.
And tempt my charge, though he be strong,
for I am stronger far,
And elder born. Nor let him dare, to boast even state with me Whom all Gods else prefer in fear.” This said, down hasted she From Ida’s top to Lion; and like a mighty snow,
Or gelid hail, that from the clouds the northern spirt doth blow;
So fell the windy-fooled dame, and found with quick repair
The watery God; to whom she said: “God with the sable hair,
I came from Aegis-bearing Jove, to bid thee cease from fight,
And wrath, heaven, or th' ample seas; which if, in his despite,
Or disobedience, thou deniest, he threatens thee to come,
In opposite fight, to field himself; and therefore warns thee home,
His hands eschewing, since his power is far superior,
His birth before thee; and affirms, thy loved heart should abhor
To vaunt equality with him, whom every deity fears.
He answer'd: "O unworthy thing! though he be great, he bears
His tongue too proudly, that ourself, born to an equal share
Of state and freedom, he would force.
Three brothers born we are To Saturn; Rhea brought us forth, this Jupiter, and I,
And Pluto, god of under-grounds. The world indifferently Disposed between us; every one his kingdom; I the seas, Pluto the black lot; Jupiter the princely
Of broad heaven; all the sky and clouds,
Was sorted out. The earth And high Olympus common are, and due to either's birth.
Why then should I be awed by him? Content he his great heart
With his third portion, and not think to Enlarge his part,
With terrors of his stronger hands on me, as if I were The most ignoble of us all. Let him contain in fear His daughters and his sons, begot by his own person. This Holds more convenience. They must hear These violent threats of his,"
"Shall I," said Iris, "bear from thee, an answer so mustere?"
Or wilt thou change it? Changing minds, all noble natures bear,
And well thou knowest, these greatest born,
The Furies follow still."
He answer'd: "Iris, thy reply keeps time, and shews thy skill.
O 'tis a most praiseworthy thing, when messengers can tell,
Besides their messages, such things, as fit th' occasion well.
But this much grieveth my heart and soul, that being in power and state
All ways his equal, and so fix'd by one degree in fate,
He should to me, as under him, ill language give, and chide.
Yet now, though still incensed, I yield, affirming this beside,
And I enforce it with a threat: That if without consent [regiment, Of me, Minerva, Mercury, the Queen of And Vulcan, he will either spare high Ilion, or not race
Her turrets to the lowest stone, and, with both these, not grace
The Greeks as victors absolute, inform him this from me;
His pride and my contempt shall live at endless enmity."
This said, he left the Greeks, and rush'd into his watery throne, Much miss'd of all th' heroic host. When Jove discern'd him gone, Apollo's service he employ'd, and said:
"Loved Phoebus, go
To Hector; now th' earth-shaking god hath taken sea, and so Shrank from the horrors I denounced;
Which standing, he, and all
The under-seated deities, that circle Saturn's fall,
Had heard of me in such a fight as had gone hard for them.
But both for them and me 'tis best, that thus they fly th' extreme,
That had not pass'd us without sweat. Now then, in thy hands take My adder-fringed surrarting shield, which with such terror shake,
That fear may shake the Greeks to flight. Besides this, add thy care, O Phoebus, far-off shooting God, that this
So sickly fare
Of famous Hector be secured, and quickly
So excite
His amplet powers, that all the Greeks may grace him with their flight, Even to their ships, and Hellespont; and then will I devise
All words and facts again for Greece, that largely may suffice
To breathe them from their instant toils." Thus from th' Idaean height, Like air's swift pigeon-killer, stoop'd the far-shot God of light,
And found great Hector sitting up, not stretch'd upon his bed,
Not wheezing with a stopp'd-up spirit, not in cold sweats, but fed
With fresh and comfortable veins, but his mind all his own,
But round about him all his friends, as well as ever known.
And this was with the mind of Jove, that flew to him before Apollo came; who, as he saw no sign of any sore, Ask'd, like a cheerful visitant: "Why in this sickly kind,
Great Hector, sitt'st thou so apart? Can any grief of mind Invade thy fortitude?" He spake, but with a feeble voice:
"I thus rejoice 'O thou, the best of deities! Why, since
By thy so serious benefit, demand'st thou, as in mirth,
And to my face, if I were ill? For, more than what thy worth Must needs take note of, doth not Fame from all mouths fill thine ears,
That, as my hand at th' Achivoe fleet was making massacres
Of men whom valiant Ajax led, his strength strook with a stone
All power of more hurt from my breast? my very soul was gone,
And once to-day I thought to see the house of Dis and Death.
"Be strong," said he, "for such a spirit now sends the god of breath
From airy Ida, as shall run through all Greek spirits in thee.
Apollo with the golden sword, the clear far-seer, see,
Him, who betwixt death and thy life, twixt ruin and those towers, Ere this day oft hath held his shield. Come then, be thy powers
In wonted vigour, let thy knights with all their horse assay
The Grecian fleet; myself will lead, and scour so clear the way,
That flight shall leave no Greek a rub."
Thus instantly inspired
Were all his nerves with matchless strength; and then his friends he fired Against their foes, when to his eyes his Then, as a goodly-headed hart, or goat, bred in the wood,
A rout of country huntsmen chase, with all their hounds in cry,
The beast yet or the shady woods, or rocks excessive high,
Keep safe, or our unwieldy fates (that even in hunters sway)
Bar them the poor beast's pulling down; when straight the clamorous fray Calls out a lion, hugely mated, and his abhorred view Turns headlong in unturning flight (though venturous) all the crew;
So hither to the chasing Greeks their slaughter dealt by troops;
But, after Hector was beheld range here and there; then stoops
The boldest courage; then their heels took in their dropping hearts,
And then spake Andromonides, a man of far-best parts Of all th' Eolians, skil'd in darts, strenuous in fights of stand, (get the better hand
And one of whom few of the Greeks could for rhetoric, when they fought with words; with all which being wise, Thus spake he to his Grecian friends: "O mischief! now mine eyes Discern no little miracle; Hector escaped from death,
And all recover'd, when all thought his soul had sunk beneath
The hands of Ajax. But some God hath saved and freed again
Him that but now dissolved the knees of many a Grecian
And now I fear will weaken more; for, not without the hand
Of him that thunders, can his powers thus still the foregoers stand, Thus still triumphant. Hear me then: our troops in quick retreat
Let's draw up to our fleet, and we, that boast ourselves the great, Stand firm, and try if these that raise so high their charging darts
May be resisted. I believe, even this great heart of theirs
Will fear himself to be too bold, in charging thoroughly us."
They easily heard him, and obey'd; when all the generous
They call'd t'enounter Hector's charge, and turn'd the common men Back to the fleet. And these were they, that bravely furnish'd then The force foreign: th' Ajaies both, the worthy Cretian king.
The Mars-like Meges, Merion, and Teucer. Up then bring The Trojan chiefs their men in heaps; before whom, amply paced, March'd Hector, and in front of him Apollo, who had cast
About his bright aspect a cloud, and did before him bear Jove's huge and each where shaggy shied; which, to contain in fear Offending men, the god-smith gave to Jove; with this he led The Trojan forces. The Greeks stood; _a servant clamour spread_ The air on both sides as they join'd. Out flew the shafts and darts, Some falling short, but other some found butts in breasts and hearts.
As long as Phoebus held but out his horrid shield, so long The darts flew raging either way, and death grew both ways strong;
But when the Greeks had seen his face, and, who it was that shook The bristled targe, knew by his voice, then all their strengths forsook Their nerves and minds. And then look how a goodly herd of neat, Or wealthy flock of sheep, being close, and dreadless at their meat,
In some black midnight, suddenly, and not a keeper near,
A brace of horrid bears rush in, and then fly here and there
The poor affrighted flocks or herds; so every way dispersed
The heartless Grecians, so the Sun their headstrong chace reversed
To headlong flight, and that day raised, with such grace, Hector's head;
Aresilias then he slew, and Stichius;
Stichius led Beo'tia's brazen-coated men; the other was the friend [brought to end
Of mighty-souled Menestheus. Æneas Medon and Jassus; Medon was the brother, though but base,
Of swift Oiliades, and dwelt, far from his breeding place,
In Phylace; the other led th' Athenian bands, his sire
Was Spetus, Bucolus his son. Meecistheus did expire
Beneath Polydamas his hand. Polites, Echius slew,
Just at the joining of the hosts. Agenor overthrew Chonius. Bold Deiochus felt Alexander's lance;
It strook his shoulder's upper part, and did his head advance
Quite through his breast, as from the fight he turn'd him for retreat.
While these stood spoiling the slain, the Greeks found time to get Beyond the dike and th' undiked pales; all scapes they gladly gain'd,
Till all had pass'd the utmost wall;
Necessity so reign'd.
Then Hector cried out: "Take no spoil, but rush on to the fleet;
From whose assault (for spoil or flight) if any man I meet,
He meets his death; nor in the fire of holy funeral
His brother's or his sister's hands shall cast within our wall
His loathed body; but, without, the threats of dogs shall grave His manless limbs." This said, the scourge his forward horses drove Through every order; and, with him, all whipt their chariots on.
All threateningly, out-thundering shouts as earth were overthrown.
Before them march'd Apollo still; and,
as he march'd, digg'd down, [Without all labour] with his feet, the dike;
till, with his own,
He fill'd it to the top, and made way both for man and horse
As broad and long as with a lance (cast out to try one's force)
A man could measure. Into this they pour'd whole troops as fast As numerous; Phoebus still, before, for all their haste,
Still shaking Jove's unvalued shield, and held it up to all.
And then, as he had broken their dike, he thumbed down their wall.
And look how easily any boy, upon the seaebb's shore, [for it no more;
Makes with a little sand a toy, and cares
But as he raised it childishiy, so in his wanton vein, [spurns it down again;
Both with his hands and feet he pulls, and So slight; O Phoebus, thy hands made of not that huge Grecian toil,
And their late stand, so well-resolved, as easily madest recoil.
 Thus stood they driven up on their fleet;
where each heard other's thought, Exhorted, passing humbly pray'd, all, all the gods besought,
(With hands held up to heaven) for help:
'amongst all, the good old man,
Grave Nestor, for his counsels call'd the Argives' guardian, Fell on his aged knees, and pray'd, and to the starry host Stretch'd out his hands for aid to theirs, of all thus moving most:
"O father Jove, if ever man, of all our host, did burn [safe return] Fat thighs of oxen or of sheep (for grace or In fruitful Argos, and obtain'd the bowing of thy head
For promise of his humble prayers: O now remember him,
(Thou merely heavenly) and clear up the foul brows of this dim
And cruel day: do not destroy our zeal for Trojan pride.'

He pray'd, and heaven's great Counsellor, with store of thunder tried His former grace good, and so heard the old man's hearty prayers.
The Trojans took Jove's sign for them; and pour'd out their affairs In much more violence on the Greeks; and thought on nought but fight.
And as a huge wave of a sea, swoln to his rudest height,
Breaks over both sides of a ship, being allured by the wind,
For that's it makes the wave so proud; in such a borne-up kind
The Trojans overvat the wall, and, getting in their horse,
Fought close at fleet, which now the Greeks ascended for their force.
Then from their chariots they with darts, the Greeks with bead-hooks fought, (Kept still aboard for naval fights) their heads with iron wrought In hooks and pikes. Achilles' friend, still while he saw the wall,
That stood without by their fleet, afford employment for them all,
Was never absent from the tent of that man-loving Greek,
Late-hurt Eurypylus, but sate, and every way did seek
To spend the sharp time of his wound, with all the ease he could In medicines, and in kind discourse. But when he might behold
The Trojans past the wall, the Greeks flight-driven, and all in cries, Then cried he out, cast down his hands, and beat with grief his thighs; Then, "O Eurypylus," he cried, now all thy need of me [more necessity Must bear my absence, now a work of Calls hence, and I must haste to call Achilles to the field.

Who knows, but, God assisting me, my words may make him yield?
The motion of a friend is strong." His feet thus took him hence.
The rest yet stood their enemies firm; but all their violence
(Though Troy fought there with fewer men) lack'd vigour to repel Those fewer from their navy's charge, and so that charge as well Lack'd force to spoil their fleet or tents.
And as a shipwright's line (Disposed by such a hand as learn'd from th' Artizan divine

The perfect practice of his art) directs or guards so well
The naval timber then in frame, that all the laid-on steel
Can hew no further than may serve, to give the timber th' end
Fore-purposed by the skilful wright; so both hosts did contend.
With such a line or law applied, to what their steel would gain.
At other ships fought other men, but Hector did maintain
His quarrel firm at Ajax' ship; and so did both employ
About one vessel all their toil; nor could the one destroy
The ship with fire; nor force the man, nor that man yet get gone
The other from so near his ship; for God had brought him on.
But now did Ajax, with a dart, wound deadly in the breast Caletor, son of Clytius, as he with fire
address'd
To burn the vessel; as he fell, the brand fell from his hand.
When Hector knew his sister's son lie slaughter'd in the sand, He call'd to all his friends, and pray'd they would not in that strait Forsake his nephew, but maintain about his corse the fight, And save it from the spoil of Greece. Then sent he out a lance At Ajax, in his nephew's wreak; which miss'd, but made the chance On Ilyphron Mastorides, that was the household friend [defend,
Of Ajax, born in Cythera; whom Ajax did Being fled to his protection, for killing of a man
Amongst the god-like Cytherans. The vengeful javelin ran Quite through his head, above his ear, as he was standing by His fator, then astern his ship, from whence his soul did fly,
And to the earth his body fell. The hair stood up an end
On Ajax; who to Teucer call'd (his brother) saying: "Friend,
Our loved consort, whom we brought from Cythera, and graced
So like our father, Hector's hand hath made him breathe his last.
Where then are all thy death-borne shafts, and that unvalued bow Apollo gave thee?" Teucer straight his brother's thoughts did know,
Stood near him and dispatch'd a shaft, amongst the Trojan fight.
It strook Pisenor's goodly son, young Clistus, the delight
Of the renown'd Polydamas, the bridle in his hand,
As he was labouring his horse, to please the high command.
Of Hector and his Trojan friends; and bring him where the fight Made greatest tumult; but his strife, for honour in their sight, Wrought not what sight or wishes help'd; for, turning back his look,
The hollow of his neck the shaft came singing on, and strook,
And down he fell; his horses back, and hurried through the field
The empty chariot. Panthus's son made all haste, and withheld Their loose career; disposing them to Protiaon's son, Astenous, with special charge, to keep them ever on,
And in his sight. So he again, amongst the foremost went. [Teucer sent:
At Hector then another shaft, incensed
Which, had it hit him, sure had hurt, and, had it hurt him, slain,
And, had it slain him, it had driven all those to Troy again.
But Jove's mind was not sleeping now; it waked to Hector's fame,
And Teucer's infamy; himself (in Teucer's deadly aim)
His well-wrought string dissecuring, that served his bravest bow;
His shaft flew quite another way, his bow the earth did strow.
At all which Teucer stood amazed, and to his brother cried:
"O prodigy! without all doubt, our Angel doth deride
The counsels of our fight; he brake a string my hands put on This morning, and was newly made, and well might have set gone
A hundred arrows; and beside, he strook out of my hand
The bow Apollo gave." He said: "Then, good friend, do not stand More on thy archery, since God (preventer of all grace Desired by Grecians) sights it so. Take therefore in the place
A good large lance, and on thy neck a target cast as bright,
With which, come fight thyself with some, and other some excite,
That without labour at the least (though we prove worser men) Troy may not bring it took our ships. Come, mind our business, then."
This said, he hasted to his tent, left there his shafts and bow,
And sent his double double shield did on his shoulders throw;
Upon his honour'd head he placed his helmet, thickly-plumed,
And then his strong and well-piled lance in his fair hand assumed,
Return'd; and boldly took his place, by his great brother's side.
When Hector saw his arrows broke, out to his friends he cried:
"O friends, be ye yet more comforted; I saw the hands of Jove Break the great Grecian archer's shafts. 'Tis easy to approve That Jove's power is direct with men; as well in those set high [Suddenly, Upon the sudden, as in those depress'd as
And those not in state at all. As now he takes away Strength from the Greeks, and gives it us; then use it, and assay
With join'd hands this approached fleet.
If we can hardly buy
His fame or fate with wounds or death, in Jove's name let him die.
Who for his country suffers death, sustains no shameful thing;
His wife in honour shall survive, his progeny shall spring
In endless summers; and their roofs with patrimony swell;
And all this, though, with all their freight, the Greek ships we repel.
His friends thus cheer'd, on 'th other part, strong Ajax stirr'd his friends:
"O Greeks," said he, "what shame is this, that no man more defends His fame and safety, than to live, and thus be forced to shrink:
Now either save your fleet, or die; unless ye vainly think
That you can live and they destroy'd: perceives not every ear
How Hector heartens up his men; and hath his firebrands here
Now ready to inflame our fleet? be doth not bid them dance,
That you may take your ease and see, but to the fight advance.
No counsel can serve us but this: to mix both hands and hearts,
And bear up close. 'Tis better much, t' expose our utmost parts
To one day's certain life or death, than languish in a war [inferiors far."
So base as this, beat to our ships by our Thus roused he up their spirits and strengths. To work then both sides went, When Hector the Phocesian duke to fields of darkness sent.
Fierce Schedius, Perimedes' son; which Ajax did require With slaughter of Laodamias, that led the foot to fight, And was Antenor's famous son. Polydamas did end.
Otus, surnamed Cylenius, whom Phidas made his friend, Being chief of the Epieians' bands: whose fall when Meges view'd,
He let fly at his feller's life; who (shrinking-in) eschew'd
The well-aim'd lance; Apollo's will denied that Panthus' son Should fall amongst the foremost fights; the dart the mid-breast won
Of Crasus; Meges won his arms. At Meges, Dolops then Bestow'd his lance; he was the son of Lampus, best of men,
And Lampus of Laomedon, well-skill'd in strength of mind,
He strook Phyllides' shield quite through, whose curets, better lined,
And hollow'd fitly, saved his life. Phyles left him,
Who from Epirus brought them home, on that part where the stream
Of famous Selees doth run; Euphetes did bestow,
Being guest with him, those well-proved arms, to wear against the foe,
And now they saved his son from death. At Dolops, Meges threw A spear well-piled, that struck his casque fall in the height; off flew His purple feather, newly made, and in the dust it fell,
While these thus strived for victory, and either's hope served well, Atrides came to Meges' aid, and, hidden with his side,
Let loose a javelin at his foe, that through his back implied
His lusty head, even past his breast; the ground received his weight.
While these made-in to spoil his arms, great Hector did excite
All his allies to quick revenge; and first he wrought upon Strong Menalippus, that was son to great Hyoetaon, With some reproof. Before these wars, he in Perseus fed
Cloven-footed oxen, but did since return where he was bred, Excell'd amongst the Ilians, was much of Priam loved,
And in his court kept as his son. Him Hector thus reproved:
"Thus, Menalippus, shall our blood accuse us of neglect?
Nor moves it thy loved heart, thus urged, thy kinsman to protect?" Seest thou not how they seek his spoil? Come, follow; now no more Our fight must stand at length, but close; nor leave the close before
We close the latest eye of them; or they the lowest stone [Ilion.
Tear up, and sack the citizens of lofty He led; he follow'd like a god. And then must Ajax needs (As well as Hector) cheer his men, and thus their spirits he feeds:
"Good friends, bring but yourselves to feel the noble stings of shame
For what ye suffer, and be men. Respect each other's fame;
For which who strives in shame's fit fear, and puts on ne'er so far,
Comes oftener off than stick engaged; these fugitives of war
Save neither life, nor get renown, nor bear more minds than sheep."
This short speech fired them in his aid, his spirit touch'd them deep,
And turn'd them all before the fleet into a wall of brass;
To whose assault Jove stirr'd their foes, and young Atrides was Jove's instrument, who thus set on the young Antilochus:
"Antilochus, in all our host, there is not one of us
More young than thou; more swift of foot, nor, with both these, so strong.
O would thou wouldst then (for thou canst) one of this lusty throng, That thus comes skipping out before (whoever, any where) Make stick, for my sake, 'twixt both hosts, and leave his bold blood there."
He said no sooner, and retired; but forth he rush'd before
The foremost fighters, yet his eye did every way explore For doubt of odds; out flew his lance; the Trojans did abstain While he was darting; yet his dart he cast not off in vain;"
For Menalippus, that rare son of great Hyceteon,
As bravely he put forth to fight, it fiercely
And at the nipple of his breast, his breast
And then, much like an eager hound, cast Hurt by the hunter, that had left his covert then but new,
The great-in-war-Antilochus, O Menalippus, flew On thy torn bosom for thy spoil. But thy dead no death could not be Hid to great Hector; who all haste made to thee, and made fly Antilochus; although in war he were at all parts skill'd.
But as some wild beast, having done some shrewd turn (either kill'd)
The herdsman, or the herdsman dog and skulk away before
The gather'd multitude makes in; so Nestor's son forbore,
But after him, with horrid cries, both Hector and the rest Show'd of their thirty lances pour'd; who having arm'd his breast
With all his friends, he turn'd it then. Then
On the ships all Troy, Like raw-flesh-nourish'd lions rush'd, and knew they did employ Their powers to perfect Jove's high will;
who still their spirits enfamed,
And quench'd the Grecians; one renown'd, the other often shamed.
For Hector's glory still he stood, and ever went about.
To make him cast the fleet such fire, as never should go out; Heard Thetis' soul petition; and wish'd in any wise
The splendour of the burning ships might satiate his eyes.
From him yet the repulse was then to be on Troy conferr'd,
The honour of it given the Greeks; which thinking on, he stirr'd.
With such addition of his spirit, the spirit
Hector bore
To burn the fleet, that of itself was hot enough before. But now he fared like Mars himself, so brandishing his lance As, through the deep shades of a wood, a raging fire should glance, Stood as when th' ocean is enraged; his eyes were overcome
With fervour, and resembled flames, set off by his dark brows,
And from his temples his bright helm abhorred lightenings throws;
For Jove, from forth the sphere of stars, to his state put his own,
Of the blaze of both the hosts confined in him alone.
And this was, since after this he had not long to live,
This lightning flew before his death, which Pallas was to give (A small time thence, and now prepared) beneath the violence
Of great Pelides. In mean time, his present Thought all things under it; and be, still where he saw the stands
Of greatest strength and bravest arm'd, there he would prove his hands,
Or nowhere; offering to break through, but that pass'd all his power Although his will were past all theirs, they stood him like a tower, Conjoin'd so firm, that as a rock, exceeding high and great,
And so near the hoary sea, bears many a boisterous threat Of high-voiced winds and billows huge, belched on it by the storms;
So stood the Greeks great Hector's charge, and stirred their battellous forms.
He (girt in fire borne for the fleet) still rush'd at every troop;
And fell upon it like a wave, high raised, that then doth stoop
Out from the clouds; grows, as it stoops, with storms, then down doth come And stuff a ship, when all her sides are hid in brackish foam,
Strong gales still raging in her sails, her sailors' minds dismay'd, Death being but little from their lives: so Jove-like Hector fray'd And plied the Greeks, who knew not what would chance, for all their guards.
And as the benevolent king of beasts, leapt into oxen herds
Fed in the meadows of a fen, exceeding great: the beasts
In number infinite; 'mongst whom (their herdsman wanting breasts
To fight with lions, for the price of a black ox's life)
He here and there jumps, first and last, in his bloodthirsty strife, Chased and assaulted; and, at length, down in the midst goes one,
And all the rest spares through the fen;
so now all Greece was gone;
So Hector, in a flight from heaven upon the Grecians cast, Turn'd all their backs; yet only one his deadly lance laid fast,
Brave Myceneus Periphe, Cyreneus' dearest son, Who of the heaven's-Queen-loved king, great Eurystheus, won
The grace to greet in embassy the strength of Hercules, [nobleness
Was far superior to his sire in feats, fight,
Of all the virtues; and all those did such a wisdom guide
As all Mycena could not match; and this man dignified,
Still making greater his renown, the state of Priam's son,
For his unhappy hasty foot, as he address'd
'to run,
Stuck in th' extreme ring of his shield, that 'could his ankles reach'd,
And down he upwards fell, his fall up from the centre fetch'd
A huge sound with his head and helm;
which Hector quickly spied,
Ran in, and in his worthy breast his lance's head did hide;
And slew about him all his friends, who could not give him aid, They grieved, and of his god-like foe fled so extreme afraid.
And now amongst the nearest ships, that first were drawn to shore,
The Greeks were driven; beneath whose d sides, behind them, and before,
And into them they pour'd themselves, and thence were driven again
Up to their tents, and there they stood;
not daring to maintain Their guards more outward; but, betwixt the bounds of fear and shame, Cher'ld still each other; when th' old man, that of the Grecian name Was call'd the pillar; every man thus by his parents pray'd:
"O friends, be men, and in your minds let others' shames be weigh'd.
Know you have friends besides yourselves, possessions, parents, wives,
As well those that are dead to you, as those ye love with lives;
All sharing still their good, or bad, with yours. By these I pray, That are not present (and the more should therefore make ye weigh Their miss of you, as yours of them) that you will bravely stand,
And this forced flight you have sustai'n'd, at length yet countermand."
Supplies of good words thus supplied the deeds and spirits of all.
And so at last Minerva clear'd the cloud that Jove let fall Before their eyes; a mighty light flew beaming every way,
As well about their ships, as where their darts did hottest play. [his associates, Then saw they Hector great in arms, and As well all those that then abstain'd, as those that help'd the fates,
And all their own fight at the fleet. Nor did it now content [hatches went, Ajax to keep down like the rest; he up the Stalk'd here and there, and in his hand a huge great head-hook held, Twelve cubits long, and full of iron. And as a man well-skil'd In horse, made to the martial race, when,
of a number more,
He choose, four, and brings them forth, to run them all before Swarms of admiring citizens, amidst their town's high-way,
And, in their full career, he leaps from one to one, no stay [or leap;
Enforced on any, nor fails he, in either seat
So Ajax with his head-hook leap'd nimbly from ship to ship,
As actively commanding all, them in their men and off [repel,
As men in them, most terribly exhorting to
To save their navy and their tents. But Hector nothing needs
To stand on exhortations now at home, he strives for deeds.
And look how Jove's great queen of birds, sharp-set, looks out for prey, Knows floods that nourish wild-wing'd fowls, and, from her airy way, Beholds where cranes, swans, cormorants, have made their foody fall, Darkens the river with her wings, and stoops amongst them all:
So Hector flew amongst the Greeks, directing his command,
In chief, against one opposite ship; Jove with a mighty hand Still backing him and all his men. And then again there grew A bitter conflict at the fleet. You would have said none drew [so freshly on;
A weary breath, nor ever would they laid
And this was it that fired them both; the Greeks did build upon
No hope but what the field would yield, flight an impossible course;
The Trojans all hope entertain'd, that sword and fire should force Both ships and lives of all the Greeks: and thus, unlike affects Bred like strenufty in both. Great Hector still directs
His powers against the first near ship.
'Twas that fair bark that brought Protestians to those wars, and now her self to nought.
With many Greek and Trojan lives; all spoil'd about her spoil.
One slew another desperately, and close the deadly toil
Was pitch'd on both parts. Not a shaft, nor far-off striking dart
Was used through all. One fight fell out, of one despiteful heart.
Sharp axes, twyhills, two-hand swords, and spears with two heads borne,
Were then the weapons; fair short swords, with sanguine hils still worn,
Had use in like sort; of which last, ye might have numbers view'd Drop with dissolved arms from their hands, as many down-right hew'd
From off their shoulders as they fought, their bawdricks cut in twain.
And thus the black blood flow'd on earth, from soldiers hurt and slain.
When Hector once had seiz'd the ship, he clapt his fair broad hand Fast on the stern, and held it there, and there gave this command:
"Bring fire, and all together shout. Now Jove hath drawn the veil
From such a day as makes amends, for all his storms of hail;
By whose best light we take those ships,
that, in despite of heaven,
Took sea, and brought us worlds of woe;
all, since our peers were given To such a laziness and fear; they would not let me end
Our lingering banes; and charge thus home; but keep home and defend.
And so they ruled the men I led. But though Jove then withheld
My natural spirit, now by Jove 'tis freed, and thus impell'd." This more inflamed them; in so much that Ajax now no more Kept up, he was so drown'd in darts; a little he forbore
The hatches to a seat beneath, of seven foot long, but thought It was impossible to scape; he sat yet where he fought,
And hurl'd out lances thick as hail, at all men that assay'd
To fire the ship; with whom he found his hands so overlaid,
That on his soldiers thus he cried: "O friends, fight I alone?
Expect ye more walls at your backs? towns rampired here are none, No citizens to take ye in, no help in any kind.
We are, I tell you, in Troy's fields; have nought but seas behind,
And fires before; far, far from Greece;
for shame, obey commands,
There is no mercy in the wars; your healths lie in your hands."
Thus raged he, and pour'd out his darts:
whoever he espied
Come near the vessel arm'd with fire, on his fierce dart he died.
All that pleased Hector made him mad:
all that his thanks would earn;
Of which twelve men, his most resolved, lay dead before his stern.
COMMENTARIUS.

"I must here be enforced (for your easier examination) of a simile before, to cite the original words of it; which of all Homer's translators and commentators have been most grossly mistaken, his whole intent and sense in it utterly falsified. The simile illustrates the manner of Juno's parting from Jove, being commanded by him to a business so abhorring from her will, is this:"

"Ως δ' ὅποιος ἄνθρωπος ὁμοίως ἔστη ἐπὶ πολλάραν Ταῖαν ἔλθουσα, ὦροις πυκνάλεγον νοητῷ. Ἑσθ' ἑκάτην τε ἐκείνης τινος πάλιν."

"Ως κρατιός μερικά διεστάτο πότισσα Ἑρώ.

Which is thus converted ad verbum by Spondonas:

"Sicut autem quando discurrerit mens viri, qui per multas Terram praefectus, mentibus prudentibus considerantis, Huc ieteram vel illuc, cogitancique multa; Sic est propter persolvat veneranda Juno."

"Which Lauren. Valla in prose thus translates:

Subvolavit Juno in column eadem festinatione ac celeritate, qua mens prudentis hominis, et qui multum terrarum peragrasit, recursart, cum multa sibi agenda instantum, huc se conferat in illuc.

"Eobanus Hessus in verse thus:

Tam subito, quam sane virum multa plura scientis, Quique peragravit vasta loca plurima terrent. Multa movens animo, nunc huc, nunc avolat illuc.

"To this purpose likewise the Italian and French copies have it. All understanding Homer's intent was (as by the speediness of a man's thought or mind) to illustrate Juno's swiftness in hastings about the commandment of Jupiter, which was utterly otherwise: viz., to show the distraction of Juno's mind in going against her will, and in her despite, about Jove's commandment; which all the history before, in her in-veterate and inflexible grudge to do anything for the good of the Trojans, confirmeth without question. Besides, her morosity and solemn appearance amongst the gods and goddesses (which Themis notes in her looks) shows if she went willingly, much less swiftly, about that business. Nor can the illustration of swiftness be Homer's end in this simile, because he makes the man's mind, to which he resembles her going, stagger, inclining him to go this way and that, not resolved which way to go; which very poorly expresseth swiftness, and as properly agrees with the property of a wise man, when he hath undertaken, and gone far in a journey, not to know whether he should go forward or backward. Let us therefore examine the original words."

"Ως δ' ὅποιος ἄνθρωπος ὁμοίως ἔστη ἐπὶ πολλάραν Ταῖαν ἔλθουσα, &c.

"Sicut vero quando discurrerit vel prorumpit, vel cum impetu exsurget, mens viri, διάδοç signifying ruo, prorumpo, vel cum impetu exsurgo, as having travelled far on an irksome journey (as Juno had done for the Greeks, feigning to Jove and Venus she was going to visit polulos ou neipanta γαῖας, multa nutricites fines terre), and then knows not whether he should go backward or forward, sustains a vehement discourse with himself on what course to resolve, and vexed in mind; which the words ἀποθεωμεν signifying amarus, express, being to be understood mentibus amariss, vexatis, or distracti, with a spiteful, sorrowful, vexed, or distracted mind, not mentibus prudentibus, as all most unwisely in this place convert it, though in other places it intimates so much. But here the other holds congruence with the rest of the simile, from which in the wise sense it abhors, πυκνάλεγον signifying amarus more properly than prudent, being translated prudent merely metaphorically, according to the second deduction; where here it is used more properly according to the first deduction, which is taken from ἀρτος, the larcher tree, whose gum is exceeding bitter; and because things irksome and bitter (as afflictions, crosses, &c.) are means to make men wise, and take heed by others' harms, therefore, according to the second deduction, πυκνάλεγον is taken for causus or prudent. But now that the τραυματ is or application seems to make with their sense of swiftness, the words ἔστη ἐπὶ πολλάραν, being translated by them sic citi propseris; it is thus to be turned in this place, sic rapidé et impetu pulsae, so snatchingly or headlong driven, flew Juno. As we often see with a clap of thunder doves or other fowls driven headlong from their seats, not in direct flight, but as they would break their necks with a kind of reeling; impetu ferris, vel furibundo impetu ferris, all which most aptly agreeth with Juno’s enforced and wrathful parting from Jove, and doing his charge distractedly. This for me. If another can give better, let him shew it, and take it. But in infinite other places is this divine poet thus profaned, which for the extreme labour I cannot yet touch at.

2 Ἀργαλέων, &c. Difficile est, it is a hard thing (saith Minerva to Mars, when she answers his anger for the slaughter of his son Asealaphus) for Jove to deliver the generation and birth of all men from death.

Which commenters thus understand: There were some men that never died, as Tithon the husband of Aurora, Chiron, Glauce made a sea-god, &c., and in Holy Writ (as Spondanus pleaseth to mix them) Enoch and Elias; but because these few were freed from death, Mars must not look that all others were. But this interpretation, I think, will appear to all men at first sight both ridiculous and profane: Homer making Minerva only jest at Mars here (as she doth in other places) bidding him not storm that his son should be slain more than better born, stronger, and worthier men; for Jove should have enough to do (or it were hard for Jove) to free all men from death that are unwilling to die. This mine, with the rest; the other others; accept which you please.

THE END OF THE FIFTEENTH BOOK.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Achilles, at Patroclus’ suit, doth yield
His arms and Myrmidons; which brought to field,
The Trojans fly. Patroclus hath the grace
Of great Sarpedon’s death, sprung of the race
Of Jupiter; his having slain the horse
Of Thetis’ son (fierce Pedasus) the force
Of Hector doth revenge the much-raed end
Of most renown’d Sarpedon on the friend
Of Thetides; first by Euphorbus harm’d,
And by Apollo’s personal power disarm’d.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

In thr Patroclus bears the chance
Of death, imposed by Hector’s lance.

Thus fighting for this well-built ship;
Patroclus all that space
Stood by his friend, preparing words to win the Greeks his grace,
With power of uncontained tears; and, like a fountain pour’d
In black streams from a lofty rock, the Greeks so plagued, deplored.
Achilles, ruthless for his tears, said:
"Why weeps my friend
So like a girl, who, though she sees her mother cannot tend Her childish humours, hangs on her, and would be taken up, Still viewing her with tear-drown’d eyes,
When she hath made her stoop.
To nothing like I can shape thy so unseemly tears.
[thine ears
What causeth them? hath any ill solicited Befall’n my Myrmidons? or news from loved Phthia brought, Told only thee, lest I should grieve, and therefore thus hath wrought
On thy kind spirit? Actor’s son, the good Menoeceus, Thy father, lives; and Peleus mine, great son of Æacus, Amongst his Myrmidons; whose deaths, in duty we ought to mourn.
Or is it what the Greeks sustain, that doth thy stomach turn,
On whom, for their injustice’ sake, plagues are so justly laid?
Speak, man, let both know either’s heart." Patroclus, sighing, said:

"O Peleus’ son (thou strongest Greek by all degrees that lives)
Still be not angry; our sad state such cause of pity gives.
Our greatest Greeks lie at their ships sore wounded; Ithacus, King Agamemnon, Diomed, and good Eurypylus;
But these much-medicine-knowing men, physicians, can recure,
Thou yet unmedicinal still, though thy wound all endure.
Heaven bless my bosom from such wrath as thou soothest as thy bliss, Unprofitably virtuous. How shall our progenies
Born in this age, enjoy thine aid, when these friends, in thy flower, Thou least to such unworthy death? O idle, cruel power;
Great Peleus never did beget, nor Thetis bring forth thee,
Thou from the blue sea, and her rocks, derisive thy pedigree.
What so declines thee? If thy mind shuns any augury, Related by thy mother-queen from heaven’s ordinances.
And therefore thou foresakest thy friends, let me go ease their moans
With those brave relics of our host, thy mighty Myrmidons, That I may bring to field more light to conquer than hath been.
To which end grace me with thine arms, since, any shadow seen
Of thy resemblance, all the power of perjured Troy will fly,
And our so tired friends will breathe; our fresh-set-on supply Will easily drive their wearied off." Thus, foolish man, he sued
For his sure death; of all whose speech Achilles first renew’d
The last part, thus: "O worthy friend, what have thy speeches been?
I shun the fight for oracles, or what my mother queen Hath told from Jove? I take no care, nor note of one such thing;
But this fit anger stings me still, that the insulting king Should from his equal take his right, since he exceeds in power.
This, still his wrong, is still my grief. He look'd at me: parmount
That all men smite, and whom I won by virtue of my spear,
That, for her, overturn'd a town. This rape he made of her,
And used me like a fugitive, an inmate in a town,
That is no city libertine, nor capable of their grain.
But bear we this as out of date; 'tis past, nor must we still Feed anger in our noblest parts; yet thus, I have my will.
As well as our great king of men; for I did ever vow Never to cast off my disdain till, as it falls
Their miss of me knock'd at my fleet, and told me in their cries
I was revenged, and had my wish of all my enemies.
And so of this repeat enough. Take thou my fame-blas'd arms,
And all our fight-thri'st Myrmidons lead to these hot alarms.
Whole clouds of Trojans circle us with hateful eminence;
The Greeks shut in a little shore, a sort of citizens Skipping upon them; all because their proud eyes do not see
The radiance of my helmet there, whose beams had instantly Thrust back, and all these ditches fill'd with carrion of their flesh,
If Agamemmon had been kind; where now they fight as fresh,
As thus far they had put at ease, and at our tents contend.
And may; for the repulsive hand of Diomed doth not spend His raging darts there, that their death could fright out of our fleet;
Nor from that head of eminence, can my poor hearers meet
The voice of great Atrides now. Now Hector's only voice Breaks all the air about both hosts, and, with the very noise Bred by his loud encouragements, his forces fill the field,
And fight the poor Achaians down. But on, put thou my shield Betwixt the fire-plague and our fleet: rush bravely on, and turn War's tide as heaving on their throats. No more let them sally.

Our sweet home-turning: but observe the charge I lay on thee
To each least point, that thy ruled hand may highly honour me,
And get such glory from the Greeks, that they may send again
My most sweet wench, and gifts to boot, when thou hast cast a rein
On these so headstrong citizens, and forced them from our fleet.
With which grace if the god of sounds* thy kind egression greet, Retire, and be not tempted on (with pride to see thy hand Rain slaughter'd carcasses on earth) to run forth thy command
As far as Ilion, lest the gods, that favour Troy, come forth
To thy encounter, for the Sun much loves it; and my worth,
In what thou suffer'st, will be wrong'd, that I would let my friend Assume an action of such weight without me; and transcend His friend's prescription. Do not then affect a further fight Than I may strengthen. Let the rest, when thou hast done this right, Perform the rest. O would to Jove, thou Pallas, and thou Sun,
That not a man housed underneath those towers of Ilion,
Nor any one of all the Greeks, how infinite a sun
Soever all together make, might live un-overcome,
But only we two, 'scaping death, might have the thundering down
Of every stone stuck in the walls of this sacred town."
Thus spake they only 'twixt themselves
And now the foe no more Could Ajax stand, being so oppress'd with all the iron store
The Trojans pour'd on; with whose darts and with Jove's will beside,
His powers were o'er, and his bright heer did deafening blows abide;
His plume, and all head-ornaments, could never hang in rest:
His arm yet labour'd up his shield, an having done their best,
They could not stir him from his stand although he wrought it out With short respirings; and with sweat that ceaseless flow'd about.

* Jupiter called the god of sounds, for the chief sound his thunder.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

His reeking limbs; no least time given to take in any breath;
Ill strengthen'd ill; when one was up, another was beneath.
Now, Muses, you that dwell in heaven, the dreadful mean inspire
That first enforced the Grecian fleet, to take in Trojan fire.
First Hector, with his huge broad sword, cut off, at setting on,
The head of Ajax' ashen lance; which Ajax seeing gone, While unaware, And that he shook a headless spear, a little
His wary spirits told him straight the hand of heaven was there;
And trembling under his conceit, which was that 'twas Jove's deed,²
Who, as he poll'd off his dart's heads, so sure he had decreed
That all the counsels of their war, he would poll off like it,
And give the Trojans victory; so trusted in his wit,
And left his darts. And then the ship was heap'd with horrid brands
Of kindling fire; which instantly was seen through all the strands
In unextinguishable flames, that all the ship embraced.
And then Achilles beat his thighs, cried out, "Patroclus, haste,
Make way with horse. I see at fleet, a fire of fearful rage.
Arm them, lest our fleet it fire, and all our power engage.
Arm quickly, I'll bring up the troops." To these so dreadful wars Patroclus, in Achilles' arms, enlighten'd all with stars,
And richly amm'd, all haste made. He wore his sword, his shield,
His huge-plumed helm and two such spears, as he could nimbly wield.
But the most famed Achilles' spear, big, solid, full of weight,
He only left of all his arms; for that far pass'd the might
Of any Greek to shake but his; Achilles' only ire Shook that huge weapon, that was given by Chiron to his sire, Cut from the top of Pelion, to be heroes' deaths.
His steeds Automedon straight join'd; like whom no man that breathes, Next Peleus' son, Patroclus loved; for like him, none so great.
He found in faith at every fight, nor to outlook a threat.

Automedon did therefore guide for him Achilles' steeds, Xanthius and Baisus swift as wind, begotten
Of Zephyr, and the Harpy born, Podarge, Close to the wavy ocean, where that fierce Harpay fed.
Automedon join'd these before, and with the hindmost gears
He fasten'd famous Pegasus, whom, from The massacres
Made by Achilles, when he took Eetion's wealthy town,
He brought, and, though of mortal race, yet gave him the renown
To follow his immortal horse. And now, before his tents, Himself had seen his Myrmidons, in all habiliments Of dreadful war. And when ye see, upon
A mountain bred,
A den of wolves,³ about whose hearts unmeasured strength is wont,
New come from curry of a stag, their jaws all blood-besmear'd.
And when from some black-water font they all together herd,
There having plentifully lapp'd, with thin
And thrust-out tongues,
The top and clearest of the spring, go Belching from their lungs,
The clop of their feet, look dreadfully, and Entertain no dread,
Their bellies gaunt all taken up, with being so rawly fed;
Then say, that such, in strength and look, were great Achilles' men Now order'd for the dreadful fight; and so with all them then Their princes and their chiefs did show, about their General's friend;
His friend, and all, about himself; who Chiefly did intend
'Th' embattling of horse and foot. To That siege, held so long,
Twice five and twenty sail he brought, twice five and twenty strong Of able men, was every sail. Five colonels he made
Of all those forces; trusty men, and all of Power to lead,
But he of power beyond them all. Menestheus was one,
That ever wore discoulour'd arms; he was A river's son

* A simile most lively expressive.
That fell from heaven, and good to drink was his delightful stream, His name unwearied Sperchius, he loved the lovely dame
Fair Polydora, Peleus' seed, and dear in Borus' sight,
And she to that celestial flood gave this Menestheus light,
A woman mixing with a god. Yet Borus bore the name [dame,
Of father to Menestheus, he marrying the
And giving her a mighty dower; he was the kind descent
Of Perieres. The next man, renown'd with regiment,
Was strong Eudorus, brought to life by one supposed a maid, Bright Polymela, Phylas' seed, but had the wanton play'd
With Argus-killing Mercury; who (fired with her fair eyes,
As she was singing in the quire of her that makes the cries
In clamorous hunting, and cloth bear the the smoked bow of gold) Stole to her bed in that chaste room, that Phoebe chaste did hold,
And gave her that swift-warlike son,
Eudorus, brought to light
As she was dancing; but as soon, as she that rules the plight Of labouring women cased her throes, and show'd her son the sun, Strong Echecaeus, Actor's heir, woo'd earnestly, and won Her good favour, feeing her with gifts of infinite price;
And after brought her to his house, where,
in his grandsire's eyes,
Old Phylas, Polymela's son obtain'd exceeding grace,
And found as careful bringing up, as of his natural race
He had descended. The third chief was fair Maenalides
Pisandrus, who in skill of darts obtain'd supremest praise
Of all the Myrmidons, except their lord's companion.
The fourth charge, aged Phoenix had,
The fifth, Alcmedon, Son of Laeces, and much famed. All these digested thus
In fit place by the mighty son of royal Peleus,
This stern remembrance he gave all:
"You, Myrmidons," said he,
"Lest any of you should forget his threatenings used to me
In this place, and, through all the time, that my just anger reign'd, Attempting me with bitter words, for being so restrain'd,
For my hot humour, from the fight, remember them as these:
'Thou cruel son of Peleus, whom she that rules the seas
Did only nourish with her gall, thou dost ungently hold
Our hands against our wills from fight:
we will not be controill'd,
But take our ships, and sail for home, before we loiter here
And feed thy fury.' These high words exceeding often were
The threats that, in your mutinous troops, ye used to me for wrath To be detain'd so from the field. Now then, your spleens may bathe In sweat of those great works ye wish'd; now, he that can employ A generous heart, go fight, and fright these braggart sons of Troy;
This sets their minds and strengths on fire,
the speech enforcing well, Being used in time; but, being their king's,
it much more did impel, And closer rush'd in all the troops. And as, for buildings high,
The mason lays his stones more thick, against the extremity
Of wind and weather, and even then, if any storm arise,
He thicken's them the more for that, the present act so plies His honest mind to make sure work; so for the high estate
This work was brought to, these men's minds, according to the rate,
Were raised, and all their bodies join'd;
but their well-spoken king,
With his so timely-thought-on speech, more sharp made valour's sting,
And thicken'd so their targets boss'd, so their helmets then;
That shields propped shields, helms helmet knock'd, and men encouraged men.
Patroclus and Automedon did arm before them all, [then the Gener
Two bodies, with one mind inform'd; and Betook him to his private tent, where from a coffer wrought
Most rich and curiously, and given in Thetis to be brought In his own ship, top-fill'd with vests, war-robes to check cold wind;
And tapestries all golden-fringed, and curwith thumbs behind:
The Sixteenth Book of Homer's Iliads.

He took a most unvalued bowl, in which none drank but he;
Nor he but to the deities; nor any deity
But Jove himself was served with that;
And that he first did cleanse With sulphur, then with fluences of Sweetest water rese;
Then wash'd his hands, and drew himself
A mighty bowl of wine,
Which (standing midst the place enclosed
For services divine,
And looking up to heaven and Jove, who Saw him well) he pour'd
Upon the place of sacrifice, and humbly
Thus implored:
"Great Dodonaeus, president of cold
Dodonæ's towers;
Divine Pelasgius, that dwell'st far hence;
About whose bowers
Th' austere prophetic Selli dwell, that still Sleep on the ground,
Go bare, and never cleanse their feet: as I before have found;
Grace to my vows, and hurt to Greece, so Now my prayers intend.
I still stay in the gather'd fleet, but have Dismiss'd my friend,
Amongst my many Myrmidons, to danger
Of the dart:
O grant his valour my renown, arm with My mind his heart,
That Hector's self may know my friend
Can work in single war;
And not then only show his hands, so hot
And singular.
When my kind presence seconds him:
But, fight he ne'er so well,
No further let him trust his fight, but,
When he shall repel Clamour and danger from our fleet, vouch-Safe a safe retreat
To him and all his companies, with fames
And arms defend;
He pray'd, and heaven's great Counsellor gave satisfying ear
To one part of his orisons, but left the other
There;
He let him free the fleet of foes, but safe
Retreat deny'd.
Achilles left that utter part, where he his Spear applied;
And turn'd into his inner tent; made fast
His cup, and then Stood forth, and with his mind beheld the Foes fight and his men,
That fellow'd his great-minded friend, embatled Till they brake
With gallant spirit upon the foe. And as fell wasps, that make Their dwellings in the broad highway,
Which foolish children use (Their cottages being near their nests) to anger and abuse
With ever vexing them, and breed (to Sooth their childish war)
A common ill to many men; since if a traveller (That would his journey's end apply, and pass them unassay'd)
Come near and vex them, upon him the Children's faults are laid,
For on they fly as he were such, and still Defend their own;
So fared it with the fervent mind of every Myrmidon,
Who pour'd themselves out of their fleet
Upon their wanton foes,
That needs would stir them, thrust so near,
And cause the overthrows
Of many others, that had else been never Touch'd by them,
Nor would have touch'd. Patroclus then Put his wind to the stream,
And thus exhort'd: "Now, my friends,
Remember you express
Your late urged virtue, and renown our Great Achaides,
That, he being strong'st of all the Greeks,
His eminence may dim
All others likewise in our strengths, that Far off imitate him.
And Agamemnon now may see his fault
As great as well,
As his place high; dishonouring him that
So much honours all."
Thus made he sparkle their fresh fire,
And on they rush'd; the fleet
Fill'd full her hollow sides with sounds,
That terribly did greet Th' amazed Trojans; and their eyes did second their amaze
When great Memnon's son they saw, and His friend's armour blaze.
All troops stood troubled with conceit that Peleus' son was there,
His anger cast off at the ships; and each look'd everywhere
For some authority to lead the then prepared flight.
Where the fight
Patroclus greeted with a lance the region
Made strongest tumult; near the ship Proteusias brought,
And strook Pyrrhus, who before the fair-helm'd Paeons fought, Led from Amydon, near whose walls the Broad-stream'd Axius flows.
Through his right shoulder flew the dart,
Whose blow strook all the blows In his power from his powerless arm, and down he groaning fell;
His men all flying, their leader fled. This one dart did repel.
The whole guard placed about the ship, whose fire extinct, half burn'd The Peons left her; and full cry to clamorous flight return'd.
Then spread the Greeks about their ships;
triumphant tumult flow'd;
And, as from top of some steep hill the Lightener strips a cloud,
And lets a great sky out from heaven, in whose delightful light,
All prominent foreheads, forests, towers, and temples cheer the sight;
So clear'd these Greeks this Trojan cloud, and at their ships and tents Obtain'd a little time to breathe, but found no present vents
To their inclusions; nor did Troy, though these Peonians fled, Lose any ground, but from this ship they necessity turn'd head.
Then every man a man subdued. Patroelus in the thigh
Strook Arelycus; his dart the bone did break, and fly
Quite through, and sunk him to the earth.
Good Menelaus slew Accomplish'd Thoas, in whose breast, being naked, his lance he threw Above his shield, and freed his soul. Phylides, taking note
That bold Amphimachus bent at him, prevented him, and smote His thigh's extreme part, where (of man) his fattest muscle lies,
The nerves torn with his lance's pile, and darkness closed his eyes.
Antilochus Atymnus seiz'd, his steel lance did impress
His first three guts, and loos'd his life.
At young Nestorides, Maris, Atymnus' brother, flew; and at him Thrasymus,
The brother to Antilochus; his eager javelin's head
[all the bone;
The muscles of his arm cut out, and shiver'd Night closed his eyes, his lifeless corse his brother fell upon,
And so by two kind brothers' hands, did two kind brothers bleed;
Both being divine Sarpedon's friends, and were the darting seed Of Amisosar, that kept the bane of many men
Abhorr'd Chimæra; and such bane now cought his childeren.
Ajax Olliades did take Cleobulus alive, Invading within'd by the press; and at him then let drive.
With his short sword that cut his neck;
whose blood warm'd all the steel;
And cold Death with a violent fate his sable eyes did steal.
Penelus, and Lycon cast together off their darts;
Both miss'd, and both together then went with their swords; in parts
The blade and hilt went, laying on upon the helmet's height.
Penelus' sword caught Lycon's neck, and cut it thorough quite.
His head hung by the very skin. The swift Meriones,
Pursuing flying Acamas, just as he got access To horse and chariot, overtook, and strook him such a blow
On his right shoulder, that he left his chariot, and did strow
The dusty earth; life left his limbs, and night his eyes possess'd.
Idomenius his stern dart at Erymas ad-dress'd,
As, like to Acamas, he fled; it cut the sundry bones Beneath his brain, betwixt his neck, and foreparts; and so runs, Shaking his teeth out, through his mouth, his eyes all drown'd in blood,
So through his nostrils and his mouth (that now dart-open stood) He breathed his spirit. Thus had death from every Grecian chief A chief of Troy. For, as to kids, or lamb's, their cruelest thief (The wolf) steals in, and, when he sees that by the shepherd's sloth
The dams are spersed about the hills, then serves his ravenous tooth With ease, because his prey is weak; so served the Greeks their foes, Discerning well how shrieking flight did all their spirits dispose;
Their biding virtues quite forgot. And now the natural spleen That Ajax bore to Hector still, by all means would have been Within his bosom with a dart; but he that knew the war,
(Well cover'd in a well-lined shield) did well perceive how far The arrows and the javelins reach'd, by being within their sounds And ominous singings; and observed the there-inclining bounds
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Of Conquest, in her aid of him, and so obey'd her change;
Took safest course for him and his, and stood to her as strange.
And as, when Jove intends a storm, he lets out of the stars
From steep Olympus, a black cloud, that all heaven's splendour bars
From men on earth; so from the hearts of all the Trojan host,
All comfort lately found from Jove, in flight and cries was lost.
Nor made they any fair retreat. Hector's unruly horse
Would needs retire him, and he left engaged his Trojan force; Forced by the steepness of the dike, that in ill place they took,
And kept them that would fain have gone.
Their horses quite forsook
A number of the Trojan kings, and left them in the dike;
Their chariots in their foreteams broke.
Patroclus then did strike
While steel was hot, and cheer'd his friends; nor meant his enemies good;
Who when they once began to fly, each way received a flood,
And choked themselves with drifts of dust.
And now were clouds begot Beneath the clouds, with flight and noise;
the horse neglected not Their home intentions; and, where rout was busiest, there pour'd on Patroclus most exhorbs and threats; and then lay overthrown Numbers beneath their axle-trees; who, lying in flight's stream,
Made th' after chariots jolt and jump, in driving over them.
Th' immortal horse Patroclus rode, did pass the dike with ease,
And wish'd the depth and danger more;
and Mencestiaes [Hector's haste;
As great a spirit had to reach retiring
But his fleet horse had too much law, and fetch'd him off too fast.
And as in Autumn the black earth is laden with the storms
That Jove in gusts of rain pours down, being angry with the forms Of judgment in authorized men, that in their courts maintain,
With violent office, wrested laws, and (fearing gods, nor men)
Exile all justice; for whose faults, whole fields are overflown,
And many valleys cut away with torrents headlong thrown From neighbour mountains, till the sea receive them roaring in,
And judged men's labours then are vain, plagued for their judge's sin;
So now the foul defaults of some all Troy were laid upon;
So like those torrents roard they back to windy Ilion;
And so like tempests blew the horse, with ravishing back again
Those hot assiavants, all their works at fleet now render'd vain.
Patroclus, when he had dispersed the foremost phalanxes, Call'd back his forces to the fleet, and would not let them prease,
As they desired, too near the town; but 'twixt the ships and flood,
And their steep rample, his hand steep'd Revenge in seas of blood.
Then Proton was first that fell beneath his fiery lance,
Which strook his bare breast, near his shield. The second Theslor's chance, Old Enop's son, did make himself; who shrinking, and set close
In his fair seat, even with th' approach Patroclus made, did lose
All manly courage, inso much that from his hands his reins Fell flowing down, and his right jaw Patroclus' lance attains; Strook through his teeth, and there it stuck, and by it to him drew Dead Theslor to his chariot. It shew'd, as you when view
An angler from some prominent rock draw with his line and hook
A mighty fish out of the sea; for so the Greek did pluck
The Trojan gaping from his seat, his jaws ope'd with the dart;
Which when Patroclus drew, he fell; his life and breast did part.
Then rush'd he on Erylaus; at whom he hurl'd a stone,
Which strake his head so in the midst, that two was made of one;
Two ways it fell, cleft through his casque.
And then Tlepolemus,
Epaltes, Damastories, Evippus, Echius, Iphiclus, bold Amphoterus, and valiant Eryxus,
And Polyphagus, by his sire surnamed Argeadas,
He heap'd upon the much-fed earth. When Jove's most worthy son (Divine Sarpedon) saw these friends thus stay'd, and others run,
"O shame! Why fly ye?" then he cried,
"Now shew ye feet even.
On, keep your way; myself will meet the man that startles you;
To make me understand his name that flaunts in conquest thus,
And hath so many able knees so soon dissolved to us."
Down jump'd he from his chariot; down
leap'd his foe as light:
And as, on some far-looking rock, a cast of
vultures fight,
Fly on each other, strike and truss, part;
meet, and then stick by,
Tug both with crooked beaks and seres;
cry, fight, and fight and cry;
So fiercely fought these angry kings, and shew'd as bitter galls.
Jove, turning eyes to this stern fight, his wife and sister calls,
And, much moved for the Lydian prince, said: "O that to my son Fate, by this day and man, should cut a thread so nobly spun.
Two minds distract me; if I should now ravish him from fight,
And set him safe in Lycia; or give the Fates their right."
"Austerus, Austerus," she replied, "what unjust words are these?
A mortal, long since mark'd by fate, wouldst thou immortalize?
Do, but by no god be approved: free him,
and numbers more,
Sons of immortals, will live free, that death must taste before These gates of Ilion; every god will have his son a god,
Or storm extremely. Give him then an In brave fight by Patroclus' sword, if he be dear to thee,
And grieves thee for his danger'd life; of which when he is free, Let Death and Somnus bear him hence, till Lycia's natural womb Receive him from his brothers' hands, and citizens; a tomb
And column raised to him. This is the honour of the dead."
She said, and her speech ruled his power;
but in his safety's stead,
For sad ostent of his near death, he steep'd his living name
In drops of blood heaven swet for him, which earth drank to his fame.
And now, as this high combat grew to this too humble end, Sarpidon's death had this state more;
twas usher'd by his friend
And charioteer, brave Thrasymed; whom in his belly's rim Patroclus wounded with his lance, and endless ended him.
And then another act of name foreran his princely fate,
His first lance missing, he let fly a second that gave date.
Of violent death to Pedasus; who, as he joy'd to die
By his so honourable hand, did even in dying neigh.
His ruin startled th' other steeds, the gears crack'd, and the reins Strapp'd his fellows; whose misrule Auto-medon restrains
By cutting the entangling gears, and so disundering quite
The brave-slain beast; when both the rest obey'd, and went foreright.
And then the royal combatants fought for the final stroke;
When Lyca's General miss'd again, his high-raised javelin took Above his shoulder, empty way. But no such speedless flight Patroclus let his spear perform, that on the breast did light
Of his brave foe; where life's strings close about the solid heart, Impressing a recureless wound; his knees then left their part,
And let him fall; when like an oak, a poplar, or a pine,
New fell'd by arts-men on the hills, he stretch'd his form divine Before his horse and chariot. And as a lion leaps [herd in heaps,
Upon a goodly yellow bull, drives all the
And under his unconquer'd jaws, the brave beast sighing dies;–
So sigh'd Sarpidon underneath this prince of enemies,
Call'd Glauclus to him, his dear friend, and said: "Now, friend, thy hands Much duty owe to fight and arms; now for my love it stands Thy heart in much hand to approve that war is harmful; now How active all thy forces are, this one hour's act must show.
First call our Lydian captains up, look round, and bring up all,
And all exhort to stand, like friends, about Sarpidon's fall,
And spend thyself thy steel for me; for be assured no day
Of all thy life, to thy last hour, can clear thy black dismay
In woe and infamy for me, if I be taken hence Spoil'd of mine arms; and thy renown despoil'd of my defence.
Stand firm then, and confirm thy men."
This said, the bounds of death
Concluded all sight to his eyes, and to his nostrils breath.
Patroclus, though his guard was strong, forced way through every doubt, Climb'd his high bosom with his foot, and pluck'd his javelin out,
And with it drow the film and strings of his yet-panting heart;
And last, together with the pile, his princely soul did part.
His horse (spoil'd both of guide and king, thick-snoring and amazed,
And apt to flight) the Myrmidons made nimbly to, and seized.
Glaucon, to hear his friend ask aid, of him past all the rest,
Though well he knew his wound uncured, confusion fill'd his breast.
Not to have good in any power, and yet so much good will.
And (laying his hand upon his wound, that pain'd him sharply still,
And was by Teucer's hand set on from their assail'd steep wall,
In keeping hurt from other men) he did on Phoebus call,
The god of medicines, for his cure:
"Thou king of cures," said he, "That art perhaps in Lycia with her rich progeny,
Or here in Troy: but any where, since thou hast power to hear:
O give a hurt and woful man (as I am now) thine ear,
This arm sustains a cruel wound, whose pains shoot every way,
Afflict this shoulder, and this hand, and nothing long can stay.
A flux of blood still issuing; nor therefore can I stand
With any enemy in fight, nor hardly make Support my lance; and here lies dead the worthiest of men.
Sarpedon, worthy son to Jove: (whose power could yet abstain From all aid in this deadly need) give thou then aid to me,
O king of all aid to men hurt: assuage th' extremity
Of this arm's anguish, give it strength, that by my precedent
I may excite my men to blows; and this dead corse prevent Of further violence." He pray'd, and kind Apollo heard, Allay'd his anguish, and his wound of all the black blood clear'd
That vex'd it so, infused fresh powers into his weaken'd mind:
And all his spirits flow'd with joy that Phoebus stood inclined (In such quick bounty) to his prayers. Then, as Sarpedon wil'd, He cast about his greedy eye; and first of all instill'd [infame their fight
To all his captains all the stings that could for good Sarpedon. And from them, he stretch'd his speedy pace
T' Agenor, Hector, Venus' son, and wise Polydamas; [you now forget
And (only naming Hector) said: "Hector,
Your poor auxiliary friends, that in your toils have swet
Their friendless souls out far from home. Sarpedon, that sustain'd
With justice, and his virtues all, broad Lycia hath not gain'd
The like guard for his person here; for yonder dead he lies Beneath the great Patroclus' lance. But come, let your supplies, Good friends, stand near him. O disdain to see his corse defiled
With Grecian fury; and his arms, by their oppressions spoil'd.
The Myrmidons are come enraged, that such a mighty boot
Of Greeks Troy's arks have made at fleet."
This said, from head to foot
Grief strook their powers past patience, and not to be restrain'd
To hear news of Sarpedon's death; who, though he appertain'd
To other cities, yet to theirs he was the very fort,
And led a mighty people there, of all whose better sort Himself was best. This made them run in flames upon the foe;
The first man Hector, to whose heart Sarpedon's death did go, Patroclus stirr'd the Grecian spirits; and first th' Ajaees, thus:
"Now, brothers, be it dear to you, to fight and succour us,
As ever heretofore ye did, with men first
The man lies slain that first did scale, and Raze the battlement
That crown'd our wall, the Lycian prince.
But if we now shall add Force to his corse, and spoil his arms, a prize may more be had
Of many great ones, that for him will put on to the death."
To this work these were prompt enough;
and each side ordereth
These phalanxes that most had rate of resolutions;
The Trojans and the Lycian powers; the Greeks and Myrmidons.
These ran together for the corse, and closed with horrid cries,
Their armours thundering with the claps laid on about the prise.
And Jove, about th' impetuous broil, pernicious night pour'd out,
As long as for his loved son, pernicious Labour fought.
The first of Troy, the first Greeks fell'd; when, not the last indeed Amongst the Myrmidons, was slain; the great Agamemnon's seed, Divine Epeus, that before had exercised command
In fair Budeus; but because he laid a bloody hand
On his own sister's valiant son, to Peleus and his queen
He came for pardon, and obtained; his slaughter being the mean
He came to Troy, and so to this. He ventured even to touch
The princely carcass: when a stone did more to him by much,
Sent out of able Hector's hand; it cut his skull in twain,
And struck him dead. Patroclus, grieved to see his friend so slain,
Before the foremost thrust himself. And as a falcon frays
A flock of staves or caddesses; such fear brought his essays Amongst the Trojans and their friends; and, angry at the heart,
As well as grieved, for him so slain, another stony dart [in the neck
As good as Hector's he let fly, that dusted Of Sthenelaus; thrust his head to earth first, and did break
The nerves in sunder with his fall: off fell the Trojans too, Even Hector's self, and all as far as any man can throw (Provoked for games, or in the wars to shed an enemy's soul)
A light long dart. The first that turn'd, was he that did control
The targeteers of Lycia, prince Glauceus; who to hell Sent Bathycleaus, Chalcom's son; he did in Hellas dwell,
And shined for wealth and happiness amongst the Myrmidons;
His bosom's midst the javelin strook, his fall gat earth with groans.
The Greeks grieved, and the Trojans joy'd, for whom renown'd a man;
About whom stood the Grecians firm. And then the death began On Troy's side by Meriones; he slew one great in war, Laogonus, Oneter's son, the priest of Jupiter, Created in th' Idaen hill. Betwixt his jaw The dart stuck fast, and loos'd his soul; sad mists of hate and fear Invading him. Anchises' son despatch'd a brazen lance At bold Meriones; and hoped to make an equal change
On him with bold Laogonus; though under his broad shield
He lay so close. But he discern'd, and made his body yield
So low, that over him it flew, and trembling took the ground,
With which Mars made it quench his thirst; and since the head could wound
No better body, and yet thrown from ne' the worse a hand,
It turn'd from earth, and look'd awry. Æneas let it stand,
Much angry at the vain event, and told Meriones
He scape'd but hardly, nor had cause to hope for such success
Another time, though well he knew his dancing faculty,
By whose agility he scape'd; for, had his dart gone by
With any least touch, instantly he had been ever slain.
He answer'd: "Though thy strength be good, it cannot render vain
The strength of others with thy jests; nor art thou so divine,
But when my lance shall touch at thee, with equal speed to thine,
Death will share with it thy life's powers; thy confidence can shun
No more than mine what his right claims." Meneceus' noble son Rebuked Meriones, and said: "What need'st thou use this speech?
Nor thy strength is approved with words, good friend, nor can we reach
The body, nor make th' enemy yield, with these our counterbraves:
We must enforce the binding earth, to hold them in her graves.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

If you will war, fight. Will you speak? give counsel. Counsel, blows, Are 'tis ends of wars and words. Talk here, the time in vain bestows."
He said, and led; and, nothing less for anything he said.
(His speech being season'd with such right) the worthy seconded.
And then, as in a sounding vale, near neighbour to a hill, Wood-sellers make a far-beard noise, with chopping, chopping still,
And lying on, on blocks and trees; so they on men laid load,
And beat like noises into air, both as they strook and trode.
But, part their noise, so full of blood, of dust, of darts, say lattim
Divine Sarpedon, that a man must have an excellent wit
That could but know him, and might fail: so from his utmost head, Even to the low plants of his feet, his form was altered. [flies in spring,
All thrusting near it every way, as thick as That in a sheep-cote (when new milk assembles them) make wing,
And buzz about the top-full pails. Nor ever was the eye
Of Jove averted from the fight; he view'd, thought, ceaselessly
And diversely upon the death of great Achilles' friend;
If Hector there, to wreak his son, should with his javelin end
His life, and force away his arms, or still augment the field;
He then concluded that the flight of much more soul should yield Achilles' good friend more renown, and that even to their gates
He should drive Hector and his host: and so disanimates
The mind of Hector that he mounts his chariot, and takes Flight
Up with him, tempting all to her; affirming his insight Knew evidently that the beam of Jove's all-ordering soles
Was then in sinking on their side, surcharged with flocks of souls.
Then not the noble Lycians stay'd, but left their slaughter'd lord
Amongst the corses' common heap; for many more were pour'd
About on him, while Jove's hand held out the bitter broil.
And now they spoil'd Sarpedon's arms, and to the ships the spoil Was sent by Menestheus. Then Jove thus charged the Sun:
"Haste, honour'd Phoebus, let no more Greek violence be done: [sable blood
To my Sarpedon; but his corse of all the And javelins purged, then carry him, far hence to some clear flood,
With whose waves wash, and then embalm each thorough-cleansed limb
With our ambrosia; which perform'd, divine weeds put on him,
And then to those swift mates and twins, sweet Sleep and Death, commit
His princely person, that with speed they both may carry it
To wealthy Lyca; where his friends and brothers will embrace him;
And tomb it in some monument, as fits a prince's place." [Idalian hill, Then flew Apollo to the fight, from the At all parts putting into act his great Commander's will;
Drew all the darts, wash'd, balm'd the corse; which, deck'd with ornament,
By Sleep and Death, those feather'd twins, he into Lyca sent.
Patroclus then Automedon commands to give his steeds [madly he exceeds Large reins, and all way to the chace; so
The strict commission of his friend; which had he kept, had kept
A black death from him. But Jove's mind hath evermore outstept
The mind of man; who both affrights, and takes the victory [he can justify,
From any hardest hand with ease; which Though he himself commands him fight, as now he put this chase [weights the grace,
In Menestheus his mind. How much then (Patroclus) that Jove gives thee now, in scoles put with thy death,
Of all these great and famous men the honourable breath. [Autonomous,
Of which Adrestus first he slew, and next Epistora, and Perimus, Fylartes, Elatus, Swift Menalippus, Molius; all these were overthrown [proud Ilion
By him, and all else put in rout; and then Had stoop'd beneath his glorious hand, he If Phoebus had not kept the tower, and help'd Raged so with his lance, [the Ilions.
Sustaining ill thoughts against the prince.
Thrice to the prominence Of Troy's steep wall he bravely leap'd; thrice Phoebus thrust him thence,
Objecting his all-dazzling shield, with his resistless hand;
But fourthly, when, like one of heaven, he would have stirr'd his stand,
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Even to the last beam of my life, their necessary day.
And here, in place of us and ours, on thee shall vultures prey,
Poor wretch; nor shall thy mighty friend afford thee any aid,
That gave thy parting much deep charge, and this perhaps he said:
'Fugal Patroclus, turn not face, nor see my fleet before
The curets from great Hector's breast, all gilded with his gore, Thou hast in pieces.' If thus vain were his far-stretch'd commands,
As vain was thy heart to believe his words lay in thy hands.'
He, languishing, replied: 'This proves thy glory worse than vain,
That when two gods have given thy hands what their powers did obtain, (They conquering, and they spoiling me both of my arms and mind,
It being a work of ease for them) thy soul should be so blind
To oversee their evident deeds, and take their powers to thee;
When if the powers of twenty such had dared t' encounter me,
My lance had stray'd earth with them all.
Thou only dost obtain
A third place in my death; whom, first, a harmful fate hath slain

Effected by Latona's son; second, and first of men, Euphorbus. And this one thing more concerns thee; note it then;
Thou shalt not long survive thyself; nay, now death calls for thee,
And violent fate: Achilles' lance shall make this good for me.'
Thus death join'd to his words his end;
his soul took instant wing,
And to the house that hath no lights descended, sorrowing For his sad fate, to leave him young, and in his ablest age.
He dead, yet Hector ask'd him why, in that prophetic rage,
He so forespake him; when none knew but great Achilles might Prevent his death, and on his lance receive his latest light?
Thus setting on his side his foot, he drew out of his wound
His brazen lance, and upwards cast the body on the ground;
When quickly, while the dart was hot, he charged Automedon, Divine guide of Achilles' steeds, in great contention
To seize him too; but his so swift and deathless horse, that fetch Their gift to Peleus from the gods, soon rapt him from his reach.

COMMENTARIUS.

1 Αイ γαρ Ζευ τε νάταρ, κατεκατείχεναι. These last verses in the original by many austere ancients have suffered expunction, as being unworthy the mouth of an hero, because he seems to make such a wish in them. Which is as poorly conceited of the expungers as the rest of the places in Homer that have groaned or laughed under their castigation, Achilles not out of his heart (which any true eye may see) wishing it, but out of a frolic and delight-some humour, being merry with his friend in private, which the verse following in part expresseth:

'Οδι καὶ γαναστα τολπά άλλαξαν άγαλλον. Sic hi quidem talius inter se loquebantur.
Inter se intimating the meaning aforesaid. But our divine master's most ingenious imitating the life of things (which is the soul of a poem) is never respected nor perceived by his interpreters, only standing pedantically on the grammar and words, utterly ignorant of the sense and grace of him.
2 Τιω ἄλειψαν τίνες ἀνεμούς, κατεκατείχεναι. 'Εργα βοών, &c. Agnovit autem Ajax in animo inculpat opera dorum, μυθον τε, exhorruitique. Another most ingenious and spiritful imitation of the life and ridiculous humour of Ajax I must needs note here, because it flies all his translators and interpreters, who take it merely for serious, when it is apparently sceptical and ridiculous, with which our author would delight his understanding reader, and mix mirth with matter. He saith, that Hector cut off the head of Ajax' lance, which he seeing would needs affect a kind of prophetic wisdom (with which he is never charged in Homer) and imagined strongly the cutting off his lance's head cast a figure thus deep; that as Hector cut off that, Jove would utterly cut off the heads of their counsels to that fight, and give the Trojans victory. Which to take seriously and gravely is most dull, and, as I may say, Aiantical: the voice κείπε (which they expound πράξεις, and indeed is τόνδε, κείπε, signifying most properly τόνδε) helping well to decipher the irony. But to understand gravely that the cutting off his lance's head argued Jove's intent to cut off their counsels, and to allow the wit of Ajax for his so far-lentched apprehension, I suppose no man can make less than idle and witless. A plain continuance, therefore, it is of Ajax' humour, whom in divers other places he plays upon, as in likening him, in the Eleventh Book, to a mill ass, and elsewhere to be noted hereafter.

Eustathius would doubt whether Sleep and Death carried Sarpedon's person, personally, to Lycia; or not rather make no question of the contrary? Homer nor any poet's end in such poetical relations, being to affirm the truth of things personally done; but to please with the truth of their matchless wits, and some worthy doctrine conveyed in it. Nor would Homer have any believe the personal transporation of Sarpedon by Sleep and Death, but only varieth and graceith his poem with these prosopopoeias, and delivers us this most ingenious and grave doctrine in it: That the hero's body, for which both those mighty hosts so mightily contended, Sleep and Death (those same quaedam inania), took from all their personal and solid forces. Wherewith he would further note to us, that, from all the bitterest and deadliest conflicts and tyrannies of the world, Sleep and Death, when their worst is done, deliver and transfer men: a little mocking withal the vehement and greedy prosecutions of tyrants and soldiers against, or for that, which two such deedless poor things take from all their empery. And yet, against Eustathius' manner of slighting their powers, what is there, of all things belonging to man, so powerful over him as Death and Sleep? And why may not our Homer (whose words I hold with Spondanus ought to be an undisputable deed and authority with us) as well personate Sleep and Death, as all men besides personate Love, Anger, Sloth, &c.? Thus only where the sense and soul of my most worthily reverenced author is abused, or not seen, I still insist; and glean these few poor corn ears after all other men's harvests.

THE END OF THE SIXTEENTH BOOK.
THE SEVENTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.
A dreadful fight about Patroclus’ corpse.
Euphorbus slain by Menelaus’ force.
Hector in the armour of Aeneidaes.
Antilochus relating the decease.
Of slain Patroclus to fair Thetis’ son.
The body from the striving Trojans won.
Th’ Ajaxes making good the after field;
Make all the subject that this book doth yield.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
In Rhé the venturous hosts maintain
A slaughterous conflict for the slain.

Nor could his slaughter rest conceal’d from Menelaus’ ear;
Who flew amongst the foremost fights, and with his targe and spear Circled the body, as much grieved, and with as tender heed
To keep it theirs, as any dam about her first-born seed,
Not proving what the pain of birth would make the love before;
Nor to pursue his first attaint Euphorbus’ spirit forbore;
But, seeing Menelaus chief in rescue of the dead, Assay’d him thus: “Atrides, cease, and leave the slaughtered
With his embured spoil to the man, that first, of all our state,
And famous succours, in fair fight, made passage to his fate;
And therefore suffer me to wear the good name I have won Amongst the Trojans, lest thy life repay what his hath done.”

“O Jupiter,” said he, incensed, “thou art no honest man
To fly so past thy power to do. Not any lion can,
Nor spotted leopard, nor boar, whose mind is mightiest
In pouring fury from his strength, advance so proud a crest

* This Euphorbus was he that, in Ovid, Py-thagoras saith he was in the wars of Troy.

As Panthus’ fighting progeny. But Hyperrenor’s pride,
That joy’d so little time his youth, when he My force in arms, and call’d me worst of all our chivalry,
And stood my worst, might teach ye all to shun this surcudrie;
I think he came not safely home, to tell his wife his acts.
[fate exacts,
Nor less right of thy insolence my equal
And will obtain me, if thou stay’st. Retire then, take advice:
A fool sees nought before ’tis done, and still too late is wise.”

This moved not him but to the worse;
since it renew’d the sting
That his slain brother shot in him, re-member’d by the king,
To whom he answer’d: “Thou shalt pay, for all the pains endured By that slain brother, all the wounds sustain’d for him, recured
With one made in thy heart by me. “Tis true thou madest his wife
A heavy widow, when her joys of wedlock scare had life,
And hurt’st our parents with his grief; all which thou gloriest in, Forespeaking so thy death, that now their grief’s end shall begin.
To Panthus, and the snowy hand of Phrontes, I will bring Those arms, and that proud head of thine;
and this laborious thing Shall ask no long time to perform; nor be my words alone,
But their performance; Strength, and Fight, and Terror thus sets on.”

This said, he strook his all-round shield; not shrunk that, but his lance That turn’d head in it. Then the king assay’d the second chance;
First proving to the king of gods; and his dart entry got (The force much driving back his toe) in low part of his throat,
And ran his neck through. Then fell pride, and he; and all with gore His locks, that like the Graces were, and which he ever wore
In gold and silver ribands wrapp'd, were piteously wet.
And when alone in some choice place, a husbandman hath set
The young plant of an olive tree, whose root being ever fed With plenty of delicious springs, his branches bravely spread,
And all his fresh and lovely head, grown curled with snowy flowers,
That dance and flourish with the winds that are of gentlest powers;
But when a whirlwind, got aloft, stoops with a sudden gale;
Tears from his head his tender curls, and tosseth therewithal
His fix'd root from his hollow mines; it well presents the force
Of Sparta's king; and so the plant, Euphorbus and his corse.
He slain, the king stripp'd off his arms;
and with their worthy prise, (All fearing him) had clearly pass'd, if heaven's fair eye of eyes
Had not, in envy of his acts, to his encounter stirr'd
The Mars-like Hector; to whose powers the rescue he pretend'd
Of those fair arms, and took the shape of Mentas, colonel
Of all the Citones that near the Thracian Hebrus dwell.
Like him, he thus puts forth his voice:
"Hector, thou scourst the field In headstrong pursuit of those horse, that hardly are compelld'
To take the draught of chariots, by any mortal's hand; their command,
The great grandchild of Aeacus hath only Whom an immortal mother bore. While thou attendst on these,
The young Atrides, in defence of Meno-tiades, Hath slain Euphorbas." Thus the god took troop with men again;
And Hector, heartily perplex'd, look'd round and saw the slain Still shedding rivers from his wound; and then took envious view Of brave Atrides with his spoil; in way to whom he flew
Like one of Vulcan's quenchless flames:
Atrides heard the cry
That ever usher'd him, and sigh'd, and said: "O me; if I Should leave these goodly arms, and him, that here lies dead for me, I fear I should offend the Greeks; if I should stay and be Alone with Hector and his men, I may be compass'd in;

[may quickly win
Some slight or other they may use, many Their wills of one, and all Troy comes ever where Hector leads.
But why, dear mind, dost thou thus talk?
when men dare set their heads Against the gods, as sure they do that fight with men they love, Straight one or other plague ensues. It cannot therefore move
The grudge of any Greek that sees I yield to Hector, he Still fighting with a spirit from heaven.
And yet if I could see Brave Ajax, he and I would stand, though
'gainst a god; and sure
'Tis best I seek him, and then see if we two can procure
This corse's freedom through all these. A little then let rest
The body, and my mind be still; of two bads choose the best."
In this discourse, the troops of Troy were in with him, and he Made such a lion-like retreat, as when the herdsmen see
The royal savage, and come on, with men, dogs, cries, and spears,
To clear their horned stall; and then the kingly heart he bears (With all his high disdain) falls off; so from this odds of aid
The golden-hair'd Atrides fled, and in his strength displayed
Upon his left hand him he wish'd, extremely busied
About encouraging his men, to whom an extreme dread
Apollo had infused. The king reach'd Ajax instantly,
And said: "'Come, friend, let us two haste, and from the tyranny Of Hector free Patroclus' corse." He straight and gladly went;
And then was Hector halting off the body, with intent To spoil the shoulders of the dead, and give the dogs the rest,
His arms he having prised before; when Ajax brought his breast.
To bar all further spoil; with that he had, sure Hector thought
"Twas best to satisfy his spleen; which temper Ajax wrought.
With his mere sight, and Hector fled:
the arms he sent to Troy.
To make his citizens admire, and pray
Jove send him joy.
Then Ajax gather'd to the corse, and hid it with his targe:
There setting down as sure a foot, as, in the tender charge
Of his loved Whelps a lion doth; two hundred hunters near
To give him onset, their more force make him the more austere, Drowns all their clamours in his roars;
darts, dogs, doth all despise,
And lets his rough brows down so low they cover all his eyes;
So Ajax look'd and stood, and stay'd for great Priamides.
When Glaucus Hippolochides saw Ajax
thus depress
The spirit of Hector, thus he chid: "O goodly man at arms,
In fight a Paris, why should fame make thee fort 'gainst our harms, Being such a fugitive? now mark, how well thy boasts defend [shall descend Thy city only with her own. Be sure it To that proof wholly. Not a man of any Lycian rank
Shall's trike on't brooke more for thy town; for no man gets a thank Should he eternally fight here, nor any guard of thee.
How wilt thou, worthless that thou art, keep off an enemy
From our poor soldiers, when their prince,
Sarpedon, guest and friend To thee, and most deservedly, thou flew'st from his end,
And left to all the lust of Greece? O gods, a man that was (In life) so huge a good to Troy, and to thee such a grace.
(In death) not kept by thee from dogs! If my friends will do well, We'll take our shoulders from your walls,
and let all sink to hell;
As all will, were our faces turn'd. Did such a spirit breathe
In all you Trojans, as becomes all men that fight beneath
Their country's standard, you would see, that such as prop your cause With like exposure of their lives, have all the honour'd laws
Of such a dear confederacy kept to them to a thread,
As now ye might reprise the arms Sarpe-don forfeited

By forfeit of your rights to him, would you but lend your hands, And force Patroclus to your Troy. Ye know how dear he stands In his love, that of all the Greeks is, for himself, far best,
And leads the best near-fighting men; and therefore would at least Redem Sarpedon's arms; nay him, whom you have likewise lost. [and cost
This body drawn to Ilion would after draw A greater ransom, if you pleased; but Ajax startles you;
'Tis his breast bars this right to us; his looks are darts enow To mix great Hector with his men. And not to blame ye are,
You choose foes underneath your strengths;
Ajax exceeds ye far.
Hector look'd passing sour at this, and answer'd: "Why darest thou, (So under) talk above me so? O friend, I thought till now
Thy wisdom was superior to all th' inhabitants
Of gleby Lycia; but now impute apparent wants
To that discretion thy words show, to say I lost my ground For Ajax' greatness. Nor fear I the field in combat's drown'd, Nor force of chariots, but I fear a power much better seen
In right of all war than all we: that god, that holds between Our victory and us his shield; lets conquest come and go
At his free pleasure; and with fear converts her changes so Upon the strongest. Men must fight when his just spirit impels, Not their vain glories. But come on, make thy steps parallels To these of mine, and then be judge, how depth the work will draw.
If then I spend the day in shifts, or thou canst give such law
To thy destructive speeches then, or if the Grecian host
Holds any that in pride of strength holds up his spirit most,
Whom, for the carriage of this prince that thou enforceth so, I make not stoop in his defence. You, friends, ye hear and know How much it fits ye to make good this Grecian I have slain,
For ransom of Jove's son, our friend; play then the worthy men, Till I endue Achilles' arms." This said, he left the fight,
And call'd back those that bore the arms, not yet without his sight,
In convoy of them towards Troy. For them be changed his own,
Removed from where it rained tears, and sent them back to town.
Then put he on the eternal arms, that the celestial states
Gave Peleus; Peleus, being old, their use appropriates
To his Achilles, that, like him, forsook them not for age.
When he, whose empire is in clouds, saw Hector bent to wage War in divine Achilles' arms, he shook his head, and said:
"Poor wretch, thy thoughts are far from death, though he so near hath laid His ambush for thee. Thou put'st on those arms, as braving him Whom others fear; hast slain his friend, and from his youthful limb Torn rudely off his heavenly arms; himself being gentle, kind,
And valiant. Equal measure then, thy life in youth must find.
Yet since the justice is so strict, that not Andromache, [take of thee
In thy denied return from fight, must ever
Those arms, in glory of thy acts; thou shalt have that frail blaze Of excellence, that neighbours death: a strength even to amaze." To this his sable brows did bow; and he made fit his limb
To those great arms, to fill which up the War-god enter'd him Austere and terrible, his joints and every part extends With strength and fortitude; and thus to his admiring friends High Clamour brought him. He so shined, that all could think no less
But he resembled every way great-soul'd Æacides.
Then every way he scour'd the field, his captains calling on;
Asteropius, Eunomus (that foresaw all things done), Glaucus, and Medon, Desinor, and strong Thersiophus
Phorcis, and Mestheles, Chromius, and great Hippothous;
To all these, and their populous troops, these his excitaments were:
"Hear us, innumerable friends, near-bordering nations, hear:
We have not call'd you from our towns, to fill our idle eye
With number of so many men (no such vain empery Did ever joy us) but to fight; and of our Trojan wives,
With all their children, manfully to save the innocent lives,
In whose cares we draw all our towns of aiding soldiers dry.
With gifts, guards, victual, all things fit;
and hearten their supply
With all like rights; and therefore now let all sides set down this,
Or live, or perish; this of war the special secret is.
In which most resolute design, whoever bears to town: [ning the renown
Patroclus (laid dead to his hand) by wings
Of Ajax' slaughter, the half-spoil we wholly will impart
To his free use, and to ourself the other half convert;
And so the glory shall be shared, ourself will have no more Than he shall shine in." This drew all to bring abroad their store Before the body: Every man had hope it would be his,
And forced from Ajax. Silly fools, Ajax prevented this
By raising rampires to his friend with half their carcasses.
And yet his humour was to roar, and fear, and now no less
To startle Sparta's king, to whom he cried out: "O my friend!
O Menelaus! ne'er more hope to get off; here's the end
Of all our labours. Not so much I fear to lose the corse (For that's sure gone, the fowls of Troy and dogs will quickly force That piece-meal) as I fear my head, and thine, O Atreus' son.
Hector a cloud brings will hide all. Instant destruction, Grievous and heavy, comes. O call our peers to aid us; fly."
He hastened, and used all his voice, sent far and near his cry:
"O princes, chief lights of the Greeks, and you that publicly Eat with our General and me; all men of charge; O know [that will show Love gives both grace and dignity to any Good minds for only good itself, though presently the eye [hard for me 'tis, any Of him that rules discern him not."

VOL. III.
A number of them set on work, and in an orb they pull,
That all ways all parts of the hide they may extend at full:
So here and there did both parts hate the corse in little place,
And wrought it all ways with their sweat; the Trojans hoped for grace
To make it reach to Ilion, the Grecians to their fleet.
A cruel tumult they stir'd up, and such, as should Mars see 't (That horrid hurrier of men) or she that betters him, Minerva, never so incensed, they could not disesteem.
So baneful a contention did Jove that day day
Of men and horse about the slain. Of whom his god-like friend Had no instruction. So far off, and underneath the wall
Of Troy, that conflict was maintain'd; which was not thought at all
By great Achilles, since he charged, that having set his foot
Upon the ports, he would retire, well knowing Troy no boot
For his assailants without himself; since not by him, as well
He knew, it was to be subdued. His mother oft would tell
The mind of mighty Jove therein, oft hearing it in heaven; [instruction given
But of that great ill to his friend was no
By careful Thetis. By degrees must ill events be known.
The foes clef of one to other still, about the overthrow.
His death with death infected both. Even private Greeks would say Either to other: "Twere a shame, for us to go our way,
And let the Trojans bear to Troy the praise of such a prise:
Which, let the black earth gasp, and drink our blood for sacrifice,
Before we suffer. 'Tis an act much less unfortunate,
And then would those of Troy resolve, though certainly our fate
Will fell us altogether here. Of all not turn a face."
Thus either side his fellows' strength excited past his place,
And thus through all the unfruitful air, an iron sound ascended
Up to the golden firmament; when strange affects contended.

In these immortal heaven-bred horse of great Acastes, Whom (once removed from forth the fight) a sudden sense did seize
Of good Patroclus' death; whose hands they oft had undergone,
And bitterly they wept for him. Nor could Automedon
With any manage make them stir; oft use the scourge to them, Oft use his fairest speech, as oft threats never so extreme,
They neither to the Hellespont would bear him, nor the fight;
But still as any tombstone lays his never-stirred weight
On some good man or woman's grave for rites of funeral:
So unremoved stood these steeds, their heads to earth let fall,
And warm tears gushing from their eyes, with passionate desire
Of their kind manager; their manes, that flourish'd with the fire
Of endless youth allotted them, fell through the yoky sphere, Ruthfully ruffled and defiled. Jove saw their beauty cheer,
And, pitying them, spake to his mind: "Poor wretched beasts," said he,
"Why gave we you t' a mortal king, when immortality
And incapacity of age so dignifies your states?
Was it to haste the miseries pour'd out on human fates?
Of all the miserablest things that breathe and creep on earth,
No one more wretched is than man. And for your deathless birth, Hector must fail to make you prise. Is't not enough he wears,
And glories vainly in those arms? Your chariots and rich gears, Besides you, are too much for him. Your knees and spirits again
My care of you shall fill with strength, that so ye may sustain Automedon, and bear him off. To Troy I still will give [bloody feet arrive, The grace of slaughter, till at fleet their Till Phoebus drink the western sea, and sacred darkness throws Her sable mantle 'twixt their points." Thus in the steads he blows Excessive spirit; and through the Greeks and Ilions they rapt
The whirring chariot, shaking off the crumbled centre wrapt.
Amongst their tresses; and with them, Automedon let fly
Amongst the Trojans, making way through all as frightfully
As through a jangling flock of geese a lordly vulture beats, Given way with shrieks by every goose, that comes but near his threats;
With such state fled he through the press, pursuing as he fled;
But made no slaughter; nor he could, alone the works do,
Upon the sacred chariot. How could he both works do,
Direct his javelin, and command his fiery horses too?
At length he came where he beheld his friend Alcimedon,
That was the good Laercius', the son of Aemón's son;
Who close came to his chariot side, and ask'd: "What god is he That hath so robb'd thee of thy soul, to run thus franticly Amongst these fore-fights, being alone; thy fighter being slain,
And Hector glorying in his arms?" He gave these words again:
"Alcimedon, what man is he, of all the Argive race,
So able as thyself to keep, in use of press
These deathless horse; himself being gone, that like the gods had th' art
Of their high manage? therefore take to thy command his part,
And ease me of the double charge, which thou hast blamed with right."
He took the scourge and reins in hand, Automedon the fight:
Which Hector seeing, instantly, Æneas standing near He told him, he discern'd the horse, that mere immortal were, Address'd to fight, with coward guides, and therefore hoped to make A rich prise of them, if his mind would help to undertake,
For those two could not stand their charge. He granted, and both cast Dry solid hides upon their necks, exceeding soundly brast;
And forth they went, associate with two more god-like men, Aretus and bold Chromius; nor made they question then
To prise the goodly-crested horse, and safely send to hell
The souls of both their guardians. O fools, that could not tell
They could not work out their return from fierce Automedon Without the liberal cost of blood; who first made crison
To father Jove, and then was fill'd with fortitude and strength;
When (counselling Alcimedon to keep at no great length
The horse from him, but let them breathe upon his back, because He saw th' advance that Hector made, whose fury had no laws
Proposed to it, but both their lives and those horse made his prise, Or his life theirs) he call'd to friend these well-approved supplies;
Th' Ajaees, and the Spartan king, and said,
"Come, princes, leave
A sure guard with the corse, and then to your kind care receive Our threaten'd safeties. I discern the two chief props of Troy Prepared against us. But herein, what best men can enjoy Lies in the free knees of the gods." My dart shall lead ye all.
The sequel to the care of Jove I leave, whatever fall."
All this spake good Automedon; then, brandishing his lance,
He threw, and strook Aretus' shield, that gave it enterance Through all the steel, and, by his belt, his belly's inmost part
It pierced, and all his trembling limbs gave life up to his dart.
Then Hector at Automedon a blazing lance let fly, Whose flight he saw, and falling flat, the compass was too high,
And made it stick beyond in earth, th' extreme part burst, and there Mars buried all his violence. The sword then for the spear Had changed the conflict, had not haste sent both th' Ajaees in,
Both serving close their fellows' call, who, where they did begin,
There drew the end. Priamides, Æneas, Chromius (In doubt of what such aid might work) left broken-hearted thus

* In the Greek always this phrase is used, not in the hands, but in νοστομα καταρχα, in the knees of the gods lies our help, &c.
Arctus to Automedon, who spoil'd his arms, and said:
"A little this revives my life for him so lately dead, Though by this nothing countervail'd." And with this little vent
Of inward grief, he took the spoil; with which he made ascent
Up to his chariot, hands and feet of bloody stains so full
That lion-like he look'd, new turn'd from tearing up a bull.
And now another bitter fight about Patroclus grew,
Tear-thirsty, and of toil enough; which Pallas did renew,
Desending from the cope of stars, dismiss'd by sharp-eyed Jove
To animate the Greeks: for now, incessant change did move
His mind from what he held of late. And as the purple bow Jove bends at mortal's, when of war he will the signal throw,
Or make it a presage of cold, in such tempestuous sort.
That men are of their labours cased, but labouring cattle hurt;
So Pallas in a purple cloud involved herself, and went.
Amongst the Grecians, stirr'd up all; but first encouragement
She breathed in Atreus' younger son; and, for disguise, made choice Of aged Phoenix shape, and spake with his unwearied voice:
"O Menelaus, much defame, and equal heaviness,
Will touch at thee, if this true friend of great Ajax said.
Dogs fear beneath the Trojan walls; and therefore bear thee well, Toil through the host, and every man with all thy spirit impel."
He answer'd: "O thou long-since born,
O Phoebus, that hast won
The honour'd foster-father's name of Thetis' god-like son,
I would Minerva would but give strength to me, and but keep These busy darts off; I would then make in indeed, and steep
My income in their bloods, in aid of good Patroclus; much His death afflicts me, much. But yet, this Hector's grace is such
With Jove, and such a fiery strength and spirit he has, that still [so royal will!
His spear is killing, killing still."

Minerva joy'd to hear; since she did all the gods outgo
In his remembrance. For which grace she kindly did bestow Strength on his shoulders, and did fill his knees as liberally
With swiftness, breathing in his breast the courage of a fiery, Which loves to bite so, and doth bear man's blood so much good will,
That still, though beaten from a man, she flies upon him still;
With such a courage Pallas fill'd the black parts near his heart,
And then he hasted to the slain, cast off a shining dart,
And took one Podes, that was heir to old Eetion,
A rich man and a strenuous, and by the people done Much honour, and by Hector too, being consort and his guest;
And him the yellow-headed king laid hold on at his waist;
In offering flight, his iron pile strook through him, down he fell,
And up Atrides drew his corse. Then Phoebus did impel
The spirit of Hector, Phoebus like, sur-named Asiadès, Whom Hector used (of all his guests) with greatest friendliness,
And in Abydus stood his house; in whose form thus he spake:
"Hector! what man of all the Greeks will any terror make
Of meeting thy strength any more, when thou art terrified
By Menelaus? who, before he slew thy friend, was tried A passing easy soldier, when now (besides his age) Imposed by him) he draws him off, and not a man to friend,
From all the Trojans. This friend is Podes, Eetion's son."
This hid him in a cloud of grief, and set him foremost on,
And then Jove took his snake-fringed shield and Ida cover'd all
With sulphury clouds, from whence he leabhored lightnings fall,
And thunder'd till the mountain shook and with this dreadful state
He usher'd victory to Troy, to Argos flight and fate.
Penelope Beoetius was he that foremost fled Being wounded in his shoulder's height, but there the lance's head Stook lightly, glancing to his mouth, because it strook him near, thrown from Polydamas. Leitus next left the fight in fear (Being hurt by Hector in his hand) because he doubted sore. His hand in wished fight with Troy would hold his lance no more. Idomeneus sent a dart at Hector (rushing in, and following Leitus) that strook his bosom near his chin, And brake at top, The Ilians for his escape did shout. When Hector at Deucalides another lance sent out, As in his chariot he stood; it miss’d him narrowly, For, as it fell, Cuarus drave his speedy chariot by, and took the Trojan lance himself; he was the charioteer of stern Meriones, and first on foot did service there, Which well he left to govern horse, for saving now his king, With driving ’twixt him and his death, though thence his own did spring, Which kept a mighty victory from Troy, in keeping death from his great sovereign. The fierce dart did enter him beneath His ear, betwixt his jaw and it, drave down, cut through his tongue, and strook his teeth out; from his hands the horses’ reins he flung, Which now Meriones received as they bestrew’d the field, and bade his sovereign scourge away, he saw that day would yield no hope of victory for them. He fear’d the same and fled, Nor from the mighty-minded son of Telamon lay hid, for all his clouds, high Jove himself, nor from the Spartan king. [varying They saw him in the victory, he still was for Troy. For which sight Ajax said: “O heavens, what fool is he That sees not Jove’s hand in the grace now done our enemy? Not any dart they touch but takes, from whomsoever thrown, valiant or coward; what he wants Jove adds, not any one wants his direction to strike sure; nor ours to miss as sure. But come, let us be sure of this, to put the best in order that lies in us; which two-fold is, both to fetch off our friend, and so to fetch him off as we may likeliest contend. To fetch ourselves off; that our friends surviving may have right In joy of our secure retreat, as he that fell in fight, being kept as sure from further wrong: of which perhaps they doubt, and looking this way, grieve for us, not able to work out. Our pass from this man-slaughterer, great Hector, and his hands, that are too hot for men to touch, but that these thirsty sands Before our fleet will be enforced to drink our headlong death. Which to prevent by all fit means, I would the parted breath of good Patroclus, to his friend, with speed imparted were, by some he loves; for, I believe, no heavy messenger Hath yet inform’d him. But alas, I see no man to send, both men and horse are hid in mists that every way descend. O father Jupiter, do thou the sons of Greece release of this felt darkness; grace this day with fit transparencies; and give the eyes thou givest, their use; destroy us in the light, and work thy will with us, since needs thou wilt against us fight.” this spake he weeping, and his tears Saturnius pity show’d, dispersed the darkness instantly, and drew away the cloud from whence it fell; the sun shined out, and all the host appear’d; and then spake Ajax, whose heard prayer his spirits highly cheer’d: “Brave Menelaus, look about; and if thou canst desary Nestor’s Antilochus alive, incite him instantly to tell Achilles that his friend, most dear to him, is dead.” [he said, he said, nor Menelaus stuck at any thing as loth to do it, but he went. As from a graizer’s stall a lion goes, when overlaid with men, dogs, darts, and all, not easily losing a fat ox, but strong watch all night held, his teeth yet waterine; oft he comes, and is as oft repell’d,
The adverse darts so thick are pour'd before his brow-hid eyes,
And burning firebrands which, for all his great heart's heat, he files,
And strumming, goes his way betimes; so from Patroclus went Atrides, much against his mind, his doubts being vehement
Lest, he gone from his guard, the rest would leave for very fear.
The person to the spoil of Greece. And yet his guardians were Th' Ajaces and Meriones; whom much his care did press,
And thus exhort: "Ajaces both, and you Meriones
Now let some true friend call to mind the gentle and sweet nature
Of poor Patroclus; let him think, how kind to every creature
His heart was living, though now dead." Thus urged the fair-hair'd king,
And parted, casting round his eye. As when upon her wing
An eagle is, whom men affirm to have the utmost sight,
Of all air's region of fowls, and, though of mighty height,
Sees yet within her heavy form of humble shrubs, close laid,
A light-foot hare, which straight she stoops, trusses, and strikes her dead;
So dead thou strook'st thy charge, O king, through all war's thickets so Thou look'st, and swiftly found'st thy man exhorting 'gainst the foe;
And heartening his piled men to blows used in the war's left wing;
To whom thou saidst: "Thou god-loved man, come here, and hear a thing Which I wish never were to hear. I think even thy eye sees What a destruction God hath laid upon the sons of Greece,
And what a conquest he gives Troy; in which the best of men, Patroclus, lies exanimate; whose person passing fain
The Greeks would rescue and bear home; and therefore give thy speed
To his great friend, to prove if he will do so good a deed
To fetch the naked person off, for Hector's shoulders wear [Hastened to hear
His prised arms." Antilochus was highly
This heavy news, and stood surprised with stupid silence long;
His fair eyes standing full of tears; his voice, so sweet and strong,
Stuck in his bosom; yet all this wrought in him no neglect.
Of what Atrides gave in charge; but for that quick effect
He gave Laocoon his arms (his friend that had the guide
Of his swift horse) and then his knees were speedily applied
In his sad message, which his eyes told all the way in tears.
Nor would thy generous heart assist his sore-charged soldiers
O Menelaus, in mean time, though left in much distress;
Thou sent'st them god-like Thrasymedes,
And madest thy kind regress
Back to Patroclus; where arrived, half breathless thou didst say
To both th' Ajaces: "I have sent this messenger away
To swift Achilles, who, I fear, will hardly help us now, Though mad with Hector; without arms he cannot fight, ye know.
Let us then think of some best mean, both how we may remove The body, and get off ourselves from this vociferous drove,
And fate of Trojans." "Bravely spoke at all parts," Ajax said,
"O glorious son of Atreus. Take thou then straight the dead,
And thou, Meriones; we two, of one mind as one name,
Will back ye soundly, and on us receive the wild-fire flame
That Hector's rage breathes after you, before it come at you."
This said, they took into their arms the body; all the show,
That might be, made to those of Troy, at arms' end bearing it.
Out shriek'd the Trojans when they saw the body borne to fleet,
And rush'd on. As at any boar, gash'd with the hunter's wounds,
A kennel of the sharpest set and sorest bitten hounds
Before their youthful huntsmen haste, and eagerly awhile [affected spoil:
Pursue, as if they were assured of their
But when the savage, in his strength as confident as they,
Turns head amongst them, back they fly,
And every one his way;
So troop-meal Troy pursued awhile, laying on with swords and darts;
But when th' Ajaces turn'd on them, and made their stand, their hearts Drunk from their faces all their bloods, and not a man sustain'd
The foreface, nor the after-fight. And thus Greece nobly gain'd
The person towards home. But thus, the changing war was rack'd
Out to a passing bloody length; for as once put in act
A fire, invading city roofs, is suddenly engrost,
And made a wondrous mighty flame, in which is quickly lost
A house, long building, all the while a boisterous gust of wind Lumbering amongst it; so the Greeks, in hearing of their friend,
More and more foes drew, at their heels a tumult thundering still Of horse and foot. Yet as when mules, in halting from a hill
A beam or mast, through soul deep way, well-clapp'd, and hearten'd, close Lie to their labour, tug and sweat, and passing hard it goes,
Urged by their drivers to all haste; so dragg'd they on the corse, Still both th' Ajaces at their backs, who back still turn'd the force.
Though after it grew still the more. Yet as a sylvan hill [narrow channel still, Thrusts back a torrent, that hath kept a Till at his oaken breast it beats, but there a check it takes, [stir it makes,
That sends it over all the vale, with all the Nor can with all the confluence break through his rooty sides;
In no less firm and brave repulse, th' Ajaces curb'd the prides
Of all the Trojans; yet all held the pursuit in his strength, [Venus, who at length Their chiefs being Hector, and the son of Put all the youth of Greece beside in most amazeful rout, [and shrieking out;
Forgetting all their fortitudes, distraught,
A number of their rich arms lost, fall'n from them here and there,
About, and in the dilke; and yet, the war concludes not here.

COMMENTARIUS.

Eobanus thus in verse:—

—— Ac si quis distendere pellem Taurinam jubeat, crassam pinguedine multa, Mutilorum manibus, terre desuetum ansum,
Et liquor omnis hunc; sic ipsa tempore parvo Patroclus in diversis, manum numeros trahebat, &c.

To answer a hot objection made to me by a great scholar for not translating Homer word for word and letter for letter, as out of his heat he strained it, I am enforced to cite this admirable simile, like the other before in my Annotations at the end of the Fifteenth Book, and refer it to my judicial reader's examination whether such a translation becomes Homer or not; by noting so much as needs to be by one example: whether the two last above-said translators, in being so short with our everlasting master, do him so much right as my poor conversion, expressing him by necessary exposition and illustration of his words and meaning with more words or not. The reason of his simile is to illustrate the stricte of both the armies for the body of Patroclus; which it doth perform most inimitably, their toil and sweat about it being considered, which I must pray you to turn to before. The simile itself, yet, I thought not unfit to insert here to come up the closer to them with whom I am to be compared, my pains and understanding converting it thus:—

And as a huge ox-hide
A currier gives amongst his men, to supple and extend With oil, till it be drunk withal, they tug, stretch out, and spend Their oil and liquor liberally, and chase the leather so They make it breathe a vapour out, and in their
A number of them set a-work, and in an orb they pull,
That all ways all parts of the hide they may extend at full;
So here and there did both hosts hale the corse in little place,
And wrought it all ways with their sweat, &c.*

In which last words of the application considered, lies the life of this illustration: our Homer's divine invention wherein, I see not in any of their shorter translations touched at. But what could express more the toil about this body, forcing it this way and that, as the opposite advantage served on both sides? An ox's hide, after the tanning, asking so much labour and oil to supple and extend it,—ραβδών μεθῶνον ἀλογος Ἀριστερόν, τεμενενηταμ πτερυγίων; to be stretched out, being drunk with tallow, oil, or liquor; the word μεθῶνον, which signifies τεμενενηταμ, of μεθυ signifying οὕριον sum (being a metaphor) and used by Homer, I thought fit to express so, both because it is Homer's, and doth much more illustrate than τερασ πτερυγίων μυληδόν, as Eobanus turns it. But Valla leaves it clearly out, and with his briefness utterly maims the simile, which (to my understanding being so excellent) I could not but with such much repetition and labour inculcate the sense of it, since I see not that any translator hath ever thought of it. And therefore (against the objector that would have no more words than Homer used, in his translator) I hope those few words I use more, being necessary to express such a sense as I understand in Homer, will be at least borne withal; without which, and other such needful explanations, the most ingenious invention and sense of so matchless a writer might pass endlessly obscure and unthought on; so manner of translation being partly built on this learned and judicious authority: Est scilicet interpretis, non verborum numerum et ordinem sectare, sed res ipsas et sententias attende perpendere, easque verbis et formulis orationis vestre adoneis et aptis ei lingua in quam converterit.

* —ει γαρ Ἀθηνη, &c. Minerva appearing to Menelaus like Phoenix, and encouraging him (as you may read before) to fight, he speaks as to Phoenix and wishes Minerva would but put away the force or violence of the darts, and he would aid and fight bravely; which is a continuance of his character, being expressed for the most part by Homer ridicul ous and simple. The original words yet, because neither Eobanus nor Valla understood the character, they utterly pervert; as, if you please to examine them, you may see. The words are these, φωτιαν οὗ τος περαστε, which Spondanus truly interprets, telorum vero depulerit impetum; ἄριστον being a compound of οὕριον, signifying arcus, repello, propulse, abigo; and yet they translate the words, et telis sivem affrerrat, as if Menelaus wished that Pallas would give force to his darts; which Eobanus follows, saying, et tela volentia praestet, most ignorantly and unsufferably converting it, supposing them to be his own darts he spoke of, and would have blessed with Minerva's addition of virtue and power; where Homer's are plain; he spoke of the enemy's darts, whose force if she would avert, he would fight for Patroclus.

and therefore cites him upon this place, playing upon Homer; which, because it is already answered in the irony to be understood in Homer (he laughing at all men so ridiculous) I forbear to repeat, and cite only Eustathius, that would save it with altering the word ὑπόσπορος, which signifies confidentia, or audacia (per metathesis litere ὑπόσπορος), for ὑπόσπορος which is tenebris; of which I see not the end, and yet cite all to shew how such great clerks are perplexed, and abuse Homer, as not being satis com- potes mentis poetice; for want of which (which all their reading and language cannot supply) they are thus often gravelled and mistaken.

4 "De aere, &c. Veluti aquila. The sport Homer makes with Menelaus is here likewise confirmed and amplified in another simile, resembling him intentionally to a hare-finder, though, for colour's sake, he listeth the word eagle; as in all other places where he presents him (being so eminent a person) he hides his simplicity with some shadow of glory or other. The circumstances making it clear, being here, and in divers other places, made a messenger from Ajax and others to call such and such to their aid; which was unfit for a man of his place, if he had been in magnanimity and valour equal, or anything near it. But to confirm his imperfection therein in divers other places, he is called μελαγχώς νιγματις, mollis bellator; and therefore was fittest to be employed to call up those that were hardier and abler. In going about which business, Homer shews how he looked about, keering like a hare-finder; for to make it simply a simile illustrating the state of his address in that base affair had neither wit nor decorum. Both which being at their height in the other sense (because our Homer was their great master to all accomplishment) let none detract so misely from him as to take this otherwise than a continuance of his irony.
THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

ACHILLES mourns, told of Patroclus' end;
When Thetis doth from forth the sea ascend
And comfort him; advising to abstain
From any flight till her request could gain Ext arms of Vulcan. Juno yet commands
To show himself. And at the lake he stands
In sight of th' enemy; who with his sight Fires; and a number perish in the flight.
Patroclus' person (safe brought from the wars)
His soldiers wash. Vulcan the arms prepares.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Sigma continues the alarms,
And fashions the renowned arms.

They sought still like the rage of fire,
And now Antilocthus
Came to Aegides, whose mind was much solicitous
For that which, as he fear'd, was fall'n.
He found him near the fleet
With upright sail-yards, uttering this to his heroic counsel:
"Ay me, why see the Greeks themselves, thus beaten from the field,
"And routed headlong to their fleet? O let not heaven yield [was foretold,
Effect to what my sad soul fears, that, as I
The strongest Myrmidon next me, when I should still behold
The sun's fair light, must part with it.
Fast doubt Memocius' son
Is he on whom that fate is wrought. O wretch, to leave undone
What I commanded; that, the fleet once freed of hostile fire, Not meeting Hector, instantly he should his powers retire."
As thus his troubled mind discourse,
Antilocthus appe'd,
And told with tears the sad news thus:
"My lord, that must be heard
Which would to heaven. I might not tell;
Memocius' son lies dead,
And for his naked cors (his arms already forfeit, And worn by Hector) the debate is now most vehement."
This said, grief darken'd all his powers.
With both his hands he rent

The black mould from the forced earth,
And pour'd it on his head,
Smear'd all his lovely face; his weeds, divinely fashioned,
All flaid and mangled; and himself he threw upon the shore,
Lay, as laid out for funeral, then tumbled round, and tore His gracious curls. His ecstasy he did so far extend,
That all the ladies won by him and his now slaughter'd friend, Afflicted strangely for his plight, came shrieking from the tents,
And fell about him, beat their breasts, their tender linearments Dissolved with sorrow. And with them wept Nestor's warlike son, Fell by him, holding his fair hands, in fear he would have done
His person violence; his heart, extremely straiten'd, burn'd.
Beat, swell'd, and sigh'd as it would burst.
So terribly he mourn'd,
That Thetis, sitting in the deeps of her old father's sons,
Heard, and lamented. To her plaints the bright Nereides Plock'd all, how many those dark guls soever comprehend.
There Glauce, and Cymodoce, and Spio, did attend,
Nefer, and Cymothee, and calm Amphiphoee, Thalia, Thoa, Panope, and swift Dyna-mene,
Actea, and Linnoria, and Hallia the fair, Famed for the beauty of her eyes, Amathia/for her hair,
Iear, Proto, Clymene, and curl'd Dexam-ene,
Pherus, Doris, and with these the smooth
Amphimone,
Chaste Galatea so renown'd, and Callianira,
came,
With Doto and Orythia, to cheer the mourful dame:
Apseudes likewise visited, and Callianassa gave
Her kind attendance, and with her Agava graced the cave.
From heaven's high powers, solemnizing thy sacred nuptial bands,
As th' only present of them all, and fitted well their hands,
Being lovely, radiant, marvellous. \( \text{O} \) would to heav'n thy throne,
With these fair deities of the sea, thou still hast'd sat upon,
And Peleus had a mortal wife; since by his means is done
So much wrong to thy grieved mind, my death being set so soon,
And never suffering my return to grace of Peleus' court;
For I wish it; nor to live, in my mean's
But that the crying blood, for vengeance of my friend Mangled by Hector, may be still'd; his foe's death paying his end."
She, weeping, said: "That hour is near,
And thy death's hour then nigh;
Which, in thy wish served of thy foe, succeedeth instantly."
"And instantly it shall succeed," he answer'd, "since my fate Allow'd not to my will a power to rescue,
Of his late slaughter, my true friend. Far from his friends he died, Whose wrong therein my eyes had light
Yet now I neither light myself, nor have so spent my light, [numbers infinite
That either this friend or the rest (in Slaught'red by Hector) I can help; nor grace with wish'd repair
To our dear country; but breathe here unprofitable air,
And only live a load to earth with all my strength, though none
Of all the Grecians equal it. In counsel many a one Is my superior; what I have, no grace Disgrace'eth all. How then too soon can hastiest death supplant My fate-cursed life? her instrument to my indignity Being that black fiend Contention; whom would to God might die
To gods and men; and Anger too, that kindles tyranny
In men most wise, being much more sweet
Than liquid honey, is [enmities;
To men of power, to satiate their watchful
And like a plant fume it spreads through all their breasts; as late
It stole stern passage thorough mine, which he did instigate.
That is our General. But the fact so long past, the effect Must vanish with it, though both grieved; nor must we still respect Our soothed humours. Need now takes the rule of either's mind.
And when the loser of my friend his death in me shall find,
Let death take all. Send him, ye gods; I'll give him my embrace;
Not Hercules himself shunn'd death, though dearest in the grace Of Jupiter; even him Fate stoop'd, and Juno's cruelty.
And if such fate expect my life, where death strikes I will lie.
Meantime I wish a good renown, that these deep-breasted dames
Of Ilium and Dardania may, for the extinguish'd flames
Of their friends' lives, with both their hands wipe miserable tears
From their so curiously-kept cheeks, and be the officers
To execute my sights on Troy, when (seeing my long retreat
But gather'd strength, and gives my charge an answerable heat)
They well may know twas I lay still, and that my being away Presented all their happiness. But any further stay (Which your much love perhaps may wish) assay not to persuade;
All vows are kept, all prayers heard; now, free way for fight is made.'
The silver-footed Dame replied: 'It fits thee well, my son,
To keep destruction from thy friends; but those fair arms are won
And worn by Hector, that should keep thyself in keeping them, Though their fruition be but short, a long death being near him,
Whose cruel glory they are yet. By all means then forbear
To tread the massacres of war, till I again
From Mecibera with fit new arms; which, when thy eye shall see
The sun next rise, shall enter here with his first beams and me.'
Thus to her sisters of the sea she turn'd, and bade them ope
The doors and deeps of Nereus; she in Olympus' top Must visit Vulcan for new arms to serve her weakful son,
And bade inform her father so, with all things further done.
This said, they underwent the sea, self flew up to heaven.
In mean space, to the Hellespont ships the Greeks were driven,
In shameful rout; nor could they from rage of Priam's son, Secure the dead of new assaults, horse and men made on With such impression. Thrice the hands of Hector seized,
And thrice th' Ajaxes thump'd him With whose repulse displeased,
He wreak'd his wrath upon the towns to the corse again
Made horrid turnings, crying out of pulsed men,
And would not quit him quite for a lion almost serv'd
Is not by upland herdsmen driven urging to be served,
With more contention, than his story by those two of a name;
And had perhaps his much-praised th' airy-footed Dame, Swift Iris, had not stoop'd in haste bassadress from heaven
To Peleus' son, to bid him arm; he sarge being given By Juno, kept from all the gods; she excid him:
"Rise, thou most terrible of men, at the precious limb
Of thy beloved; in whose behalf, thy flict now runs high
Before the fleet, the either host fell mutually,
These to retain, those to obtain. A whom most of all
Is Hector prompt; he's apt to do some fair service, be your pall Will make his shoulders; his head he'll be most famous; rise,
No more lie idle, set the foe a much costly prize
Of thy friend's value than let dog him a monument, Where thy name will be graver ask'd, "What deity hath sent Thy presence hither?" She replied Turnia; she alone,
Not high Jove knowing, nor oneゴール doth inhabit on Snowy Olympus." He again: "H
The work of slaughter, when mi are worn by Priam's son?
How will my goddess mother grieve me, if I should not arm Till she brought arms from M
But should I do such harm
To her and duty; who is he, but Ajax, that can vaunt
The fitchen my breast with his arms; and he is conversant
Amongst the first in use of his; and ramp
pries of the foe.
Shall near Patroclus build to him." "All this," said she, "we know,
And wish thou only wouldst but show thy person to the eyes
Of these hot lians, that, afraid of further enterprise,
The Greeks may gain some little breath." She woo'd, and he was won;
And straight Minerva honour'd him, who Jove's shield clapp'd upon His mighty shoulders, and his head gear with a cloud of gold
That cast bays round about his brows.
And as when arms unfold city in an isle, from thence a fume at first appears Being in the day) but when the Even her cloudy forehead rears, Shick show the fires, and up they cast their splendour, that men nigh, Their distress, perhaps may set ships out to their supply; (toshow such aid) from his head a light rose, scaling heaven,
And forth the wall he swept and stood, a brake the precept given his great mother, midst in right, but sent astray his heart.
Then Palladas for off school, who did be want them here.

Juno commanded to go down; who, in his power's despite,
Sunk to the ocean, over earth dispersing sudden right.
And then the Greeks and Trojans both gave up their horse and chariots.
The Trojans all to council call'd, ere they refresh'd their hearts.
With any supper, not would sit: they were so stuff'd with fear.
To see as they from heavy fight, Achilles
appear.
Juno then began to speak, who only could discern Things future in things past, and was town friend to Hector, born In one night both. He thus advised:
"Consider well, my friends,
In this so great and sudden change, that now itself extends,
What change is best for us t' oppose. To this stands my command:
Make now the town our strength, not here abide light's rosy hand,
Our wall being far off, and our foe, much greater, still as near.
Till this foe came, I well was pleased to keep our watches here,
My fit hope of the fleet's surprise inclined me so: but now
'Tis strongerly guarded, and, their-strength increased, we must allow Our own proportionate amends. I doubt exceedingly
That this indifference of fight 'twixt us and th' enemy, nothing so confuse And these bounds we prefix to them, will 'th uncour't mind of Achilles. To height of his design Twelve men, of greatest strength in Troy, left with their lives exhale.
Their chariots and their darts, to death with his three summons call'd.
And then the Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
And hearse it, bearing it to fleet; his friends with all remorse Marching about it. His great friend dis solving then in tears
To see his truly-fored return'd, so horded upon an hearse.
Whom with such horse and chariot he set out safe and whole,
Now wounded with un pitying steel, now sent without a soul,
Never again to be restored, never received but so;
He follow'd mourning bitterly. The sun

(yet far to go)
Of rich Troy to it, brass and gold abounding; but her store
Is now from every house exhaust; possessions evermore
Are sold out into Phrygia and lovely Mecony;
And have been ever since Jove's wrath
And now his clemency Gives me the mean to quit our want will glory, and conclude
The Greeks in sea-bords and our seas;
To slack it, and extrude His offer'd bounty by our flight. Fool is thou art, bewray
This counsel to no common ear, for a man shall obey;
If any will, I'll check his will. But what our self command,
Let all observe. Take suppers all, keep watch of every hand.
If any Trojan have some spoil, that takes his too much care, [any fail
Make him dispose it publicly; 'tis bett
The better for him, than the Greek;
When light then decks the skies,
Let all arm for a fierce assault. If great Achilles rise,
And will enforce our greater toil, it must rise so to him.
On my back he shall find no wings, spirit shall force my limb
To stand his worst, and give or take Mars is our common lord,
And the desirous swordman's life he ex-pits to sword.
"This counsel get applause of all, so we were all wise;
Minerva rob'd them of their brains, like the ill advice
The great men gave, and leave the go since by the meaner given.
All took their suppers; but the Great spent all the heavy even About Patroclus' mournful rites; Per leading all
In all the forms of heaviness; he by side did fall,
And his man-slaughtering hands impr into his oif-kiss'd breast, Sighs blew up sighs; and hom-like, grin with a goodly crest,
That in his absence being rob'd hunters of his whelps, Returns to his so desolate den; and his wanted helps,
Beholding his unlook'd-for wants,
roaring back again;
Hunts the sly hunter, many a vale reso ing his disdain.
Then Jove ask'd Juno if at length she had sufficed her spleen, Achilles being won to arms? or if she had not been The natural mother of the Greeks, she did so still prefer Their quarrel? She, incensed, ask'd: why he still was taunting her,
For doing good to those she loved? since man to man might show
Kind offices, though thrall to death; and though they did not know Half such deep counsels as disclosed beneath her far-seeing state:
She, reigning Queen of goddesses, and being ingenerate
Of one stock with himself, besides the state of being his wife.
And must her wrath, and all to Troy, continue such a strife
From time to time exult him and her?
This private speech they had.
And now the silver-footed Queen had her ascension made

To that incorruptible house, that starry golden court
Of fiery Vulcan, beautiful amongst th' immortal sort.
Which yet the lame god built himself.
She found him in a sweat
About his bellows, and in haste had twenty tripods beat,
To set for stools about the sides of his well-built hall,
To whose feet little wheels of gold he put,
And enter his rich dining-room; alone, their motion free,
And back again go out alone, miraculous
And thus much he had done of them, yet handles were to add,
For which he now was making studs.
And while their fashion had Employment of his skilful hand, bright Thetis came near:
Whom first fair well-hair'd Charis saw, that was the nuptial fire
Of famous Vulcan, who the hand of Thetis took, and said:
"Why, fair-train'd, loved, and honour'd dame, are we thus visited By your kind presence? You, I think, were never here before.
Come near, that I may banquet you, and make you visit more."
She led her in, and in a chair of silver (being the fruit Of Vulcan's hand) she made her sit, a foot-stool of a suit

Apposing to her crystal feet; and call'd the god of fire,
For Thetis was arrived, she said, and entertain'd desire
Of some grace that his art might grant.
"Thetis to me," said he,
"Is mighty, and most reverend, as one that nourish'd me,
When grief consum'd me, being cast from heaven by want of shame
In my proud mother, who, because she brought me forth so late,
Would have me made away; and then,
bad I been much distress'd,
Had Thetis and Eurynome in either's silver breast
Not rescued me; Eurynome that to her father had [them I made Reciprocal Oceanus. Nine years with A number of well-arted things, round bracelets, buttons brave, Whistles, and earthenware. My forge stood in a hollow cave,
About which, murmuring with foam, th' unmeasured ocean
Was ever beating; my abode known or to god nor man, But Thetis and Eurynome, and they would see me still:
They were my loving guardians. Now then the stormy hill,
And our particular roof, thus graced with bright-hair'd Thetis here, It fits me always to repay, a recompense as dear
[Charis, and appose
To her thoughts, as my life to me. Hastie, Some dainty guest-rites to our friend, while I my bellows loose
From fire, and lay up all my tools." Then from an anvil rose
Th' unwieldy monster, halted down, and all awry he went.
He took his bellows from the fire, and every instrument
Lock'd safe up in a silver chest. Then with a sponge he drest
His face all over, neck and hands, and all his hairy breast;
Put on his coat, his sceptre took, and then went halting forth, Handmaids of gold attending him, resem-bbling in all worth Living young damsels, fill'd with minds and wisdom, and were train'd In all immortal ministry; virtue and voice contain'd,
[these still waited on
And moved with voluntary powers; and Their fiery sovereign, who (not apt to walk) sate near the throne Of fair-hair'd Thetis, took her hand, and thus he courted her:
"For what affair, O fair-tried queen, reverend to me, and dear,
Is our court honour'd with thy state, that hast not heretofore Perform'd this kindness? Speak thy thoughts, thy suit can be no more Than my mind gives me charge to grant,
Can my power get it wrought?
Or that it have not only power of only act in thought?"
She thus: "O Vulcan, is there one, of all that are of heaven,
That in her never-quiet mind Saturnus hath given
So much affliction as to me; whom only he subjects,
Of all the sea-nymphs, to a man; and makes me bear th' affects
Of his frail bed; and all against the free-

His body to a naked height, but jointly gives his growth
A thousand branches; yet to him so short a life I brought,
That never I shall see him more return'd to Pelcus' court.
And all that short life he hath spent in most unhappy sort;
For first he won a worthy dame, and had her by the hands
Of all the Grecians, yet this dame Atride countermands;
For which in much disdain he mourn'd and almost pined away.
And yet for this wrong he received some honour, I must say;
The Greeks, being shut up at their ship not suffer'd to advance
A head out of their batter'd sterns; an mighty supplication
By all their brave men hath been made gifts, honours, all proposed For his reflection; yet he still kept close and saw enclosed
Their whole host in this general plagu-

THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

In conduct of him. All the day, they fought before the gates
Of Sesa, and, most certainly, that day had seen the dates
Of all Troy's honours in her dust, if Phoebus (having done Much mischief more) the envied life of good Memoeus' son
Had not with partial hands enforced, and all the honour given To Hector, who hath prised his arms. And therefore I am driven To change thy knees for new defence to my loved son. Alas,
His life, prefix'd so short a date, had need spend that with grace.
A shield then for him, and a helm, fair greaves, and cuirasses, such As may renown thy manliness, and honour him as much,
I sue for at thy famous hands." "Be confident," said he,
"Let these wants breed thy thoughts no care. I would it lay in me
To hide him from his heavy death, when fate shall seek for him,
As well as with renowned arms to fit his goodly limb;
Which thy hands shall convey to him; and all eyes shall admire,
See, and desire again to see, thy satisfied desire.
This said, he left her there, and forth he went to his shield;
Apposed them to the fire again, commanding them to blow.
Through twenty holes made to his heart, at once blew twenty pair,
That fired his goads, sometimes with soft, sometimes with vehement, air,
As he will'd, and his work required. Amidst the flame he cast Tin, silver, precious gold, and brass; and in the stock he placed A mighty anvil; his right hand a weighty hammer held,
His left his tongs. And first he forged a strong and spacious shield Adorn'd with twenty several hues; about whose verge he beat
A ring, three fold and radiant, and on the back he set A silver handle; five-fold were the equal lines he drew
About the whole circumference, in which his hand did smew (Directed with a knowing mind) a rare variety;
For in it he presented earth; in it the sea
In it the never-wearyed Sun, the Moon exactly round,
And all those stars with which the brows of ample heaven are crowned, Orion, all the Pleiades, and those seven Atlas got,
The close-beam'd Hyades, the Bear, sur-named the Chariot,
That turns about heaven's axle-tree, holds one a constant eye Upon Orion, and, of all the cressets in the sky, Ocean Empyre.
His golden forehead never bows to th'.
Two cities in the spacious shield he built, with goodly state Of diverse-languaged men. The one did Impitals celebrate,
Observing at them solemn feasts; the brides from forth their bowers
With torches usher'd through the streets, a world of paramours Excited by them; youths and maids in lovely circles danced;
To whom the merry pipe and harp their sprightly sounds advanced,
The matrons standing in their doors admiring. Otherwhere
A solemn court of law was kept, where throngs of people were,
The case in question was a fine, imposed on one that slew
The friend of him that follow'd it, and for the fine did sue;
Which th' other pleaded he had paid. The adverse part denied,
And openly affirm'd he had no penny satisfied. [ord 'twas best Both put it to arbitration; the people
For both parts, and th' assistants too gave their dooms like the rest.
The heralds made the people peace: the seniors then did bear
The voiceful heralds' sceptres, sat within a sacred sphere,
On polished stones, and gave by turns their sentence. In the court
Two talents gold were cast, for him that judged in justest sort.
The other city other wars employ'd as busily;
Two armies glittering in arms, of one con-
Besieged it; and a parley had with those within the town.
Two ways they stood resolved; to see the city overthrown,
Or that the citizens should heap in two parts all their wealth,
And give them half. They neither liked, but arm'd themselves by stealth, Left all their old men, wives, and boys, behind to man their walls, and stole out to their enemy's town. The Queen of martials
And Mars himself, conducted them; both which, being forged of gold, Must needs have golden furniture, and men might so behold
They were presented Deities. The people, Vulcan forged
Of meaner metal. When they came, where that was to be urged
For which they went, within a vale close to a flood, whose stream Used to give all their cattle drink, they there enamish'd them,
And sent two scouts out to descry, when that enemy's herds and sheep Were setting out. They straight came forth, with two that used to keep Their pasture always; both which piped, and went on merrily, Nor dream'd of ambuscades there. The ambush then let fly, Slew all their white-fleeced sheep and neat, and by them laid their guard.
When those in siege before the town so strange an uproar heard, Behind, amongst their flocks and herds (being then in counsel set)
They then start up, took horse, and soon their subtle enemy met, Fought with them on the river's shore, where both gave mutual blows
With well-piled darts. Amongst them all perverse Contention rose, Amongst them Turnuit was enraged, amongst them minous Fate
Had her red-finger; some they took in an unhart estate,
Some hurt yet living, some quite slain, and those they tugg'd to them
By both the feet, stripp'd off and took their weeds, with all the stream Of blood upon them that their steels had manfully let out.
They fared as men alive indeed drew dead indeed about.
To these the fery Artian did add a Large and thrice plough’d, the soil being soft, and of a wealthy yield;
And many men at plough he made, that drave earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly; at whose end when they were,
A fellow ever gave their hands full cups of luscious wine;
Which emptied, for another stitch, the earth they undermine,
And long till th' utmost bound be reach'd of all the ample close.
The soil turn'd up behind the plough, all black like earth arose, Though forged of nothing else but gold, and lay in show as light
As if it had been plough'd indeed, miraculous to sight.
There grew by this a field of corn, high, ripe, where reapers wrought,
And let thick handfuls fall to earth, for which some other brought Bands, and made sheaves. Three binders stood, and took the handful reap'd From boys that gather'd quickly up, and by them armfuls heap'd.
Amongst these at a furrow's end, the king stood pleased at heart,
Said no word, but his sceptre shew'd. And from him, much apart,
His harvest-bailiffs underneath an oak a feast prepared, to see him shered,
And having kill'd a mighty ox, stood there.
Which women for their harvest folks (then come to sup) had dress'd,
And many white wheat-cakes bestow'd, to make it up a feast.
He set near this a vine of gold, that crack'd beneath the weight Of bunches black with being ripe; to keep which at the height,
A silver rill ran all along, and round about it flow'd
An azure moat, and to this guard, a quickset was besio'd.
Of tin, one only path to all, by which the pressmen came In time of vintage: youths and maids, that bore not yet the flame
Of maely Hymen, baskets bore, of grapes and mellow fruit.
A lad that sweetly touch'd a harp, to which his voice did cast, Center'd the circles of that youth, all whose skill could not do
The wanton's pleasure to their minds; that danced, sang, whistled too.
A herd of oxen then he carv'd, with high raised heads, forged all
Of gold and tin, for colour mix't; that bellowing from their stall Rush'd to their pastures at a flood: their echo'd all their throats, Exceeding swift, and full of reeds; and stood in yellow coats Four herdsmen follow'd; after whom, nine mastives went. In head Of all the herd, upon a bull, that dead bellowed,
THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Two horrid lions ramp'd, and seized, and rugg'd off bellowing still;
Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide, and lapp'd their fill Of black blood, and the entrails ate. In vain the men assay'd
To set their dogs on; none durst pinch, but cur-like stood and bay'd In both the faces of their kings, and all their onsets fled.
Then in a passing pleasant vale, the famous Artsman fed, Upon a goodly pasture ground, rich flocks of white-leeced sheep, Built stables, cottages, and cotes, that did the shepherds keep From wind and weather. Next to these,
he cut a dancing place,
All full of turnings, that was like the admirable maze
For fair-hair'd Ariadne made, by cunning Daedalus;
And in it youths and virgins danced, all young and beauteous,
And glued in one another's palms. Weeds that the wind did toss.
The virgins wore; the youths wove coats, that cast a faint dim gloss Like that of oil. Fresh garlands too, the virgins' temples crown'd:
The youths girt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bowdricks bound.

COMMENTARIUS.

Eobanus Hessus thus:—

Nam sicut ab urbe
Obessæ increpuere tubas, vel classica cantu Perrea; sic Trois vox perturbulant Achilles.

Mine own harsh conversion (which I will be bold to repeat, after these, thus closely for your easter examination) is this, as before:—

And as a voice is heard With emulous attention, when any town is sphered
With siege of such a foe as kills men's minds, and for the town
Makes sound his trumpet; so the voice from Thetis' house flown
Won eminently the ears of all. His beraen voice once heard,
The minds of all were startled so, they yielded.

In conference of all our translations, I would gladly learn of my more learned reader if the two last conversions do anything near express the conceit of Homer, or if they bear any grace worth the signification of his words, and the sense of his illustration; whose intent was not to express the clearness or shrillness of his voice in itself, but the envious terror it wrought in the Trojans—ἀριστῆς φωνῆ not signifying in this place clara, or cognita facilis vox, but emulanda vox; ἀριστῆς signifying quem valde emulamus, aut valde emullandus, though these interpreters would rather receive it here for ἀριστῆς, verses 8 in ξ, ut sit clarus, illustris, &c. But how silly a curiosity is it to alter the word upon ignorance of the signification it hath in his place: the word ἀριστῆς being a compound of ἀριστής, which signifies valde, and ξ, which is amulatio: or of ξ, which signifies amulor. To this effect then (saith Homer, in this simile)—as a voice that works a terror, carrying an easy with it, sounds to a city besieged when the trumpet of a dreadful and mind-destroying enemy summons it, (for so ὁμορρο-ικός signifies; ὁμορροικός signifies animum destructus, being a compound of ἀνίσις, which signifies destructus, and ὁμορροικός, which is animus)—that is, when the parole comes, after the trumpet’s sound, uttering the resolution of the dreadful enemy before it.
The further application of this simile is left out by mischance.

THE END OF THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK.
THE NINETEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.
'THUS presenting armour to her son,
He calls a court, with full reflection
Of all his wrath. Takes of the king of men Free-offer'd gifts. All take their breakfast then;
He only fasting, arms, and brings abroad
The Grecian host. And (hearing the abode Of his near death by Andromachus prophesied)
The horse, for his so bold passage, doth chide.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
Tw'o gives the anger period,
And great Achilles comes abroad.

The morn arose, and from the ocean, in her saffron robe,
Gave light to all; as well to gods, as men of th' under globe.
Thetis stoop'd home, and found the prostrate person of her son
About his friend, still pouring out himself in passion;
A number more being heavy consorts to him in his cares.
Amongst them all Thetis appear'd and,
sacred comforters,
Made these short words: 'Though we must grieve, yet bear it thus (my son)
It was no man that prostrated, in this sad passion Thy dearest friend; it was a god that first laid on his hand, Whose will be law. The gods' decrees, no human must withstand.
Do thou embrace this fabric of a god;
whose hand before Ne'er forg'd the like; and such as yet, no human shoulder wore.'
Thus, setting down, the precious metal of the arms was such That all the room rung with the weight of every slenderest touch.
Cold tremblings took the Myrmidons;
one dare not sustain, all fear'd To oppose their eyes; Achilles yet, as soon as they appear'd
Stern Anger enter'd. From his eyes, as if the day-star rose,
A radiance terrifying men did all the state enclose.

At length he took into his hands the rich gift of the god,
And, much pleased to behold the art that in the shield he show'd, He brake forth into this applause: 'O mother, these right well Shew an immortal finger's touch; man's hand must never deal With arms again. Now I will arm; yet, that no honour make My friend forgotten, I much fear, lest with the blows of flies
His brass-inflicted wounds are piled; life gone, his person lies All apt to putrefaction.' She bade him doubt no harm
Of those offences, she would care, to keep the petulant swarm
Of flies, that usually taint the bodies of the slain,
From his friend's person: though a year, the earth's top should sustain His slaughter'd body, it should still rest sound, and rather hold A better state than worse, since time that death first made him cold.
And so bade call a council, to dispose of new alarms,
Where to the king, that was the pastor of that flock in arms
He should depose all anger and put on a
fortitude
Fit for his arms. All this his powers with dreadful strength indued.
She, with her fair hand, still'd into the nostrils of his friend Red nectar and ambrosia; with which she did defend
The corse from putrefaction. He trod along the shore,
And summon'd all th' heroic Greeks, with all that spent before
The time in exercise with him, the masters, pilots too,
Victors, and all. All, when they saw Achilles summon so,
Swarm'd to the council, having long left the laborious wars.
To all these came two halting kings, true servitors of Mars,

So help me
By uproar, in their too much care of hearing. Some, of force, Must lose some words; for hard it is, in such a great concourse (Though hearers' ears be ne'er so sharp) touch at all things spoke;
And in assemblies of such thrust, how can a man provoke

Fit power to hear, or leave to speak?
Best auditors may there

Lose fittest words; and the most vocal orator fit ear.

My main end then, to satisfy Pélides with reply, speech especially

My words shall prosecute; to him my Shall bear direction. Yet I wish, the court in general
Would give fit ear; my speech shall need attention of all.

Oft have our peers of Greece much blamed my forcing of the prise
Due to Achilles; of which act, not I, but destinies, And Jove himself, and black Erinnyes (that casts false mists still Betwixt us and our actions done, both by her power and will)

Are authors. What could I do then?
The very day and hour
Of our defeat, that fury stole in that act on my power.
And more; all things are done by strife;
that ancient seed of Jove,
Ate, that hurts all, perfects all: her feet are soft, and move
Not on the earth, they bear her still aloft men's heads, and there
The harmful hurts them. Nor was I alone her prisoner, Jove, best of men and gods, hath been.
Not he himself hath gone
Beyond her fettors: no, she made a woman put them on;

For when Alcmena was to vent the force of Hercules
In well-wall'd Thèbes, thus Jove triumph'd:
'Hear, gods and goddesses,
The words my joys urged: In this day,
Lucina, bringing pain
To labouring women, shall produce into the light of men
A man that all his neighbour kings shall in his empire hold,
And vaunt that more than manly race whose honour'd veins enfold
My eminent blood.' Saturnia conceived a present sleight,
And urged confirmance of his vaunt: to infringe it; her conceit
In this sort urged: "Thou wilt not hold thy word with this rare man; Or, if thou wilt, confirm it with the oath of Olymian, That whatsoever falls this day betwixt a woman's knees, Of those men's stocks that from thy blood derive their pedigrees, Shall all his neighbour towns command, Jove, ignorant of fraud, Took that great oath, which his great ill gave little cause t'applaud. Down from Olympus' top she stooped, and quickly reach'd the place. In Argos where the famous wife of Sthenelus, whose race, He fetch'd from Jove by Perseus, dwelt. She was but seven months gone With issue, yet she brought it forth; Alcmena's matchless son Delay'd from light; Saturnia repress'd the teeming thrones Of his great mother. Up to heaven she mounts again, and shows, In glory, her deceit to Jove. 'Bright-lightening Jove,' said she, 'Now th' Argives have an emperor; a son derived from thee Is born to Perseus Sthenelus, Eurystheus his name, [to him.' This came Noble and worthy of the rule thou swarest Close to the heart of Jupiter; and Ate, that had wronged This anger by Saturnia, by her bright hair he caught, Held down her head, and over her made this infallible vow: That never to the cope of stars should reascend that brow, Being so unfortunate to all. Thus, swinging her about, He cast her from the fiery heaven; who ever since thrust out Her fork'd sting in th' affairs of men. Jove ever since did grieve, Since his dear issue Hercules did by his vow achieve. Th' unjust ills of Eurystheus. Thus fares it now with me, Since under Hector's violence the Grecian progeny Fell so un pity by my spleen; whose falls will ever stick In my grieved thoughts; my weakness yet (Saturnius making sick The state my mind held) now recured, th' amends shall make even weight With my offence. And therefore rouse thy spirits to the fight With all thy forces; all the gifts, proposed thee at thy tent Last day by royal Ithacus, my officers shall present. And, if it like thee, strike no stroke, though never so on thorns Thy mind stands to thy friend's revenge, till my command abdons Thy tents and coffers with such gifts, as well may let thee know How much I wish thee satisfied." He answered: "Let thy vow, Renown'd Atrides, at thy will be kept, as justice would, Or keep thy gifts; 'tis all in thee. The council now we hold Is for repairing our main field with all our fortitude. My fair shew made brooks no retreat; nor must delays delude Our deeds' expectance. Yet undone the great work is. All eyes Must see Achilles in first fight depeopling enemies, As well as counsel it in court; that every man set on [upon, May choose his man to imitate my exercise Ulysses answer'd: "Do not yet, thou man made like the gods, Take fasting men to field. Suppose, that whatsoever odds It brings against them with full men, thy boundless eminence Can amply answer; yet refrain to tempt a violence. The combat, wearing out our men was late, and held as long, Wherein, though most Jove stood for Troy, he yet made our part strong To bear that most. But 'twas to bear, and that breeds little heart. Let wine and bread then add to it; they help the twofold part, The soul and body, in a man, both force and fortitude. All day men cannot fight and fast, though never so induced With minds to fight; for, that supposed, there lurks yet secretly Thirst, hunger, in th' oppressed joints, which no mind can supply. They take away a marcher's knees. Men's bodies throughly fed, Their minds share with them in their strength; and, all day combated, One stirs not, till you call off all. Dismiss them then to meat, And let Atrides tender here, in sight of all this seat,
The gifts he promised. Let him swear before us all, and rise
To that oath, that be never touch'd in any wanton wise
The lady he enforced. Besides, that he remains in mind
As chastely satisfied; not touch'd, or privily inclined With future vantages. And last, 'tis fit he should approve
All these rites at a solemn feast in honour of your love
That so you take no mangled law for merits absolute.
And thus the honours you receive, resolving the pursuit
Of your friend's quarrel, well will quit your sorrow for your friend.
And thou, Atrides, in the taste of so severe an end,
Hereafter may on others hold a juster government;
Nor will it ought impair a king, to give a sound content
To any subject soundly wrong'd." "I joy," replied the king,
"O Laertiades, to hear thy liberal counselling;
In which is all decorum kept, nor any point lacks touch That might be thought on to conclude a reconciliation such As fits example, and us two. My mind yet makes me swear,
Not your impulsion; and that mind shall rest so kind and clear,
That I will not forswear to God. Let then Achilles stay, [men here I pray Though never so inflamed for fight, and all
To stay, till from my tents these gifts be brought here, and the truce
At all parts finish'd before all. And thou of all I choose, Divine Ulysses, and command to choose of all your host Youths of most honour, to present to him we honour most,
The gifts we late vow'd, and the dames. Mean space about our tents Talthybius shall provide a bower, to crown these kind events
With thankful sacrifice to Jove, and to the God of light."
Achilles answer'd: "These affairs will show more requisite, Great king of men, some other time, when our more free estates
Yield fit cessation from the war, and when my spleen abates;
But now, to all our shames besides, our friends by Hector slain (And Jove to friend) lie unfetch'd off. Haste, then, and meet your men; Though I must still say, my command would lend them fasting forth,
And altogether feast at night. Meat will be something worth,
When stomachs first have made it way with venting infamy,
And other sorrows late sustain'd; with long-lower'd wrecks, that lie Heavy upon them, for right's sake. Before which load he got From off my stomach, meat nor drink, I vow, shall down my throat,
My friend being dead, who digg'd with wounds, and bored through both his feet,
Lies in the entry of my tent, and in the tears doth fleet
Of his associates. Meat and drink have little merit then To comfort me; but blood, and death, and deadly groans of men."
The great in counsels yet made good his former counsels thus:
"O Peleus' son, of all the Greeks by much most valorous, Better and mightier than myself, no little with thy lance
I yield thy worth; in wisdom, yet, no less
I dare advance
My right above the, since above in years, and knowing more.
Let then thy mind rest in thy words. We quickly shall have store
And all satiety of fight, whose steel heaps store of straw [that cloth withdraw And little corn upon a floor, when Jove, and Join all battles, once begins 't incline his balances,
In which he weighs the lives of men. The Greeks you must not press
To mourning with the belly; death hath not done with that In healthful men that mourn for friends, His steel we stumble at,
And fall at, every day you see, sufficient store, and fast.
What hour is it that any breathes? We must not use more haste,
Than speed holds fit for our revenge: nor should we mourn too much.
Who dead is, must be buried; men's patience should be such.
That one day's moan should serve one man: the dead must end with death,
And life last with what strengthens life. All those that held their breath.
THE NINETEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

As are inflicted by the gods, in all extremity
Of whomsoever perjured men, if godless perjury
In least degree dishonour me." This said, the bristled throat
Of the submitted sacrifice, with ruthless steel he cut ;
Which straight into the hoary sea Talthybius cast, to feed
The sea-born nation. Then stood up the half-celestial seed
Of fair-hair'd Thetis, strengthening thus Atrides' innocence :
"O father Jupiter, from thee descends the confluence
Of all man's ill; for now I see the mighty king of men
At no hand forced away my prise, nor first inflamed my spleen
With any set ill in himself, but thou, the king of gods,
Incensed with Greece, made that the mean to all their periods.
Which now amend we as we may, and give all suffrages
To what wise Ithacus advised; take break, fasts, and address For instant conflict." Thus he raised the court, and all took away To several ships. The Myrmidons the presents did convey T' Achille's fleet, and in his tents disposed them; doing grace
Of seat and all rites to the dams; the horses put in place With others of Aeacides. When, like
Love's golden Queen,
Briseis all in ghastly wounds had dead
Patroclus seen,
She fell about him, shrieking out, and with her white hands tore Her hair, breasts, radiant cheeks, and, drown'd in warm tears, did deplore His cruel destiny. At length she gat power to express
Her violent passion, and thus spoke this like-the-goddesses :
"O good Patroclus, to my life the dearest grace it had,
I, wretched dame, departing hence, en-defore, and dying sad,
Left thee alive, when thou hadst cheer'd my poor captivity;
[on misery
And now return'd I find thee dead; misery Ever increasing with my steps. The lord to whom my sire
And dearest mother gave my life in nuptials, his life's fire

From death in fight the more should eat, that so they may supply Their fellows that have stuck in field, and fight incessantly.
Let none expect reply to this, nor stay;
for this shall stand Or fall with some offence to him that looks for new command, Whoever in dislike holds back. All join then, all things fit Allow'd for all; set on a charge, at all parts answering it." This said, he chose, for noblest youths to bear the presents, these:
The sons of Nestor, and with them re-nown'd Meriones, Phylides, Thoas, Lycomed, and Meges, all which went,
And Menalippos, following Ulysses to the tent
Of Agamemnon. He but spake, and with the word the deed
Had joint effect: the fitness well was answer'd in the speed.
The presents, added to the dame, the General did enforce,
Were twenty cauldrons, tripods seven, twelve young and goodly horse;
Seven ladies excellently seen in all Minerva's skill,
The eighth Briseis who had power to ravish ev'ry will;
Twelve talents of the finest gold, all which Ulysses weight'd
And carried first; and after him, the other youths convey'd
The other presents, tender'd all in face of all the court.
Up rose the king. Talthybius, whose voice had a report
Like to a god, call'd to the rites. There having brought the boar, Atrides with his knife took upon the part before,
And lifting up his sacred hands to Jove, to make his vows,
Grave silence strook the complete court;
when, casting his high brows
Up to the broad heaven, thus he spake:
"Now witness, Jupiter,
First, highest, and thou best of gods;
thou Earth that all doest bear; Thou Sun; ye Furies under earth that ev'ry soul torment
Whom impious perjury distains; that Ulysses innocent
In bed, or any other act to any slenderest touch [and let my plagues be such
Of my light vows, hath wrong'd the dame;
I saw before our city gates extinguish'd; and his fate
Three of my worthy brothers' lives, in one womb generate,
Felt all in that black day of death. And when Achilles' hand
Had slain all these, and rased the town
Mynetes did command,
(All cause of never-ending griefs presented) thou took'st all
On thy endeavours to convert to joy as general Affirming, he that hurt should heal, and thou wouldst make thy friend, Brave captain that thou wert, supply my vowed husband's end,
And in rich Pthia celebrate, amongst his Mycrodonos,
Our nuptial banquets; for which grace, with these most worthy moans
I never shall be satiate, thou ever being kind, [with one sweet mind,]*
Even delightsome, on sweet grace fed still Thus spake she weeping; and with her, did th' other ladies moan Patroclus' fortunes in pretext, but in sad truth their own.
About Aeacides himself the kings of Greece were placed,
Entreat him to food; and he entreated them as fast,
(Still intermixing words and sighs,) if any friend were there
Of all his dearest, they would cease, and offer him no cheer
But his due sorrows; for before the sun had left that sky
[th' extremity,
He would not eat, but of that day sustain Thus all the kings, in resolute grief and fasting, he dismiss'd;
But both th' Atrides, Ilthacus, and war's old martialist,*
Idomeneus and his friend, and Phoenix,
these remain'd.
Endeavouring comfort, but no thought of his vow'd woe restrain'd.
Nor could, till that day's bloody fight had calm'd his blood; he still Remember'd something of his friend, whose good was all his ill.
Their urging meat the diligent fashion of his friend renew'd
In that excitement: "Thou," said he,
"when this speed was pursued Against the Trojans, evermore apposessed in my tent
Sweetly diligent,
A pleasing breakfast; being so free, and Thou madest all meat sweet. Then the war was fearful to our foe,

But now to me; thy wounds so wound me,
and thy overthrow;
For which my ready food I fly, and on thy longings feed.
Nothing could more afflict me; Fame relating the foul deed
Of my dear father's slaughter, blood drawn from my sole son's heart,
No more could wound me. Cursed man, that in this foreign part (For hateful Helen) my true love, my country, sire, and son;
I thus should part with. Scylla now
* giveth education,
O Neoptolemus, to thee, if living yet; from whence I hoped, dear friend, thy longer life safely return'd from hence,
And my life quitting thine, had power to ship him home; and show His young eyes Pthia, subjects, court;
my father being now Dead, or most short-lived, troublous age oppressing him, and fear Still of my death's news." These sad words, he blew into the ear
Of every visitant with sighs, all echo'd by the peers, Remembering who they left at home. All whose so humane tears Jove pitied; and, since they all would in the good of one
Be much revived, he thus bespake Minerva:
"Thetis' son,
Now, daughter, thou hast quite forgot. O, is Achilles' care Extinguished in thee? prostrated in most extreme ill-fare,
He lies before his high-sail'd fleet, for his dead friend; the rest Are strengthening them with meat, but he lies desperately oppress'd With heartless fasting. Go thy ways, and to his breast instil
Red nectar and ambrosia, that fast procure To his near enterprise." This spur he added to the free,
And, like a harpy, with a voice that shrieks so dreadfully,
And feathers that like needles prick'd, she stoop'd through all the stars, Amongst the Greeks, all whose tents were now fill'd for the wars;

* Scylla was an isle in the sea Ægeum, where Achilles himself was brought up, as well as his son.
The seres strook through Achilles' tent, and closely she instild Heaven's most-to-be-desired feast to his great breast, and fill'd
His sinews with that sweet supply, for fear unsavoury fast Should creep into his knees. Herself the skies again enchased.
The host set forth, and pour'd his steel waves far out of the fleet.
And as from air the frosty North-wind blows a cold thick sleet,
That dazzles eyes, filling after flakes increasantly descending;
So thick helms, curets, ashen darts, and round shields, never ending.
Flow'd from the navy's hollow womb:
their splendid lights gave heaven's eye His beams again: Earth laugh'd to see her face so like the sky;
Arms shined so hot, and she such clouds made with the dust she cast,
She thunder'd, feet of men and horse impertur'd her so fast:
In midst of all, divine Achilles his fair person arm'd,
His neck quash'd as he stood, his eyes so full of fire they warm'd, Unsuffer'd grief and anger at the Trojans so combined.
His greaves first used, his goodly curets on his bosom shined,
His sword, his shield; that cast a brightness from it like the moon.
And as from sea sailers discern a harmful fire let run
By bersmen's faults, till all their stall flies up in wrastling flame;
Which being on hills is seen far off; but being alone, none came To give it quench; at shore no neighbours, and at sea their friends Driven off with tempests; such a fire, from his bright shield extends His ominous radiance, and in heaven impress'd his fervent blaze.
His crested helmet, grave and high, had next triumphant place
On his curl'd head, and like a star it cast a spurry ray, [golden hair did play, About which a bright thicken'd bush of Which Vulcan forged for him for his plume.
Thus complete arm'd, he tried How fit they were, and if his motion could with ease abide Their brave instruction; and so far they were from hindering it.
That to it they were nimble wings, and made so light his spirit,
That from the earth the princely captain they took up to air.
Then from his armoury he drew his lance, his father's spear, Huge, weighty, firm, that not a Greek but he himself alone
[mountain Pelion,
Knew how to shake; it grew upon the
From whose height Chiron hew'd it for his sire, and fatal 'twas [surnam'd Pelias.
To great-soul'd men, of Peleus and Pelion
Then from the stable their bright horse,
Automedon withdraws
And Alcyamus; put poitills on, and cast upon their jaws
Their briddles, hurling back the reins, and hung them on the seat.
The fair scourge then Automedon takes up, and up doth get To guide the horse. The fight's seat last,
Achilles took behind;
Who look'd so arm'd as if the sun, there fall'n from heaven, had shined,
And terribly thus charged his steeds:
"Xanthus and Balius, [take of us,
Seed of the Happy, in the charge ye under-Discharge it not as when Patroclus ye left dead in field:
But, when with blood, for this day's fast observed, revenge shall yield Our heart satiety, bring us off." Thus, since Achilles spake
As if his awed steeds understood: 'twas Juno's will to make Voical the palate of the one; who, shaking his fair head, [his hair buried, (Which in his mane, let fall to earth, he Thus Xanthus spake: "Ablest Achilles, now, at least, our care Shall bring thee off; but not far hence the fatal minutes are
Of thy grave ruin. Nor shall we be then to be reproved,
But mightiest Fate, and the great God.
Nor was thy best beloved Spoli'd so of arms by our slow pace, or our courage impair; [the golden hair,
The best of gods, Latona's son, that wears Gave him his death's wound; though the grace he gave to Hector's hand.
We, like the spirit of the west, that all spirits can command For power of wing, could run him off; but thou thyself must go,
So Fate ordains; God and a man must give thee overthrow."
This said, the Furies stopp'd his voice.
Achilles, far in rage,
Thus answer'd him: "It fits not thee, thus proudly to presage
My overthrow. I know myself, it is my fate to fall
Thus far from Phthia; yet that Fate shall fall to vent her gall, Till mine vent thousands." These words used, he fell to horrid deeds;
Gave dreadful signal, and forthright made fly his one-hooved steeds.

COMMENTARIUS.

1 Kávov éthousánto, &c. Apros prepáret maecantum Jovique Solique: he shall prepare a boar for sacrifice to Jove and the Sun. It is the end of Agamemnon’s speech in this book before Ulysses, and promises that sacrifice to Jove and the Sun at the reconciliation of himself and Achilles. Our Commentors (Eustathius and Spandonus, &c.) will by no means allow the word σῶμα here for Homer’s, but an unskilfulness in the divuler; and will needs have it ἕως οὖν, which Spandonus says is altogether here to be understood, as Eustathius’ words teach,—for to offer so fierce a beast to Jove as a boar, he says, is absurd, and cites Nexit, lib. i. cap. xvii., where he says Homer in his place makes a tame sow sacrificed to Jove, who was as tamely and simply deceived as the rest. Eustathius’ reason for it is, that suis animal iubes; and since the oath Agamemnon takes at this sacrifice to satisfy Achilles, that he hath not touched Briseis, is concerning a woman, very fitly is a sow here sacrificed. But this seems to Spandonus something ridiculous (as I hope you will easily judge it) and, as I conceive, so is his own opinion to have the original word σῶμα altered, and expounded suum. His reason for it he makes nice to utter, saying, he knows what is set down amongst the learned touching the sacrifice of a sow. But because it is (he says) ἀποστάθωρον, nihil ad rem (though, as they expound it, it is too much ad rem,) he is willing to keep his opinion in silence, unless you will take it for a splayed or gelded sow; as if Agamemnon would imnate that as this sow, being splayed, is free from Venus, so had he never attempted the dishonour of Briseis. And peradventure, says Spandonus, you cannot think of a better exposition; when a worse cannot be conjectured, unless that of Eustathius, as I hope you will clearly grant me when you hear but mine, which is this: The sacrifice is not made by Agamemnon for any resemblance or reference it hath to the lady now to be restored (which since these clerks will needs have it a sow, in behalf of ladies, I disdain) but only to the reconciliation of Agamemnon and Achilles; for a sacred sign whereof, and that their wraths were now absolutely appeased, Agamemnon thought fit a boar (being the most wrathful of all beasts) should be sacrificed to Jove; intimating that in that boar they sacrificed their wraths to Jupiter, and became friends. And thus is the original word preserved, which (together with the sacred sense of our Homer) in a thousand other places suffers most ignorant and barbarous violence. But here (being weary both with finding faults and my labour) till a refreshing come, I will end my poor Comment; holding it not altogether unfit, with this ridiculous contention of our Commentors, a little to quicken you, and make it something probable that their oversight in this trifle is accompanied with a thousand other errors in matter of our divine Homer’s depth and gravity; which will not open itself to the curious austerity of belabouring art, but only to the natural and most ingenuous soul of our thrice-sacred Poesy.

THE END OF THE NINETEENTH BOOK.
THE TWENTIETH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.
By Jove's permission, all the gods descend
To aid on both parts. For the Greeks contend Juno, Minerva, Neptune, Muleiber,
And Mercury. The dauntles that prefer
The Trojan part are Phoebus, Cytherea, Phoebus, Latona, and the foe to peace,*
With bright Scamander. Neptune in a mist Preserves Aneas (daring to resist Achilles;) by whose hand much scath is done;
Besides the slaughter of old Priam's son Young Polydorus, whose rescue Hector makes; Him flying, Phoebus to his rescue takes.
The rest, all shunning their importuned fates,
Achilles beats even to the Ilion gates.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
In Upsilon, Strife stirs in heaven;
The day's grace to the Greeks is given.

The Greeks thus arm'd, and made insatiate with desire of fight,
About thee, Pæus' son, the foe, in ground of greatest height, Stood opposite, ranged. Then Jove charged Themis from Olympus' top
To call a court; she every way dispersed, and summoned up
All deities; not any flood, besides
Oceanus,
But made appearance; not a nymph (that arbours odons,
The heads of floods, and flowery meadows, makes their sweet abodes)
Was absent there; but all at his court, that is king of gods, Assembled, and, in lightsome seats of admirable frame, Perform'd for Jove by Vulcan, sat. Even angry Neptune came,
Nor heard the goddess with unwilling ear;
but with the rest,
Made free ascent from the sea, and did his state invest
In midst of all, began the council, and inquired of Jove
His reason for that session, and on what point did move

* Mars.

His high intention for the foes; he thought the heat of war
Was then near breaking out in flames. To him the Thunderer:
"Thou know'st this council by the rest of those fore-purposes
That still inclined me; my cares still must succour the distress
Of Troy; though in the mouth of Fate, yet vow I not to stir One step from off this top of heaven, but all th' affair refer To any one. Here I'll hold state, and freely take the joy Of either's fate. Help whom ye please;
for 'tis assured that Troy
Not one day's conflict can sustain against Æacides,
If Heaven oppose not. His mere looks threw darts now to impress Their powers with trembling; but when blows, sent from his fiery hand, (Three heat by slaughter of his friend) shall come and countermand Their former glorious, we have fear, that though Fate keep their wall, He'll overturn it. Then descend; and cease not till ye all Add all your aids; mix earth and heaven together with the fight Achilles urgeth." These his words did such a war excite,
As no man's power could wrestle down;
the gods with parted hearts Departed heaven, and made earth war. To guide the Grecian darts, Juno and Pallas, with the god that doth the earth embrace,
And most-for-man's-use Mercury (whom good wise inwards grace)
Were partially and all employ'd; and with them halted down (Proud of his strength) Iame Muleiber, his walkers quite misgrown, But made him tread exceeding sure. To aid the Ulian side, (him accompanied The changeable in arms went, Mars; and Diana that delights in shafts, and Phoebus never shorn, [of whom was born And Aphrodite laughter-pleased, and she Still young Apollo, and the flood that runs on golden sands Bright Xanthus. All these aided Troy; and, till these lent their hands,

The Grecians triumph'd in the aid Æacides did add;
[gloriously elated]
The Trojans trembling with his sight; so He overshadowed the field, and Mars no harmfuller than he,
He bore the iron stream on clear. But when Jove's high decree
Let fall the gods amongst their troops, the field swell'd, and the fight Grew fierce and horrible. The Dame, *that armies doth excite, Thunder'd with clamour, sometimes set at dike without the wall,
And sometimes on the bellowing shore.
On th' other side, the call Of Mars to fight was terrible, he cried out like a storm,
[would inform]
Set on the city's pinnacles; and there he Sometimes his heartenings, other times where Simois pours on His silver current at the foot of high Calliades And thus the blest gods both sides urged; and they all stood in the mids,
And brake contention to the hosts. And over all their heads
The gods' king in abhorred claps his Thunder rattled out.
Beneath them Neptune toss'd the earth;
the mountains round about Bow'd with affright and shook their heads;
Jove's fain the earthquake felt, (Steeple'd) trembling at her roots, and all her fountains split,
Their brows all crannied. Troy did nod;
the Grecian navy play'd
As on the sea; th' infernal king, that all things frays, was fray'd,
And leapt affrighted from his throne, cried out, lest over him Neptune should rend in two the earth, and so his house, so dim,
So soothsome, filthy, and abhor'd of all the gods beside,
Should open both to gods and men. Thus all things shook and cried,
When this black battle of the gods was joining: thus array'd
'Gainst Neptune, Phoebus with wing'd shafts; 'gainst Mars, the blue-eyed maid; 'Gainst Juno, Phoebus, whose white hands bore singing darts of gold,
Her side arm'd with a sheaf of shafts, and (by the birth twofold

* Pallas.

Of bright Latona) sister twin to him that shoots so far.
Against Latona, Hermes stood, grave guard, in peace and war.
Of human beings: 'Gainst the god, whose empire is in fire.
The watery godhead, that great flood, to show whose power entire In spoil as th' other, all his stream on lurking whirlpools trod,
Xanthus by gods, by men Scamander, call'd. Thus god 'gainst god Enter'd the field. Æacides sustain'd a serving mind
To cope with Hector; past all these, his spirit stood inclined To glut Mars with the blood of him. And at Æacides [impress
Apollo set Anchises' son; but first he did A more than natural strength in him, and made him feel th' excess Infused from heaven; Lycaon's shape gave show to his address, (Old Priam's son) and thus he spake:
"Thou counsellor of Troy,
Where now fly out those threats that late put all our peers in joy Of thy fight with Æacides? Thy tongue once, steep'd in wine,
Durst vaunt as much." He answer'd him:
"But why wouldst thou incline My powers 'gainst that proud enemy, and 'gainst my present heat?
I mean not now to bid him blows: that fear sounds my retreat,
That heretofore discouraged me, when after he had rased Lynceus, and strong Pedasus, his still breathed fury chased.
Our oxen from th' Idaean hill, and set on me; but Jove
Gave strength and knees, and bore me off, that had not walk'd above
This centre now but propt by him; Minerva's hand (that held A light to this her favourite, whose beams shew'd and impell'd His powers to spoil) had ruin'd me, for these ears heard her cry:
'Kill, kill the seed of Ilion, kill th' Asian Lelegi.'
Mere man then must not fight with him that still hath gods to friend, Averting death on others' darts, and giving his no end
But with the ends of men. If God like fortune in the fight
Would give my force, not with ease wing'd victory should light
We must not mix the hands of gods, our odds is too extreme.

Sit we by, in some place of height, where we may see to them,

And leave the wars of men to men. But if we see from thence

Or Mars or Phoebus enter fight, or offer least offence.

To Thetis’ son, not giving free way to his conquering rage,

Then comes the conflict to our cares; we soon shall disengage

Achilles, and send them to heaven, to settle their abode

With equals, flying under-stripes.” This said, the black-hair’d god

Led to the tower of Hercules, built circular and high

By Pallas and the Ilians, for fit security

To Jove’s divine son* against the whale, that drave him from the shore

To th’ ample field. There Neptune sat, and all the gods that bore

The Greeks good meaning, casting all thick mantles made of clouds

On their bright shoulders. Th’ opposed gods sat hid in other shrouds

On top of steep Callincol, about thy golden sides,

O Phoebus, brandisher of darts, and thine, whose rage abides.

No peace in cities. In this state, these gods in council sate,

All lingering purposed fight, to try who first would elevate

His heavenly weapon. High-throned Jove cried out to set them on,

Said, all the field was full of men, and that the earth did groan.

With feet of proud encounterers, burn’d with the arms of men

And barbed horse. Two champions for both the armies then

Met in their midst, prepared for blows; divine Æacides,

And Venus’ son. Æneas first stepp’d threatening forth the prease,

His high helm nodding, and his breast barr’d with a shady shield,

And shook his javelin. Thetis’ son did his part to the field.

As when the harmful king of beasts (sore threaten’d to be slain

By all the country up in arms) at first makes coy disdain

* Hercules.
Prepare resistance, but at last, when any one hath led Bold charge upon him with his dart, he then turns yawning head, Fell anger lathers in his jaws, his great heart swells, his stern
Lasheth his strength up, sides and thighs waddled with stripes to learn
Their own power, his eyes glow, he roars, and in he leaps to kill, Secure of killing; so his power then roused up to his will Matchless Achilles, coming on to meet Anchises' son.
Both near, Achilles thus inquired: "Why stand'st thou thus alone,
Thou son of Venus? calls thy heart to change of blows with me?
Sure Troy's whole kingdom is proposed; some one hath promised thee
The throne of Priam for my life; but Priam's self is wise,
And, for my slaughter, not so mad to make his throne thy prise.
Priam hath sons to second him. Is't then some piece of land, victorious hand Past others fit to set and sow, that thy The Ilions offer for my head? I hope that prise will prove No easy conquest. Once, I think, my busy javelin drove,
With terror, those thoughts from your spleen. Retain'st thou not the time,
When single on th' Idaean hill I took thee with the crime
Of runaway? thy oxen left? and when thou hastad no face
That I could see; thy knees bereft it, and Lydnessos was The mask for that. Then that mask, too, I open'd to the air (By Jove and Pallas' help), and took the free light from the fair, Your ladies bearing prisoners; but Jove and th' other gods
Then saft thee. Yet again I hope, they will not add their odds To save thy wants, as thou presumest. Retire then, aim not at Troy's throne by me; fly ere thy soul flies; foes are wise too late."
He answer'd him: "Hope not that words can child-like terrify
My stroke-proof breast. I well could speak in this indecency,
And use tart terms; but we know well what stock us both put out,
Too gentle to bear fruits so rude. Our parents ring abou
Thus begot Laomedon. God-like Laomedon Got Tithon, Priam, Clytius, Mars-like Hyetean, And Lampsus. Great Assaracus, Capys begot; and he Anchises; Prince Anchises, me, King Priam, Hector: we Sprang both of one high family. Thus fortunate men give birth, But Jove gives virtue; he augments, and he impairs the worth Of all men; and his will their rule; he, strong'st, all strength affords.
Why then paint we, like dames, the face of conflict with our words?
Both may give language that a ship, shaken with a hundred oars, Would overleap. A man's tongue is volatile, and pours Words out of all sorts every way. Such as you speak you hear.
What then need we vie calumnies, like women that will wear Their tongues out, being once incensed, and drive for strife to part (Being on their way) they travel so: from words, words may avert.
From virous, not. It is your steel, divine Eaeides,
Must prove my proof, as mine shall yours."
Thus amply did he ease His great heart of his pedigree; and sharply sent away
A dart that caught Achilles' shield, and rang so it did fray
The son of Thetis, his fair hand far-thrusting out his shield,
For fear the long lance had driven through.
O fool, to think 'twould yield,
And not to know the god's firm gifts want to yield so soon
To men's poor powers. The eager lance had only conquest won
Of two plates, and the shield had five; two forged of tin, two brass,
One, that was centre-plate, of gold; and that forbade the pass
Of Anchises' lances. Then sent Achilles forth
His lances, that through the first fold stroke, where brass of little worth And no great proof of hides was laid;
through all which Pelias ran [wan His iron head, and after it his shaken body Passed to the earth, and there it stuck, his top on the other side,
And hung the shield up; which hard down Æneas pluck'd, to hide His breast from sword blows, shrunk up round, and in his heavy eye Was much grief shadow'd, much afraid that Pelias stuck so nigh.
Then prompt Achilles rushing in, his sword drew; and the field Rung with his voice. Æneas now, left and let hang his shield,
And, all-distracted, up he snatch'd a two men's strength of stone,
And either at his shield or casque he set it rudely gone,
Nor cared where, so it strook a place that put on arms for death.
But he (Achilles came so close) had doubtless sunk beneath His own death, had not Neptune seen and interposed the odds
Of his divine power, uttering this to the Achaean gods:
"I grieve for this great-hearted man; he will be sent to hell, Even instantly, by Pelus's son, being only moved to deal
By Phocus' words. What fool is he! Phocus did never mean, To add to his great words his guard against the ruin then Summon'd against him. And what cause hath his to head him on To others' miseries, he being clear of any trespass done
Against the Grecians? thankful gifts he oft hath given to us.
Let us then quit him, and withdraw this combat; for if thus Achilles end him, Jove will rage; since his escape in fate [take date,
Is purposed, lest the progeny of Dardanus Whom Jove, past all his issue, loved, begot of mortal dames.
All Priam's race he hates; and this must propagate the names
Of Trojans, and their sons' sons' rule, to all posterity."
Saturnia said: "Make free your pleasure;
save, or let him die, Pallas and I have taken many, and most public oaths,
That th' ill day never shall avert her eye,
red with our wroths,
From hated Troy; no, not when all in studied fire she flames
The Greek rage, blowing her last coal."
"This nothing turn'd his aims From present rescue, but through all the whizzing spears he pass'd,
And came where both were combating;
when instantly he cast
A mist before Achilles’ eyes, drew from the earth and shield
His lance, and laid it at his feet; and then took up and held Altof the light Anchises’ son, who pass’d, with Neptune’s force.
Whole orders of heroes’ heads, and many a troop of horse
Leapt over, till the bounds he reach’d of all the fervent broil, Where all the Caucon’s quarters lay. Thus, far freed from the toil,
Neptune had time to use these words:
“Aeneas, who was he
Of all the gods, that did so much neglect thy good and thee
To urge thy fight with Thetis’ son, who in immortal rates
Is better and more dear than thee? Hereafter, lest, past fates, Hill be thy headlong home, retire, make bold stand never near Where he advanceth. But his fate once satisfied, then bear
A prize and full sail; no Greek else shall end thee.” This reveal’d, He left him, and dispersed the cloud, that all this act conceal’d
From vex’d Achilles; who again had clear light from the skies,
And, much disdaining the escape, said:
“O ye gods, mine eyes Discover miracles: my lance submitted, and he gone.
At whom I sent it with desire of his confusion!
Aeneas sure was loved of heaven. I thought his vaunt from thence Had flow’d from glory. Let him go, no more experience
Will his mind long for my hands, he flies them now so clear.
Cheer then the Greeks, and others try.”
Thus ranged he everywhere
The Grecian orders; every man (of which the most lock’d on To see their fresh lord shake his lance) he thus put charge upon:
“Divine Greeks, stand not thus at gaze, but man to man apply (unequally
Your several valours. ’Tis a task laid too On me, left to so many men, one man opposed to all.
Not Mars, immortal and a god, nor war’s she-General,
A field of so much fight could chase, and work it out with blows.
But what a man may execute, that all limbs will expose,
And all their strength to th’ utmost nerve (though now I lost some play By some strange miracle) no more shall burn in vain the day.
To any least beam. All this host, I’ll ransack, and have hope,
Of all not one again will scape, whoever gives such scope
To his adventure, and so near dares tempt my angry lance.”
Thus be excite. Hector then as much strives to advance
The hearts of his men, adding threats, affirming he would stand In combat with Aecides: “Give fear,” said he, “no hand
Of your great hearts, brave Ilians, for Peleus’ talking son.
I’ll fight with any god with words; but when their spears put on,
The work runs high, their strength exceeds mortality so far,
And they may make works crown their words; which holds not in the war Achilles makes; his hands have bounds;
this word he shall make good,
And leave another to the field. His worst shall be withstand
With sole objection of myself; though in his hands he bear
A rage like fire, though fire itself his raging fingers were,
And burning steel flew in his strength.”
Thus he incite his;
And they raised lances, and to work with mixed courages;
And up flew Clamour. But the heat in Hector, Phoebus gave This temper: “Do not meet,” said he,
“in any single brave
The man thou threaten’st, but in press;
and in thy strength impeach His violence; for, far off, or near, his sword or dart will reach.”
The god’s voice made a difference in Hector’s own conceit Between his and Achilles’ words, and gave such overweight
As weigh’d him back into his strength, and curb’d his flying out.
At all threw fierce Aecides, and gave a horrid shout.
The first, of all he put to dart, was fierce Iphition, Surnamed Otrynites, whom Nais the water-nymph made son To town-destroyer Otrynetes. Beneath the snowy hill [his with Of Tmolus, in the wealthy town of Idi, a
Were many able men at arms. He, rushing in, took full Pelides' lance in his head's midst, that clef't in two his skull. Achilles knew him one much famed, and thus insulted then: "Th' art dead, Otryntides, though call'd the terriblest of men. Thy race runs at Gygæus' lake, there thy inheritance lay. Near fishy Hylus and the gulf of Hermus; but this day Removes it to the fields of Troy." Thus left he night to seize His closed eyes, his body laid in course of all the prease, Which Grecian horse broke with the strakes shall'd to their chariot wheels. Next (through the temples) the burst eyes, his deadly javelin steel... Of great-in-Troy Antenor's son, renown'd Demoleon, A mighty turner of a field. His overthrow set gone Hippodamas; who leapt from horse, and, as he fled before. Aæides his turned back, he made fell Pellas gore, And forth he pull'd his flying soul: and as a tortured bull, To Neptune brought for sacrifice, a troop of youngsters pull Down to the earth, and drag him round about the hallow'd shore, To please the watery deity with forcing him to roar, And forth he pours his utmost throat; so bellow'd this slain friend Of flying Ilión, wh' the breadth that gave his being end. Then rush'd he on, and in his eye had heavenly Polydore, Old Priam's son, whom last of all his fruitful princess bore, And for his youth, being dear to him, the king forbad to fight. Yet (hot of unexperienced blood, to shew how exquisite He was of foot, for which of all the fifty sons he held [heat of the field, The special name) he flew before the first Even till he flew out breath and soul; which, through the back, the lance Of swift, Achilles put in air, and did his head advance Out at his navel. On his knees the poor prince crying fell, And gather'd with his tender hands his entrails, that did swell

Quite through the wide wound, till a cloud as black as death conceal'd Their sight, and all the world from him. When Hector had beheld His brother tumbled so to earth, his entrails still in hand, [could he stand Dark sorrow overcast his eyes; nor far off A minute longer, but like fire he brake out of the throng. Shook his long lance at Thetis' son; and then came he along To feed th' encounter: "O," said he, "here comes the man that most Of all the world destroys my mind, the man by whom I lost My dear Patroclus. Now not long the crooked paths of war Can yield us any privy escapes. 'Come, keep not off so far,' He cried to Hector, 'make the pain of thy sure death as short, As one so desperate of his life hath reason," In no sort This frighted Hector, who bore close, and said: "Aæides, Leave threats for children. I have power to thunder caelumus As well as others, and well know thy strength superior far To that my nerves hold; but the gods, not nerves, determine war. And yet, for nerves, there will be found a strength of power in mine To drive a lance home to thy life. My lance as well as thine Hath point and sharpness, and 'tis this." Thus brandishing his spear, He set it flying; which a breath of Pallas back did bear From Thetis' son to Hector's self, and at his feet it fell. Achilles used no dart, but close flew in; and thought to deal With no strokes but of sure dispatch, but, what with all his blood He labour'd, Phœbus clear'd with ease, as being a god, and stood For Hector's guard, as Pallas did, Aæides, for thine. He rapt him from him, and a cloud of much Night cast between His person and the point opposed, Achilles then exclaim'd: "O see, yet more gods are at work. Apollo's hand hath framed, Dog that thou art, thy rescue now; to whom go pay the vows Thy safety owes him, I shall vent in time those fatal blows That yet beat in my heart on thine, if any god remain
My equal factor. In mean time, my anger His fire on other Ilions." Then laid he at his feet
Great Deomedus, Philetor's son; and Dryope did greet
With like encounter. Dardanus and strong Laogonus, Wise Ilias's sons, he hurt'd from horse; of one victorious
With his close sword, the other's life he conquer'd with his lance.
Then Tros, Alastor's son, made in, and sought to scape their chance With free submission. Down he fell, and pray'd about his knees
He would not kill him, but take ruth, as one that destinies
Made to that purpose, being a man born in the self same year That he himself was. O poor fool, to sue to him to bear
A ruthless mind; he well might know, he constant not fashion him In ruth's soft mould; he had no spirit to brook that interim
In his hot fury; he was none of these remorseful men.
Gentle and affable; but fierce at all times,
and mad then.
He gladly would have made a prayer, and still so hugg'd his knee
He could not quit him; till at last his sword was fain to free
His fetter'd knees that made a vent for his white liver's blood
That caused such pitiful affects; of which it pour'd a flood
About his bosom, which it fill'd, even till it drown'd his eyes,
And all sense fail'd him. Forth then flew this prince of tragedies;
Who next stoop'd Mutilus even to death with his insatiate spear;
One ear it enter'd, and made good his pass to th' other ear,
Echecles then, Agemor's son, he strook betwixt the brows; Whose blood set fire upon his sword, that cool'd it till the throes

Of his then labouring brain let out his soul to fixed fate,
And gave cold entry to black death. Deu-cation then had state.
In these men's beings, where the nerves about the elbow knit,
Down to his hand his spear's steel pierced, and brought such pain to it As led death jointly; whom he saw before his fainting eyes; | so that off flies
And in his neck felt, with a stroke, laid on His head. One of the twelve-twelve bones, that all the backbone make,
Let out his marrow; when the head he,
helm and all, did take,
And hurl'd amongst the Ilions; the body stretch'd on earth.
Rhigmus of fruitful Thrace next fell:
he was the famous birth
Of Pireus; his belly's midst the lance took, whose stern force
Quite tumbled him from chariot. In turning back the horse,
Their guider Arethous received another lance
That threw him to his lord. No end was put to the mischance Achilles enter'd. But as fire, fall'n in a flash from heaven,
Inflames the high woods of dry hills, and with a storm is driven Through all the sylvan deeps; and raves, till down goes everywhere
The smother'd hill; so every way Achilles and his spear
Consumed the champain, the black earth flow'd with the veins he tore.
And look how even, yoked and driven about the circular floor
Of some fair barn, tread suddenly the thick sheaves thin of corn,
And all the corn consumed with chaff; so mix'd and overborne, Beneath Achilles' one-hooved horse, shields, spears, and men lay trod,
His axile-tree and chariot-wheels, all spatter'd with the blood Hurl'd from the steeds' hooves and the stakes. Thus, to be magnified, His most inaccessible hands in human blood he dyed.

THE END OF THE TWENTIETH BOOK.
THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

In two parts Troy's host parted; Thetis' son
One to Scamander, one to Ilion, Pursues. Twelve lords he takes alive, to end
In sacrifice for vengeance to his friend.
Asteropius dies by his fierce hand,
And Priam's son, Lycus. Over land
The flood breaks where Achilles being engaged,
Vulcan preserves him, and with spirit enraged
Sets all the chariots and the flood on fire.
Contestation then doth all the gods inspire.
Apollos in Agenor's shape doth stay Achilles' fury, and, by giving way,
Makes him pursue, till the deject gives leave
That Troy in safety might her friends receive.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Fly at the flood's shore doth express
The labours of Æacides.

And now they reach'd, the goodly swelling channel of the flood, Gulf-eating Xanthus, whom Jove mix'd with his immortal brood;
And there Achilles left the host of Ilion;
one side fell
On Xanthus, 'th other on the town; and that did he impel
The same way that the last day's rage put all the Greeks in rout,
When Hector's fury reign'd; these now Achilles pour'd about
The scatter'd field. To stay the flight, Saturnia east before Their hasty feet a standing fog; and then flight's violence bore
The other half full on the flood. The silver-gulfed deep Received them with a mighty cry, the billows vast and steep Roo'd at their armour, which the shores did round about resound;
This way and that they swum, and shriek'd, as in the gulfs they drown'd.
And as in fired fields locusts rise, as the unwearied blaze
Plies still their rising, till in swarms all rush as in amaze,
For scope into some neighbour flood; so th' Achillian stroke Here drove the foe. The gulsy flood with men and horse did choke.

Then on the shore the Worthy hid and left his horrid lance Amids the tamarisks, and sprite-like did with his sword advance
Up to the river; ill affairs took up his furious brain
For Troy's engagements; every way he doubled slain on slain.
A most unmanly noise was made, with those he put to sword;
Of groans and outcries. The flood blush'd, to be so much engorged With such base souls. And as small fish the swift-finn'd dolphin fly, Filling the deep pits in the ports, on whose close strength they lie,
And there he swallows them in shoals; so here, to rocks and holes About the flood, the Trojans fled; and there most lost their souls:
Even till he tired his slaughterous arm.
Twelve fair young princes then He chose of all to take alive, to have them freshly slain
On that most solemn day of wreak, resolved on for his friend.
These led he trembling forth the flood, as fearful of their end As any hind calves. All their hands he pinioned behind
With their own girdles worn upon their rich weeps, and resign'd Their persons to his Myrmidons to bear to fleet; and he Plung'd in the stream again to take more work of tragedy.
He met, then issuing the flood with all intend of flight, [in the night
Lycaon, Dardan Priam's son; whom lately
He had surprised, as in a wood of Priam's he had cut
The green arms of a wild fig-tree, to make him spoked to put In waves of his new chariot. An ill then, all unhought,
Stole on him in Achilles' shape, who took him thence, and brought To well-built Lemnos, selling him to famous Jason's son:
From whom, a guest then in his house
(Imbrius Eation),
Redeem'd at high rate, and sent home t' Arisba, whence he fled,
And saw again his father's court; eleven days he banqueted
Amongst his friends; the twelfth God thrust his hapless head again In t' hands of stern Æacides, who now must send him slain
To Pluto's court, and 'gainst his will.
Him, when Achilles knew, Naked of helmet, shield, sword, lance (all which for ease he threw To earth, being overcome with sweat, and labour wearying
His flying knees) he storm'd, and said:
"O heaven, a wondrous thing.
Invades mine eyes; those Illians, that heretofore I slew,
Rise from the dark dead quick again:
this man Fate makes eschew Her own steel fingers. He was sold in Lemnos, and the deep Of all seas'twixt this Troy, and that (that many a man doth keep From his loved country) bars not him.
Come then, he now shall taste
The head of Pelas, and try if steel will down as fast
As other fortunes, or kind earth can any surer seize
On his sly person, whose strong arms have held down Hercules."
His thoughts thus moved, while he stood firm, to see if he, he spied, Would offer flight (which first he thought) but when he had descried
He was descried, and flight was vain, fearful, he made more nigh.
With purpose to embrace his knees, and now long'd much to fly His black fate and abhorred death by coming in. His foe Observed all this, and up he raised his lance as he would throw;
And then Lycaon close ran in, fell on his breast, and took Achilles' knees; whose lance, on earth now staid, did overlook His still-turn'd back, with thirst to glut his sharp point with the blood That lay so ready. But that thirst Lycaon's thirst withstood
To save his blood; Achilles' knee in his one hand he knit,
His other held the long lance hard, and would not part with it,
But thus besought: "I kiss thy knees, divine Æacides; [present th' access Respect me, and my fortunes rue. I now
Of a poor suppliant for thy ruth; and I am one that is Worthy thy ruth, O Jove's beloved. First hour my miseries Fell into any hand, 'twas thine. I tasted all my bread.
By thy gift since: O since that hour that thy surprisal led
From forth the fair wood my sad feet, far from my loved allies, To famous Lemnos, where I found an hundred oxen's prize
To make my ransom; for which now I thrice the worth will raise.
This day makes twelve, since I arrived in Ilion, many days
Being spent before in sufferance; and now a cruel fate Thrusts me again into thy hands. I should haunt Jove with hate,
That with such set malignity gives thee my life again.
There were but two of us for whom Laothoe suffer'd pain,
Laothoe, old Alce's seed; Alce, whose palace stood
In height of upper Pedasus, near Satnius' silver flood.
And ruled the war-like Lelegi. Whose seed (as many more)
King Priam married, and begot the god-like Polydore,
And me accursed. Thou slaught'rst him; and now thy hand on me Will prove as mortal. I did think, when here I met with thee, I could not scape thee; yet give ear, and add thy mind to it:
I told my birth to intimate, though one sire
did beget,
Yet one womb brought not into light
Hector that slew thy friend, And me. O do not kill me then, but let the wretched end
Of Polydore excuse my life. For half our being bred [is forfeited."
Brothers to Hector, he (half) paid, no more Thus sued he humbly; but he heard, with this austere reply:
"Fool, urge not ruth nor price to me, till that solemnity,
Resolved on for Patroclus' death, pay all his rites to fate.
Till his death I did grace to Troy, and many lives did rate
At price of ransom; but none now, of all the brood of Troy, (Whoever Jove throws to my hands) shall any breath enjoy
That death can beat out, specially that touch at Priam’s race.
Die, die, my friend: What tears are these?
what sad looks spoil thy face?
Patroclus died, that far pars’d thee: nay, seest thou not beside,
Myself, even I, a fair y ung man, and rarely magnified,
And, to my father being a king, a mother have that sits
In rank with goddesses; and yet, when thou hast spent thy spirits, Death and as violent a fate must overtake even me,
By sunlight, morn-light, day, high noon, whenever destiny
Sets on her man to hur, a lance, or knit out of his string An arrow that must reach my life.” This said, a languishing Lycaon’s heart bent like his knees, yet left him strength ’t advance Both hands for mercy as he kneel’d. His foe yet leaves his lance,
And forth his sword flies, which he hid in furrow of a wound Driven through the jointure of his neck;
fall let he on the ground, Stretch’d with death’s pangs, and all the earth imbursed with timeless blood.
Then gript Aeneas his heel, and to the lofty flood Flung, swinging, his unpitied corse, to see it swim, and toss
Upon the rough waves, and said: “Go, fool fat the fish with loss Of thy left blood; they clean will suck thy green wounds; and this saves Thy mother tears upon thy bed. Deep Xanthus on his waves Shall hoise thee bravely to a tomb, that in her burdy breast
The sea shall open, where great fish may keep thy funeral feast With thy white fat; and on the waves dance at thy wedding fate, Clad in black horror, keeping close in accessible state.
So perish lians, till we pluck the brows of Lilion [still upon
Down to her feet, you flying still: I flying Thus in the rear, and (as my brows were fork’d with radib horns)*
Toss ye together. This brave flood, that strengthens and adorns

Your city with his silver guls, to whom so many bulls
Your zeal forth offer’d; with blind zeal his sacred current guls,
With casting chariots and horse; quick to his pray’d-for aid; Shall nothing profit. Perish then, till crue’st death hath laid All at the red feet of Revenge for my slain friend; and all
With whom the absence of my hands made yours a festival,
This speech great Xanthus more enraged, and make his spirit contend For means to shut up the oped vein against him, and defend
The Trojans in it from his plague. In mean time Peleus’ son,
And now with that long lance he hid, for more blood set upon Asteropæus, the dement of Peleus, and he
Of broad-stream’d Axius, and the dame, of first nativity
To all the daughters that renown’d Acesamenus’ seed,
Bright Pericles, whom the flood, arm’d thick with lofty reed, Compress’d. At her grandchild now went,
Thetis’ great son; whose foe Stood arm’d with two darts, being set on by Xanthus, anger’d so For those youths’ blood shed in his stream by vengeful Thetis’ son Without all mercy. Both being near, great Thetides began
With this high requiem: “Of what race art thou that darest oppose Thy power to mine thus? cursed worms they ever did disclose,
That stood my anger.” He replied:
“What makes thy fury’s heat Talk, and seek pedegges? far hence lies my innative seat,
In rich Poseidna. My race from broadstream’d Axius runs;
Axius, that gives earth purest drink, of all the watery sons
Of great Oceanus; and got the famous for his spear,
Poseidna, that father’d me; and these Poseidonians here, Arm’d with long lances, here I lead; and here the eleventh fair light Shines on us since we entered Troy. Come now, brave man, let’s fight.”
Thus spake he, threatening; and to him
Pelines made reply
With shaken Pallas; but his foe with two at once let fly,
For both his hands were dexterous. One javelin strook the shield
Of Thetis' son, but strook not through; the gold, God's gift, repelled.
The eager point; the other lance fell lightly on the part Of his fair right hand's cubit; forth the black blood spun; the dart Glanced over, fastening on the earth, and there his spleen was spent.
That wish'd the body. With which wish Achilles his lance sent,
That quite miss'd, and infix'd itself fast in the steep-up shore;
Even to the midst it enter'd it. Himself then fiercely bore Upon his enemy with his sword. His foe was tugging hard To get his lance out; thrice he pluck'd, and thrice sure Pelias barr'd
His wish'd elevation; the fourth pluck, he bow'd and meant to break
The ashen plant, but, ere that act, Achilles' sword did check His bent power, and brake out his soul. Full in the navel-stead
He ripp'd his belly up, and out his entrails fell, and dead
His breathless body; whence his arms Achilles drew, and said:
"Lie there, and prove it dangerous to lift up adverse head Against Jove's sons, although a flood were ancestor to thee;
Thy vaunts urged him, but I may vaunt a higher pedigree,
From Jove himself. King Peleus was son to Æacus, Infernal Æacus to Jove, and I to Pelcus.
Thunder-voiced Jove far passeth floods, that only murmurs raise With earth and water as they run with tribute to the seas;
And his seed theirs exceeds as far. A flood, a mighty flood,
Raged near thee now, but with no aid; Jove must not be withstood.
King Achselos yields to him, and great Oceanus, Whence all floods, all the sea, all fountains, wells, all deeps humorous, Fetch their beginnings; yet even he fears Jove's flash, and the crack His thunder gives, when out of heaven it tears aswo his rack."

Thus pluck'd he from the shore his lance, and left the waves to wash
The wave-sprung entrails, about which fausens and other fish Did shoal, to nibble at the fat which his sweet kidneys hid.
This for himself: now to his men, the well-rode Peons, did
His rage contend; all which cold fear shook into flight, to see Their captain slain: at whose mazed flight, as much enraged flew he.
And then fell all these, Thrasius, Mydon, Astypylus, Great Ophelestes, Æneas, Mnesus, Therseclus.
And on these many more had fall'n, unless the angry flood
Had took the figure of a man, and in a whirlpit stood, Thus speaking to Æacides: "Past all, power feeds thy will,
Thou great grandchild of Æacus, and past all, the art in ill,
And gods themselves confederates; and Jove, the best of gods,
All deaths gives thee, all places not. Make my shores periods
To all shore service. In the field let thy field-acts run high,
Not in my waters. My sweet streams choke with mortality
Of men slain by thee. Carcasses so glut thee, that I fall [still assail
To pour into the sacred sea my waves; yet Thy cruel forces. Cease, amaze affects me with thy rage,
Prince of the people." He replied: "Shall thy command assuage, Gulf-fed Scamander, my free wrath? I'll never leave pursued Proud Ilion's slaughters, till this hand in her fixed walls conduce
Her flying forces, and hath tried in single fight the chance
Of war with Hector; whose event with stark death shall advance
One of our conquests." Thus again he like a Fury flew Upon the Trojans; when the flood his sad plaint did pursue
To bright Apollo, telling him he was too negligent
Of Jove's high charge; importuning by all means vehement
His help of Troy till latest Even should her black shadows pour On Earth's broad breast. In all his worst, Achilles yet from shore

* The rack or motion of the clouds, for the clouds.
Leapt to his midst. Then swell'd his waves, then raged, then boil'd again Against Achilles. Up flow all, and all the bodies stain
In all his deeps (of which the heaps made bridges to his waves)
He belch'd out, roaring like a bull. The unslain yet he saves In his black whirlpits vast and deep. A horrid billow stood About Achilles. On his shield the violence of the flood Beat so, it drove him back, and took his feet up; his fair palm Enforced to catch into his stay a broad and lofty elm, Whose roots he toss'd up with his hold, and tore up all the shore.
With this then he repell'd the waves, and those thick arms it bore
He made a bridge to bear him off; (for all fell in) when he Forth from the channel threw himself. The rage did terrify Even his great spirit;* and made him add wings to his swiftest feet,
And tread the land. And yet not there the flood left his retreat,
But thrust his billows after him, and black'd them all at top,
To make him fear, and fly his charge, and set the broad field ope For Troy to scape in. He sprung out a dart's cast, but came on Again with a redoubled force. As when the swiftest flown,
And strongest of all fowls, Jove's black hawk, the huntress, stoops upon
A much loved quarry; so charg'd he; his arms with horror rang Against the black waves. Yet again he was so urg'd, he flung His body from the flood, and fled; and after him again
The waves flew roaring. As a man that leads a water-vein,
And from some black fount is to bring his streams through plants and groves, Goes with his mattock, and all checks, set to his course, removes;
When that runs freely, under it the pebbles all give way,
And, where it finds a fall, runs swift; nor can the leader stay

His current then, before himself full paced it murmurs on; [vantage won;
So of Achilles evermore the strong flood
Though most deliver, gods are still above the powers of men.
As oft as th' able god-like man endeav'rd to maintain His charge on them that kept the flood (and charged as he would try
If all the gods inhabiting the broad un-reached sky Could daunt his spirit) so oft still, the rude waves charged him round, Ramp'd on his shoulders; from whose depth his strength and spirit would bound Up to the free air, vex'd in soul. And now the vehement flood Made faint his knees; so overthwart his waves were, they withstood
All the denied dust, which he wish'd; and now was faint to cry, Casting his eyes to that broad heaven, that late he long'd to try.
And said: 'O Jove, how am I left! No god vouchsafes to free Me, miserable man. Help now, and after torture me
With any outrage. Would to heaven, Hector, the mightiest Bred in this region, had imbued his javelin in my breast,
That strong might fall by strong. Where now weak water's luxury Must make my death blush, one, heaven-born, shall like a hog-herd die, Drown'd in a dirty torrent's rage. Yet none of you in heaven
I blame for this, but she alone by whom this life was given That now must die thus. She would still delude me with her tales, Affirming Phosphus' shafts should end within the Trojan walls
My cursed beginning.' In this strait, Neptune and Pallas flew To fetch him off. In men's shapes both close to his danger drew,
And, taking both both hands, thus spake the shaker of the world:
"Pelides, do not stir a foot, nor these waves, proudly curl'd Against thy bold breast, fear a jot; thou hast us two thy friends, Neptune and Pallas, Jove himself approving th' aid we lend.
'Tis nothing as thou fear'st with fate; she will not see thee drown'd.
This height shall soon down, thine own eyes shall see it set aground.

* Note the continued height and admired expression of Achilles' glory.
THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Be ruled then, we'll advise thee well; take not thy hand away (it can lay From putting all, indifferently, to all that Upon the Trojans, till the walls of haughty Lion Conside all in a desperate flight. And when thou hast set gone The soul of Hector, turn to fleet; our hands shall plant a wreath Of endless glory on thy brows." Thus to the free from death Both made retreat. He, much impell'd by charge the godheads gave, The field, that now was overcome with many a boundless wave, He overcame. On their wild breasts they toss'd the carcases, And arms, of many a slaughter'd man. And now the winged knees Of this great captain bore aloft; against the flood he flies With full assault; nor could that god make shrunk his rescued thighs. Nor shrunken the flood, but, as his foe grew powerful, he grew mad, Thrust up a bellow to the sky, and crystal Simois bade To his assistance: "Simois, ho, brother," out he cried. "Come, add thy current, and resist this man half defied. Or lion he will pull down straight; the Trojans cannot stand A minute longer. Come, assist, and instantly command All fountains in thy rule to rise, all torrents to make in, And stuff thy billows; with whose height, engender such a din, With trees torn up and justling stones, as so immense a man May shrink beneath us; whose power thrives do my power all it can; He dares things fitter for a god. But, nor his form, nor force, Nor glorious arms shall profit it; all which, and his dead corse, I vow to roll up in my sands, nay, bury in my mud, Nay, in the very sinks of Troy, that, pour'd into my flood, Shall make him drowning work enough; and, being drown'd, I'll set A fort of such strong filth on him, that Greece shall never get His bones from it. There, there shall stand Achilles' sepulchre, And save a burial for his friends." This fury did transfer His high-ridged billows on the prince, roaring with blood and foam And carcases. The crimson stream did snatch into her womb Surprised Achilles; and her height stood, held up by the hand Of Jove himself. Then Juno cried, and call'd (to countermand This watery Deity) the god that holds command in fire, Afraid lest that gulf-stomach'd flood would satiate his desire On great Achilles: "Mulciber, my best lov'd son!" she cried, "Rouse thee, for all the gods conceive this flood thus amplified Is raised at thee, and shews as if his waves would drown the sky, And put out all the sphere of fire. Haste, help thy empery. Light flames deep as his pits. Ourself the West wind and the South Will call out of the sea, and breathe in either's full-charged mouth A storm t' enrage thy fires 'gainst Troy; which shall (in one exhaled) Blow flames of sweat about their brows, and make their armours scald. Go thou then, and, 'gainst these winds rise, make work on Xanthus' shore, With setting all his trees on fire, and in his own breast pour A fervor that shall make it burn; nor let fair words or threats [the heats Avert thy fury till I speak, and then subdue Of all thy blazes." Mulciber prepared a mighty fire, First in the field used; burning up the bodies that the ire Of great Achilles reft of souls; the quite-drown'd field it dried, And shrunken the flood up. And as fields, that have been long time cloy'd With catching weather, when their corn lies on the gavel heap, Are with a constant north-wind dried, with which for comfort leap Their hearts that sow'd them; so this field was dried, the bodies burn'd, And even the flood into a fire as bright as day was turn'd. Elms, willows, tamarisks, were inflamed; the late-trees, sea-grass reeds, And rushes, with the galingale roots, of which abundance breeds About the sweet flood, all were fired; the gliding fishes flew Upwards in flames; the grovelling eels crept upright; all which slew Wise Vulcan's unreisted spirit. The flood out of a flame Cried to him: "Cease, O Muse, by no deaht can tame!

Thy matchless virtue; nor would I, since thou art thus hot, strive.

Cease then thy strife; let Thetis' son, with all thy wish'd haste, do

Even to their gates these Ilions. What -toucheth me their aid,

Or this contention? Thus in flames the burning River pray'd.

And as a caldron, underput with store of fire, and wrought

With boiling of a well-fed brawn, up leaps
hi wave aloft,

Baving of sere wood urging it, and spending flames apace,

Till all the caldron be engirt with a consuming blaze;

So round this flood burn'd; and so sod his sweet and tortured streams,

Nor could flow forth, bound in the fumes of Vulcan's fiery beams;

When then not moved, his mother's ruth by all his means he crave,

And ask'd, why Vulcan should invade and so torment his waves Past other floods? when his offence rose not to such degree
As that of other gods for Troy; and that himself would free

Her wrath to it, if she were pleased; and pray'd her, that her son

Might be reflected; adding this, that he would ne'er be won

To help keep off the ruinous day, in which all Troy should burn,

Fired by the Grecians. This vow heard, she charged her son to turn

His fiery spirits to their homes, and said it was not fit [Vulcan did remit
A god should suffer so for men. Then His so unmeasured violence, and back the pleasant flood

Ran to his channel. Thus these gods she made friends; th' other stood

At weighty difference; both sides ran together with a sound,

That earth resounded, and great heaven about did surround.

Jove heard it, sitting on his hill, and laugh'd to see the gods

Buckle to arms like angry men; and, he pleased with their odds,

They laid it freely. Of them all, thumpbuckler Mars began,

And at Minerva with a lance of brass he headlong ran,

These vile words ushering his blows:
"Thou dog-fly, what's the cause Thou makest gods fight thus? thy huge heart breaks all our peaceful laws With thy insatiate shamelessness. Remember'st thou the hour
When Diomed charged me, and by thee, and thou with all thy power Took'st lance thyself, and, in all sights, rush'd on me with a wound?

Now vengeance falls on thee for all,"
This said, the shield fringed round

With fighting adders, borne by Jove, that not to thunder yields,

He clapt his lance on; and this god, that with the blood of fields Pollutes his godhead, that shield pierced, and hurt the armed Maid.

But back she leapt, and with her strong hand rapt a huge stone, laid

Above the champain, black and sharp, that did in old time break Partitions to men's lands; and that she dusted in the neck.

Of that impetuous challenger. Down to the earth he sway'd, [was all bare'd
And overlaid seven acres' land. His hair With dust and blood mix'd; and his arms run out. Minerva laugh'd,

And thus insulted: "O thou fool, yet hast thou not been taught To know mine eminance? thy strength opposést thou to mine?

So pay thy mother's furies then, who for these aids of thine, (Ever afforded perjured Troy, Greece ever left) takes spleen,

And vows thee mischief." Thus she turn'd her blue eyes, when Love's Queen

The hand of Mars took, and from earth raised him with thick-drawn breath, His spirits not yet got up again. But from the press of death

Kind Aphrodite was his guide. Which Juno seeing, exclain'd:
"Pallas, see, Mars is help'd from field!
Dog-fly, his rude tongue named Thyself even now; but that his love, that dog-fly, will not leave [did receive Her old consort. Upon her, fly." Minerva
This excitation joyfully, and at the Cyp-rian flew, [a blow that overthrew Strook with her hard hand her soft breast, Both her and Mars; and there both lay together in broad field.

When thus she triumph'd: "So lie all, that any succours yield

* Venus.
THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

To these false Trojans ’gainst the Greeks; so bold and patient
As Venus, shunning charge of me; and no less impotent Be all their aids, than hers to Mars. So short work would be made In our depopulating Troy, this hardest to invade.

Of all earth’s cities.” At this wish, white-wristed Juno smiled. [point of field, Next Neptune and Apollo stood upon the And thus spake Neptune: “Phebus! come; why at the lance’s end Staid we two thus? ‘Twill be a shame, for us to re-ascend Jove’s golden house, being thus in field; and not to fight. Begin: For For tis no graceful work for me; thou hast the younger chin,
I older and know more. O fool! what a forgetful heart Thou bearst about thee, to stand here, pret to take th’ Illian part,
And fight with me! Forgetst thou then, what we two, we alone
Of all the gods, have suffer’d here, when proud Laomedon Enjoy’d our service a whole year, for our agreed reward?
Jove in his sway would have it so; and in that year I rear’d
This broad brave wall about this town, that (being a work of mine)
It might be inextinguishable. This service then was thine, In Idon, that so many hills and curl’d-head forests crown,
To feed his ozen, crooked-shank’d, and headed like the moon.
But when the much-joy-bringing hours brought term for our reward,
The terrible Laomedon dismiss’d us both, and scared
Our high deservings, not alone to hold our promised fee,
But give us threats too. Hands and feet he swore to fetter there,
And sell thee as a slave, dismiss’d far hence to foreign isles.
Nay more, he would have both our ears,
His vow’s breach, and reviles, Made us part angry with him then; and dost thou grutulate now Such a king’s subjects? or with us not their destruction vow,
Even to their chaste wives and their babes?”
He answer’d he might hold His wisdom little, if with him, a god, for men he would

Maintain contention; wretched men that flourish for a time Like leaves, eat some of that earth yields, and give earth in their prime Their whole selves for it. Quickly then, let us fly fight for them, Nor shew it offer’d. Let themselves bear out their own extreme.”
Thus he retir’d, and fear’d to change blows with his uncle’s hands;
His sister therefore chid him much, the goddess that commands
In games of hunting, and thus spake:
“Fiest thou, and leastest the field
To Neptune’s glory, and no blows? O fool, why dost thou yield Thy left, and show no more my ears shall hear thee vaunt in skies Dares to meet Neptune, but I’ll tell thy coward’s tongue it lies.”
He answer’d nothing; yet Jove’s wife could put on no such reins,
But spake thus loosely: “How darest thou, dog, whom no fear contains,
Encounter me? ’twill prove a match of hard condition.
Though the great Lady of the bow and Jove hath set thee down
For lion of thy sex, with gift to slaughter any dame Thy proud will envies; yet some dames will prove th’ ha’st better tame Wild lions upon hills than them. But if this question rests Yet under judgment in thy thoughts, and that thy mind contests, I’ll make thee know it.” Suddenly with her left hand she catch’d Both Cynthia’s palms, lock’d fingers fast, and with her right she snatch’d From her fair shoulders her gilt bow, and, laughing, laid it on
About her ears, and every her turnings seized upon, Till all her arrows scatter’d out, her quiver emptied quite.
And as a dove, that, flying a hawk, takes to some rock her flight,
And in his hollow breasts sits safe, her fate not yet to die;
So fled she mourning, and her bow left there. Then Mercury His opposite thus undertook: “Latona, at no hand [dangerous to stand
Will I bide combat. ’Tis a work right
At difference with the wives of Jove. Go, therefore, freely vaunt Amongst the deities, th’ last subdued, and made thy combatant
THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Yield with plain power.” She answer’d not, but gather’d up the bow And shafts fall’n from her daughter’s side, retining. Up did go Diams to Jove’s starry hall, her incorrupted veil Trembling about her, so she shook. Phoebus, lest Troy should fall Before her fate, flew to her walls; the other deities flew Up to Olympus, some enraged, some glad, Achilles saw Both men and horse of Ilion. And as a city fired Casts up a heat that purifies heaven, glories and shrieks expired
In every corner, toil to all, to many misery,
Which fire th’ incensed gods let fall; Achilles so let fly Rage on the Trojans, toils and shrieks as much by him imposed.
Old Priam in his tender chief stood, and the flight disclosed
Of his forced people, all in rout, and not a stroke return’d
By fled resistance. His eyes saw in what a fury burn’d
The son of Peleus, and down went weeping from the tower
To all the port-guards and their chiefs told of his flying power, Commanding th’ opening of the ports, but not to let their hands
Stir from them; for Eacides would pour in with his bands.
“ Destruction comes, O shut them strait, when we are in,” he pray’d, “ For not our walls I fear will check this violent man.” This said, Off lifted they the bars, the ports haled open, and they gave Safety her entry with the host; which yet they could not save,
Had not Apollo sail’d out, and strook destruction, Brought by Achilles in their necks, back; when they right upon
The ports bore all, dry, dusty, spent; and on their shoulders rode Rabid Achilles with his lance, still glory being the goad
That prick’d his fury. Then the Greeks high-ported ion Had seiz’d, had not Apollo stirr’d Antenor’s famous son, Divine Agenor, and cast in an undertaking spirit
To his bold bosom, and himself stood by
And keep the heavy hand of death from breaking in. The god Stood by him, leaning on a beech, and cover’d his abode
With night-like darkness; yet for all the spirit be inspired,
When that great city-razor’s force his thoughts strook, he retired, Stood, and went on; a world of doubts still falling in his way;
When, angry with himself, he said: “ Why suffer I this stay In this so strong need to go on? If, like the rest, I fly,
’Tis his best weapon to give chase, being swift, and I should die
Like to a coward. If I stand, I fall too.
These two ways
Please not my purpose; I would live.
What if I suffer these Still to be routed, and, my feet affording further length, Syvan strength
Pass all these fields of Ilion, till Tis’s
And steep heights shroud me, and at Even Refresh me in the flood,
And turn to Ilion? O, my soul, why Drown’st thou in the blood Of these discourses? If this course, that talks of further flight,
I give my feet, his feet more swift have More odds. Get he sight
Of that pass, I pass least; for pace, and Length of pace, his thighs
Will stand out all men. Meet him then;
My steel hath faculties
Of power to pierce him; his great breast
But one soul holds, and that Death claims his right in, all men say:
But he holds special state
In Jove’s high bounty; that’s past man,
That every way will hold;
And that serves all men every way.” This Last heart made him bold
To stand Achilles, and stirr’d up a mighty Mind to blows.
And as a panther, having heard the Hounds’ trail, doth disclose
Her freckled forehead, and stirs forth
From out some deep-grown wood
To try what strength dares her abroad;
And when her fiery blood
The hounds have kindled, no quicken
Serves of love to live or fear,
Though stook, though wounded, though Quite through she feels the mortal spear,
But till the man’s close strength she tries,
or stows earth with his dart.
She puts her strength out; so it fared with Brave Agenor’s heart,
And till Achilles he had proved, no thoughts, no deeds, once stirr'd
His fixed foot. To his broad breast his round shield he preferr'd,
And up his arm went with his aim, his voice out with this cry:
"Thy hope is too great, Peleus' son, this day to show thine eye Troy's Ilion at thy foot. O fool! the Greeks with much more woes,
More than are suffer'd yet, must buy great Ilion's overthrows.
We are within her many strong, that for our parents' sakes, Our wives and children, will save Troy; and thou (though he that makes Thy name so terrible) shalt make a sacrifice to her With thine own ruins." Thus he threw, nor did his javelin err,
But strook his foe's leg near his knee; the fervent steel did ring
Against his tin greaves, and leapt back; the fire's strong-handed king Gave virtue of repulse. And then Eacides assail'd Divine Aegnor; but in vain; Apollo's power prevail'd,
And rapt Aegnor from his reach; whom quietly he placed Without the skirmish, casting mists to save from being chaced
His tender'd person; and (he gone) to give his soldiers scape,
The deity turn'd Achilles still, by putting on the shape
Of him he thirsted; evermore he fed his eye, and fled,
And he with all his knees pursued. So cunningly he led,
That still he would be near his reach, to draw his rage, with hope, Far from the conflict; to the flood maintaining still the scope Of his attraction. In mean time, the other frightened powers Came to the city, comforted; when Troy and all her towers Strooted with fillers; none would stand to see who stay'd without,
Who scaped, and who came short: the ports cleft to receive the rout
That pour'd itself in. Every man was for himself: most fleet, Most fortunate. Whoever scaped, his head might thank his feet.

THE END OF THE ONE AND TWENTIETH BOOK.

THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.
THE TWENTY-SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S I LIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

All Trojans housed but Hector; only he keeps field, and undergoes th' extremity.
Æacides assailing, Hector flies,
Minerva stays him, he resists, and dies.
Achilles to his chariot doth enforce,
And to the naval station drags his corpse.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Hector, in Chl, to death is done,
By power of Peleus' angry son.

Thus, chased like hinds, the Ilians took time to drink and eat,
And to refresh them, getting off the mingled dust and sweat,
And good strong rambles on instead.
The Greeks then cast their shields
Aloft their shoulders; and now Fate their near invasion yields
Of those tough walls, her deadly hand compelling Hector's stay Before Troy at the Scæan ports. Achilles still made way
At Phœbus, who his bright head turn'd, and ask'd: "Why, Peleus' son, Pursuest thou (being a man) a god? thy rage hath never done.
Acknowledgment not thine eyes my state?
esteems thy mind no more
Thy honour in the chase of Troy, but puts my chase before.
Their utter conquest? they are all now housed in Ilion, While thou hunt'st me. What wishest thou? my blood will never run On thy proud javelin." "It is thou," replied Æacides, "That putt'st dishonour thus on me, thou worst of deities.
Thou turn'dst me from the walls, whose ports had never entertain'd Numbers now enter'd, over whom thy saving hand hath reign'd,
And robb'd my honour; and all is, since all thy actions stand Past fear of reckoning. But held I the measure in my hand,

It should afford thee dear-bought scapes."
Thus with elated spirits,
Steed-like, that at Olympus' games wears garlands for his merits,
And rattles home his chariot, extending all his pride, [aged Priam spied Achilles so parts with the god. When
The great Greek come, sphere'd round with beams, and showing as if the star, Surnamed Orion's hound, that springs in autumn, and sends far
His radiance through a world of stars, of all whose beams his own Cast greatest splendour, the midnight that renders them most shown Then being their foil; and on their points, cure-passing fevers then Come shaking down into the joints of miserable men;
As this were fall'n to earth, and shot along the field his rays
[Æacides,
Now towards Priam, when he saw in great Out flew his tender voice in shrieks, and with raised hands he smit
His reverend head; then up to heaven he cast them, shewing it
What plagues it sent him; down again then threw them to his son,
To make him shun them. He now stood without steep Ilion, Thirsting the combat; and to him thus miserably cried
The kind old king: "O Hector, fly this man, this homicide, That straight will stry his. He's too strong, and would to heaven he were As strong in heaven's love as in mine; vultures and dogs should tear
His prostrate carcass, all my woes quench'd with his bloody spirits,
He has robb'd me of many sons and worthy, and their merits Sold to far islands. Two of them, ay me,
I miss but now,
They are not enter'd, nor stay here.
Laodice, O 'twas thou,
O queen of women, from whose womb they breathed. O did the tents Detain them only, brass and gold would purchase safe events

VOL. III.
To their sad durance; 'tis within; old
Altes, young in fame, Gave plenty for his daughter's dower; but if they fed the flame
Of this man's fury, woe is me, woe to my wretched queen.
But in our state's woe their two deaths will nought at all be seen, So thy life quit them. Take the town, retire, dear son, and save Troy's husbands and her wives, nor give thine own life to the grave For this man's glory. Pity me, me, wretch, so long alive,
Whom in the door of age Jove keeps;
that so he may deprive My being, in fortune's utmost curse, to see the blackest thread
Of this life's miseries; my sons slain, my daughters ravished,
Their resting chambers sack'd, their babes, torn from them, on their knees Pleading for mercy, themselves dragg'd to Grecian slaveries,
And all this drawn through my red eyes.

Then last of all kneel I, Alone, all helpless at my gates, before my enemy.
That ruthlessly gives me to my dogs, all the
Of age discover'd; and all this thy death, sought wilfully,
Will pour on me. A fair young man at all parts it beseems, Being bravely slain, to lie all gash'd, and wear the worst extremes
Of war's most cruelty; no wound, of whatever ruth,
But is his ornament: but I, a man so far from youth,
White head, white-bearded, wrinkled, pined, all shames must shew the eye, Live, prevent this then, this most shame of all man's misery."

Thus wept the old king, and tore off his white hair; yet all these Retired not Hector. Hecuba then fell upon her knees,
Stripp'd naked her bosom, shew'd her breasts, and bare him reverence them, And pity her. If ever she had quieted his exclaim,
He would cease hers, and take the town, not tempting the rude field
When all had left it: "Think," said she,
"I gave thee life to yield My life recomfort; thy rich wife shall have no rites of thee,
Nor do the rites; our tears shall pay thy corre no obsequy,

Being ravish'd from us; Grecian dogs, nourish'd with what I nursed."

Thus wept both these, and to his ruth proposed the utmost worst
Of what could chance them; yet he stay'd,
And now drew deadly near Mighty Achilles; yet he still kept deadly station there.

Look how a dragon, when she sees a traveller bent upon Her breeding den; her bosom fed with fell contagion,
Gathers her forces, sits him firm, and at his nearest pace
Wraps all her cavern in her folds, and thrusts a horrid face
Out at his entry; Hector so, with unex-tinguish'd spirit,
Stood great Achilles, stirr'd no foot, but at the prominent turret Bent to his bright shield, and resolved to bear fall'n heaven on it.
Yet all this resolute abode did not so truly fit
His free election; but he felt a much more To the performance, with conceit of what he should incur Entering, like others, for this cause; to which he thus gave way:
"O me, if I shall take the town, Polydamas will lay
This flight and all this death on me; who counsell'd me to lead
My powers to Troy this last black night, when so I saw make head Incensed Achilles. I yet stay'd, though, past all doubt, that course Had much more profit'd than mine; which, being by so much worse
As comes to all our flight and death, my folly now I fear
Hath bred this scandal, all our town now burns my ominous ear
With whispering: 'Hector's self-conceit hath cast away his host.'

And, this true, this extremity that I rely on most
Is best for me: stay, and retire with this man's life; or die
Here for our city with renown, since all else fled but I
And yet one way cuts both these ways:
what if I hang my shield
My helm and lance here on these walls, and meet in humble field Renown'd Achilles, offering him Helen and all the wealth,
Whatever in his hollow keels bore
Alexander's stealth
For both th' Atrides? For the rest, whatever is possess'd In all this city, known or hid, by oath shall
Of all our citizens; of which one half the Greeks shall have,
One half themselves. But why, loved soul, would these suggestions save Thy state still in me? I'll not sue; nor would he grant, but I, Mine arms cast off, should be assured a woman's death to die,
To men of oak and rock, no words; virgins and youths talk thus, Virgins and youths that love and woo;
there's other war with us;
What blows and conflicts urge, we cry;
and hates andiances;
And, with the garlands these trees bear, try which hand Jove will bless.
These thoughts employ'd his stay;
in's now near
His Mars-like presence terribly came brandishing his spear, His right arm shook it, his bright arms like day glittering on,
Like fire-light, or the light of heaven shot from the rising sun
This sight outwrought discourse, cold fear shook Hector from his stand;
No more stay now; all ports were left; he fled in fear the hand
Of that Fear-master; who, hawk-like, air's swiftest passenger,
That holds a timorous dove in chase, and with command doth bear
His very onset, the dove hastes, the hawk comes whizzing on.
This way and that he turns and winds, and cuffs the pigeon,
And, till he truss it, his great spirit lays hot charge on his wing;
So urged Achilles Hector's flight; so still fear's point did sting His troubled spirit, his knees wrought hard, along the wall he flew,
In that fair chariot way that runs, beneath the tower of view,
And Troy's wild fig-tree, till they reach'd where those two mother-springs Of deep Scamander pour'd abroad their silver murmurings;
One warm and casts out fumes as fire;
the other cold as snow,
Or hail dissolved. And when the sun made ardent summer glow, There water's concrete crystal shined; near which were cisterns made.
All paved and clear, where Trojan wives and their fair daughters had Laundry for their fine linen weeds, in times of cleanly peace.
Before the Grecians brought their siege.
These captains noted these,
One flying, th' other in pursuit; a strong man flew before,
A stronger follow'd him by far, and close up to him bore;
Both did their best, for neither now ran for a sacrifice,
Or for the sacrificer's hide, our runners' usual prize;
These ran for tame-horse Hector's soul.
And as two running steeds, Back'd in some set race for a game, that tries their swiftest speeds, (A tripod, or a woman, given for some man's funerals)
Such speed made these men, and on foot ran thrice about the walls.*
The gods beheld them, all much moved;
and Jove said: "O ill-sight!
A man I love much, I see forced in most unworthy flight
About great Iliam. My heart grieves; he said so many vows,
With thigus of sacrificed beeves, both on the lofty brows
Of Ida, and in Ilium's height. Consult we, shall we free
His life from death, or give it now t' Achilles' victory?" Minerva answer'd: "Alter Fate? one long since mark'd for death Now take from death? do thou; but know, he still shall run beneath Our other censures." "Be it then," re plied the Thunderer,
"My loved Tritonia, at thy will; in this will prefer Thy free intension, work it all." Then stoop'd she from the sky
To this great combat. Peleus' son purs sued incessantly Still-flying Hector. As a hound that having roused a hart, Although he toppish ne'er so oft, and every shrubby part Attempts for strength, and trembles in, the hound doth still pursue So close that not a foot he falls; but hunts it still at view;
So plied Achilles Hector's steps; as oft as he assay'd
The Dardan ports and towers for strength (to fetch from thence some aid) With winged shafts) so oft forced he amends of pace, and stept
"Twixt him and all his hopes, and still upon the field he kept His utmost turnings to the town. And yet, as in a dream,
One thinks he gives another chase, when such a fain'd extreme Possesseth both, that he in chase the chaser cannot fly,
Nor can the chaser get to hand his flying
enemy;"
So nor Achilles’ chase could reach the flight of Hector’s pace,
Nor Hector’s flight enlarge itself of swift Achilles’ chase.
But how chang’d this? how, all this time, could Hector bear the knees Of fierce Achilles with his own, and keep off destinies.
If Phoebus, for his last and best, through all that course had fail’d To add his succours to his nerves, and, as his foe assail’d
Near and within him, fed his ‘scape?
Achilles yet well knew His knees would fetch him, and gave signs to some friends (making shew Of shooting at him) to forbear, lest they extracted so [the overthrow From his full glory, in first wounds, and in Make his hand last. But when they reach’d the fourth time the two founts, Then Jove his golden scoles weigh’d up, and took the last accounts Of fate for Hector, putting in for him and Peleus’ son
Two fates of bitter death; of which high heaven received the one.
The other hell; so low declined the light of Hector’s life.
Then Phoebus left him, when war’s Queen came to resolve the strike In th’ other’s knowledge: "Now," said she, "Jove-loved Αἰάκιδες,
I hope at last to make renown perform a brave access
To all the Grieans; we shall now lay low this champion’s height, Though never so insatiate was his great heart of fight.
Nor must he scape our pursuit still, though at the feet of Jove Apollo bows into a sphere, soliciting more
love

To his most favour’d. Breathe thee then, stand firm, myself will haste
And hearten Hector to change blows."
She went, and he stood fast.
Lean’d on his lance, and much was joy’d that single strokes should try This frigid conflict. Then came close the changed deity
To Hector, like Deiphobus in shape and voice, and said:
"O brother, thou art too much urged to be thus combated
About our own walls; let us stand, and force to a retreat
Th’ insulting chaser." Hector joy’d at this so kind deceit,
And said: O good Deiphobus, thy love was most before
[Of all my brothers] dear to me, but now exceeding more
It costs me honour, that, thus urged, thou comest to part the charge Of my last fortunes; other friends keep town, and leave at large My rack’d endeavours." She replied:
"Good brother, ’tis most true
One after other, king and queen, and all our friends, did sue, Even on their knees, to stay me there, such trumblings shake them all With this man’s terror; but my mind so grieved to see our wall Girt with thy chases, that to death I long’d to urge thy stay.
Come, fight we, thirsty of his blood; no more let’s fear to lay Cost on our lances, but approve, if, bloodied with our spoils,
He can bear glory to their fleet, or shut up all their tolls
In his one suffrance on thy lance." With this deceit she led,
And, both come near, thus Hector spake:
"Thrice I have compassed
This great town, Peleus’ son, in flight, with aversation [all flight is flown,
That out of fate put off my steps; but now
The short course set up, death or life.
Our resolutions yet
Must shun all rudeness; and the gods before our valour set For use of victory; and they being worthiest witnesses
Of all vows, since they keep vows best, before their deities Let vows of fit respect pass both, when Conquest hath bestow’d
Her wretch on either. Here I vow no fury shall be shew’d,

* A most ingenious simile, used (as all our Homer besides) by Virgil, but this as a translator merely.

That is not manly, on thy corse; but, having spoil'd thy arms, resign thy person, which swear thou." These fair and temperate terms Far fled Achilles; his brows bent, and out flew this reply: "Hector, thou only pestilence in all mortality To my sere spirits, never set the point 'twixt thee and me Any conditions; but as far as men and lions fly All terms of covenant, lambs and wolves; in so far opposite state (Impossible for love to atone) stand we, till our souls satiate The god of soldiers. Do not dream that our disjunction can endure condition. Therefore now, all worth that fits a man Call to thee, all particular parts that fit a soldier, and they all this include (besides the skill and spirit of war) Hunger for slaughter, and a hate that eats thy heart to eat Thy foe's heart. This stirs, this supplies in death the killing heat; and all this need'st thou. No more flight. Pallas Athenia Will quickly cast thee to my lance. Now, now together draw All griefs for vengeance, both in me, and all my friends late dead That bled thee, raging with thy lance." This said, he brandished His long lance, and away it sung; which Hector giving view, Stoop'd low, stood firm, foreseeing it best, and quite it overwore, Fastening on earth. Athenia drew it, and gave her friend, unseen of Hector. Hector then thus spake: "Thou want'st thy end, God-like Achilles. Now I see, thou hast not learn'd my fate Of Jove at all, as thy high words would bravely intimate, Much tongue affects thee; cunning words well serve thee to prepare Thy blows with threats, that mine might faint with want of spirit to dare. But my back never turns with breath; it was not born to bear Burthens of wounds; strike home before; drive at my breast thy spear,

As mine at thine shall, and try then if heaven's will favour thee With scarce of my lance. O would Jove would take it after me, And make thy bosom take it all; an easy end would crown Our difficult wars, were thy soul fled, thou most bare of our town." Thus flew his dart, touch'd at the midst of his vast shield, and flew A huge way from it; but his heart wrath entered with the view Of that hard scarce, and heavy thoughts strook through him, when he spied His brother vanish'd, and no lance beside left; out he cried: "Deiphobus! another lance." Lance nor Deiphobus Stood near his call. And then his mind saw all things ominous, And thus suggested: "Woe is me, the gods have call'd, and I Must meet death here; Deiphobus I well hoped had been by With his white shield; but our strong walls shield him, and this deceit Flows from Minerva; now, 0 now, ill death comes, no more flight, No more recovery. O Jove, this hath been otherwise; Thy bright son and thyself have set the Greeks a greater prize Of Hector's blood than now; of which, even jealous, you had care, But Fate now conquers; I am hers; and yet not she shall share In my renown; that life is left to every noble spirit, And that some great deed shall beget that all lives shall inherit." Thus, forth his sword flew, sharp and broad, and bore a deadly weight, With which he rush'd in. And look how an eagle from her height Stoops to the rapture of a lamb, or cuffs a timorous hare; [his mind's fare So fell in Hector; and at him Achilles; Was fierce and mighty, his shield cast a sun-like radiance. Helm nodd'd, and his four plumes shook, and, when he rais'd his lance, Up Hesperus rose 'mongst th' evening stars. His bright and sparkling eyes Look'd through the body of his foe, and sought through all that prise The next way to his thirsted life. Of all the ways, only one Appear'd to him, and that was where th' unequal winding bone,
That joins the shoulders and the neck, bad place, and where there lay The speeding way to death; and there his quick eye could display
The place it sought, even through those arms his friend Patroclus wore When Hector slew him. There he aim'd, and there his javelin tore Stern passage quite through Hector's neck;
yet miss'd it so his throat
It gave him power to change some words; but down to earth it got His fainting body. Then triumph'd divine
Æacides ;
" Hector," said he, "thy heart supposed that in my friend's decease Thy life was safe; my absent arm not cared for. Fool! I left One at the fleet that better'd him, and he it is that reft
Thy strong knees thus; and now the dogs and fowls in foulest use Shall tear thee up, thy corse exposed to all the Greeks' abuse."
He, fainting, said: "Let me implore, even by thy knees and soul,
And thy great parents, do not see a cruelty so foul [any rate,
Inflicted on me. Brass and gold receive at
And quit my person, that the peers and ladies of our state May tomb it, and to sacred fire turn thy profane decrees."
"Dog," he replied, "urge not my ruth, by parents, soul, nor knees.
I would to God that any rage would let me eat thee raw,
Sliced into pieces, so beyond the right of y any law
I taste thy merits. And, believe, it flies the force of man
To rescue thy head from the dogs. Give all the gold they can;
If ten or twenty times so much as friends would rate thy price
Were tender'd here, with vows of more, to buy the cruelties
I here have vow'd; and after that thy father with his gold Would free thyself; all that should fail to let thy mother hold Solemnities of death with thee, and do
thee such a grace
To mourn thy whole corpse on a bed; which piecemeal I'll deface
With fowls and dogs." He, dying, said:
"I, knowing thee well, foresaw Thy now tried tyranny, nor hoped for any other law
Of nature, or of nations; and that fear forced much more Than death my flight, which never touch'd at Hector's foot before.
A soul of iron informs thee; mark, what vengeance th' equal fates
Will give me of thee for this rage, when in the Scanian gates Phoebus and Paris meet with thee." Thus death's hand closed his eyes,
His soul flying his fair limbs to hell, mourning his destinies.
To part so with his youth and strength.
Thus dead, thus Tethis' son
His prophecy answer'd: "Die thou now;
when my short thread is spun, I'll bear it as the will of Jove." This said, his brazen spear
He drew, and stuck by; then his arms, that all embred were,
He spoil'd his shoulders of. Then all the Greeks ran in to him,
To see his person, and admired his terror-striking limb;
Yet none stood by that gave no wound to his so goodly form;
When each to other said: "O Jove, he is not in the storm
He came to fleet in with his fire, he handles now more soft.
"O friends," said stern Æacides, "now that the gods have brought This man thus down, I'll freely say, he brought more bane to Greece Than all his aiders. Try we then, thus arm't at every piece,
And girding all Troy with our host, if now their hearts will leave Their city clear, her clear stay stain, and all their lives receive, Or hold yet, Hector being no more. But why use I a word
Of any act but what concerns my friend?
dead, undeplored,
Unsuckled, he lies at fleet, unthought on; never hour Shall make his dead state, while the quick enjoys me, and this power To move these movers. Though in hell, men say, that such as die
Oblivion seizeth, yet in hell in me shall Memory
Hold all her forms still of my friend. Now, youths of Greece, to fleet Bear we this body, panants sing, and all our navy greet [the period
With endless honour; we have slain Hector.
Of all Troy's glory, to whose worth all vow'd as to a god."
This said, a work not worthy him he set to; of both feet
He bores the nerves through from the heel to th' ankle, and then knit Both to his chariot with a thong of white-leather, his head Trailing the centre. Up he got to chariot, where he laid
The arms repurchased, and scourged on his horse that freely flew,
A whirlwind made of startled dust drave with them as they drew,
With which were all his black-brown curls knotted in heaps and filed.
And there lay Troy's late Gracious, by Jupiter exiled. [parents seen;]
To all disgrace, in his own land, and by his When (like her son's head) all with dust
Troy's miserable queen
Distain'd her temples, plucking off her honour'd hair, and tore Her royal garments, shrieking out. In like kind Priam bore His sacred person, like a wretch that never saw good day, Broken with outcries. About both, the people prostrate lay,
Held down with anguish; all the town veild with a cloud of tears.
Ilion, with all his tops on fire, and all the massacres, Left for the Greeks, could put on looks of no more overthrow Than now fray'd life. And yet the king did all their looks outshow.
The wretched people could not bear his sovereign wretchedness, Plaguing himself so, thrusting out, and praying all the press
To open him the Dardan ports, that he alone might fetch His dearest son in; and (all filed with tumbling) did beseech Each man by name, thus: "Loved friends, be you content, let me, Though much ye grieve, be that poor mean to our sad remedy.
Now in our wishes; I will go and pray this impious man,
Author of horrors, making proof if age's reverence can Excite his pity. His own sire is old like me; and he That got him to our griefs, perhaps, may, for my likeness, be Mean for our ruth to him. Alas, you have no cause of cares, Compared with me; I many sons, graced with their freshest years,
Have lost by him, and all their deaths in slaughter of this one (Afflicted man) are doubled. This will bitterly set gone
My soul to hell. O would to heaven, I could but hold him dead
In these pined arms, then tears on tears might fall, till all were shed
In common fortune. Now amaze their natural course doth stop,
And pricks a mad vein." Thus he mourn'd, and with him all brake ope Their store of sorrows. The poor Queen amongst the women wept, Turn'd into anguish: "O my son," she cried out, "why still kept Patient of horrors is my life, when thine is vanished?
My days thou gloriest; my nights rung of some honour'd deed Done by thy virtues: joy to me, profit to all our care.
All made a god of thee, and thou madest them all that they are,
Now under fate, now dead." These two thus vented as they could Their sorrow's furnace; Hector's wife not having yet been told
So much as of his stay without. She in her chamber close Sat at her loom; a piece of work, graced with a both sides gloss, Strew'd curiously with varied flowers, her pleasure was; her care,
To heat a caldron for her lord, to bathe him turn'd from war,
Of which she chief charge gave her maids.
Poor dame, she little knew How much her cares lack'd of his case. But now the clamour flew Up to her turret; then she shook, her work fell from her hand,
And up she started, call'd her maids; she needs must understand That ominous outcry: "Come," said she; "I hear through all this cry
My mother's voice shrick; to my throat my heart bounds; ecstasy Utterly alters me; some fate is near the hapless sons [suspicions Of fading Priam. Would to God my words'
No ear had heard yet; O I fear, and that most heartily,
That, with some stratagem, the son of Peleus hath put by The wall of Ilion, my lord; and, trusty of his feet, Obtain'd the chase of him alone, and now the curious heat.
Of his still desperate spirit is cool'd. It let him never keep, [foot must step,
In guard of others; before all his violent Or his place forfeited he held."
Thus fury-like she went,
Two women, as she will'd, at hand; and made her quick ascent Up to the tower and press of men, her spirit in uproar. Round
She cast her greedy eye, and saw her Hector slain, and bound T' Achilles' chariot, manlessly dragg'd to the Grecian fleet.
Black night strook through her, under her trance took away her feet,
And back she shrank with such a sway that off her head-tire flew, [Venus threw Her coronet, caul, ribands, veil that golden On her white shoulders that high day when warlike Hector won [Eetion,
Her hand in nuptials in the court of king
And that great dower then given with her.
About her, on their knees,
Her husband's sisters, brothers' wives, fell round, and by degrees Recover'd her. Then, when again her respirations found.
Free pass (her mind and spirit met) these thoughts her words did sound:
"O Hector, O me, cursed dame, both born beneath one fate, Thou here, I in Cilician Thebes, where Placus doth elate [Eetion,
His shady forehead, in the court where king (Hapless) begot unhappy me; which would he had not done,
To live past thee: thou now art dived to Pluto's gloomy throne,
Sunk through the coverts of the earth; I,
in a hell of moan,
Left here thy widow; one poor babe born unto unhappy both,
Whom thou leastest helpless as he the..."
THE ARGUMENT.

Achilles orders justs of eceques For his Patroclus ; and doth sacrifice Twelve Trojan princes, most loved hounds and horse, And other offerings, to the honour'd corpse. He institutes, besides, a funeral game; Where Diomed, for horse-race, wins the fame; For foot, Ulysses; others otherwise Strive, and obtain; and end the eceques.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Plei sings the rites of the decease, Ordain'd by great Æacides.

Thus mourn'd all Troy: but when at fleet and Hellespontus' shore The Greeks arrived, each to his ship; only the Conqueror Kept undispersed his Myrmidons, and said: "Love countrypmen, Disjoin not we chariots and horse; but, bearing hard our rein, With state of both, march soft, and close, and mourn about the corse; 'Tis proper honour to the dead; Then take we out our horse, When with our friends' kind's woe our hearts have felt delight to do A virtuous soul right, and then sup." This said, all full of woe Cirled the corse ; Achilles led, and thrice, about him close, All bare their goody-coated horse, Amongst all Thetis rose, And stirr'd up a delight in grief, till all their arms with tears, And all the sands, were wet ; so much they loved that Lord of Fears. Then to the centre fell the prince; and, putting in the breast Of his slain friend his slaughtering hands, began to all the rest Words to their tears: "Rejoice," said he, "O my Patroclus, thou Courted by Dis now; now I pay to thy late overthrow

All my revenges vow'd before. Hector lies slaughter'd here Drage'd at my chariot, and our dogs shall all in pieces tear His hated limbs. Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strains, I took alive; and, yet enraged, will empty all their veins Of vital spirits, sacrificed before thy heap of fire." This said, a work unworthy him he put upon his hero. And trampled Hector under foot at his friend's feet. The rest Disarm'd, took horse from chariot, and all to sleep address'd At his black vessel. Infinite were those that rested there. Himself yet sleeps not, now his spirits were wrought about the cheer Fit for so high a funeral. About the steel used then Oxen in heaps lay bellowing, preparing food for men; Bleating of sheep and goats fill'd air; numbers of white-tooth'd swine, Swimming in fat, lay singing there; the person of the slain Was girt with slaughter. All this done, all the Greek kings convey'd Achilles to the king of men; his rage not yet allay'd For his Patroclus. Being arrived at Agamemnon's tent, Himself bade heralds put to fire a caldron, and present The service of it to the prince, to try if they could win His pleasure to admit their pains to cleanse the blood soak'd in About his conquering hands and brows. "Not by the king of heaven," He swore. "The laws of friendship damn this false-heart licence given To men that lose friends. Not a drop shall touch me till I put Patroclus in the funeral pile; before these curls be cut;
His tomb erected. 'Tis the last of all care I shall take.
While I consort the careful. Yet, for your entreaties' sake,
And though I loathe the food, I will eat. But early in the morn, Atrides, use your strict command that loads of wood be borne
To our design'd place, all that fits to light home such a one
As is to pass the shades of death, that fire enough set gone
His person quickly from our eyes, and our diverted men May ply their business." This all ears did freely entertain,
And found observance. Then they supp'd with all things fit, and all Repair'd to tents and rest. The friend the shores maritlal Sought for his bed, and found a place, fair, and upon which play'd
The murmuring billows. There his limbs to rest, not sleep, he laid, Heavily sighing. Round about, silent and not too near, Stood all his Myrmidons; when straight, so over-labour'd were His goodly lineaments with chase of Hector, that, beyond His resolution not to sleep, Sleep cast his sudden bond
Over his sense, and loosed his care. Then of his wretched friend
The soul appear'd; at every part the form did comprehend
His likeness; his fair eyes, his voice, his stature, every weed
His person wore, it fantasied; and stood above his head, This sad speech uttering: "Dost thou sleep? Aecides, am I Forgotten of thee? Being alive, I found thy memory [love abates, Ever respectful; but now, dead, thy dying inter me quickly, enter me in Pluto's iron gates,
For now the souls (the shades) of men, fled from this being, beat
My spirit from rest, and stay my much-desired receipt Amongst souls placed beyond the flood. Now every way I err About this broad-door'd house of Dis. O help then to prefer
My soul yet further: here I mourn, but, had the funeral fire Consumed my body, never more my spirit should retire
From hell's low region; from thence souls never are retrieved
To talk with friends here; nor shall I; a hateful fate deprived
My being here, that at my birth was fix'd; and to such fate
Even thou, O god-like man, art mark'd; the deadly Ilion gate Must entertain thy death. O then, I charge thee now, take care
That our bones part not; but as life combined in equal fare
Our loving beings, so let death. When frenzied Oenomaus's towers
My father brought me to your roofs (since, 'gainst my will, my powers Incensed, and indiscrimat at dice, slow fair Amphidamas) Then Peleus entertain'd me well; then in thy charge I was
By his injunction and thy love; and therein let me still Receive protection. Both our bones, provide in thy last will,
That one urn may contain; and make that vessel all of gold,
That Thetis gave thee, that rich urn." This said, Sleep ceased to hold Achilles' temples, and the shade thus he received: "O friend,
What needed these commands? my care, before, meant to commend My bones to thine, and in that urn. Be sure thy will is done.
A little stay yet, let's delight, with some full passion Of woe enough, either affects; embrace we." Opening thus His greedy arms, he felt no friend; like matter vaporous
The spirit vanish'd under earth, and murmur'd in his stoop, Achilles started, both his hands he clapp'd, and lifted up,
In this sort wondering: "O ye gods, I see we have a soul
In th' under-dwellings, and a kind of man-resembling idol;
The soul's seat yet, all matter felt, stays with the caress here.
O friends, hapless Patroclus' soul did all this night appear Weeping and making moan to me, commanding everything
That I intended towards him; so truly figuring [accident did turn Himself at all parts, as was strange." This To much more sorrow, and begat a greediness to mourn
THE TWENTY-THIRD BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

In vain my father's pious vow'd, at my implored return
To my loved country, that these curls should on thy shores be shorn, Besides a sacred hecatomb; and sacrifice beside Of fifty wethers, at those fountains, where men have edified [thy name].
A lofty temple, and perfumed an altar to
There vow'd he all these offerings; but fate prevents thy fame,
His hopes not suffering satisfied. And since I never more Shall see my loved soil, my friend's hands shall to the Stygian shore Convey these tresses. Thus he put in his friend's hands the hair;
And this brain of fresh desire of moan; and in that sad affair
The sun had set amongst them all, had Thetis' son not spoke Thus to Atrides: "King of men, thy aid
I still invoke,
Since thy command all men still hear: dismiss thy soldiers now,
And let them virtuous; they have mourn'd sufficient; 'tis we owe
The dead this honour; and with us let all the captains stay."
This heard, Atrides instantly the soldiers sent away;
The funerary officers remain'd, and heap'd on matter still,
Till of an hundred foot about they made the funeral pile,
In whose hot height they cast the corse, and then they pour'd on tears.
Numbers of fat sheep, and like store of crooked-going steers,
They slew before the solemn fire; stripp'd off their hides and dress'd.
Of which Achilles took the fat, and cover'd the deceased
From head to foot; and round about he made the officers pile
The beasts' naked bodies; vessels full of honey and of oil Pour'd in them, laid upon a bier, and cast into the fire.
Four goodly horse; and of nine hounds, two most in the desire
Of that great prince, and trencher-fed; all fed that hungry flame.
Twelve Trojan princes last stood forth, young, and of toward fame,
All which (set on with wicked spirits) there strook he, there he slew,
And to the iron strength of fire their noble limbs he threw.

In all that heard. When mourning thus,
the rosy Morn arose,
And Agamemnon through the tents waked all, and did dispose Both men and mules for carriage of matter for the fire;
Of all which, work Meriones, the Cretan sovereign's aquire,
Was captain; and abroad they went.
Wood-cutting tools they bore Of all hands, and well-twisted cords. The mules march'd all before.
Up hill, and down hill, overhurts, and break-neck cliffs they pass'd;
But, when the fountful Ida’s tops they scaled with utmost haste,
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks, and Americaned brows
Fell bustling to the earth; and up went all the boles and boughs Bound to the mules; and back again they parted the harsh way
Amongst them through the tangling shrubs;
and long they thought the day Till in the plain field all arrived, for all the woodmen bore
Logs on their necks; Meriones would have it so. The shore At last they reach'd yet, and then down their carriages they cast,
And sat upon them, where the son of Peleus had placed
The ground for his great sepulchre, and for his friends, in one.
They raised a huge pile, and to arms went every Myrmidon, Charged by Achilles; chariots and horse were harnessed,
Fighters and charioteers got up, and they
the sad march led,
A cloud of infinite foot behind. In midst of all was borne Patroclus' person by his peers. On him were all heads shorn,
Even till they cover'd him with curls.
Next to this march'd his friend Embracing his cold neck, all sad; since now he was to send His dearest to his endless home. Arrived all where the wood
Was heap'd for funeral, they set down.
Apart Achilles stood.
And when enough wood was heap'd on,
he cut his golden hair,
Long kept for Sperchius the flood, in hope of safe repair [left hopeless thus,
To Phthias by that river's power; but now Enraged, and looking on the sea, he cried out: "Sperchius,
Then breathed his last sighs, and these words: "Again rejoice, my friend, Even in the joyless depth of hell. Now give me complete end
To all my vows. Alone thy life sustain'd not violence;
Twelve Trojan princes wait on thee, and labour to incense
Thy glorious heap of funeral. Great Hector I'll excuse,
The dogs shall eat him." These high threats perform'd not their abuse; Jove's daughter, Venus, took the guard of noble Hector's corsie,
And kept the dogs off, night and day applying sovereign force
Of rosy balms, that to the dogs were horrible in taste.
And with which she the body fill'd. Re-nown'd Apollo cast
A cloud from heaven, lest with the sun the nerve and lineaments Might dry and putrefy. And now some powers denied consent To this solemnity; the fire (for all the cily fuel
It is rejected) would not burn; and then the loving Cruel
Studied for help, and, standing off, invoked
the two fair winds, Zephyr and Boreas, to afford the rage of both their kinds
To aid his outrage. Precious gifts his estate zeal did vow, Pour'd from a golden bowl much wine, and pray'd them both to blow, That quickly his friend's corpse might burn, and that heap's sturdy breast Embrace consumption. Iris heard: the winds were at a feast,
All in the court of Zephyrus, that boisterous blowing air, Gather'd together. She that wears the thousand-colour'd hair Flew thither, standing in the porch. They, seeing her, all arose, Called to her, every one desired she would awhile repose,
And eat with them. She answer'd: "No, no place of seat is here;
Retreat calls to the Ocean and Æthiopia, where
A hecatomb is offering now to heaven, and there must I [signify Partake the feast of sacrifice. I come to That Thetis' son implores your aids (princes of North and West), With vows of much fair sacrifice, if each will set his breast Against his heap of funeral, and make it quickly burn;
Patroclus lies there, whose decease all the Achaian mourn."
She said, and parted; and out rush'd, with an unmeasured roar, Those two winds, tumbling clouds in heaps, ushers to either's bower.
And instantly they reach'd the sea; up flow the waves; the gale Was strong; reach'd fruitful Troy; and full upon the fire they fell.
The huge heap thunder'd. All night long from his choked breast they blew
A liberal flame up; and all night swift-foot Achilles threw Wine from a golden bowl on earth, and steep'd the soil in wine, Still calling on Patroclus' soul. No father could incline
More to a son most dear, nor more mourn at his burned bones,
Than did the great prince to his friend at his combustions,
Still creeping near and near the heap; still sighing, weeping still.
But when the day-star look'd abroad, and promised from his hill Light, which the saffron morn made good,
and sprinkled on the seas,
Then languish'd the great pile; then sunk the flames; and then calm Peace Turn'd back the rough winds to their homes; the Thracian billow rings Their high retreat, ruffled with cuffs of their triumphant wings.
Pelides then forsook the pile, and to his tired limb
Chose of place of rest; where laid, sweet sleep fell to his wish on him, When all the king's guard (waiting then, perceiving will to rise
In that great session) hurried in, and oped again his eyes
With tumult of their troop, and haste. A little then he rear'd [affair refer'd His troubled person, sitting up, and this
To wish'd commandment of the kings:
"Atrides, and the rest
Of our commanders general, vouchsafe me this request
Before your parting: give in charge the quenching with black wine
Of this heap's relics; every brand the yellow fire made shine;
And then let search Patroclus' bones, distinguishing them well;
As well ye may, they kept the midst, the rest at random fell About th' extreme part of the pile; men's bones and horses' mix'd.
Being found, I'll find an urn of gold t' enclose them, and betwixt
The air and them two kels of fat lay on them, and to rest Commit them, till mine own bones seal our love, my soul deceased.
The sepulchre I have not charged to make of too much state,
But of a model something mean, that you of younger fate,
When I am gone, may amplify with such a breadth and height
As fits your judgments and our worths."
This charge received his weight In all observance: first they quench'd with sable wine the heap,
As far as it had fed the flame. The ash fell wondrous deep,
In which his consorts, that his life religiously loved,
Search'd, weeping; for his bones; which found, they conscientiously proved His will made to Æneas, and what his love did add.
A golden vessel, double fat, contain'd them; all which, clad In veils of linen, pure and rich, were solemnly convey'd
'T Achilles' tent. The platform then about the pile they laid [earth, and then
Of his fit sepulchre, and raised a heap of Offer'd departure. But the prince retain'd there still his men, Employing them to fetch from fleet rich tripods for his games, Caldrons, horse, mules, broad-headed beesves, bright steel, and brighter dames.
The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewifery
Of all kinds fitting; and withal a trivet, that inclosed
Twenty-two measures' room, with ears.
The next prize he proposed
Was (that which then had high respect) a mare of six years old, Unhandled, horded with a mule, and ready to have foal'd.
The third game was a caldron, new, fair, bright, and could for size Contain two measures. For the fourth, two talents' quantities Of finest gold. The fifth game was a great new standing bowl,
To set down both ways. These brought in,
Achilles then stood up.
And said: "Atrides and my lords, chief horsemen of our host, These games expect ye. If myself should interpose my most
For our horse-race, I make no doubt but I should take again
These gifts proposed. Ye all know well, of how divine a strain
My horse are, and how eminent. Of Ne-tune's gift they are To Pelius, and of his to me. Myself then will not share
In gifts given others, nor my steeds breathe any spirit to shake Their airy patters; so they mourn for their kind guiders sake, Late lost: that used with humorous oil to slick their lofty manes, Clear water having cleansed them first,
and, his bane being their manes,
Those lofty manes now strew the earth, their heads held shaken down.
You then that trust in chariots, and hope with horse to crown
Your conquering temples, gird yourselves; now, name and prize stretch for,
All that have spirits." This fired all: the first competitor
Was king Eumelus, whom the art of horsemanship did grace,
Son to Admetus. Next to him rose Diomed to the race,
That under reins ruled Trojan horse, of late forced from the son (fusion
Of land Anchises, himself freed of near con-By Phoebus. Next to him set forth the yellow-headed king
Of Lacedaemon. Jove's high seed; and, in his managing,
Podargus and swift Æthe trod, steeds to
the King of men;
Æthe given by Echepolus, the Anchisaden,
As brine to free him from the war resolved for Ilion;
So Delicacy feasted him, whom Jove bestow'd upon
A mighty wealth; his dwelling was in broad Sicyone.
Old Nestor's son, Antilocthus, was fourth for chivalry
In this contention: his fair horse were of the Pylian breed,
And his old father, coming near, inform'd him (for good speed)
With good race notes, in which himself could good instruction give:
"Antilocthus, though young thou art, yet thy grave virtues live
Beloved of Neptune and of Jove: their spirits have taught thee all.
The art of horsemanship, for which the less thy merits fall
In need of doctrine. Well thy skill can wield a chariot
In all fair turnings, yet thy horse their slow feet handle not As fits thy manage, which makes me cast doubts of thy success.
I well know all these are not seen in art of this address
More than thyself; their horses yet superior are to thine.
For their parts; thine want speed to make discharge of a design
To please an artist. But go on, shew but thy art and heart.
At all points, and set them against their horses’ heart and art;
Good judges will not see thee lose. A carpenter’s desert Stands more in cunning than in power. A pilot doth avert His vessel from the rock, and wreck, toss’d with the churlish winds,
By skill, not strength: so sorts it here; one charioteer that finds Want of another’s power in horse must in his own skill set An overplus of that to that; and so the proof will get Skill, that still rests within a man, more grace than power without.
He that in horse and chariots trusts, is often hurl’d about This way and that, unhandsomely, all heaven wide of his end.
He, better skill’d, that rules worse horse, will all observance bend
Right on the scope still of a race, bear near, know when to rein,
When give rein, as his foe before (well noted in his vein Of manage and his steeds’ estate) presents occasion:
I’ll give thee instance now, as plain as if thou sawst it done:
Here stands a dry stub of some tree,* a cubit from the ground, (Suppose the stub of oak or larch, for either are so sound That neither rots with weal) two stones, white (mark you), white for view, Parted on either side the stub; and these lay where they drew

The way into a strait; the race betwixt both lying clear.
Imagine them some monument of one long since tomb’d there,
Or that they had been lists of race for men of former years,
As now the lists Achilles sets may serve for charioteers
Many years hence. When near to these the race grows, then as right Drive on them as thy eye can judge; then lay thy bridle’s weight
Most of thy left side; thy right horse then switching, all thy throat (Spent in encouragements) give him, and all the rein let float About his shoulders; thy near horse will yet be he that gave Thy skill the prize, and him rein so his head may touch the nave
Of thy left wheel; but then take care thou runn’dst not on the stone (With wrack of horse and chariot) which so thou shalt upon.
Shipwreck within the haven avoid, by all means; that will breed Others delight, and thee a shame. Be wise then, and take heed,
My loved son, get but to be first at turning in the course;
He lives not that can cote thee then, not if he back’d the horse
The gods bled, and Adrastus owed. Divine Arion’s speed Could not outpace thee, or the horse Lao-medon did breed, Whose race is famous, and fed here.* Thus sat Necteides,
When all that could be said was said.* And then Meriones Set fitfully forth his fair-maned horse. All leapt to chariot;
And every man then for the start cast in his proper lot.
Achilles drew; Antilochus the lot set foremost forth;
Eumeleus next; Atrides third; Meriones the fourth;
The fifth and last was Diomed, far first in excellence.
All stood in order, and the lists Achilles fix’d far thence In plain field; and a seat ordain’d fast by, in which he set Renowned Phœnix, that in grace of Pelcus was so great,

* A comment might well be bestowed upon this speech of Nestor.

*Nestor’s aged love of speech was here briefly noted.
THE TWENTY-THIRD BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.

To see the race, and give a truth of all their passages.
All start together, scourged, and cried, and gave their business Study and order. Through the field they held a winged pace.
Beneath the bosom of their steeds a dust so dimm’d the race,
It stood above their heads in clouds, or like to storms amazed, Manes flew like ensigns with the wind.
The chariots sometime grazed,
And sometimes jump’d up to the air; yet still sat fast the men,
Their spirits even panting in their breasts with fervour to obtain.
But when they turn’d to fleet again, then all men’s skills were tried,
Then stretch’d the patterns of their steeds.
Eumelus’ horse in pride
Still bore their sovereign. After them came Diomed’s coursers close, [repose Still apt to leap their chariot, and ready to Upon the shoulders of their king their heads; his back even burn’d
With fire that from their nostrils flew; and then their lord bad turn’d
The race for him, or given it doubt, if Phoebus had not smit
The scourge out of his hands, and tears of helpless wrath with it
From forth his eyes, to see his horse for want of scourge made slow,
And th’ others, by Apollo’s help, with much more swiftness go.
Apollo’s spite Fallas discern’d, and flew to Tydæus’ son,
His scourge reach’d, and his horse made fresh. Then took her angry run
At king Eumelus, brake his gears; his mares on both sides flew,
His draught-tree fell to earth, and him the toss’d-up chariot threw Down to the earth, his elbows torn, his forehead, all his face Strock at the centre, his speech lost. And then the turned race Fell to Tydides; before all his conquering horse he drove,
And first he glitter’d in the race; divine Athena gave Strength to his horse, and fame to him.
Next him drove Sparta’s king.
Antilochus his father’s horse then urged with all his sting
Of scourge and voice: "Run low," said he, "stretch out your limbs, and fly;
With Diomed’s horse I bid not strive, nor with himself strive I;
Athena wings his horse, and him renown’d; Atrides’ steeds
Are they ye must not fail but reach; and soon, lest soon succeeds
The blot of all your names, to yield in swiftness to a mare.
To female æthe. What’s the cause, ye best that ever were,
That thus ye fail us? Be assured, that Nestor’s love ye lose
For ever, if ye fail his son: through both your both sides goes
His hot steel, if ye suffer me to bring the last prize home.
Haste, overtake them instantly; we needs must overcome.
This harsh way next us, this my mind will take, this I despise
For peril, this I’ll creep through: hard the way to honour lies,
And that take I, and that shall yield.”
His horse by all this knew
He was not pleased, and fear’d his voice, and for a while they flew.
But straight more clear appear’d the strait Antilochus foresaw,
It was a gasp the earth gave, forced by humours cold and raw, Pour’d out of Winter’s watery breast, met there, and cleaving deep All that near passage to the lists. This Nestor’s son would keep,
And left the roadway, being about.
Atrides fear’d, and cried:
"Antilochus, thy course is mad; contain thy horse, we ride
A way most dangerous; turn head, betime take larger field.
We shall be splitted.” Nestor’s son with much more scourge impell’d
His horse for this, as if not heard; and got as far before
As any youth can cast a quoit. Atrides would no more;
He back again, for fear himself, his goodly chariot,
And horse together, steward’d the dust, in being so dusty hot Of thirsted conquest. But he chid, at parting, passing sore:
"Antilochus," said he, "a worse than thee earth never bore.
Farewell, we never thought thee wise that were wise; but not so Without oaths shall the wreath, be sure, crown thy mad temples. Go."

* Menelaus in fear to follow Antilochus, who ye may see played upon him.
Yet he bethought him, and went too, thus stirring up his steeds:
"Leave me not last thus, nor stand vex'd."
Let these fail in the speed:
Of feet and knees, not you. Shall these, these old jades, past the flower Of youth that you have, pass you?" This the horse fear'd, and more power
Put to their knees, straight getting ground.
Both flew, and so the rest.
All came in smokes, like spirits. The Greeks, (set to see who did best, Without the race, aloft) now made a new discovery, [meneus' eye
Other than that they made at first. Ido-Distinguish'd all, he knew the voice Of special mark, of colour bay, and was the first in course.
His forehead putting forth a star, round like the moon, and white.
Up spoke the Cretan, uttering this: "Is it alone my sight,
Princes and captains, that discerns another lead the race
With other horse than led of late?
Eumelus made most pace
With his fleet mares, and he began the flexure as we thought;
Now all the field I search, and find nowhere his view; hath nought Before his eyes known? Perhaps he hath not with success
Perform'd his flexure; his reins lost, or seat, or with the tress His chariot fail'd him, and his mares have outray'd with affright.
Stand up, try you your eyes, for mine hold with the second sight;
This seems to me th' Ætolian king, the Tydean Diomed."
"To you it seems so," rusticly Ajax Oileus said.
"Your words are suited to your eyes.
Those mares lead still that led,
Eumeus owes them, and he still holds reins and place that did, Not fall'n as you hoped; you must prate before us all, though last In judgment of all: ye are too old, your tongue goes still too fast, You must not talk so. Here are those that better thee, and look For first place in the censure." This Idomeneus took
In much disdain, and thus replied: "Thou best, in speeches worst, Barbarous-linguaged; others here might have reproved me first,
Not thou, unfit'st of all. I hold a tripod with thee here,
Or caldron, and our General make our equal arbiter,
Those horse are first, that when thou pay'st thou then may'st know." This fired Oliades more, and more than words this quarrel had inspired,
Had not Achilles rose, and used this phrasing speech:
"No more; away with words in war:
it toucheth both with breach Of that which fits ye: your deserts should others reprehend
That give such foul terms: sit ye still, the men themselves will end
The strife betwixt you instantly, and either's own load bear
On his own shoulders. Then to both the first horse will appear,
And which is second." These words used,
Tydides was at hand,
His horse ran high, glanced on the way, and up they toss'd the sand Thick on their coachman; on their pace their chariot deck'd with gold Swiftly attended, no wheel seen, nor wheel's print in the mould Impress'd behind them. These horse flew a flight, not ran a race.
Arrived, amid the lists they stood, sweat trickling down their space Their high manes and their prominent breasts: and down jump'd Diomed, Laid up his scurse aloft the seat, and straight his prize was led Home to his tent. Rough Sthenelus laid quick hand on the dame,
And handled trivet, and sent both home by his men. Next came Antilochus, that won with wiles, not swiftness of his horse, Precedence of the gold-lock'd king, who yet maintain'd the course
So close, that not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might still the inscrutability feel With the extreme hairs of his tail (and that sufficient close Held to his leader, no great space it let him interpose Consider'd in so great a field). Then Nestor's wily son
Gat of the king; now at his heels, though at the breach he won A quarry's cast of him, which the king again at th' instant gain'd. [maned, Æthe Agamenonides, that was so richly Gat strength still as she spent; which words her worth had proved with deeds, Had more ground been allow'd the race;
and coied for his steeds, No question leaving for the prize. And now Meriones
A dart's cast came behind the king, his horse of speed much less, Himself less skill'd to importune them, and give a chariot wing.
Admetus' son was last, whose plight
Achilles pitying
Thus spake: 'Best man comes last; yet right must see his prize not least,
The second his deserts must bear, and Diomed the best.'
He said, and all allow'd; and sure the mare had been his own,
Had not Antilochus stood forth, and in his answer shown
Good reason for his interest: "Achilles, he replied,
"I should be angry with you much to see this ratified.
Ought you to take from me my right, because his horse was wrong, Himself being good? He should have used, as good men do, his tongue
In prayer to their powers that bless good (not trusting to his own),
Not to have been in this good last. His chariot overthrown O'erthrew not me; who's last? who's first? men's goodness without these Is not our question. If his good you pity yet, and please Princely to grace it; your tents hold a goodly deal of gold, Brass, horse, sheep, women; out of these your bounty may be bold,
To take a much more worthy prize than my poor yield. [a tried field,
And give it here before my face, and all these; that the Greeks May glorify your liberal hands. This prize I will not yield. [a tried field,
Who bears this, whatsoever man, he bears His hand and mine must change some blows." Achilles laugh'd, and said:
"If thy will be, Antilochus, I'll see Eumelus paid
Out of my tents. I'll give him th' arms, which late I conquer'd in Asteropeus, forged of brass, and waved about with tina;
'Twill be a present worthy him." This said, Automedon
He sent for them. He went and brought;
and to Admetus' son Achilles gave them. He, well pleased, received them. Then arose Wrong'd Menelaus, much incensed with young Antilochus.
He bent to speak, a herald took his sceptre and gave charge
Of silence to the other Greeks; then did the king enlarge
The spleen he prison'd, uttering this:
"Antilochus, till now
We grant thee wise; but in this act what wisdom utter'st thou?
Thou hast disgraced my virtue, wrong'd my horse, preferring thine, Much their inferiors. But go to, Princes, nor his nor mine
Judge of with favour, him nor me; lest any Grecian use
This scandal: 'Menelaus won, with Nestor's son's abuse,
The prize in question, his horse worst;
himself yet wan the best By power and greatness.' Yet, because I would not thus contest
To make parts taking, I'll be judge; and I suppose none here
Will blame my judgment, I'll do right;
Antilochus, come near;
Come, noble gentleman, 'tis your place;
swear by th' earth-circling god, (Standing before your chariot and horse, and that self rod
With which you scourged them in your hand) if both with will and will You did not cross my chariot." He thus did reconcile
Grace with his disgrace, and with wit restored him to his wit:
"Now I crave I patience: O king, whatever was unlit, Ascribe to much more youth in me than you; you, more in age
And more in excellence, know well, the outrays that engage All young men's actions; sharper wits, but duller wisdoms, still From us flow than from you; for which, curb, with your wisdom, will.
The prize I thought mine, I yield yours, and, if you please, a prize Of greater value to my tent I'll send for,
and suffice
Your will at full, and instantly; for, in this point of time,

* Note Menelaus' ridiculous speech for conclusion of his character.
† Antilochus his ironical reply.
Thus gave he it. He took, and joy'd;
but, ere he thank'd, he said:
"Now sure, my honourable son, in all points thou hast play'd
The comely orator; no more must I contend with nerves;
Feet fail, and hands; arms want that strength, that this and that swing serves Under your shoulders. Would to heaven,
I were so young-chinn'd now,
And strength threw such a many of bones,
to celebrate this show,
As when the Epians brought to fire, actively honouring thus,
King Amaryncea's funerals in fair Bupra-sius,
His sons put prizes down for him; where not a man match'd me
Of all the Epians, or the sons of greatsoul'd Aetole,
No, nor the Pylians themselves, my countrymen. I beat
Great Clytomedes, Enops' son, at buffets.
At the feast
Of wrestling, her laid under me one that against me rose,
Ancaeus, call'd Pleuronius. I made Iphiclus lose
The foot-game to me. At the spear, I conquer'd Polydore, And strong Phyleus. Actor's sons, of all enemy, only bore
The palm at horse-race, conquering with lashing on more horse,
And envy'd my victory, because, before their course.
All the best games were gone with me.
These men were twins; one was A most sure guide, a most sure guide; the other gave the pass With rod and mettle. This was then. But now young men must wage These works, and my joints undergo the sad defects of age; Though then I was another man. At that time I excell'd Amongst the heroes. But forth now; let the other rites be held For thy deceased friend; this thy gift in all kind part I take,
And much it joys my heart, that still, for my true kindness' sake, You give me memory. You perceive, in what fit grace I stand Amongst the Grecians; and to theirs you set your graceful hand.

* Ironick.
† This simile likewise is merely ironical.
The gods give ample recompense of grace again to thee,
For this and all thy favours." Thus, back through the thrust drove he,
When he had stay'd out all the praise of old Neleides.*
And now for buffets, that rough game,
he order'd passages;
Proposing a laborious mule, of six years old, untamed,
And fierce in handling, brought and bound,
in that place where they gamed;
And, to the conquer'd, a round cup. Both which he thus proclaims: "Atrides and all friends of Greece, two men, for these two games,
I bid stand forth. Who best can strike, with high contracted fists, (Apollo giving him the wreath) know all about these lists,
Shall win a mule, patient of toil; the vanquish'd, this round cup."
This utter'd; Panopeus' son, Epeus, straight stood up,
A tall huge man, that to the nail knew that rude sport of hand,
And, seizing the tough mule, thus spake:
"Now let some other games Forth for the cup; this mule is mine, at will I boast me best.
Is't not enough I am no soldier? who is worthiest
At all works? none; not possible. At this yet this I say,
And will perform this: who stands forth,
I'll burst him, I will bray
His bones as in a mortar: fetch surgeons enow to take His corpse from under me." This speech did all men silent make.
At last stood forth Euryalus, a man god-like, and son
To king Mecistens, the grandchild of honour'd Talacon.
He was so strong, that, coming once to Thebes, when Ædipus
Had like rites solemnized for him, he went victorious
From all the Thebans. This rare man Tycides would prepare,
Put on his girdle, ox-hide cords, fairworsthread; and spent much care

That he might conquer, hearten'd him, and taught him tricks. Both dress'd Fit for th' affair, both forth were brought;
then breast opposed to breast,
Fists against fists rose, and, they join'd, rattling of jaws was there, Gnashing of teeth, and heavy blows dash'd blood out everywhere.
At length Epeus spied clear way, rush'd in,
and such a blow
Drave underneath the other's ear, that his neat limbs did strow
The knock'd earth, no more legs had he, but as a huge fish laid Near to the cold-wood-gathering shore, is with a North flaw fraud, Shoots back, and in the black deep hits; so sent against the ground, Was foid'd Euryalus, his strength, so hid in more profound [competitor; Deeps of Epeus, who took up th' intranced About whom rush'd a crowd of friends, that through the clusters bore His faltering knees; he spitting up thick clods of blood, his head Trotter'd of one side, his sense gone; when,
to a by-place led,
Thither they brought him the round cup.
Pelides then set forth
Prize for a wrestling; to the best a trivet, that was worth
Twelve oxen, great and fit for fire; the conquer'd was t' obtain A woman excellent in works; her beauty, and her gain, Prized at four oxen. Up he stood, and thus proclaim'd: "Arise,
You wrastlers, that will prove for these." Out stepp'd the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him
Laertes' son,
The crafty one, as huge in sleafight. Their ceremony done
Of making ready, forth they stepp'd, catch elbows with strong hands,
And as the beams of some high house rack with a storm, yet stands
The house, being built by well-skill'd men;
so crack'd their back-bones, wrench'd With horrid twitches; in their sides, arms, shoulders, all beerinch'd,
Ran thick the wales, red with the blood, ready to start out. Both Long'd for the conquest and the prize; yet shew'd no play, being loth
To lose both. Nor could Ithacus stir Ajax; nor could he Hale down Ulysses, being more strong than with mere strength to be.
Hurl'd from all vantage of his sleight.
Tired even with tugging play, Great Ajax Telamonius said: "Thou wisest man, or lay
My face up, or let me lay thine; let Jove take care for these." [Laertides This said, he hoist him up to air; when His wiles forgot not, Ajax thigh he strook behind, and flat
He on his back fell; on his breast Ulysses.
Wonder'd at
Was this of all; all stood amazed. Then the much-suffering man, [monian Divine Ulysses, at next close the Tele-A little raised from earth, not quite, but with his knee implied Lock'd legs; and down fell both on earth, close by each other's side, Both filed with dust; but starting up, the third close they had made,
Had not Achilles' self stood up, restraining them, and bade:
"No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves; receive Prize equal; conquest crowns ye both; the lists to others leave."
They heard, and yielded willingly, brush'd off the dust, and on Put other vests. Pelides then, to those that swiftest run, [comparison, Proposed another prize; a bowl, beyond Both for the size and workmanship, past all the bowls of earth.
It held six measures; silver all; but had his special worth
For workmanship, receiving form from those ingenious men Of Sidon. The Phæcians made choice, and brought it then Along the green sea, giving it to Thoas;
by degrees
It came t' Euneus, Jason's son, who young Pramides,
Lycon, of Achilles' friend bought with it;
and this, here
Achilles made best game for him that best his feet could bear,
For second he proposed an ox, a huge one,
and a fat;
And half a talent gold for last. These thus he set them at:
"Rise, you that will assay for these."
Forth stepp'd Oiliades; Ulysses answer'd; and the third was, one esteem'd past these
For footmanship, Antilochus. All rank'd, Achilles show'd
The race-scopes. From the start they glid, Oiliades bestow'd
His feet the swiftest; close to him flew god-like Thoas.
And as a lady at her loom, being young and beauteous,
Her silk-shuttle close to her breast, with grace that doth inflame,
And her white hand, lifts quick and oft, in drawing from her fame Her gentle thread, which she unwinds with ever at her breast
Gracing her fair hand; so close still, and with such interest
In all men's likenings, Ithacus unwound, and spent the race
By him before; took out his steps with putting in their place Promptly and gracefully his own; sprinkled the dust before,
And clouded with his breath his head. So facilely he bore
His royal person, that he strook scents from the Greeks, with thrist
That he should conquer, though he flew:
"Yet come, come, O come first," Ever they cried to him. And this even his wise breast did move To more desire of victory; it made him pray, and prove,
Minerva's aid, his fautress still: "O goddess, hear," said he,
"And to my feet stoop with thy help, now happy fautress be."
She was, and light made all his limbs;
and now, both near their crown, Minerva tripp'd up Ajax' hecels, and headlong he fell down [gently left Amids the ordure of the beasts, there negli-Since they were slain there; and by this,
Minerva's friend bereft
Oiliades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, nose, eyes, Ruthfully smear'd. The fat ox yet he seiz'd for second prize, Held by the horn, spit out the tail, and thus spake all besmear'd:
"O villainous chance! this Ithacus so highly is endear'd
To his Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds.
She, like his mother, nestles him; for from her it proceeds,
I know, that I am used thus." This all in light laughter cast;
Amongst whom quick Antilochus laugh'd out his coming last Thus wittily: "Know, all my friends, that all times past, and now,
The gods most honour most-lived men.
Oiliades ye know.
More old than I; but Ithacus is of the foremost race,
First generation of men. Give the old man his grace;
They count him of the green-hair'd eld;
they may; or in his flower;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in power Of foot-strife, but Aeacids." Thus soothed he Thetis' son, Who thus accepted it: "Well, youth, your praises shall not run
With unrewarded feet on mine; your half a talent's prize I'll make a whole one: take you, sir."
He took, and joy'd. Then flies Another game forth. Thetis' son set in the lists a lance,
A shield, and helmet, being th' arms Sarpedon did advance Against Patroclus, and he prised. And thus he named th' address:
"Stand forth, two the most excellent, arm'd, and before all these Give mutual onset to the touch and wound of either's flesh.
Who first shall wound, through other's arms his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd, and hatch'd; the blade is right of Thrace; Asteropoeus yielded it. These arms shall part their grace
With either's valour; and the men I'll liberally feast
At my pavilion." To this game the first man that address'd [Diomed.
Was Ajax Telamonius; to him king Both, in opposed parts of the press, full arm'd, both entered The lists amid the multitude, put looks on so astere.
And join'd so roughly, that amaze surprised the Greeks in fear Of either's mischief. Thrice they threw their fierce darts, and closed thrice.
Then Ajax strook through Diomed's shield, but did no prejudice;
His curets saft him. Diomed's dart still over shoulders flew, Still mounting with the spirit it bore. And now rough Ajax grew So violent, that the Greeks cried: "Hold, no more. Let them no more.
Give equal prize to either." Yet the sword, proposed before
For him did beat, Achilles gave to Diomed. Then a stone,
In fashion of a sphere, he show'd; of no invention,
But natural, only melted through with iron. 'Twas the bowl
That king Eetion used to hurl; but he bereft of soul
By great Achilles, to the fleet, with store of other prise,
He brought it, and proposed it now both for the exercise
And prize itself. He stood, and said: "Rise you that will approve Your arms' strength now in this brave strife. His vigour that can move
This farthest, needs no game but this; for reach he ne'er so far With large fields of his own in Greece (and so needs for his car, His plough, or other tools of thrift, much iron) I'll able this
For five revolved years; no need shall use his messages
To any town to furnish him, this only bowl shall yield Iron enough for all affairs." This said to try this field,
First Polypoetes issued; next Leonteus; third Great Ajax; huge Epeus fourth; yet he was first that stirr'd That mine of iron. Up it went, and up he toss'd it so,
That laughter took up all the field. The next man that did throw Was Leonteus; Ajax third, who gave it such a hand,
That far past both their marks it flew. But now 'twas to be man'd
By Polypoetes; and, as far as at an ox that A herdsman can swing out his goad, so far did he outrage
The stone past all men; all the field rose in a shout to see't;
About him flock'd his friends, and bore the royal game to fleet.
For archery he then set forth ten axes edged two ways,
And ten of one edge. On the shore, far-off, he caused to raise A ship-mast; to whose top they tied a fearful dove by th' foot,
At which all shot, the game put thus: He that the dove could shoot, Nor touch the string that fasten'd her, the two-edged tools should bear
All to the fleet. Who touch'd the string, and miss'd the dove, should share
The one-edged axes. This proposed; king Teucer's force arose, And with him rose Meriones. And now lots must dispose Their shooting first; both which let fall into a helm of brass, First Teucer's came, and first he shot, and his cross fortune was
To shoot the string, the dove untouch'd;
Apollo did envy
His skill, since not to him he vow'd, being god of archery,
A first-fall'n lamb. The bitter shaft yet cut in two the cord,
That down fell, and the dove aloft up to the welkin soar'd.
The Greeks gave shouts. Meriones first made a hearty vow
To sacrifice a first-fall'n lamb to him that rules the bow,
And then fell to his aim, his shaft being ready nock'd before.
He spied her in the clouds that here, there, everywhere did soar,
Yet at her height he reach'd her side, strook her quite through, and down The shaft fell at his feet; the dove the mast again did crown,
There hung the head, and all her plumes were ruff'd, she stark dead, And there, far off from him, she fell. The people wondered,
And stood astonish'd; th' archer pleas'd.
Æacides then shews
A long lance, and a caldron new, engrail'd with twenty hues, Prized at on ox. These games were shew'd for men at darts; and then Up rose the General of all; up rose the king of men;
Up rose late-crown'd Meriones. Achilles seeing the king
Do him this grace, prevents more deed; his royal offering Thus interrupting: "King of men, we well conceive how far Thy worth superior is to all, how much most singular
Thy power is, and thy skill in darts; accept then this poor prize Without contention, and (your will pleased with what I advise) Afford Meriones the lance." The king was nothing slow
To that fit grace. Achilles then the brass lance did bestow
On good Meriones. The king his present would not save,
But to renown'd Talithbius the goodly caldron gave.

THE END OF THE THREE AND TWENTIETH BOOK.
THE TWENTY-FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Jove, entertaining care of Hector's corpse, Sends Thetis to her son for his remorse; And fit dismissal of it. Iris then He sends to Priam; willing him to gain His son for ransom. He, by Hermes led, Gets through Achilles' guards; sleeps deep and dead Cast on them by his guide; when, with access And humble suit made to Aeacides, He gains the body; which to Troy he bears, And buries it with feasts, buried in tears.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Omega sings the Exeques, And Hector's redemptory prise.

The games perform'd; the soldiers wholly dispersed to fleet, Supper and sleep their only care. Constant Achilles yet Wept for his friend; nor sleep itself, that all things doth subdue, Could touch at him; this way and that he turn'd, and did renew His friend's dear memory, his grace in managing his strength, And his strength's greatness, how life rack'd into their utmost length Grieves, battles, and the wraths of seas, in their joint subdue. Each thought of which turn'd to a tear. Sometimes he would advance, In tumbling on the shore, his side; sometimes his face; then turn Flat on his bosom; start upright. Although he saw the morn Shew sea and shore his ecstasy, he left not, till at last Rage varied his distraction; horse, chariot, in haste He call'd for; and, those join'd, the corpse was to his chariot tied, And thrice about the sepulchre he made his fury ride. Dragging the person. All this past; in his pavilion Rest seised him, but with Hector's corpse his rage had never done,

Still suffering it t' oppress the dust. Apollo yet, even dead, Pitied the prince, and would not see inhumane tyranny fed With more pollution of his limbs; and therefore cover'd round His person with his golden shield, that rude dogs might not wound His many lineaments, which threat Achilles cruelly Had used in fury. But now Heaven let fall a general eye Of pity on him; the blest gods persuaded Mercury, Their good observer, to his stealth; and every deity Stood pleased with it; Juno except, green Neptune, and the Maid Graced with the blue eyes, all their hearts stood hatefully appaied Long since; and held it, as at first, to Priam, Ilion. And all his subjects, for the rape of his licentious son, Proud Paris, that despised these dames in their divine access Made to his cottage, and praised her that his sad wantonness So costly nourish'd. The twelfth morn now shined on the delay, Of Hector's rescue, and then spake the deity of the Day Thus to th' immortals: "Shameless gods, authors of ill ye are To suffer ill. Hath Hector's life at all times show'd his care Of all your rites, in burning thighs of beaxes and goats to you, And are your cares no more of him? vouch-safe ye not even now, Even dead, to keep him; that his wife, his mother, and his son, Father, and subjects, may be moved to those deeds he hath done, Seeing you preserve him that served you, and sending to their hands His person for the rites of fire? Achilles, that withstands
All help to others, you can help; one that hath neither heart Nor soul within him that will move or yield to any part and more wild.
That fits a man; but lion-like, uplandish,
Slave to his pride, and all his nerves being naturally compiled
Of eminent strength, stalks out and preys upon a silly sheep.
And so fares this man: that fit ruth that now should draw so deep In all the world, being lost in him; and shame (a quality
Of so much weight, that both it helps and hurts excessively."
Men in their manners is not known, nor hath the power to be,
In this man's being. Other men a greater loss than he Have undergone; a son, suppose, or brother of one womb; [in his tomb Yet, after dews of woes and tears, they bury All their deprivations. Fates have given to all that are true men True manly patience; but this man so soothes his bloody vein That no blood serves it; he must have divine-soul'd Hector bound To his proud chariot, and danced in a most barbarous round About his loved friend's sepulchre; when he is slain. 'Tis vile, [now awhile
And draws no profit after it. But let him Mark but our anger; he is spent; let all his strength take heed
It tempts not our wrath; he begets, in this outrageous deed,
The dull earth with his fury's hate."
White-wristed Juno said, Being much incensed, "This doom is one that thou wouldst have obey'd, Thou bearer of the silver bow, that we in equal care
And honour should hold Hector's worth, with him that claims a share In our deservings. Hector suck'd a mortal woman's breast,
Æackides a goddess's; ourself had interest Both in his infant nourishment, and bringing up with state,
And to the humane Peleus we gave his bridal mate,
Because he had th' immortals' love. To celebrate the feast
Of their high nuptials, every god was glad to be a guest;

And thou fed'st of his father's cates, touching thy harp in grace
Of that beginning of our friend, whom thy perfidious face... [with Priam's son;
In his perfection, blusheft not to match O thou that to betray and shame art still companion."

Jove thus received her: "Never give these broad terms to a god.
Those two men shall not be compared;
and yet, of all that trod
The well-paved Ilion, none so dear to all the deities [most of prize
As Hector was; at least to me; for offerings His house in her Iris ever pretermit. Our altars ever stood, [and every good Furnish'd with banquets fitting us, odours Smoked in our temples; and for this, foreseeing it, his fate
We mark'd with honour, which must stand.
But, to give stealth estate In his deliverance, shun we that; nor must we favour one [Thetis' son,
To shame another. Privily, with wrong to
We must not work out Hector's right.
There is a ransom due,
And open course, by laws of arms; in which must humbly sue [any god would stay,
The friends of Hector. Which just mean if
And use the other, 'twould not serve; for Thetis night and day [Iris hither, I Is guardian to him. But would one call Would give directions that for gifts the Trojan king should buy [shall resign."
His Hector's body, which the son of Thetis This said, his will was done; the Dame that doth in vapours shine, Dewy and thin, rooted with storms, jump'd to the sable seas
'Twixt Samos and sharp Imber's cliffs; the lake groan'd with the press Of her rough feet, and, plumeet-like, put in an ox's horn
That bears death to the raw-fed fish, she dived, and found forlorn Thetis lamenting her son's fate, who was in Troy to have,
Far from his country, his death served.
Close to her Iris stood,
And said: "Rise, Thetis: prudent Jove, whose counsels thirst not blood.
Calls for thee." Thetis answer'd her with asking: "What's the cause
The great god calls? My sad powers fear'd to break th' immortal laws, In going filed with griefs to heaven. But he sets snares for none
With colour'd counsels; not a word of him but shall be done."
A huge wool-bearer, slaughter'd there. His reverend mother then Came near, took kindly his fair hand, and ask'd him: "Dear son, when Will sorrow leave thee? How long time wilt thou thus eat thy heart, Fed with no other food, nor rest? 'twere good thou wouldst divert Thy friend's love to some lady, cheer thy spirits with such kind parts As she can quiet thy grace withal. The joy of thy deserts
I shall not long have; death is near, and thy all-conquering fate, Whose breast thou must not haste with grief, but understand the state Of things belonging to thy life, which quickly order. I Am sent from Jove t' advertise thee, that every deity
Is angry with thee, himself most, that rage thus reigns in thee Still to keep Hector. Quit him then, and for fit ransom, free His injured person." He replied: "Let him come that shall give The ransom, and the person take. Jove's pleasure must deprive Men of all pleasures." This good speech, and many more, the son
And mother used, in ear of all the naval station.
And now to holy Ilium Saturnius Iris sent:
"Go, swift-foot Iris, bid Troy's king bear fit gifts, and content Achilles for his son's release, but let him greet alone
The Grecian navy; not a man, excepting such a one
As may his horse and chariot guide, a herald, or one old,
Attending him; and let him take his Hector. Be he bold, Discouraged nor with death nor fear; wise
Mercury shall guide
His passage till the prince be near; and, he gone, let him ride Resolved even in Achilles' tent. He shall not touch the state
Of his high person, nor admit the deadliest desperate
Of all about him; for, though fierce, he is not yet unwise,
Nor inconsiderate, nor a man past awe of
deities,
But passing free and curious to do a suppliant grace."
This said, the Rainbow to her feet tied whirl-winds, and the place
Reach'd instantly, The heavy court Clamour and Mourning fill'd;
The sons all set about the sire; and there stood Grief, and still'd Tears on their garments. In the midst the old king sate, his weed
All wrinkled, head and neck dust-filed; the princesses his seed,
The princesses his sons' fair wives, all mourning by; the thought
Of friends so many, and so good (being turn'd so soon to nought)
By Grecian hands) consumed their youth, rain'd beauty from their eyes.
Iris came near the king; her sight shook all his faculties,
And therefore spake she soft, and said: "Be glad, Dardanides;
Of good occurrences, and none ill, am I ambassador.
Jove greets thee; who, in care, as much as he is distant, deigns Eye to thy sorrows, pitying thee. My embassy contains This charge to thee from him: he will thou shouldst redeem thy son, Bear gifts t' Achilles, cheer him so; but visit him alone,
None but some herald let attend, thy mules and chariot
To manage for thee. Fear, nor death let daunt thee; Jove hath got Hermes to guide thee, who as near to Thebus' son as needs
Shall guard thee; and being once with him, nor his, nor others', deeds Stand touch'd with, he will all contain; nor is he mad, nor vain, Nor impious, but with all his nerves studious to entertain
One that submits with all fit grace." Thus vanish'd she like wind.
He mules and chariot calls; his sons bids see them join'd, and bind
A trunk behind it; he himself down to his wardrobes goes, odorous, Built all of cedar, highly roof'd, and That much stuff, worth the sight, contain'd.
To him he call'd his queen, Thus greeting her: 'Come, hapless dame; an angel I have seen, Sent down from Jove, that bade me free our dear son from the fleet
With ransom pleasing to our foe. What holds thy judgment meet?
My strength and spirit lays high charge on all my being to bear
The Greeks' worst, venturing through their host.' The queen cried out to hear His venturous purpose, and replied: "O whither now is fled
The late discretion that renown'd thy grave
And knowing head
In foreign and thine own ruled realms, that thus thou darest assay "horrible decay Sight of that man, in whose brow sticks the
Of sons so many, and so strong? thy heart is iron I think.
If this stern man, whose thirst of blood
Makes cruelly his drink,
Take, or but see thee thou art dead. He nothing pities woe, Nor honours age. Without his sight, we have enough to do
To mourn with thought of him. Keep we our palace, weep we here, Our son is past our helps. Those thrones, that my deliverers were
Of his unhappy lineaments, told me they should be torn With black-foot dogs. Almighty fate, that black hour he was born Spun in his springing thread that end; far from his parents' reach,
This bloody fellow then ordain'd to be their mean, this wretch,
Whose stony liver would to heaven I might devour, my teeth
My son's revengers made. Cursed Greek, he gave him not his death Doing an ill work; he alone fought for his country, he [and cursed policy Fled not, nor fear'd, but stood his worst;
Was his undoing." He replied: "Whatever was his end [means to defend Is not our question, we must now use all His end from scandal; from which act dissuade not my just will,
Nor let me nourish in my house a bird presaging ill [any earthly spirit To my good actions; 'tis in vain. Had Given this suggestion; if our priests, or soothsayers, challenging merit
Of prophets, I might hold it false, and be the rather moved
To keep my palace; but these ears and these self eyes approved
It was a goddess. I will go; for not a word she spake
I know was idle. If it were, and that my fate will make [Achilles; come, Quick riddance of me at the fleet, kill me,
When getting to thee, I shall find a happy dying room On Hector's bosom, when enough thirst of my tears finds there Quench to his savour." This resolved, the works most fair and dear
Of his rich screen he brought abroad; twelve veils wrought curiously; Twelve plain gowns; and as many suits of wealthy tapestry; As many mantles; horsemen's coats; ten talents of fine gold; Two tripods; caldrons four; a bowl, whose value he did hold Beyond all price, presented by th' ambassadors of Thrace. The old king nothing held too dear, to rescue from disgrace His gracious Hector. Forth he came, At entry of his court The Trojan citizens so press'd, that this opprobrious sort Of check he used; "Hence, cast away; away, ye impious crew; Are not your griefs enough at home? what come ye here to view? Care ye for my griefs? would ye see how miserable I am? Is't not enough, imagine ye? ye might know, ere ye came, What such a son's loss weigh'd with me. But know this for your pains, Your houses have the weaker doors; the Greeks will find their gains The easier for his loss, be sure. But O Troy, ere I see Thy ruin, let the doors of hell receive and ruin me." Thus with his sceptre set he on the crowding citizens, Who gave back, seeing him so urge. And now he entertains His sons as roughly, Helenas, Paris, Hippothous, Pammion, divine Agathones, renown'd Deiphoes, [least in arms, Agavus, and Antiphonus, and last, not The strong Polites; these nine sons the violence of his harms Help'd him to vent in these sharp terms; "Haste, you infamous brood, And get my chariot. Would to heaven that all the abject blood In all your veins had Hector seised: O me, accursed man. All my good sons are gone; my light the shades Cimmerian Have swallow'd from me. I have lost Mestor, surnamed the fair; Troilus, that ready knight at arms, that made his field repair Ever so prompt and joyfully; and Hector, amongst men Esteem'd a god, not from a mortal's seed, but of th' eternal strain, He seem'd to all eyes. These are gone; you that survive are base, Liars and common free-booters; all faulty, But in your heels, in all your parts; dancing companions Ye all are excellent. Hence, ye brats: love ye to hear my moans? Will ye not get my chariot? command it quickly, fly, That I may perfect this dear work." This all did terrify; And straight his mule-drawn chariot came, to which they fast did bind The trunk with gifts. And then came forth, with an afflicted mind, Old Hecuba. In her right hand a bowl of gold she bore With sweet wine crown'd, stood near, and said: "Receive this, and implore, (With sacrificing it to Jove) thy safe return. I see Thy mind likes still to go, though mine dislikes it utterly. Pray to the black-cloud-gathering god, Idian Jove, that views All Troy, and all her miseries, that he will deign to use His most-loved bird to ratify thy hopes; that, her broad wing Spread on thy right hand, thou mayst know thy zealous offering Accepted, and thy safe return confirm'd; but if he fail, Fail thy intent, though never so it labours to prevail." "This I refuse not," he replied, "for no faith is so great In Jove's high favour, but it must with held-up hands intreat." This said, the chambermaid, that held the ever and basin by, He bade pour water on his hands; when, looking to the sky, He took the bowl, did sacrifice, and thus implor'd: "O Jove, From Ida using thy commands, in all deserts above, [in the sight All other gods, vouchsafe me safe; and pity Of great Achilles; and, for trust to that wish'd grace, excite Thy swift-wing'd messenger, most strong, most of air's region loved, To soar on my right hand; which sight may firmly see approved Thy former summons, and my speed." He pray'd, and heaven's king heard, And instantly cast from his fist air's all-commanding bird,
The black-wing'd huntress, perfectest of all fowls, which gods call Percnos, the eagle. And how broad the chamber nuptial
Of any mighty man hath doors, such breadth cast either wing;
Which now she used, and spread them wide on right hand of the king.
All saw it, and rejoiced, and up to chariot he arose,
Drove forth, the portal and the porch resounding as he goes.
His friends all follow'd him, and mourn'd as if he went to die;
And bringing him past town to field, all left him; and the eye
Of Jupiter was then his guard, who pitied him, and used
These words to Hermes: "Mercury, thy help hath been profused Ever with most grace in consorts of travellers distress'd, Now consort Priam to the fleet; but so, that not the least Suspicion of him be attain'd, till at Achilles' tent Thy convoy hath arrived him safe." This charge incontinent
He put in practice. To his feet his feather'd shoes he tied, Immortal, and made all of gold, with which he used to ride
The rough sea and th' unmeasured earth, and equal'd in his pace
The puffs of wind. Then took he up his rod, that hath the grace
To shut what eyes he lists with sleep, and open them again
In strongest trances. This he held, flew forth, and did attain To Troy and Hellespontus' strait. Then like a fair young prince, First-down-chinn'd, and of such a grace as makes his looks convince Contending eyes to view him, forth he went to meet the king.
He, having pass'd the mighty tomb of Ilus, water'd His mules in Xanthus, the dark Even fell on the earth; and then Idæus (guide of the mules) discern'd this grace of men, [Dardanides,
And spake afraid to Priamus: "Beware, Our states ask counsel; I discern the dangerous access
Of some man near us; now I fear we perish. Is it best To fly, or kiss his knees and ask his ruth of men distress'd?"

Confusion strook the king, cold fear extremely quench'd his veins, Upright upon his languishing head his hair stood, and the chains Of strong amaze bound all his powers. To both which then came near The prince-turn'd Deity, took his hand, and thus bespake the peer:
"To what place, father, drivest thou out through solitary night,
When others sleep? Give not the Greeks sufficient cause of fright
To these late travels, being so near, and such vow'd enemies?
Of all which, if with all this load any should cast his eyes
On thy adventures, what would then thy mind esteem thy state, Thyself old, and thy follower old? Resistance could not rate
At any value; as for me, be sure I mind no harm
To thy grave person, but against the hurt of others arm.
Mine own loved father did not get a greater love in me
To his good, than thou dost to thine." He answer'd: "The degree Of danger in my course, fair son, is nothing less than that Thou urgest; but some god's fair hand puts in for my safe state,
That sends so sweet a guardian in this so sterner life.
Of night, and danger, as thyself, that all grace in his prime Of body and of beauty shev'st; all answer'd with a mind [blessed kind
So knowing, that it cannot be but of some Thou art descended." "Not untrue," said Hermes, "thy conceit
In all this holds; but further truth relate, if of such weight
As I conceive thy carriage be, and that thy care conveys Thy goods of most price to more guard? or go ye all your ways
Frighted from holy Ilion? so excellent a son
As thou hast (being thy special strength) fall'n to destruction, Whom no Greek better'd for his fight?"
"O, what art thou," said he, "Most worthy youth, of what race born, that thus recount'st to me My wretched son's death with such truth?"
"Now, father," he replied, "You tempt me far, in wondering how the death was signified
Of your divine son to a man so mere a stranger here
As you hold me; but I am one that oft have seen him bear His person like a god in field; and when in heaps he slew
The Greeks, all routed to their fleet, his so victorious view Made me admire, not feel his hand; because Incensed, admitted not our sight, myself being of access To his high person, serving him, and both to Ilion
In one ship sail’d. Besides, by birth I breathe a Myrmidon, Polyctor, call’d the rich, my sire, declined with age like you.
Six sons he hath, and me a seventh; and all those six live now
In Phthia, since, all casting lots, my chance did only fall
To follow hither. Now for walk I left my General.
To-morrow all the sun-burn’d Greeks will circle Troy with arms,
The princes rage to be withheld so idly, your alarms Not given half hot enough, they think, and can contain no more.”
He answer’d: “If you serve the prince, let me be bold to implore
This grace of thee, and tell me true: lies Hector here at fleet,
Or have the dogs his flesh?” He said: “Nor dogs nor fowl have yet Touch’d at his person; still he lies at fleet, and in the tent
Of our great Captain, who indeed is much too negligent Of his fit usage. But, though now twelve days have spent their heat On his cold body, neither worms with any taint have eat,
Nor putrefaction perish’d it; yet ever, when the Morn Lifts her divine light from the sea, unmercifully borne
About Patroclus’ sepulchre, it bears his friend’s disdain, [outrage reign
Bound to his chariot; but no fits of further
In his distemper: you would muse to see how deep a dew
Even steeps the body, all the blood wash’d off, no slenderest shew
Of gore or quittance; but his wounds all closed, though many were Open’d about him. Such a love the blest immortals bear, Even dead, to thy dear son, because his life shew’d love to them.”
He joyful answer’d: “O my son, it is a grace supreme In any man to serve the gods. And I must needs he say this;
For no cause, having season fit, my Hector’s hands would miss Advancement to the gods with gifts, and therefore do not they Miss his remembrance after death. Now let an old man pray Thy graces to receive this cup, and keep it for my love, Nor leave me till the gods and thee have made my prayers approve Achilles’ pity, by thy guide brought to his princely tent.”
Hermes replied: “You tempt me now, old king, to a consent Far from me, though youth aptly errs, I secretly receive Gifts that I cannot broadly vouch: take graces that will give My lord dishonour? or what he knows not, or will esteem Perhaps unif? such briberies perhaps at first may seem Sweet and secure; but future they still prove sour, and breed Both fear and danger. I could wish thy grave affairs did need My guide to Argos, either shipp’d, or lackeying by thy side,
And would be studious in thy guard; so nothing could be tried
But care in me to keep thee safe, for that I could excuse,
And vouch to all men.” These words past, he put the deeds in use
For which Jove sent him; up he leapt to Priam’s chariot; Took scourge and reins, and blow in strength to his free steeds, and got The naval towers and deep dike straight.
The guards were all at meat;
Those he ensnab’d, ope the ports, and in he safely let Old Priam with his wealthy prize. Forthwith they reach’d the tent
Of great Achilles, large and high, and in his most ascent
A shaggy roof of seedy reeds mown from the meads; a hall
Of state they made their king in it, and strengthen’d it withal Thick with fir rafters; whose approach was let in by a door [men evermore
That had but one bar, but so big that three Raised it to shut, three fresh take down; which yet Æacides Would shut and eke himself. And this with far more ease Hermes set ope, entering the king; then leapt from horse, and said:
"Now know, old king, that Mercury, a god, hath given this aid To thy endeavour, sent by Jove; and now away must I,
For men would envy thy estate to see a deity
Affect a man thus: enter thou, embrace Achilles' knee,
And by his sire, son, mother, pray his ruth and grace to thee."
This said, he high Olympus reach'd: the king then left his coach To grave Idaeus, and went on, made his resolved approach,
And enter'd in a goodly room, where with his princes sate
Jove-loved Achilles, at their feast; two only kept the state
Of his attendance, Alcimus, and lord
Automedio,
At Priam's entry. A great time Achilles gazed upon
His wonder'd-at approach, nor cat; the rest did nothing see,
While close he came up, with his hands fast holding the bent knee Of Hector's conqueror, and kiss'd that large man-slaughtering hand
That much blood from his sons had drawn.
And as in some strange land,
And great man's house, a man is driven (with that abhor'd dismay That follows wilful bloodshed still, his fortune being to slay One whose blood cries aloud for his) to plead protection,
In such a miserable plight as fright the lookers-on;
In such a stupified estate Achilles sat to see
So unexpected, so in night; and so incredibly;
Old Priam's entry. All his friends one on another stared
To see his strange looks, seeing no cause.
Thus Priam then prepared His son's redemption: "See in me, O god-like Thetis's son, [being outrun Thy aged father; and perhaps even now
With some of my woes, neighbour foes (thou absent) taking time To do him mischief; no mean left to terror the crime
Of his oppression; yet he hears thy graces still survive,
And joys to hear it, hoping still to see thee safe arrive.
From ruin'd Troy; but I, cursed man, of all my race shall live To see none living. Fifty sons the deities did give My hopes to live in; all alive when near our trembling shore
The Greek ships harbour'd, and one womb nineteen of those sons bore.
Now Mars a number of their knees hath strengthless left; and he
That was, of all, my only joy, and Troy's sole guard, by thee, Late fighting for his country, slain; whose tender'd person now
I come to ransom. Infinite is that I offer
you,
Myself conferring it, exposed alone to all your odds,
Only imploring right of arms. Achilles, shear the gods,
Pity an old man like thy sire; different in only this,
That I am wretched, and bear that weight of miseries
That never man did, my cursed lips enforced to kiss that hand That slew my children." This moved tears; his father's name did stand, (Mention'd by Priam) in much help to his compassion;
And moved Æacides so much, he could not look upon The weeping father. With his hand he gently put away
His grave face: calm remission now did mutually display
Her power in either's heaviness. Old Priam, to record
His son's death and his deathsmen see, his tears and bosom pour'd Before Achilles; at his feet he laid his reverend head.
Achilles' thoughts, now with his sire, now with his friend, worn fed.
Betwixt both, sorrow fill'd the tent. But now Æacides (Satiate at all parts with the ruth of their calamities)
Start up, and up he raised the king. His milk-white head and beard With pity he beheld, and said: "Poor man, thy mind is scared With much affliction. How durst thy person thus alone [many a worthy son, Venture on his sight, that hath slain so
And so dear to thee? thy old heart is made of iron: sit,
And settle we our woes, though huge, for nothing profits it.
Cold mourning wastes but our lives' heats.
The gods have destined
That wretched mortals must live sad; 'tis the immortal state
Of Duty that lives secure. Two tun's of gifts there lie.
In Jove's gate, one of good, one ill, that our mortality
Maintain, spoil, order; which when Jove doth mix to any man,
One while he frolics, one while mourns.
If of his mournful can
A man drinks only, only wrongs he doth expose him to;
Sad hunger in th' abundant earth doth toss him to and fro, Respected nor of gods nor men. The mix'd cup Peleus drank
Even from his birth; heaven blest his life; his lived not that could thank The gods for such rare benefits as set forth his estate.
He reign'd among his Myrmidons, most rich, most fortunate,
And, though a mortal, had his bed deck'd with a deathless dame.
And yet, with all this good, one ill God mix'd, that takes all name From all that goodness; his name now, whose preservation here
Men count the crown of their most good, nor bless'd with power to bear One blossom but myself, and I shaken as soon as blown;
Nor shall I live to cheer his age, and give nutrition
To him that nourish'd me. Far off my rest is set in Troy, [that did enjoy,
To leave thee restless and thy seed; thyself
As we have heard, a happy life; what Lesbos doth contain,
As times past being a bless'd man's seat, what the unmeasured main
Of Helleponsus, Phrygia, holds, are all said to adorn Thy empire, wealth and sons now; but, when the gods did turn Thy blest state to partake with bane, war and the bloods of men Circled thy city, never clear. Sit down and suffer then;
Mourn not inevitable things; thy tears can spring no deeds
To help thee, nor recall thy son; impatience ever breeds Ill upon ill, makes worst things worse, and therefore sit." He said:
'Give me no seat, great seed of Jove, when yet unransomed Hector lies restless in thy tents, but deign with utmost speed
His resignation, that these eyes may see his person freed,
And thy grace satisfied with gifts. Accept what I have brought,
And turn to Pthia; 'tis enough thy conquering hand hath fought Till Hector falter'd under it, and Hector's father stood
With free humanity safe." He brownd and said: "Give not my blood Fresh cause of fury: I know well I must resign thy son, [besides is done Jove by my mother utter'd it; and what I know as amply; and thyself, old Priam,
I know too of, I know too.
Some god hath brought thee; for no man durst use a thought to go On such a service. I have guards, and I have gates to stay Easy accesses; do not then presume thy will can sway,
Like Jove's will, and incense again my quench'd blood, lest nor thou Nor Jove get the command of me." This made the old king low,
And down he sat in fear, The prince leapt like a lion forth, Aetomacedon and Alcimus attending; all the worth
Brought for the body they took down and brought in, and with it Ideus, herald to the king; a coat embroider'd yet,
And two rich cloaks, they left to hide the person. Thetis's son Call'd out his women, to anoint and quickly overrun.
The corse with water, lifting it in private to the coach,
Lest Priam saw, and his cold blood embraced a fiery touch
Of anger at the turpitude profaning it, and blew
Again his wrath's fire to his death. This done, his women threw
The coat and cloak on; but the corse
Achilles' own hand laid Upon a bed, and with his friends to chariot it convey'd,
For which forced grace, abhorring so from his free mind, he wept, Cried out for anger, and thus pray'd: "Oh friend, do not except Against this favour to our foe, if in the deep thou hear
And that I give him to his sire; he gave fair ransom; dear
In my observance is Jove's will; and whatsoever part Of all these gifts by any mean I fully may To thy renown here, and will there, it shall be pour'd upon Thy honour'd sepulchre." This said, he went, and what was done Told Priam, saying: "Father, now thy will's fit rites are paid, Thy son is given up; in the morn thine eyes shall see him laid Deck'd in thy chariot on his bed; in mean space let us eat.
The rich-hair'd Niobe found thoughts that made her take her merit,
Though twelve dear children she saw slain, six daughters, six young sons.
The sons incensed Apollo's woe; the maid's confusions Diana wrought, since Niobe her merits burst compare With great Latona's, arguing that she did only bear
Two children, and herself had twelve; for which those only two Slew all her twelve. Nine days they lay there in their blood, her woe Found no friend to afford them fire, Saturnus had turn'd Humane to stones. The tenth day yet, the good celestials burn'd
The trunks themselves, and Niobe, when she was tired with tears, Fell to her food, and now with rocks and wild hills mix'd she bears
In Sipylos the gods' wrath still, in that place where 'tis said
The Goddess Fairies use to dance about the funeral bed
Of Acheleous, where, though turn'd with cold grief to a stone, Heaven gives her heat enough to feel what plague comparison With his powers made by earth deserves. Affect not then too far Without grief, like a god, being man, but for a man's life care,
And take fit food; thou shalt have time beside to mourn thy son;
He shall be tearful, thou being full; not here, but Ilion Shall find thee weeping-rooms now." He said, and so arose, And caused a silver-fleeced sheep kill'd; his friends' skills did dispose Mine own edge set to sack your town, and all our host contain From interruption of your rites." He answer'd: "If you mean To suffer such rites to my son, you shall perform a part Of most grace to me. But you know with how dismay'd a heart
Our host took Troy; and how much fear will therefore apprehend Their spirits to make out again, so far as we must send
For wood to raise our heap of death; unless I may assure
That this your high grace will stand good,
and make their pass secure;
Which if you seriously confirm, nine days
I mean to mourn;
The tenth keep funeral and feast; th' eleventh raise and adorn
My son's fit sepulchre; the twelfth, if we must needs, we'll fight."
"Be it," replied Aeacides, "do Hector all this right;
I'll hold war back those whole twelve days;
of which, to free all fear,
Take this my right hand." This confirm'd, the old king rested there;
His herald lodged by him; and both in forepart of the tent;
Achilles in an utmost room of wondrous ornament,
Whose side bright-cheek'd Briseis warm'd.
Soft sleep tamed gods and men,
All but most-useful Mercury; sleep could not lay one chain
On his quick temples, taking care for getting off again [did maintain Engaged Priam undiscern'd of those that The sacred watch. Above his head he stood with this demand:
'Father, sleep'st thou so secure, still lying in the hand
Of so much ill, and being dismiss'd by great Aeacides?
'Tis true thou hast redeem'd the dead; but for thy life's release, Should Agamemnon hear thee here, three times the price now paid Thy sons' hands must repay for thee."
This said, the king, afraid, Start from his sleep, Iadus call'd, and, for both, Mercury
The once and mules, before loose, join'd so soft and curiously
That no ear heard, and through the host drave; but when they drew
To gully Xanthus' bright-waved stream, up to Olympus flew

Industrious Mercury. And now the saffron morning rose,
Spreading her white robe over all the world; when, full of woes,
They scour'd on with the corse to Troy, from whence no eye had seen, Before Cassandra, their return. She, like
love's golden Queen,
Ascending Pergamus, discern'd her father's person nigh.
His herald, and her brother's corse; and then she cast this cry Round about Troy: "O Trojans, if ever ye did greet [ye out and meet Hector return'd from fight alive, now look His ransom'd person. Then his worth was all your city's joy, Now do it honour." Out all rush'd; woman nor man in Troy
Was left; a most unmeasured cry took up their voices. Close To Scota's ports they met the corse; and and to it headlong goes The reverend mother, the dear wife; upon it strow their hair,
And lie entranced. Round about the people broke the air
In lamentations; and all day had stay'd
the people there,
If Priam had not cried: "Give way, give me but leave to bear
The body home, and mourn your fills."
Then eft the press, and gave Way to the chariot. To the court herald Iadus drove,
Where on a rich bed they bestow'd the honour'd person, round
Girt it with singers that the woe with skilful voices crown'd.
A woeful elegy they sung, wept singing, and the damsel Sigh'd as they sung. Andromache the downright prose exclaims Began to all; she on the neck of slaughter'd Hector fell,
And cried out: "O my husband I thou in youth bastest youth farewell, Left'st me a widow, thy sole son an infant;
ourselves cursed
In our birth made him right our child; for all my care that nursed His infancy will never give life to his youth, ere that Troy from her top will be destroy'd; thou guardian of our state,
Thou even of all her strength the strength, thou, that in care wert past Her careful mothers of their babes, being gone, how can she last?
Soon will the swolln fleet fill her womb with all their servitude.
Myself with them, and thou with me, dear son, in labours rude Shalt be employ'd, sternly survey'd by cruel conquerors;
Or, rage not suffering life so long, some one, whose hate abhors
The presence (putting him in mind of his sire slain by this thy bear His brother, son, or friend) shall work thy ruin before mine, Toss'd from some tower, for many Greeks have eat earth from the hand
Of thy strong father; in sad sight his spirit was too much mann'd,
And therefore mourn his people; we, thy parents, my dear lord,
For that thou makest endure a woe, black, and to be abhor'd.
Of all yet thou hast left me worst, not dying in thy bed,
And reaching me thy last raised hand, in nothing counselled,
Nothing commanded by that power thou hadst of me to do [will end my woe,
Some deed for thy sake, O for these never Never my tears cease." Thus wept she, and all the ladies closed Her passion with a general shriek. Then Heeuba disposed Her thoughts in like words: "O my son, of all mine much most dear, Dear while thou livest, too even to gods, and after death they were Careful to save thee. Being best, thou most vert envi'd;
My other sons Achilles sold; but thee he left not dead.
Imber and Samos, the false ports of Lemnos entertain'd
Their persons; thine, no port but death.
Nor there in rest remain'd
Thy violated corpse; the tomb of his great friend was sphe'ered
With thy dragg'd person; yet from death he was not therefore receiv'd.
But, all his rage used, so the gods have tender'd thy dead state, Thou liest as living, sweet and fresh, as he that felt the fate Of Pheebus's holy shafts." These words the queen used for her moan,
And, next her, Helen held that state of speech and passion:
"O Hector, all my brothers more were not so loved of me
As thy most virtues. Not my lord I held so dear as thee.
That brought me hither; before which I would I had been brought To ruin; for what breeds that wish (which is the mischief wrought
By my acces) yet never found one harsh taunt, one word's ill,
From thy sweet carriage. Twenty years do now their circles fill Since my arrival; all which time thou didst not only bear Thyself without check, but all else, that my lord's brothers were,
Their sisters' lords, sisters themselves, the queen my mother-in-law,
(The king being never but most mild) when thy man's spirit saw Sour and reproachful, it would still reprove their bitterness
With sweet words, and thy gentle soul.
And therefore thy decease
I truly mourn for; and myself curse as the wretched cause;
All broad Troy yielding me not one, that any human laws
Of pity or forgiveness moved t' entreat me humbly,
But only thee; all else abhor'd me for my destiny.
These words made even the commons mourn, to whom the king said:
"Friends,
Now fetch wood for our funeral fire; nor fear the foe intends Ambush, or any violence; Achilles gave his word,
At my dismissal, that twelve days he would keep sheathed his sword,
And all men's else." Thus oxen, mules, in chariots straight they put,
Went forth, and an unmeasured pile of sylvan matter cut;
Nine days employ'd in carriage, but when the tenth morn shined
On wretched mortals, then they brought the fit-to-be-divined Forth to be burn'd. Troy swam in tears.
Upon the pile's most height
They laid the person, and gave fire. All day it burn'd, all night.
But when th' eleventh morn let on earth her rosy fingers shine,
The people flock'd about the pile, and first with blackish wine Quench'd all the flames. His brothers then, and friends, the snowy bones Gather'd into an urn of gold, still pouring on their moans.
CROWN OF ALL HOMER'S WORKES

rapt they in soft purple veils the urn, digg'd a pit, it, ramm'd up the grave with stones,
I quickly built to it chre. But, while that work and all funeral rites performance, guards were beld at parts, days and nights,

For fear of false surprise before they had imposed the crown
To these solemnities. The tomb advanced once, all the town
In Jove-nursed Priam's Court partook a passing sumptuous feast.
And so horse-taming Hector's rites gave up his soul to rest.

THE END OF THE TWENTY-FOURTH BOOK.
Thus far the Ilian ruins I have laid Open to English eyes. In which, repaid
With thine own value, go, unvalued book, Live, and be loved. If any envious look Hurt thy clear fame, learn that no state more high Attends on virtue than pined envy’s eye.
Would thou were worth it that the best doth wound,
Which this age feeds, and which the last shall bound.

Thus, with labour enough, though with more comfort in the merits of my divine Author, I have brought my Translation of his Illads to an end. I, either therein, or in the harsh utterance or matter of my Comment before, I have, nor haste, scattered with my burthen (less than fifteen weeks being the whole time that the last twelve Books’ translation stood me in) I desire my present will (and I doubt not hability, if God give life, to reform and perfect all hereafter,) may be ingeniously accepted for the absolute work. The rather, considering the most learned, with all their helps and time, have been so often, and unanswerably, miserably taken halting. In the mean time, that most assistful and unspeakable Spirit, by whose thrice sacred conduct and inspiration I have finished this labour, diffuse the fruitful horn of his blessings through these goodness-thirsting watchings without which, utterly dry and bloodless is whatsoever mortality soweth.

But where our most diligent Spondanus ends his work with a prayer to be taken out of these Meanders and Euripian rivers (as he terms them) of ethnic and profane writers (being quite contrary to himself at the beginning) I thrice humbly beseech the most dear and divine mercy (ever most incomparably preferring the great light of his truth in his direct and infallible Scriptures) I may ever be enabled, by resting wondering in his right comfortable shadows in these, to magnify the clearness of his Almighty appearance in the other.

And with this salutation of Poesy given by our Spondanus in his Preface to these Illads ("All hail saint-sacred Poesy, that, under so much gall of fiction, such abundance of honey doctrine hast hidden, not revealing them to the unworthy worldly; wouldst thou but so much make me, that amongst thy novels I might be numbered, no time should ever come near my life that could make me forswake thee.") I will conclude with this my daily and nightly prayer, learned of the most learned Simplicus:—

FINIS.
HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.
"Homer's Odyses. Translated According to the Greeke. By George Chapman. Im at London by Rich. Field, for Nathaniell Butter. [1616.]
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Thus the Gods in council sit, to call Ulysses from Calypso's thrall,
And order their high pleasures thus:
Grey Pallas to Telemachus
(In Ithaca) her way address;
And did her heavenly limbs invest
In Mentor's likeness, that did reign
King of the Taphians, in the main Whose rough waves near Leucadia run, Advising wise Ulysses' son
To seek his father, and address
His course to young Tantalides,
That govern'd Sparta. Thus much said,
She shew'd she was Heaven's martial Maid,
And vanish'd from him. Next to this,
The Banquet of the wooers is.

ANOTHER.

Adagio. The Deities sit;
The Man retired;
The Ulyssian wit
By Pallas fired.

The man,* O Muse, inform, that many a way
Wound with his wisdom to his wished stay;
That wander'd wondrous far, when he the town
Of sacred Troy had sack'd and shiver'd down;
The cities of a world of nations,
With all their manners, minds, and fashions,
He saw and knew; at sea felt many woes,
Much care sustain'd, to save from overthrows
Himself and friends in their retreat for home.
But so their fates he could not overcome,

Though much he thirsted it. O men unwise,
They perish'd by their own impieties,
That in their hunger's rapine would not shun
The oxen of the lofty-going Sun,
Who therefore from their eyes the day bereft
Of safe return. These acts, in some part left,
Tell us, as others, deified seed of Jove.
Now all the rest that austere Death outstrove
At Troy's long siege at home safe anchor'd are, Free from the malice both of sea and war;
Only Ulysses is denied access To wife and home. The grace of Goddesses,
The reverend nymph Calypso, did detain Him in her caves, past all the race of men
Enflamed to make him her loved lord and spouse.
And when the Gods had destined that his house,
Which Ithaca on her rough bosom bears,
(The point of time wrought out by ambient years) Should be his haven, Contention still extends Her envy to him, even amongst his friends.
All Gods took pity on him; only he
That girds earth in the cinure of the sea,
Divine Ulysses ever did envy,
And made the fix'd port of his birth to fly.
But he himself solemnized a retreat
To th' Ethiops, far dissuader'd in their seat, (In two parts parted, at the sun's descent,
And underneath his golden orient,
The first and last of men,) 't enjoin their feast
Of bulls and lambs, in hecatombs address;
At which he sat, given over to delight.
The other Gods in heaven's supremest height
Were all in council met; to whom began
The mighty Father both of God and man

* The information or fashion of an absolute man; and necessary (or fatal) passage through many afflictions (according with the most sacred Letter) to his natural haven and country, is the whole argument and scope of this inimitable and miraculous poem. And therefore is the epithet τολμήρων given him in the first verse: τολμήρων signifying, Homo cuius ingenium velut per mala et varias vices velutur in versum.
DISCOURSE, INDUCING MATTER THAT INCLINED TO WISE ULYSSES, CALLING TO HIS MIND
FAULTFUL AEargvAUS,* WHO TO DEATH WAS DONE

HIS MEMORY TO THE IMMORTALS THEN MOVED LOVE THUS DEEPLY: "O HOW FALSELY ACCUSE US GODS AS AUTHORS OF THEIR ILL!
WHEN, BY THE BANE THEIR OWN BAD LIVES INFLICT,
THEY SUFFER ALL THE MISERIES OF THEIR STATES, PAST OUR INFlictions, AND BEYOND THEIR FATES.
AS NOW AEargvAUS, PAST HIS FATE, DID WE?
The wife of Agamemnon, and (in dread TO SUFFER DEATH HIMSELF) TO SHUN HIS ILL, IN CURR'D IT BY THE LOOSE BENT OF HIS WILL,
IN SLAUGHTERING ATRIDES IN RETREAT.
WHICH WE FORETOLD HIM WOULD SO HARDLY SET.
TO HIS MURDEROUS PURPOSE, SENDING MERCURY THAT SLAUGHTER'D ARGUS, OUR CONSIDERATE

TO GIVE HIM THIS CHARGE: 'DO NOT MURDER
HIS WIFE;
NOR MURDER HIM; FOR THOU SHALT BUY HIS

HIS HAUGHTY FATHER'S THRONE BY HIS HIGH ACTS.'
THESE WORDS OF HERMES WROUGHT NOT INTO

AEargvAUS' POWERS; GOOD COUNSEL HE DESPISED,
AND TO THAT GOOD HIS ILL IS SACRIFICED."

Pallas, whose eyes did sparkle like the skyes, ANSWER'D: "O SIRE! SUPREME OF DEITIES,

ÆGISSTHUS PASS'D HIS FATE, AND BAD DESERT TO WARRANT OUR INFLECTION; AND CONVERT MAY ALL THE PAINS SUCH IMPIOUS MEN INFlict ON INNOCENT SUFFERERS TO REVENGE AS STRICT THEIR OWN HEARTS EATING. BUT, THAT IthACUS.
THUS NEVER MERITING, SHOULD SUFFER THUS,
I DEEPLY SUFFER. HIS MORE PIUS MIND
DIVIDES HIM FROM THESE FORTUNES. THOUGH UKIND.
IS PLENTY TO HIM, GIVING HIM A FATE
MORE SUFFERING THAN THE MOST UNFORTUNATE, SO LONG KEPT FRIENDLESS IN A SEA-GIRT SOIL,
WHERE THE SEA'S NAVEL IS A SYLVAN ISLE, IN WHICH THE GODDESS DWELLS THAT DOETH
DERIVE
HER BIRTH FROM ATLAS,* WHO OF ALL ALIVE
THE MOTION AND THE FASHION DOOTH COMMAND WITH HIS WISE MIND, WHOSE FORCES UNDERSTAND THE MOST DEEP AND GULFS OF ALL THE SEAS, WHO (FOR HIS SKILL OF THINGS SUPERIOR) STEPS
THE TWO STEEP COLUMNS THAT PROP EARTH AND HEAVEN.
HIS DAUGHTER 'TIS, WHO HOLDS THIS HOMELESS
DRIVEN
STILL MOURNING WITH HER; EVEMORE PROFUSE OF SOFT AND WINNING SPEECHES, THAT ABUSE AND MAKE SO DEEPLY HAVING, AND POSSESS WITH SO REMISS A MIND HER LOVED GUEST, MANAGE THE ACTION OF HIS WAY FOR HOME.
WHERE HE, THOUGH IN AFFECTION OVERCOME, IN JUDGMENT YET MORE LONGS TO SHOW HIS HOPE.
HIS COUNTRY'S SMOKE LEAP FROM HER CHIMNEY TOPS.

* IN THIS PLACE IS ATLAS GIVEN THE EPISTHEL ΔΩΘ-Phron, WHICH SIGNIFIES QU[iphao]nq univorsa mentis agitat, here given him for the power the stars have in all things. Yet this receives other interpretation in other places, as above said.
† Δeoeris is here turned by others, in the general collection; when it hath here a particular exposition, applied to express Ulysses' DECEIT, eras, pro stauwv, et 66, qui qui AGITAT: "QUOQUE SIGNIFICANS, qui languido clismo nemus est aliquam gestit, which being the effect of Calypso's sweet words in Ulysses, is here applied passively to his own sufferance of their operation.

* These notes following I am forced to insert (although the words they contain differ from all other translations) lest I be thought to err out of that ignorance that may perhaps possess my depraver.
"AErueGrwoon translated in this place inapplicable, and made the epithet of AErueGrAUS, is from the true sense of the word, as it is here to be understood; which is quite contrary. As Eri-Theo is to be explained in some place Divinus, or Deus similis, but in another (soon after) contrarius Deus. The person to whom the epithet is given reason to distinguish it. And so Δηθφρων, an epithet given to Atlas, instantly following, in the next place signifies mentis pernicieosus; in the next, qui universa mente gerit."
And death asks in her arms. Yet never shall Thy loved heart be converted on his thrall, Austerely Olympus. Did not ever he,
In ample Troy, thy altars gratify,
And Grecians' fleet make in thy offerings swim?
O Jove, why still then burns thy wrath to him?
The Cloud- assembler answer'd: "What words fly, Bold daughter, from thy pale of ivory?"
As if I ever could cast from my care
Divine Ulysses, who exceeds so far
All men in wisdom, and so oft hath given
To all th' Immortals throned in ample heaven
So great and sacred gifts? But his decrees,
That holds the earth in with his nimble knees,
Starts to Ulysses' longings so extreme,
For taking from the God-foe Polyphemus
His only eye; a Cyclop, that excell'd
All other Cyclops, with whose burt'n swell'd
The nymph Thoosa, the divine increase
Of Phorcoy's seed, a great God of the seas.
She mix'd with Neptune in his hollow caves,
And bore this Cyclop to that God of waves.
For whose lost eye, th' Earth-shaker did not kill Erring Ulysses, but reserves him still In life for more death. But use we our powers,
And round about us cast these cares of ours,
All to discover how we may prefer
His wish'd retreat, and Neptune make forbear
His stern eye to him, since no one God can,
In spite of all, prevail, but 'gainst a man."
To this, this answer made the grey-eyed Maid:
"Supreme of rulers, since so well apaid
The blessed Gods are all then, now, in thee,
To limit wise Ulysses' misery,
And that you speak as you refer'd to me
Prescription for the means, in this sort be Their sacred order: Let us now address
With utmost speed our swift Argicidas,
To tell the nymph that bears the golden treas'
In th' isle Ogygia, that 'tis our will She should not stay our loved Ulysses still,
But suffer his return; and then will I
To Ithaca, to make his son apply
His sire's inquest the more; infusing force
Into his soul, to summon the concourse
Of curl'd-head Greeks to council, and deter
Each wooer, that hath been the slaughterer
Of his fat sheep and crooked-headed beoves,
From more wrong to his mother, and their leaves.
Take in such terms as fit deserts so great.
To Sparta then, and Pylos, where doth beat Bright Amathus, the flood, and epithet
To all that kingdom, my advice shall send
The spirit-advanced Prince, to the pious end
Of seeking his lost father, if he may Receive report from Fame where rests his stay;
And make, besides, his own successive worth Known to the world, and set in action forth."
This said, her wing'd shoes to her feet she tied,
Form'd all of gold, and all eternified;
That on the round earth or the sea sustain'd
Her ravish'd substance swift as gust of wind.
Then took she her strong lance with steel Made keen,
Great, massy, active, that whole hosts of men,
Though all heroës, conquer, if her ire
Their wrongs inflame, back'd by so great a Sire.
Down from Olympus' tops she headlong dived,
And swift as thought in Ithaca arrived,
Close at Ulysses' gates; in whose first court
She made her stand, and, for her breast's support, Lean'd on her iron lance; her form impress
With Mentas' likeness, come as being a guest.
There found she those proud wooers, that were then Set on those ox-hides that themselves had slain, Before the gates, and all at dice were playing.
To them the heralds, and the rest obeying,
Fill'd wine and water; some, still as they play'd,
And some, for solemn supper's state, survey'd,
With porous sponges cleansing tables, served
With much rich feast; of which to all they kerv'd.
God-like Telemachus amongst them sat,
Grieved much in mind; and in his heart begat
All representation of his absent sire;
How, come from far-off parts, his spirits would fire
With those proud wooers' sight, with slaughter parting Their bold concourse; and to himself converting
The honours they usurp'd, his own command ing.
In this discourse, he first saw Pallas standing, Unbidden entry; up rose, and addrest
His pace right to her, angry that a guest Should stand so long at glare; and, coming near,
Her right hand took; took in his own her spear,
And thus saluted: "Grace to your repair,
Fair guest, your welcome shall be likewise fair.
Enter, and, cheer'd with feast, disclose th' intent
That caused your coming." This said, first he went,
And Pallas follow'd. To a room they came,
Stoop, and of state; the javelin of the Dame
He set against a pillar vast and high,
Amidst a large and bright-kept armoury,
Which was, besides, with woods of lances graced
Of his grave father's. In a throne he placed
The man-turn'd Goddess, under which was spread
A carpet, rich and of deviceful thread;
A footstool stay'd her feet; and by her chair
Another seat (all garnish'd wondrous fair,
To rest or sleep on in the day) he set,
Far from the prease of wooers; lest at meat

The noise they still made might offend his guest, Disturbing him at banquet or at rest,
Even to his combat with that pride of theirs,
That kept no noble form in their affairs,
And these he set far from them, much the rather.
To question freely of his absent father.
A table fairly-polish'd then was spread,
On which a reverend officer set bread,
And other servitors all sorts of meat (Salads, and flesh, such as their haste could get) Served with observance in. And then the sewer Pour'd water from a great and golden ewer.
That from their hands t'a silver caldron ran,
Both wash'd, and seated close, the voiceful man Fetch'd cups of gold, and set by them; and round
Those cups with wine with all endeavour crown'd.
Then rush'd in the rude wooers, themselves placed;
The heralds water gave; the maids in haste Served bread from baskets. When, of all prepared
And set before them, the bold wooers shared,
Their pages plying their cups past the rest.
But lusty wooers must do more than feast;
For now, their hunchers and their thirsts allay'd,
They call'd for songs and dances; those, they said,
Were th' ornaments of feast. The herald straight
A harp, carved full of artificial sleight, Thrust into Phemius', a learn'd singer's hand,
Who, till he much was urged, on terms did stand,
But, after, play'd and sung with all his art.
Telemachus to Pallas then (apart,
His ear inclining close, that none might hear)
In this sort said: "My guest, exceeding dear,
Will you not sit incensed with what I say?
These are the cares these men take; feast and play,
Which easily they may use, because they eat,
Free and unpunish'd, of another's meat;
And of a man's, whose white bones wasting lie
In some far region, with th' incessancy
Of showers pour'd down upon them, lying ashore,
Or in the seas wash'd naked. Who, if he were Those bones with flesh and life and industry,
And these might here in Ithaca set eye
On him return'd, they all would wish to be Either past other in celerity
Of feet and knees, and not contend t' exceed In golden garments. But his virtues feed
The fate of ill death; nor is left to me
The least hope of his life's recovery,
No, not if any of the mortal race
Should tell me his return; the cheerful face
Of his return'd day never will appear.
But tell me, and let Truth your witness bear.
Who, and from whence you are? what city's birth?
What parents? In what vessel set you forth?
And with what mariners arrived you here?
I cannot think you a foot passenger.
Recount then to me all, to teach me well Fit usage for your worth. And if it fell
In chance now first that you thus see us here,
Or that in former passages you were My father's guest? For many men have been Guests to my father. Studious of men His sociable nature ever was.
On him again the grey-eyed Maid did pass
This kind reply: 'I'll answer passing true
All thou hast ask'd: My birth his honour drew From wise Anchialus. The name I bear
Is Mentus, the commanding islander
Of all the Taphians studious in the art
Of navigation; having touch'd this part
With ship and men, of purpose to maintain Course through the dark seas t' other-languaged men;
And Terence sustains the city's name
For which my ship is bound, made known by fame
For rich in brass, which my occasions need;
And therefore bring I shining steel in stead, Which their use wants, yet makes my vessel's freight;
That near a plough'd field rides at anchor's weight,
But, since that time, mine eyes could never see Renown'd Ulysses, nor met his with me."
The wise Telemachus again replied:
"You shall withal I know be satisfied.
My mother certain says I am his son;
I know not; nor was ever simply known
By any child the sure truth of his sire.
But would my veins had took in living fire
From some man happy, rather than one wise, Whom age might see seized of what youth made prise.
But he whoever of the mortal race
Is most unblest, he holds my father's place.
This, since you ask, I answer." She again:
"The Gods sure did not make the future strain
Both of thy race and days obscure to thee,
Since thou didst so of Penelope.
The style may by thy future acts be won,
Of so great sire the high undoubtled son.
Say truth in this then: what's this feasting here?
What all this rout? Is all this nuptial cheer?
Or else some friendly banquet made by thee?
For here no shots are, where all sharers be,
Past measure contumeliously this crew Fare through thy house; which should th' ingenuous view
Of any good or wise man come and find, (Impiety seeing play'd in every kind)
He could not but through every vein be moved."
Again Telemachus: "My guest much loved,
Since you demand and sift these sights so far,
I grant 'were fit a house so regular,
Rich, and so faultless once in government,
Should still, at all parts, the same form present
That gave it glory while her lord was here.
But now the Gods, that us displeasure bear,
Have otherwise appointed, and disgrace
My father most of all the mortal race.
For whom I could not mourn so were he dead,
Amongst his fellow-captains slaughtered
By common enemies, or in the hands
Of his kind friends had ended his commands,
After he had egregiously bestow'd
His power and order in a war so vow'd,
And to his tomb all Greeks their grace had done,
That to all ages he might leave his son
Immortal honour; but now Harpies have Digg'd in their gorges his abhorred grave.
Obscure, inglorious, death hath made his end,
And me, for glories, to all griefs contend.
Nor shall I any more mourn him alone,
The Gods have given me other cause of moan.
For look how many optimates remain
In Samos, or the shores Dulichian, Shady Zacynthus, or how many bear
Rule in the rough brows of this island here;
So many now my mother and this house
At all parts make defamed and ruinous.
And she her hateful nuptials nor denies,
Nor will despatch their importunities,
Though she beholds them spoil still as they feast
All my free house yields; and the little rest
Of my dead sire in me perhaps intend
To bring ere long to some untimely end."
This Pallas sigh'd and answer'd: "O," said she,
"Absent Ulysses is much miss'd by thee,
That on these shameless suitors he might lay
His weakful hands. Should he now come, and stay In thy court's first gates, arm'd with helm and shield,
And two such darts as I have seen him wield,
When first I saw him in our Taphian court, Feasting; and doing his desert's dispose;
When from Ephyrus he return'd by us
From Ilus, son to Centaur Memerus,
To whom he travell'd through the watery dreads,
For bane to poison his sharp arrows' heads,
That death, but touch'd, caused; which he would not give,
Because he fear'd the Gods that ever live
Would plague such death with death; and yet their fear
Was to my father's bosom not so dear
As was thy father's love; (for what he sought My loving father found him to a thought.)
If such as then Ulysses might but meet
With these proud wooers, all were at his feet
But instant dead men, and their nuptials
Would prove as bitter as their dying galls.
But these things in the Gods' knees are reposed,
If his return shall see with wreak inclosed,
These in his house, or he return no more.
And therefore I advise thee to explore
All ways thyself, to set these woeers gone;
To which end give me fit attention:
To-morrow into solemn counsel call
The Greek heroes, and declare to all (The Gods being witness) what thy pleasure is.
Command to towns of their nativities These frontless woeers. If thy mother's mind
Stands to her second nuptials so inclined,
Return she to her royal father's towers, Where th' one of these may wed her, and her dowers
Make rich, and such as may consort with grace
So dear a daughter of so great a race.
And thee I warn as well (if as well Wilt hear and follow) take thy best-built sail,
With twenty oars mann'd, and haste t' inquire
Where the abode is of thy absent sire,
If any can inform thee, or thine ear
From Jove the fame of his retreat may hear,
For chiefly Jove gives all that honours men.
To Fylos first be thy address on then,
To god-like Nestor; thence to Sparta
haste,
To gold-lock'd Menelaus, who was last
Of all the brass-arm'd Greeks that sail'd from Troy;
And try from both these, if thou canst enjoy
News of thy sire's return'd life anywhere, Though sad thou suffer'st in his search a year.
If of his death thou hear'st, return thou
home,
And to his memory erect a tomb,
Performing parent-rites, of feast and game, Pompous, and such as best may fit his fame;
And then thy mother a fit husband give.
These past, consider how thou mayst deprive
Of worthless life these woeers in thy house,
By open force, or projects enginous.
Things childish fit not thee; th' art so no
more.
Hast thou not heard, how all men did adore
Divine Orestes, after he had slain
Aegisthus marthing by a treacherous train His famous father? Be then, my most loved,
Valiant and manly, every way approved
As great as he. I see thy person fit,
Noble thy mind, and excellent thy wit;
All given thee so to use and manage here That even past death they may their memories bear.
In meantime I'll descend to ship and men,
That much expect me. Be observant then
Of my advice, and careful to maintain
In equal acts thy royal father's reign." Telemachus replied: "You ope, fair
guest,
A friend's heart in your speech, as well express
As might a father serve t' inform his son;
All which sure place have in my memory won.
Abide yet, though your voyage calls away,
That, having bathed, and dignified your stay
With some more honour, you may yet beside Delight your mind by being gratified With some rich present taken in your way,
That, as a jewel, your respect may lay
Up in your treasury, bestow'd by me, As free friends use to guests of such degree."
"Detain me not," said she, "so much inclined
To haste my voyage. What thy loved mind
Commands to give, at my return this way, Bestow on me, that I directly may Convey it home; which, more of price
to me,
The more it asks my recompense to thee."
This said, away grey-eyed Minerva flew,
Like to a mounting lark; and did endue His mind with strength and boldness, and much more
Made him his father long for than before;
And weighing better who his guest might be,
He stood amazed, and thought a Deity Was there descended; to whose will he framed
His powers at all parts, and went so inflamed
Amongst the woeers, who were silent set,
To hear a Poet sing the sad retreat
The Greeks perform'd from Troy; which was from thence Proclaim'd by Pallas, pain of her offence.
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

When which divine song was perceived to bear
That mournful subject by the listening ear
Of wise Penelope, Icarus’ seed,
Who from an upper room had given it heed,
Down she descended by a winding stair,
Not solely, but the state in her repair Two maids of honour made. And when this queen
Of women stoop’d so low, she might be seen
By all her wooers. In the door, aloof,
Entering the hall graced with a goodly roof,
She stood, in shade of graceful veils,
Implied
About her beauties; on her either side,
Her honour’d women. When, to tears moved, thus She chid the sacred singer: "Phemius,
You know a number more of these great deeds
Of Gods and men (that are the sacred seeds,
And proper subjects, of a Poet’s song,
And those due pleasures that to men belong)
Besides these facts that furnish Troy’s retreat:
Sing one of those to these, that round your seat
They may with silence sit, and taste their wine;
But cease this song, that through these ears of mine Conveys deserved occasion to my heart
Of endless sorrows, of which the desert
In not unmeasured is, past all these men;
So endless is the memory I retain;
And so desertful is that memory,
Of such a man as hath a dignity
So broad, it spreads itself through all the pride Of Greece and Argos." To the queen replied Inspired Telemachus: "Why thus envies
My mother him that fits societies*
With so much harmony, to let him please
His own mind in his will to honour these?
For these ingenuous and first sort of men,†
That do immediately from Jove retain Their singing raptures, are by Jove as well Inspired with choice of what their songs impel,
Jove’s will is free in it, and therefore theirs.
Nor is this man to blame, that the repairs
The Greeks make homeward sings; for his fresh Muse
Men still most celebrate, that sings most news.
And therefore in his note your ears employ:
For not Ulysses only lost in Troy
The day of his return, but numbers more
The deadly ruins of his fortunes bore.
Go you then in, and take your work in hand,
Your web, and distaff; and your maids command To ply their fit work. Words to men are due,
And those reproving counsels you pursue,
And most to me of all men; since I hear
The rule of all things that are managed here."
She went amazed away, and in her heart
Laid up the wisdom Pallas did impart
To her loved son so lately, turn’d again
Up to her chamber, and no more would reign In manly counsels. To her women she Applied her sway; and to the wooers he Began new orders, other spirits bewray’d Than those in spite of which the wooers
sway’d
And (whiles his mother’s tears still wash’d her eyes, Till grey Mineerva did these tears surprise With timely sleep, and that her wooers did rouse
Rude tumult up through all the shady house, Disposed to sleep because their widow was) Telemachus this new-given spirit did pass
On their old insolence: "Ho! you that are My mother’s wooers! much too high ye bear
Your petulant spirits; sit; and, while ye may Enjoy me in your banquets, see ye lay
These loud notes down, nor do this man the wrong,
Because my mother hath disliked his song,

* Ἑνέργος δεδοκ. Cantor, cum tam aequo est societas hominum.
† Ἀνδρασίων ἀδήμοστίαν. Ἀδήμοστίας is an epithet proper to poets for their first finding out of arts and documents tending to eloquence and government, inspired only by Jove, and are here called the first of men, since first they gave rules to many life, and have their information immediately from Jove (as Plato in Ione witnesseth); the word deduced from ἀδήμος, which is taken for him qui primas tenet aligna et re, and will δυνάμειας, then be sufficiently expressed with Ενέργεια, than which no exposition goes further.
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

To grace her interruption, 'Tis a thing Honest, and honour'd too, to hear one sing
Numbers so like the Gods in elegance, As this man flows in. By the morn's first light,*
I'll call ye all before me in a Court,
That I may clearly banish your resort,
With all your rudeness, from these roofs of mine. [bien.
Away; and elsewhere in your feasts consume your own goods, and make mutual feast
At either's house. Or if ye still hold best,
And for your humour's more sufficed fill,
To feed, to spoil, because unpunish'd still,
On other findings, spoil; but here I call
Th' eternal Gods to witness, if it fall
In my wish'd reach once to be dealing wreaks,
By Jove's high bounty, these your present cheeks
To what I give in charge shall add more reins
To my revenge hereafter; and the pains Ye then must suffer shall pass all your pride
Ever to see redress'd, or qualified."
At this all bit their lips, and did admire His words sent from him with such phrase and fire;
[linous,
Which so much moved them that An-Eupitheus' son, cried out: "Telemachus!
The Gods, I think, have rapt thee to this height;
Of elocution, and this great conceit
Of self-ability. We all may pray,
That Jove invest not in this kingdom's sway
Thy forward forces, which I see put forth
A hot ambition in thee for thy birth."
"Be not offended," he replied, "if I† Shall say, I would assume this empery,

* 'Hodie, prima luce.
† Upon this answer of Telemachus, because it hath so sudden a change, and is so far let down from his late height of heat, altering and tempering so commandingly his affections, I thought not amiss to insert here Spinanes' further annotation which is this: Prudenter Telemachus fico suorum Antinoe ac asperitate animæ. Nunc ita dictum illius interpretatur, ut etiam causas causae fecerit illa eius ab Antinoe adversam se pronunciat. Et primum ionicum se Regem esse explat propter commoda que ligeum metu consiliari. Ne hancam sua viam in se ambitiosi complet, testatur se regimen Ithaei non amisse, mortuo Ulyse, cum id ait possidens quarent se longe praestantiores ac digniores: hoc unum ait se motiri, ut progriatam

If Jove gave leave. You are not he that sings:
The rule of kingdoms is the worst of things.
Nor is it ill, at all, to sway a throne;
A man may quickly gain possession
Of mighty riches, make a wondrous prize
Set of his virtues; but the dignities
That deck a king, there are enough beside
In this circumvallate isle that want no pride
To think them worthy of, as young as I,
And old as you are. An ascent so high My thoughts affect not. Dead is he that held
Desert of virtue to have so excell'd.
But of these turrets I will take on me To be the absolute king; and reign as free,
As did my father over all his hand
Left here in this house, slaves to my command."

Eurymachus, the son of Polybus,
To this made this reply: "Telemachus!
The girdle of this kingdom let the knees
Of deity run for; but the faculties
This house is seized of, and the turrets here, Thou shalt be lord of, nor shall any bear
The least part off of all thou dost possess,
As long as this land is no wilderness, Nor ruled by out-laws. But give these their pass,
And tell me, best of princes, who he was That guested here so late? from whence? and what?
In any region boasted be his state?
His race? his country? Brought he any news
Of thy returning father? Or for dues
Of moneys to him made he fit repair?
How suddenly he rush'd into the air,
Nor would sustain to stay and make him known!
His port show'd no debauch'd companion."
He answer'd: "The return of my loved sire
Is past all hope; and should rude Fame inspire
From any place a flattering messenger
With news of his survival, he should bear
No least belief off from my desperate
love.
Which if a sacred prophet should approve,
Call'd by my mother for her care's unrest,
It should not move me. For my late fair guest,
He was of old my father's, touching here
From sea-girt Taphos; and for name doth bear Mentas, the son of wise Anchialus;
And governs all the Taphians studious Of Navigation." This he said, but knew It was a Goddess. These again withdrew
To dances and attraction of the song;
And while their pleasures did the time prolong,
The sable Even descended, and did steep
The lids of all men in desire of sleep.
Telemachus, into a room built high
Of his illustrious court, and to the eye
Of circular prospect, to his bed ascended,
And in his mind much weighty thought contended.
Before him Euryclea (that well knew
All the observance of a handmaid's due, Daughter to Opis Pisenorides)
Bore two bright torches; who did so much please Laertes in her prime, that, for the price
Of twenty oxen, he made merchandise
Of her rare beauties; and love's equal flame,
To her he felt, as to his nuptial dame,
Yet never durst he mix with her in bed,
So much the anger of his wife he fled.
She, now grown old, toy young Telemachus
Two torches bore, and was obsequious
Past all his other maids; and did apply
Her service to him from his infancy.
His well-built chamber reach'd, she oped the door,
He on his bed sat, the soft weeds he wore Put off, and to the diligent old maid
Gave all; who fitly all in thick folds laid,
And hung them on a beam-pin near the bed,
That round about was rich embroidered.
Then made she haste forth from him, and did bring
The door together with a silver ring,
And by a string a bar to it did pull.
He, laid, and cover'd well with curled wool Woven in silk quilts, all night employ'd his mind
About the task that Pallas had design'd.

THE END OF THE FIRST BOOK.
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

TELEMACHUS to court doth call
The woosers, and commands them all
To leave his house; and, taking then
From wise Minerva ship and men,
And all things fit for him beside,
That Euryclea could provide
For sea-rites till he found his sire,
He hoists sail; when Heaven stoops his fire.

ANOTHER.

Evra. The old Maid's store
The voyage cheers.
The ship leaves shore,
Minerva steers.

Now when with rosy fingers, th' early born
And thrown through all the air, appear'd
the Morn,
Ulysses' loved son from his bed appear'd,
His weeds put on, and did about him gird
His sword that thwart his shoulders hung, and tied
To his fair feet fair shoes, and all parts
plied
For speedy readiness; who, when he trod
The open earth, to men show'd like a
God,
The heralds then he straight charged to consort
The curl'd-head Greeks, with loud calls, to a Court.
They summon'd; th' other came in utmost
haste.
Who all assembled, and in one heap placed,
He likewise came to council, and did bear
In his fair hand his iron-headed spear;
Nor came alone, nor with men-troops prepared,
But two fleet dogs made both his train and guard.
Pallas supplied with her high wisdom's
grace,
(That all men's wants supplies) State's painted face.
His entering presence all men did admire;
Who took seat in the high throne of his sire,

VOL. III.

To which the grave peers gave him reverend way,
Amongst whom, an Egyptian heroë
(Crooked with age, and full of skill) begun
The speech to all; who had a loved son
That with divine Ulysses did ascend His hollow fleet to Troy; to serve which end,
He kept fair horse, and was a man-at-arms,
And in the cruel Cyclop's stern alarms
His life lost by him in his hollow cave,
Whose entails open'd his abhorred grave,
And made of him, of all Ulysses' train,
His latest supper, being latest slain;
His name was Antiphus. And this old
man,
This crooked-grown, this wise Egyptian, Had three sons more; of which one riotous
A wooer was, and call'd Eurynomus;
The other two took both his own wish'd course,
Yet both the best fates weigh'd not down the worse.
But left the old man mindful still of moan;
Who, weeping, thus bespeak the Session:
"Hear, Ithacensians, all I blyly say:
Since our divine Ulysses' parting day
Never was council call'd, nor session,
And now by whom is this thus undergone?
Whom did necessity so much compel,
Of young or old? Hath any one heard tell
Of any coming army, that he thus now
May openly take boldness to awow,
First having heard it? Or will any here
Some motion for the public good prefer?
Some worth of note there is in this command;
And, methinks, it must be some good man's hand
That's put to it, that either hath direct Means to assist, or, for his good aect, Hopes to be happy in the proof he makes;
And that Jove grant, what'er he undertakes."
Telemachus (rejoining much to hear
The good hope and opinion men did bear
Of his young actions) no longer sat, But long'd I to approve what this man pointed at,
And make his first proof in a cause so good;
And in the council's chief place up he stood;
When straight Pyenor (herald to his sire, And learn'd in counsels) felt his heart on fire
To hear him speak, and put into his hand
The sceptre that his father did command; Then, to the old Egyptian turn'd, he spoke:
"Father, not far he is that undertook To call this Council; whom you soon shall know,
Myself, whose wrongs my griefs will make me show,
Am he that author'd this assembly here.
Nor have I heard of any army near,
Of which, being first told, I might iterate,
Nor for the public good can aught relate,
Only mine own affairs all this procure,
That in my house a double ill endure;
One, having lost a father so renown'd, Whose kind rule once with your command was crown'd;
The other is, what much more doth augment
His weighty loss, the ruin imminent
Of all my house by it, my goods all spent.
And of all this the woosers, that are sons
To our chief peers, are the confusions, Importuning my mother's marriage Against her will; nor dares their blood's blood rage
Go to Learius', her father's court,
That, his will ask'd in kind and comely sort,
He may endow his daughter with a dower,
And, she consenting, at his pleasure's power
Dispose her to a man, that, thus behaved, May have fit grace, and see her honour saved.
But these, in none but my house, all their lives Resolve to spend; slaughtering my sheep and beeves,
And with my fattest goats lay feast on feast,
My generous wine consuming as they list.
A world of things they spoil, here wanting one,
That, like Ulysses, quickly could set gone These peace-plagues from his house, that spoil like war;
Whom my powers are unfit to urge so far,
Myself immaterial. But, had I the power, My will should serve me to exempt this hour
From out my life-time. For, past patience, Base deeds are done here, that exceed defence
Of any honour. Falling is my house,
Which you should shame to see so ruinous.
Reverence the censures that all good men give
That dwell about you; and for fear to live Exposed to heaven's wrath (that doth ever Pains for joys forfeit) even by Jove I pray, Or Themis, both which, powers have to restrain
Or gather councils, that ye will abstain
From further spoil; and let me only waste
In that most wretched grief I have-embraced For my lost father. And though I am
free
From meriting your outrage, yet, if he,
Good man, hath ever with a hostile heart
Done ill to any Greek, on me convert Your like hostility, and vengeance take
Of his ill on my life, and all these make Join in that justice; but, to see abused
Those goods that do none ill but being ill-used,
Exceeds all right. Yet better 'tis for me,
My whole possessions and my rents to see Consumed by you, than lose my life and all;
For on your rapine a revenge may fall,
While I live; and so long I may complain
About the city, till my goods again,
Oft ask'd, may be with all amends repaid.
But in the mean space your misrule hath laid
Griefs on my bosom, that can only speak,
And are denied the instant power of wrench.
This said, his sceptre 'gainst the ground he threw,
And tears still'd from him; which moved all the crew:
The court struck silent, not a man did dare
To give a word that might offend his ear.
Antinous only in this sort replied:
"High spoken, and of spirit unpacified, How have you shamed us in this speech of yours!
Will you brand us for an offence not ours?
Your mother, first in craft, is first in cause.
Three years are past, and near the fourth now draws,
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Since first she mock'd the peers Achaian,
All she made hope, and promised every man:
Sent for us ever, left love's shew in nought,
But in her heart conceal'd another thought.
Besides, as curious in her craft, her loom
She with a web charged, hard to overcome.
And thus bespake us: 'Youths, that seek slight bed,
Since my divine spouse rests among the dead,
Hold on your suits but till I end, at most,
This funeral weed, lest what is done be lost.
Besides, I purpose, that when th' austere fate
Of bitter death shall take into his state Laertes the hero, it shall deck
His royal corse; since I should suffer check
In ill report of every common dame,
If one so rich should shew in death his shame.'
This speech she used; and this did soon persuade Our gentle minds. But this a work she made So hugely long, undoing still in night*
(By torches) all she did by day's broad light.
That three years her deceit dived past our view,
And made us think that all she feign'd was true.
But when the fourth year came, and those sly hours
That still surprise at length dames' craftiest powers;
One of her women, that knew all, disclosed
The secret to us, that she still unloosed
Her whole day's fair affair in depth of night.
And then no further she could force her slight.
But, of necessity, her work gave end.
And thus, by me, doth every other friend,
Professing love to her, reply to thee;
That even thyself, and all Greeks else may see,
That we offend not in our stay, but she.
To free thy house then, send her to her sire, Commanding that her choice be left entire
To his election, and one settled will.
Nor let her vex with her illusions still

Her friends that woo her; standing on her wit, Because wise Pallas hath given wiles to it
So full of art, and made her understand
All works in fair skill of a lady's hand.
But (for her working mind) we read of none
Of all the old world, in which Greece hath shown
Her rarest pieces, that could equal her:
Tyro, Alcmena, and Mycena were
To hold companion in no degree,
For solid brain, with wise Penelope.
And yet, in her delays of us, she shows
No prophet's skill with all the wit she owes;
For all this time thy goods and victuals go
To utter ruin; and shall ever so,
While thus the Gods her glorious mind dispose.
Glory herself may gain, but thou shalt lose Thy longings even for necessary food;
For we shall never go where lies our good,
Nor any other where, till this delay
She puts on all she quits with th' endless stay
Of some one of us; that to all the rest
May give free farewell with his nuptial feast.'

The wise young prince replied: 'Antinous!
I may by no means turn out of my house.
Her that hath brought me forth and nourish'd me.
Besides, if quick or dead my father be
In any region, yet abides in doubt;
And 'twill go hard, by means being so run out,
To tender to Icarus again.
If he again my mother must maintain
In her retreat, the dower she brought with her,
And then a double ill it will confer,
Both from my father and from God on me,
When, thrust out of her house, on her bent knee,
My mother shall the horrid Furies raise
With imprecations, and all men dispraise
My part in her exposure. Never then Will I perform this counsel. If your spleen Swell at my courses, once more I command
Your absence from my house. Some other's hand Charge with your banquets; on your own goods eat,
And either other mutually intreat
At either of your houses, with your feast.
But if ye still esteem more sweet and best

* Telam Penelope rexexer. Proverbiun.
Another's spoil, so you still wreekless live, Gnaw (vermin-like) things sacred, no laws
give
To your devouring;* it remains that I Invoke each ever-living Deity,
And vow, if Jove shall deign in any date Power of like pains for pleasures so past rate,
From thenceforth look, where ye have revell'd so Unwreak'd, your ruins all shall undergo."
Thus spake Telemachus; 't assure whose threat, Far-seeing Jove upon their pinions set
Two eagles from the high brow's of a hill,
That, mounted on the winds, together still Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the Council, over every brow Shook their thick wings, and, threatening death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres;
Then, on the court's right-hand away they flew,
Above both court and city: with whose view,
And study what events they might foretell,
The Counsell into admiration fell.
The old heroe, Halitherses, then,
The son of Nestor, that of all old men,
His peers in that court, only could foresee
By flight of fowls man's fixed destiny,
'Twixt them and their amaze, this interposed:
"Hear, Ithacians, all your doubts disclosed.
The wooers most are touch'd in this event,
To whom are dangers great and imminent;
For now not long shall Ulysses bear Lack of his most loved; but fills some place near,
Addressing to these wooers fate and death,
And many more this mischief menaceth
Of us inhabiting this famous Isle.
Let us consult yet, in this long forewhile,
How to ourselves we may prevent this ill.
Let these men rest secure, and revel still;
Though they might find it safer, if with us
They would in time prevent what threats them thus;
Since not without sure trial I foretell
These coming storms, but know their issue well.

For to Ulysses all things have event,
As I foretold him, when for Ilion went
The whole Greek fleet together, and with them
'Th' abundant - in - all - counsels took the scene.
I told him, that, when much ill he had past,
And all his men were lost, he should at last,
The twentieth year, turn home, to all unknown;
All which effects are to perfection grown." Eurymachus, the son of Polybus, Opposed this man's presage, and answer'd thus:
"Hence, great in years, go, prophesy at home;
Thy children teach to shun their ills to come.
In these superior far to thee am I,
A world of fowls beneath the sun-beams fly
That are not fit t' inform a prophecy.
Besides, Ulysses perish'd long ago;
And would thy fates to thee had destined so,
Since so thy so much prophecy had spared
Thy wronging of our rights, which, for reward
Expected home with thee, hath summon'd us
Within the anger of Telemachus.
But this I will presage, which shall be true;
If any spark of anger chance t' ensue
Thy much old art in these deep auguries,
In this young man incensed by thy lies,
Even to himself his anger shall confer
The greater anguish, and thine own ends
From all their objects; and, besides, thine age
Shall feel a pain, to make thee curse
With worthy cause, for it shall touch thee near.
But I will soon give end to all our fear,
Preventing whatsoever chance can fall,
In my suit to the young prince for us all,
To send his mother to her father's house,
That he may sort her out a worthy spouse,
And such a dowry bestow, as may befit
One loved, to leave her friends and follow it.
Before which course be, I believe that none
Of all the Greeks will cease th' ambition
Of such a match. For, chance what can to us,
We no man fear, no not Telemachus, Though ne'er so greatly spoken. Nor care we
For any threats of austere prophecy,
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Which thou, old dotard, vaunt'st of so in vain.
And thus shalt thou in much more hate remain;
For still the Gods shall bear their ill expense,
Nor ever be disposed by competence,
Till with her nuptials she dismiss our suits,
Our whole lives' days shall sow hopes for such fruits.
Her virtues we contend to, nor will go
To any other, be she never so Worthy of us, and all the worth we owe."
He answer'd him: "Eurymachus, and all Ye generous wooers, now, in general;
I see your brave resolves, and will no more
Make speech of these points, and, much less, implore.
It is enough, that all the Grecians here,
And all the Gods besides, just witness bear,
What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event.
Yet, with my other friends, let love prevail
To fit me with a vessel free of sail,
And twenty men, that may divide to me
My ready passage through the yielding sea.
For Sparta, and Amathus Pylos' shore
I now am bound, in purpose to explore
My long-lack'd father, and to try if fame
Or Jove, most author of man's honour'd name,
With his return and life may glad mine ear,
Though toil'd in that proof I sustain a year.
If dead I hear him, nor of more state, here
Retired to my loved country I will rear
A sepulchre to him, and celebrate
Such royal parent-rites, as fits his state;
And then my mother to a spouse dispose."
This said, he sat; and to the rest arose
Mentor, that was Ulysses' chosen friend,
To whom, when he set forth, he did commend
His complete family, and whom he will'd
To see the mind of his old sire fulfill'd.
All things conserving safe, till his retreat.
Who (tender of his charge, and seeing so set
In slight care of their king, his subjects there, Suffering his son so much contempt to bear)
Thus gravely, and with zeal, to him began:
"No more let any sceptre-bearing man,
Benevolent, or mild, or humane be,
Nor in his mind form acts of piety,
But ever feed on blood; and facts unjust
Commit, even to the full swing of his lust;
Since of divine Ulysses no man now,
Of all his subjects, any thought doth show.
All whom he govern'd, and became to them,
Rather than one that wore a diadem,
A most indulgent father. But, for all
That can touch me, within no envy fall
These insolent wooers, that in violent kind Commit things foul by th' ill wit of the mind,
And with the hazard of their heads devour Ulysses' house; since his returning hour
They hold past hope. But it affects me much,
Ye dull plebeians, that all this doth touch
Your free states nothing; who, strook dumb, afford
These wooers not so much wreak as a word, Though few, and you with only number might Extinguish to them the profaned light."
Evenor's son, Leocritus, replied:
"Mentor! the raider, made a fool with pride,
What language givest thou, that would quiet us
With putting us in storm, exciting thus
The rout against us? who, though more than we,
Should find it is no easy victory
To drive men, habited in feast, from feasts,
No not if Ithacus himself such guests
Should come and find so furnishing his Court,
And hope to force them from so sweet a fort.
His wife should little joy in his arrive,
Though much she wants him; for, where she alive
Would her's enjoy, there death should claim his rights.
He must be conquer'd that with many fights.
Thou speak'st unprofit things. To their labours then Disperse these people; and let these two men, Mentor and Halitherses, that so boast From the beginning to have govern'd most
In friendship of the father, to the son
Confirm the course he now affects to run.
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

But my mind says, that, if he would but use
A little patience, he should here hear news
Of all things that his wish would understand,
But no good hope for of the course in hand.”

This said, the Council rose; when every peer And all the people in dispersion were To houses of their own; the wooers yet
Made to Ulysses’ house their old retreat.
Telemachus, apart from all the prease,
Prepared to shore, and, in the aged seas
His fair hands wash’d, did thus to Pallas pray:
“Hear me, O Goddess, that but yesterday
Didst deign access to me at home, and lay Grave charge on me to take ship, and inquire Along the dark seas for mine absent sire;
Which all the Greeks oppose; amongst whom most Those that are proud still at another’s cost,
Past measure, and the civil rights of men,
My mother’s wooers, my repulse maintain.”

Thus spake he praying; when close to him came Pallas, resembling Mentor both in frame
Of voice and person, and advised him thus:
“Those wooers well might know, Telemachus, Thou wilt not ever weak and childish be,
If to thee be instill’d the faculty
Of mind and body that thy father grace’d;
And if, like him, there be in thee enchanced Virtue to give words works, and works their end.

This voyage, that to them thou didst command,
Shall not so quickly, as they idly ween,
Be vain, or given up, for their opposite spleen.

But, if Ulysses nor Penelope
Were thy true parents, I then hope in thee
Of no more urging thy attempt in hand;
For few, that rightly bred on both sides stand,
Are like their parents, many that are worse,
And most few, better. Those then that the nurse
Or mother call true-born yet are not so,
Like worthy sires much less are like to grow.

But thou shew’st now that in thee fades not quite Thy father’s wisdom; and that future light
Shall therefore show thee far from being unwise.
Or touch’d with stain of bastard cowardice.
Hope therefore says, that thou wilt to the end
Pursue the brave act thou didst erst intend.
But for the foolish wooers, they bewray
They neither counsel have nor soul, since they Are neither wise nor just; and so must needs
Rest ignorant how black above their heads
Fate hovers holding Death, that one sole day
Will make enough to make them all away.
For thee, the way thou wishest shall no more Fly thee a step; I, that have been before Thy father’s friend, thine likewise now will be,
Provide thy ship myself, and follow thee.
Go thou then home, and soothe each wooer’s win
But under hand fit all things for the main;
Wine in as strong and sweet casks as you can.
And meal, the very narrow of a man,
Which put in good sure leather sacks, and see That with sweet food sweet vessels still agree.
I from the people straight will press for you Free voluntaries; and, for ships, enow Sea-circled Ithaca contains, both new And old built; all which I’ll exactly view,
And choose what one soever most doth please;
Which rigg’d, we’ll straight launch, and assay the seas.”

This spake Jove’s daughter, Pallas; whose voice heard,
No more Telemachus her charge defer’d,
But hasted home; and, sad at heart, did see Amidst his hall th’ insulting wooers fle Goats and roast swine. Amongst whom Antinous
Careless, discovering in Telemachus
His grudge to see them, laugh’d, met,
Took his hand;
And said: “High-spoken, with the mind so mann’d!
Come, do as we do, put not up your spirits
With these low trifles, nor our loving merits
In gall of any hateful purpose steep,
But eat egregiously, and drink as deep.
The things thou think'st on, all at full shall be
By th' Achives thought on, and performed to thee;
Ship, and choice oars, that in a trice will land
Thy hasty fleet on heavenly Pylos' sand,
And at the fame of thy illustrious sire."
He answer'd: "Men, whom pride doth so inspire,
Are not fit consorts for an humble guest;
Nor are constrain'd men merry at their feast.
Is't not enough, that all this time ye have Oped in your entrails my chief goods a grave,
And, while I was a child, made me partake.
My now more growth more grown my mind doth make,
And, hearing speak more judging men than you,
Perceive how much I was misgovern'd now.
I now will try if I can bring ye home
An ill Fate to consort you; if it come From Pylos, or amongst the people here.
But thither I resolve, and know that there
I shall not touch in vain. Nor will I stay,
Though in a merchant's ship I steer my way;
Which shews in your sights best; since me ye know Incable of ship, or men to row."
This said, his hand he coyly snatch'd away
From forth Antinous' hand. The rest the day Spent through the house with banquets;
Some with jests,
And some with railings, dignifying their feasts.
To whom a jest-proud youth the wit began:
"Telemachus will kill us every man.
From Sparta, or the very Pylian sand,
He will raise aids to his impetuous hand.
O he affects it strangely! Or he means To search Ephyra's fat shores, and from thence Bring deathful poisons, which amongst our bowls
Will make a general shipwreck of our souls." Another said: "Alas, who knows but he Once gone, and erring like his sire at sea,
May perish like him, far from aid of friends?
And so he makes us work; for all the ends
Left of his goods here we shall share; the house Left to his mother and her chosen spouse."
Thus they; while he a room ascended, high
And large, built by his father, where did lie Gold and brass heap'd up, and in coffers were Rich robes, great store of odorous oils, and there Stood tun's of sweet old wines along the wall;
Neat and divine drink, kept to cheer withal
Ulysses' old heart, if he turn'd again
From labours fatal to him to sustain.
The doors of plank were, their close exquisite Kept with a double key, and day and night
A woman lock'd within; and that was she Who all trust had for her sufficiency, Old Euryclea, one of Opis' race,
Son to Fisenor, and in passing grace
With gray Minerva; her the prince did call,
And said: "Nurse! draw me the most sweet of all
The wine thou keep'st; next that which for my sire Thy care reserves, in hope he shall retire.
Twelve vessels fill me forth, and stop them well,
Then into well-sew'd sacks, of fine ground meal Pour twenty measures. Nor, to any one
But thou thyself, let this design be known.
All this see got together; I it all In night will fetch off, when my mother shall Ascend her high room and for sleep prepare.
Sparta and Pylos I must see, in care
'To find my father.' Out Euryclea cried,
And ask'd with tears: "Why is your mind applied,
Dear son, to this course? whither will you go?
So far off leave us, and beloved so,
So only? and the sole hope of your race?
Royal Ulysses, far from the embrace
Of his kind country, in a land unknown
Is dead; and, you from your loved country gone,
The wooers will with some deceit assay
To your destruction, making then their prey
Of all your goods. Where, in your own y’re strong,
Make sure abode. It fits not you so young
To suffer so much by the aged seas,
And err in such a wayless wilderness.”
""Be cheer’d, loved nurse," said he, "for, not without The will of God, go my attempts about.
Swear therefore, not to wound my mother’s ears
With word of this, before from heaven appears
Th’ eleventh or twelfth light, or herself shall please
To ask of me, or hears me put to sea;
Lest her fair body with her woe be swore.”
To this the great oath of the Gods she swore:
Which having sworn, and of it every due Perform’d to full, to vessels wine she drew,
And into well-sew’d sacks pour’d foody meal.
In mean-time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the wooers, as before.
Then grey-eyed Pallas other thoughts did own,
And like Telemachus trod through the town, Commanding all his men in th’ even to be Aboard his ship. Again then question’d she Noemon, famed for aged Phronius’ son,
About his ship; who all things to be done Assured her freely should. The sun then set,
And sable shadows slid through every street,
When forth they launch’d, and soon aboard did bring All arms, and choice of every needful thing That fits a well-rigg’d ship. The Goddess then Stood in the port’s extreme part, where her men, Nobly appointed, thick about her came,
Whose every breast she did with spirit en-flame.
Yet still fresh projects laid the grey-eyed Dame.

Straight to the house she hasted, and sweet sleep
Pour’d on each wooer; which so laid in steep
Their drowsy temples, that each brow did nod
As all were drinking, and each hand his load
(The cup) let fall. All start up, and to bed, Nor more would watch, when sleep so sur-felted Their leaden eye-lids. Then did Pallas call Telemachus (in body, voice, and all Resembling Mentor) from his native nest;
And said, that all his arm’d men were addrest
To use their ears, and all expected now
He should the spirit of a soldier show.
"Come then," said she, "no more let us defer Our honour’d action." Then she took on her
A ravish’d spirit, and led as she did leap;
And he most haste took out step by step.
Arrived at sea and ship, they found ashore
The soldiers that their fashion’d long hair wore;
To whom the prince said: "Come, my friends, let’s bring Our voyage’s provision; every thing
Is heap’d together in our court; and none,
No not my mother, nor her maids, but one Knows our intention." This express’d, he led;
The soldiers close together followed;
And all together brought aboard their store.
Aboard the prince went; Pallas still before
Sat at the stern, he close to her, the men
Up hasted after. He and Pallas then Put from the shore. His soldiers then he bade See all their arms fit; which they heard, and had.
A beechen mast, then in the hollow base
They put and hoisted, fix’d it in his place
With cables; and with well-wreathed halsers hoise.
Their white sails; which gray Pallas now employs With full and fore-gales through the dark deep main.
The purple waves, so swift cut, roar'd again
Against the ship sides, that now ran and plow'd
The rugged seas up. Then the men bestow'd

Their arms about the ship; and sacrifice
With crown'd wine-cups to th' endless Deities
They offer'd up. Of all yet throned above,
They most observed the grey-eyed seed of Jove;
Who, from the evening till the morning rose,
And all day long their voyage did dispose.

THE END OF THE SECOND BOOK.
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Telemachus, and Heaven's wise* Dame
That never husband had, now came To Nestor; who his either guest Received at the religious feast
He made to Neptune, on his shore;
And there told what was done before
The Trojan turrets, and the state
Of all the Greeks since Ilium's fate.
This book these three of greatest place
Doth serve with many a varied grace.
Which past, Minerva takes her leave,
Whose state when Nestor doth perceive,
With sacrifice he makes it known,
Where many a pleasing rite is shown.
Which done, Telemachus hath gain'd
A chariot of him; who ordain'd
Pisistratus, his son, his guide
To Sparta; and when starry-eyed
The ample heaven began to be,
All house-rites to afford them free,
In Pharis, Diocles did please;
His surname Ortilochides.

ANOTHER

Pàµµa, Ulysses' son,
With Nestor lies,
To Sparta gone;
Thence Pallas flies.

The sun now left the great and goodly airs,
And to the firm heaven bright ascent did make,
To shine as well upon the mortal birth,
Inhabiting the plow'd life-giving earth,
As on the ever-treaders upon death.
And now to Pylos, that so garnished Herself with buildings, old Neleus' town,
The prince and Goddess come had strange sights shown:
For, on the marine shore, the people there
To Neptune, that the azure locks doth wear, Becomes that were wholly black gave holy flame.
Nine seats of state they made to his high
name;
And every seat set with five hundred men,
And each five hundred was to furnish then,
With nine black oxen every sacred seat.
These of the entrails only pleased to eat,
And to the God enflamed the fleshy thighs.
By this time Pallas with the sparkling
eyes,
And he she led, within the haven bore, Strook sail, cast anchor, and trod both the shore.
She first, he after. Then said Pallas:
"Now
No more befits thee the least bashful brow; T'embolden which this act is put on thee,
To seek thy father both at shore and sea,
And learn in what clime he abides so close,
Or in the power of what fate doth repose.
Come then, go right to Nestor; let us
see.
If in his bosom any counsel be,
That may inform us. Pray him not to trace
The common courtship and to speak in
grace
Of the damner, but to tell the truth;
Which will delight him, and commend thy youth
For such prevention; for he loves no lies,
Nor will report them, being truly wise."
He answer'd: "Mentor! how, alas shall I
Present myself? how greet his gravity?
My youth by no means that ripe form affords,
That can digest my mind's instinct in words Wise, and beseeching th' ears of one so sage.
Youth of most hope blush to use words with age."
She said: "Thy mind will some conceit impress,
And something God will prompt thy towardness;
For, I suppose, thy birth, and breeding too,
Were not in spite of what the Gods could do."
This said, she swiftly went before, and he Her steps made guides, and follow'd instantly.
When soon they reach'd the Pylian throngs and seats,
Where Nestor with his sons sat; and the meats,
That for the feast served; round about them were Adherents dressing all their sacred cheer, Being roast and boil'd meats. When the Pyrians saw These strangers come, in thirst did all men draw
About their entry, took their hands, and pray'd
They both would sit; their entry first assay'd
By Nestor's son, Pisistratus. In grace
Of whose repair, he gave them honour'd place.
Between his sire and brother Thrasymed,
Who sat at feast on soft seats that were spread Along the sea sands; kerv'd, and reach'd to them
Parts of the inwards, and did make a stream
Of sprightly wine into a golden bowl;
Which to Minerva with a gentle soul
He gave, and thus spake: "ERE you eat,
Fair guest,
Invoke the Sea's King, of whose sacred feast
Your travel hither makes ye partners now;
When, sacrificing as becomes, bestow
This bowl of sweet wine on your friend, that he
May likewise use these rites of piety;
For I suppose his youth doth prayers use,
Since all men need the Gods. But you I chuse
First in this cup's disposition, since his years Seem short of yours, who more like me appear;
Thus gave he her the cup of pleasant wine;
And since a wise and just man did design
The golden bowl first to her free receipt,
Even to the Goddess it did add delight;
Who thus invoked: "Hear thou, whose vast embrace Encompass the whole earth, nor disdain thy grace
To va that ask it in performing this;
To Nestor first, and these fair sons of his,
Vouchsafe all honour; and, next them, bestow
On all these Pyrians, that have offered now
This most renowned hecatomb to thee,
Remuneration fit for them, and free;
And lastly deign Telemachus and me,
The work perform'd, for whose effect we came,
Our safe return, both with our ship and fame."

Thus pray'd she; and herself herself obey'd,
In th' end performing all for which she pray'd.
And now, to pray, and do as she had done,
She gave the fair round bowl t' Ulysses' son.
The meat then dress'd, and drawn, and served t' each guest,
They celebrated a most sumptuous feast.
When appetite to wine and food allay'd,
Horse-taming Nestor then began, and said:
"Now life's desire is served, as far as fare,
Time fits me to enquire what guests these are.
Fair guests, what are ye? and for what coast try'st
Your ship the moist deeps? For fit merchandise, Or rudely coast ye, like our men of prize?
The rough seas tempting, desperately erring,
The ill of others in their good conferring?"
The wise Prince now his boldness did begin:
For Pallas' self had harden'd him within;
By this device of travel to explore
His absent father; which two girlands wore;
His good by manage of his spirits; and then
To gain him high grace in th' accounts of men,
"O Nestor! still in whom Neleus lives!
And all the glory of the Greeks survives,
You ask from whence we are, and I relate:
From Ithaca (whose seat is situate Where Neleus, the renowned mountain, rears
His haughty forehead, and the honour bears
To be our sea-mark) we assay'd the waves.
The business, I must tell, our own good cares,
And not the public. I am come t' enquire,
If, in the fame that best men doth inspire
Of my most-suffering father, I may hear
Some truth of him that now, who did bear
The name (being join'd in fight with you alone)
To even with earth the height of Ilium,
Of all men else, that any name did bear,
And fought for Troy, the several ends we hear;
But his death Jove keeps from the world unknown,
The certain fame thereof being told by none;
If on the continent by enemies slain,
Or with the waves cast of the ravenous main.
For his love 'tis that to your knees I sue,
That you would please, out of your own clear view,
T' assure his sad end; or say, if your ear
Hath heard of the unhappy wanderer,
To too much sorrow whom his mother bore.
You then by all your bounties I implore, (If ever to you deed or word hath stood,
By my good father promised, render'd good Amongst the Trojans, where ye both have tried The Grecian sufferance) that in nought applied
To my respect or pity you will glose,
But unclothed truth to my desires disclose."

"O my much-loved," said he, "since you renew Remembrance of the miseries that grew Upon our still-in-strength-opposing Greece
Amongst Troy's people, I must touch a piece
Of all our woes there, either in the men
Achilles brought by sea and led to gain
About the country, or in us that fought
About the city, where to death were brought All our chief men, as many as were there.
There Mars-like Ajax lies; Achilles there;
There the in-counsel-like-the-Gods, his friend;*
There my dear son Antilochus took end,
Past measure swift of foot, and staid in fight.
A number more that ills felt infinite;
Of which to reckon all, what mortal man,
If five or six years you should stay here, can Serve such enquiry? You would back again,
Affected with unsufferable pain,
Before you heard it. Nine years sieged we them,
With all the depth and sleight of stratagem
That could be thought. Ill knit to ill past end.
Yet still they toll'd us; nor would yet Jove send Rest to our labours, nor will scarcely yet.
But no man lived, that would in public set
His wisdom by Ulysses' policy,
(As thought his equal) so excessively He stood superior all ways. If you be His son indeed, mine eyes even ravish me

To admiration. And in all consent
Your speech puts on his speech's ornament.
Nor would one say, that one so young could use (Unless his son) a rhetoric so profuse.
And while we lived together, he and I Never in speech maintain'd diversity;
Nor set in council but, by one soul led,
With spirit and prudent counsel furnished
The Greeks at all hours; that with fairest course,
What best became them they might put in force.
But when Troy's high towers we had level'd thus,
We put to sea, and God divided us.
And then did Jove our sad retreat devise;
For all the Greeks were neither just nor wise;
And therefore many felt so sharp a fate,
Sent from Minerva's most pernicious hate,
Whose mighty Father can do fearful things.
By whose help she betwixt the brother kings
Let fall contention; who in council met
In vain, and timeless, when the sun was set,
And all the Greeks call'd, that came charged with wine.
Yet then the kings would utter their designs,
And why they summon'd. Menelaus, he Put all in mind of home, and cried, To sea.
But Agamemnon stood on contraries,
Whose will was, they should stay and sacrifice.
Whole hecatombs to Pallas, to forego
Her high wrath to them. Fool, that did not know
She would not so be won; for not with ease
Th' eternal Gods are turn'd from what they please.
So they, divided, on foul language stood.
The Greeks in huge rout rose, their wine heat blood
Two ways affecting. And that night's sleep too,
We turn'd to studying either other's woe;
When Jove besides made ready woes enow.
Morn came, we launch'd; and in our ships did stow
Our goods, and fair-girt women. Half our men
The people's guide, Atrides did contain;
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

And half, being now aboard, put forth to sea.
A most free gale gave all ships prosperous
way.
God settled then the huge whale-bearing lake,
And Tenedos we reach’d; where, for time’s sake,
We did divine rites to the Gods: but Jove, Inexorable still, bore yet no love
To our return, but did again excite
A second sad contention, that turn’d quite A great part of us back to sea again;
Which were th’ abundant-in-all-counsels
man.
Your matchless father, who, to gratify
The great Atrides, back to him did fly.
But I fled all, with all that follow’d me;
Because I knew God studied misery,
To hurl amongst us. With me likewise fled Martial Tydides. I the men he led Gat to go with him. Winds our fleet did bring To Lesbos, where the yellow-headed king, Though late, yet found us, as we put to choice
A tedious voyage; if we sail should hoise
Above rough Chius (left on our left hand)
To th’ isle of Psyria, or that rugged land Sail under, and for windy Mimas steer.
We ask’d of God that some ostent might clear
Our cloudy business; who gave us sign
And charge, that all should, in a middle line,
The sea cut for Euboea; that with speed
Our long-sustain’d infortune might be freed.
Then did a whistling wind begin to rise,
And swiftly flew we through the fishy skies, Till to Gerausus we in night were brought;
Where (through the broad sea since we safe had wroght)
At Neptune’s altars many solid thighs
Of slaughter’d bulls we burn’d for sacrifice.
The fourth day came, when Tydeus’ son did greet
The haven of Argos with his complete fleet.
But I for Pylos straight steer’d on my
course;
Nor ever left the wind his foreright force, Since God fore-sent it first. And thus I came,
Dear son, to Pylos, uniform’d by fame,
Nor know one saved by Fate, or overcome.
Whom I have heard of since, set here at
home,
As fits, thou shalt be taught, nought left unknown.

The expert spear-men, every Myrmidon,
Led by the brave heir of the mighty-soul’d Unpeer’d Achilles, safe of home got hold;
Safe Phoebetes, Peis’ famous seed;
And safe Idomenæus his men led To his home, Crete, who fled the armed
field,
Of whom yet none the sea from him withheld.
Atrides you have both heard, though ye be His far-off dwellers, what an end had be, Done by Ægisthus to a bitter death;
Who miserably paid for forced breath;
Atrides leaving a good son, that dyed,
In blood of that deceitful paricidie,
His wreakful sword. Anda thou my friend (as he
For this hath his fame) the like spirit in thee Assume at all parts. Fair and great, I see, Thou art in all hope; make it good to th’
end,
That after-times as much may thee commend.”
He answer’d: “O thou greatest grace of Greece,
Orestes made that wreak his master-piece,
And the Greeks will give a master-praise,
Verse finding him to last all after-days,
And would to God the Gods would favour me
With his performance, that my injury,
Done by my mother’s woeers, being so foul,
I might revenge upon their every soul;
Who, pressing me with contumelies, dare Such things as past the power of utterance are.
But Heaven’s great Powers have graced my destiny
With no such honour. Both my sire and I Are born to suffer everlastingly."
“Because you name those woeers, friend,” said he, “Report says, many such, in spite of thee, Wooring thy mother, in thy house commit
The ills thou namest. But say; proceedeth it
From will in thee to bear so foul a foil,
Or from thy subjects’ hate, that wish thy spoil?
And will not aid thee, since their spirits rely (Against thy rule) on some grave augury?
What know they, but at length thy father may Come, and with violence their violence pay?”
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Or he alone, or all the Grecs with him?
But if Minerva now did so esteem Thee, as thy father in times past; whom Past
All measure, she with glorious favours
Grace.

Amongst the Trojans, where we suffer’d so;
(Oh! I did never see, in such clear show,
The Gods so grace a man, as she to him,
To all our eyes, appear’d in all her trim)
If so, I say, she would be pleased to love,
And that her mind’s care thou so much Couldst move,
As did thy father, every man of these Would lose in death their seeking mariage.

"O father," answer’d he, "you make Amaze
Seize me throughout. Beyond the height
Of phrase
You raise expression; but ’twill never be,
That I shall move in any Deity
So blest an honour. Not by any means,
If Hope should prompt me, or blind Con Fidence.

(The God of fools) or every Deity Should will it; for ’tis past my destiny."

The burning-eyed, Dame answer’d:

"What a speech
Hath past the teeth-guard Nature gave to Teach
Fit question of thy words before they fly!
God easily can (when to a mortal eye He’s furthest off) a mortal satisfy;
And does the more still. For thy care
For sire.
I rather wish, that I might home retire,
After my suffiency of a world of woes.
Far off; and then my glad eyes might dis close
The day of my return, than straight retire,
And perish standing by my household
Fire;
As Agamemnon did, that lost his life
By false Ægisthus, and his false wife.

For Death to come at length, ’tis due to
All;
Nor can the Gods themselves, when Fate
Shall call
Their most-loved man, extend his vital
Breath
Beyond the fix’d bounds of abhorred
Death."

"Mentor!" said he, "let’s dwell no
More on this,
Although in us the sorrow pious is.

No such return, as we wish, Fates bequeath
My erring father; whom a present death
The deathless have decreed. I’ll now use Speech.

That tends to other purpose; and beseech Instruction of grave Nestor, since he flows Past shore in all experience, and knows
The slights and wisdoms, to whose Heights aspire
Others, as well as my commended sire,
Whom Fame reports to have commanded Three
Ages of men; and doth in sight to me Shew like th’ Immortals. Nestor! the Remedy
Of old Neleus, make the clear truth known,
How the most great in empire, Atreus’ son,
Sustained the act of his destruction.
Where then was Menelaus? How was it
That false Ægisthus, being so far unfit
A match for him, could his death so enforce?

Was he not then in Argos? or his course
With men so left, to let a coward breathe Spirit enough to dare his brother’s death?"

"I’ll tell thee truth in all, fair son," said
He:

"Right well was this event conceived by Thee.
If Menelaus in his brother’s house
Had found the idle liver with his spouse, Arrived from Troy, he had not lived, nor
death
Had theigg’d heap pour’d on his lustful
Head;
But fowls and dogs had torn him in the Fields,
Far off of Argos; not a dame it yields
Had given him any tear, so foul his fact.
Shew’d even to women. Us Troy’s wars
Had rack’d
To every sinew’s sufferrance, while he*
In Argos’ uplands lived, from those works
Free,
And Agamemnon’s wife with force of word Flatter’d and soften’d, who, at first, ab hor’d
A fact so infamous. The heavenly dame
A good mind had, but was in blood to Blame.
There was a Poet,† to whose care the King
His Queen committed; and in every thing.
When he from Troy went, charged him to Apply
Himself in all guard to her dignity.

* Volente Deo, nihil est difficile.

* Ægisthus. † double daops.
But when strong Fate so wrapt-in her affects,
That she resolved to leave her fit respects,
Into a desert isle her guardian led,
There left, the rapine of the vultures fed.
Then brought he willing home his will’s won prize,
On sacred altars offer’d many thighs;
Hung in the God’s fanes many ornaments,
Garments and gold, that he the vast events
Of such a labour to his wish had brought,
As neither fell into his hope nor thought.
At last, from Troy sail’d Sparta’s king and I,
Both holding her untouch’d. And, that his eye Might see no worse of her, when both were blown To sacred Sunium (of Miverva’s town
The goody promontory) with his shafts severe Augur Apollo slew him that did steer Atrides’ ship, as he the stern did guide,
And she the full speed of her sail applied.
He was a man that nations of men Excell’d in safe gudie of a vessel, when A tempest rush’d in on the ruffled seas;
His name was Phrontis Onetorides.
And thus was Menelaus held from home,
Whose way he thirsted so to overcome,
To give his friend the earth, being his pursuit,
And all his exequies to execute.
But sailing still the wine-hued seas, to reach Some shore for fit performance, he did fetch
The steep mount of the Melians: and there,
With open voice, offended Jupiter, Proclaim’d the voyage, his repugnant mind,
And pour’d the puffs out of a shrieking wind,
That nourish’d billows, heighten’d like to hills;
And with the fleet’s division fulfills
His hate proclaim’d; upon a part of Cretan, Casting the navy, where the sea-waves meet Rough Iardanus, and where the Cyclops live.
There is a rock on which the sea doth drive,

Bare, and all broken, on the confines set
Of Gortys, that the dark seas likewise fret;
And bither sent the South a horrid drift
Of waves against the top, that was the left
Of that torn cliff; as far as Phaestus’ strand.
A little stone the great sea’s rage did stand.
The men here driven scaped hard the ships’ sore shocks,
The ships themselves being wrack’d against the rocks,
Save only five, that blue fore-castles bore.
Which wind and water cast on Egypt’s shore.
When he (there victling well, and store of gold Aboard his ships brought) his wild way did hold,
And t’ other languaged men was forced to roam.
Mean space Ægisthus made sad work at home,
And slew his brother, forcing to his sway Atrides’ subjects; and did seven years lay
His yoke upon the rich Mycenian state.
But in the eighth, to his affrighting fate,
Divine Orestes home from Athens came;
And what his royal father felt, the same
He made the false Ægisthus groan beneath:
Death evermore is the reward of death.
Thus having slain him, a sepulchral feast
He made the Argives for his lustful guest,
And for his mother whom he did detest.
The self-same day upon him stole the king.
(Good at a martial shout) and goods did bring,
As many as his freighted fleet could bear.
But thou, my son, too long by no means err.
Thy goods left free for many a spoilful guest,
Lest they consume some, and divide the rest,
And thou, perhaps, besides, thy voyage lose.
To Menelaus yet thy course dispose
I wish and charge thee; who but late arrived
From such a shore and men, as to have lived
THE THIRD BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

In a return from them he never thought;
And whom black whirlwinds violently brought Within a sea so vast, that in a year
Not any fowl could pass it anywhere,
So huge and horrid was it. But go thou With ship and men (or if thou pleasest now
To pass by land, there shall be brought for thee Both horse and chariot; and thy guides shall be My sons themselves) to Sparta the divine,
And to the king whose locks like amber shine.
Intreat the truth of him, nor loves he lies;
Wisdom in truth is, and he's passing wise."

This said, the Sun went down, and up rose Night,
When Pallas spake: "O father, all good right Bear thy directions. But divide we now
The sacrifices' tongues, mix wine, and vow
To Neptune, and the other ever blest,
That, having sacrificed, we may to rest.
The fit hour runs now, light dives out of date;
At sacred feasts we must not sit too late."
She said; they heard; the herald water gave;
The youths crown'd cups with wine, and let all have Their equal shares, beginning from the cup
The parting banquet. All the tongues cut up,
The fire they gave them, sacrificed, and rose,
Wine, and divine rites used, to each dispose;
Minerva and Telemachus desired
They might to ship be, with his leave, retired.

He, moved with that, provoked thus their abodes:
"Now Jove forbid, and all the long-lived Gods,
Your leaving me, to sleep aboard a ship;
As I had drunk of poor Penia's whip,
Even to my nakedness, and had nor sheet.
Nor covering in my house; that warm nor sweet
A guest, nor I myself, had means to sleep;
Where I, both weeds and wealthy coverings keep For all my guests. Nor shall Fame ever say,
The dear son of the man Ulysses lay
All night a ship-board here, while my days shine;
Or in my court whiles any son of mine
Enjoys survival, who shall guests receive, Whomever my house hath a nook to leave."
"My much-loved father," said Minerva,
"Well
All this becomes thee. But persuade to dwell
This night with thee thy son Telemachus;
For more convenient is the course for us,
That he may follow to thy house and rest,
And I may board our black-sail; that adrest
At all parts I may make our men, and cheer
All with my presence; since of all men there I boast myself the senior, th' others are Youths, that attend in free and friendly care
Great-souled Telemachus, and are his peers
In fresh similitude of form and years.
For their confirmance, I will therefore now Sleep in our black bark. But, when light shall show Her silver forehead, I intend my way
Amongst the Caunons, men that are to pay A debt to me, nor small, nor new. For this,
Take you him home; whom in the morn dismiss,
With chariot and your sons, and give him horse Ablest in strength, and of the speediest course."
This said, away she flew, form'd like the fowl
Men call the ossifrage; when every soul
Amaze invaded; even th' old man admired,
The youth's hand took, and said: "O most desired,
My hope says thy proof will no coward show,
Nor one unskill'd in war, when Deities now
So young attend thee, and become thy guides;
Nor any of the heaven-housed States besides,
But Tritogeneia's self, the seed of Jove,
The great in prey, that did in honour move
So much about thy father, amongst all
The Grecian army. Fairest Queen, let fall
On me like favours: give me good renown;
Which, as on me, on my loved wife let down,
And all my children: I will burn to thee
An ox right bred, broad-headed, and yoke-free,
To do man's hand yet humbled. Him will I:
His horns in gold hid, give thy Deity.
Thus pray'd he, and she heard; and home he led His sons, and all his heaps of kindered;
Who entering his court royal, every one
He marshalled in his several seat and throne.
And every one, so kindly come, he gave His sweet-wine cup; which none was let to have
Before this 'leventh year landed him from Troy;
Which now the butleress had leave t' employ.
Who therefore pierced it, and did give it vent.
Of this the old duke did a cup present
To every guest: made his maid many a prayer
That wears the shield fringed with his nurse's hair,
And gave her sacrifice. With this rich wine
And food sufficed, sleep all eyes did decline;
And all for home went: but his court alone
Telemachus, divine Ulysses' son,
Must make his lodging, or not please his heart.
A bed, all chequer'd with elaborate art,
Within a portico that rung like brass,
He brought his guest to; and his bedfere was Pisistratus, the martial guide of men,
That lived, of all his sons, unwed till then.
Himself lay in a by-room, far above,
His bed made by his barren wife, his love.
The rosy-finger'd morn no sooner shone,
But up he rose, took air, and sat upon
A seat of white and goodly polish'd stone,
That such a gloss as richest ointments wore;
Before his high gates; where the counsellor
That match'd the Gods (his father) used to sit,
Who now, by fate forced, stoop'd as low as it.
And here sat Nestor, holding in his hand
A sceptre; and about him round did stand,
As early up, his sons' troop; Perseus,
The god-like Thrasymed, and Aretus, Echephras, Stratius, the sixth and last Pisistratus, and by him (half embraced Still as they came) divine Telemachus;
To these spake Nestor, old Gerenius:
"Haste, loved sons, and do me a desire,
That, first of all the Gods, I may aspire
To Pallas' favour; who vouchsafed to me
At Neptune's feast her sight so openly.
Let one to field go, and an ox with speed
Cause hither brought; which let the herdsman lead;
Another to my dear guest's vessel go,
And all his soldiers bring, save only two.
A third the smith that works in gold command (Laertius) to attend, and lend his hand,
To plate the both horns round about with gold;
The rest remain here close. But first, see told
The maids within, that they prepare a feast;
Set seats through all the court, see straight address
The purest water, and get fuel fell'd."
This said, not one but in the service held Officious hand. The ox came led from field;
The soldiers troop'd from ship; the smith he came,
And those tools brought that served the actual frame:
His art conceived; brought anvil, hammers brought,
Fair tongs, and all, with which the gold was wrought.
Minerva likewise came, to set the crown
On that kind sacrifice, and make 't her own.
Then th' old knight Nestor gave the smith the gold,
With which he straight did both the horns infold.
And trimm'd the offering so, the Goddess joy'd,
About which thus were Nestor's sons employ'd:
Divine Echephoron, and fair Stratus,
Held both the horns. The water odorous,
In which they wash'd, what to the rites was vow'd.
Aretus, in a caldron all bestrow'd
With herbs and flowers, served in from th' holy room
Where all were drest, and whence the rites must come.
And after him a hallow'd virgin came,
That brought the barley-cake, and blew the flame.
The axe, with which the ox should both be fell'd
And cut forth, Thrasymed stood by and
held.
Percused the vessel held that should retain
The purple liquor of the offering slain.
Then wash'd the pious father, then the cake
(OF barley, salt, and oil, made) took, and brake,
Ask'd many a boon of Pallas, and the state
Of all the offering did initiate.
In three parts cutting off the hair, and cast Amidst the flame. All th' invocation past,
And all the cake broke; mainly Thrasymed.
Stood near, and sure; and such a blow he laid
Aloft the offering, that to earth he sunk,
His neck-nerves sunder'd, and his spirits shrunk.
Out shriek'd the daughters, daughter-in-laws, and wife
Of three-aged Nestor, who had eldest life
Of Clymen's daughters, chaste Eurydice.
The ox on broad earth then laid laterally They held, while duke Pisistratus the throat
Dissolved, and set the sable blood afloat,
And then the life the bones left. Instantly
They cut him up; apart flew either thigh,
That with the fat they dubb'd, with art alone,
The throat-brisk, and the sweet-bread pricking on.

Then Nestor broil'd them on the coalturn'd wood,
Pour'd black wine on; and by him young
men,
That sits fine-pointed held, on which,
when burn'd
The solid thighs were, they transfix'd, and turn'd
The inwards, cut in cantles; which, the meat Vow'd to the Gods consumed, they roast and eat.
In mean space, Polycaste (call'd the fair, Nestor's young'st daughter) bathed Ulysses' heir;
Whom, having cleansed, and with rich
balms bespread,
She cast a white shirt quickly o'er his head,
And then his weeds put on; when forth
he went,
And did the person of a God present;
Came, and by Nestor took his honour'd
seat,
This pastor of the people. Then, the meat
Of all the spare parts roasted, off they drew,
Sat, and fell to. But soon the temperate few Rose, and in golden bowls fill'd others wine.
Till, when the rest felt thirst of feast decline,
Nestor his sons bade fetch his high-maned horse,
And them in chariot join, to run the course
The prince resolved. Obey'd as soon as heard
Was Nestor by his sons, who straight premared.
Both horse and chariot. She that kept the store,
Both bread and wine, and all such viands
more,
As should the feast of Jove-fed kings compose, Purvey'd the voyage. To the rich coach rose
Ulysses' son, and close to him ascended
The duke Pisistratus, the rehs intended,
And scourged, to force to field, who freely flew;
And left the town that far her splendour
throw,
Both holding yoke, and shook it all the day.
But now the sun set, darkening every
way,
When they to Pheris came; and in the house
Of Diocles (the son t' Orsilochus, Whom flood Alpheus got) slept all that night;
Who gave them each due hospitable rite.
But when the rosy-finger'd morn arose,
They went to coach, and did their horse inclose,
Drave forth the fore-court, and the porch that yields
Each breath a sound; and to the fruitful
fields
Rode scourging still their willing flying steeds,
Who strenuously perform'd their wonted speeds,
Their journey ending just when sun went down,
And shadows all ways through the earth were thrown.

THE END OF THE THIRD BOOK.
THE FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

RECEIVED now in the Spartan court,
Telemachus prefers report
To Menelaus of the throng
Of wooers with him, and their wrong.
Airides tells the Greeks' retreat,
And doth a prophecy repeat
That Proteus made, by which he knew
His brother's death: and then doth show
How with Calypso lived the sire
Of his young guest. The wooers conspire Their prince's death. Whose treachery known,
Penelope in tears doth drown,
Whom Pallas by a dream doth cheer,
And in similitude appear
Of fair Iphithia, known to be
The sister of Penelope.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Δίκαιος. Here of the sire
The son doth hear.
The wooers conspire;
The mother's fear.

In Lacedæmon* now, the nurse of whales,
These two arrived, and found at festivals,
With mighty concourse, the renowned king.

His son and daughter jointly marrying.
Alector's daughter did give his son
Strong Megapentes, who his life begun
By Menelaus' bondmaid; whom he knew
In years when Helen could no more renew
In issue like divine Hermione,
Who held in all fair form as high degree
As golden Venus. Her he married now
To great Achilles' son, who was by vow Betrothed to her at Troy. And thus the Gods
To constant loves give nuptial periods.
Whose state here past, the Myrmidons' rich town
(Of which she shared in the imperial crown)
With horse and chariot he resigned her to,
Mean space, the huge house with feast did flow

Of friends and neighbours, joying with the king,
Amongst whom did a heavenly Poet sing,
And touch his harp. Amongst whom like-wise danced Two, who in that dumb motion advanced,
Would prompt* the singer what to sing and play.
All this time in the utter court did stay,
With horse and chariot, Telemachus,
And Nestor's noble son Pisistratus.
Whom Eteoneus, coming forth, descried,
And, being a servant to the king, most tried
In care and his respect, he ran and cried:
"Guests, Jove-kept Menelaus! two such men
As are for form of high Saturnius strain.
Inform your pleasure, if we shall unclose Their horse from coach, or say they must dispose Their way to some such house as may embrace
Their known arrival with more welcome grace?"

He, angry, answer'd: "Thou didst never show Thyself a fool, Boethides, till now;
But now, as if turn'd child, a childish speech Vents thy vain spirits. We ourselves now reach Our home by much spent hospitality
Of other men; nor know if Jove will try
With other after-wants our state again;
And therefore from our feast no more detain
Those welcome guests; but take their steeds from coach,
And with attendance guide in their approach."

* Λακεδαιμόνισσα τυράννων which is expounded Spartan amplexus, or monyion magnum: where tyranneos signifies properly plurima ceti nostrum.

*Magnus θεάτωρ Cantus sacrificante: of which place, the critics affirm, that salutare motu suo indicant cantori quo genere cantus salutari forent.
This said, he rush’d abroad, and call’d some more Tried in such service, that together bore
Up to the guests, and took their steeds that swet Beneath their yokes, from coach; at mangers set, Wheat and white barley gave them mix’d; and placed Their chariot by a wall so clear it cast A light quite thorough it. And then they led Their guests to the divine house; which so fed
Their eyes at all parts with illustrious sights, That admiration seized them. Like the lights
The sun and moon gave, all the palace threw A lustre through it. Situate with whose view, Down to the king’s most bright-kept baths they went,
Where handmaids did their services present;
Bathed, balm’d them, shirts and well-napt weeds put on,
And by Atrides’ side set each his throne.
Then did the handmaid royal water bring,
And to a laver, rich and glittering,
Of massy gold, pour’d; which she placed upon
A silver caldron, into which might run
The water as they wash’d. Then set she near A polish’d table, on which all the cheer
The present could afford, a reverend dame
That kept the larder, set. A cook then came,
And divers dishes, borne thence, served again;
Furnish’d the board with bowls of gold; and then,
His right hand given the guests, Atrides said:
"Eat, and be cheerful: appetite allay’d, I long to ask, of what stock ye descend; for not from parents whose race nameless end
We must derive your offspring. Men obscure Could get none such as you. The portraiture
Of Jove-sustain’d and sceptre-bearing kings
Your either person in his presence brings:
An ox’s fat chine then they up did lift,
And set before the guests; which was a gift,
Sent as an honour to the king’s own taste.
They saw yet ’twas but to be eaten placed,
And fell to it. But food and wine’s care past.

Telemachus thus prompted Nestor’s son, (His ear close laying, to be heard of none):*
"Consider, thou whom most my mind esteemed,
The brass-work here, how rich it is in beams;
And how, besides, it makes the whole house sound;
What gold, and amber, silver, ivory, round
Is wrought about it. Out of doubt, the hall
Of Jupiter Olympus hath of all
This state the like. How many infinities Take up to admiration all men’s sights!"
Atrides over-heard, and said: "Loven son,
No mortal must affect contention
With Jove, whose dwellings are of endless date.
Perhaps of men some one may emulate,
(Or none) my house, or me; for I am one That many a grave extreme have undergone.
Much error felt by sea; and till th’ eighth year,
Had never stay, but wander’d far and near,
Cyprus, Phœnicia, and Sidonia,
And fetch’d the far-off Ethiopia,
Reach’d the Eremiti of Arabia,
And Lybia, where with horns yeas their lambs,
Where every full year ewes are three times dams;
Where neither king, nor shepherd, want comes near
Of cheese, or flesh, or sweet milk; all the year They ever milk their ewes. And here while I Err’d, gathering means to live, one, mutterously, Unawes, unseen, bereft my brother’s life,
Chiefly betray’d by his abhorred wife.
So hold I, not enjoying, what you see.
And of your fathers, if they living be,
You must have heard this; since my sufferings were So great and famous; from this palace here

* Telemachus to Pîstratus, in observation of the house, not so much that he heartily admired it, as to please Menæus, who he knew heard, though he seemed distant he should not hear.
To lord Polybius, whose abode in Thebes
Th’ Egyptian city was, where wealth in heaps His famous house held; out of which did go,
In gift t’ Atrides, silver bath-tubs two,
Two tripods, and of fine gold talents ten.
His wife did likewise send to Helen then Fair gifts, a distaff that of gold was wrought,
And rich cabinet that Phylo brought,
Round, and with gold ribb’d, now of fine thread full;
On which extended (crown’d with finest wool,
Of violet gloss) the golden distaff lay.
She took her state-chair, and a foot-stool’s stay Had for her feet; and of her husband thus Ask’d to know all things: “Is it known to us
King Menelaus, whom these men commend Themselves for, that our court now takes to friend?
I must affirm, be I deceived or no,
I never yet saw man nor woman so Like one another, as this man is like Ulysses’ son. With admiration strike
His looks my thoughts, that they should carry now
Power to persuade me thus, who did but know,
When newly he was born, the form they bore.
But ’tis his father’s grace, whom more and more His grace resembles, that makes me retain Thought that he now is like Telemachus, then Left by his sire, when Greece did undertake Troy’s bold war for my impudence’s sake.”
He answer’d: “Now wife, what you think I know,
The true cast of his father’s eye doth show
In his eyes’ order. Both his head and hair,
His hands and feet, his very father’s are.
Of whom, so well remember’d, I should now Acknowledge for me his continual flow
Of cares and perils, yet still patient.
But I should too much move him, that doth vent
Such bitter tears for that which hath been spoke;
Which (shunning soft shew) see how he would cloak.

* Menelaus † viz. Memnon.
Both in his age to keep in peace his house,
And to have children wise and valorous.
But let us not forget our dear feast thus.
Let some give water here. Telemachus!
The morning shall yield time to you and me
To do what fits; and reason mutually."
This said, the careful servant of the king,
Asphalion, pored on this issue of the spring;
And all to ready feast set ready hand.
But Helen now on new device did stand,
Infusing straight a medicine to their wine,
That, drowning cares and angers, did decline.
All thought of ill. Who drank her cup could shed.
All that day not a tear, nor not if dead
That day his father or his mother were;
Not if his brother, child, or chiefest dear,
He should see mother'd then before his face.
Such useful medicines, only borne in grace
Of what was good, would Helen ever have.
And this juice to her Polydamna gave,
The wife of Thoon, an Egyptian born,
Whose rich earth herbs of medicine do adorn
In great abundance. Many healthful are,
And many benefal. Every man is there.
A good physician out of Nature's grace;
For all the nation sprung of Fison's race.
When Helen then her medicine had infused,
She bad pour wine to it, and this speech used:
"Atrides, and these good men's sons, great Jove Makes good and ill one after other move,
In all things earthly; for he can do all.
The ills past, therefore, he so late let
The comforts he affords us let us take;
Feast, and, with fit discourses, merry make.
Nor will I other use. As then our blood Grieved for Ulysses, since he was so good;
Since he was good, let us delight to hear How good he was, and what his sufferings were.
Though every fight, and every suffering deed, Patient Ulysses underwent, exceed My woman's power to number, or to name.
But what he did, and suffer'd, when he came Amongst the Trojans, where ye Grecians all Took part with sufferance, I in part can call To your kind memories. How with ghastly wounds Himself he mangled, and the Trojan bounds (Thrust thick with enemies) adventured on,
His royal shoulders, having cast upon Base weeds, and enter'd like a slave.
Then, beggar-like, he did of all men crave,
And such a wretch was, as the whole Greek fleet Brought not besides. And thus through every street
He crept discovering, of no one man known.
And yet through all this difference, I alone Smoked his true person, talk'd with him; but he Fled me with wiles still. Nor could we agree, Till I disclaim'd him quite; and so as moved With womanly remorse of one that proved So wretched an estate, what'er he were Won him to take my house. And yet even there, Till freely I, to make him doubtless, swore
A powerful oath, to let him reach the shore
Of ships and tents before Troy understood,
I could not force on him his proper good,
But then I bathed and soothed him, and he then Confess'd, and told me all; and, having slain
A number of the Trojan guards, retired,
And reach'd the fleet, for slenght and force admired.
Their husbands' deaths by him the Trojan wives Shriek'd for; but I made triumphs for their lives.
For then my heart conceived, that once again
I should reach home; and yet did still retain Woe for the slughters Venus made for me,
When both my husband, my Hermione,
And bridal room, she robb'd of so much right,
And drew me from my country with her sleight.
Though nothing under heaven I here did need,
That could my fancy or my beauty feed."
Her husband said: "Wife! what you please to tell
Is true at all parts, and becomes you well. And I myself, that now may say have seen
The minds and manners of a world of men,
Then Argive Helen made her handmaid go,
And put fair bedding in the portico,
Lay purple blankets on, rugs warm and soft,
And cast an array coverlet aloft.

They torches took, made haste, and made the bed;
When both the guests were to their lodgings led

Within a portico without the house.
Atrides, and his large-train-wearing spouse,
The excellent of women, for this way,
In a retired recess, together lay.

The morn arose; the king rose, and put on His royal weeds, his sharp sword hung upon His ample shoulders, forth his chamber went,
And did the person of a God present.

Telemachus accosts him, who began Speech of his journey’s proposition;
“And what, my young Ulysses’ hero
Provoked thee on the broad back of the sea,
To visit Lacedaemon the divine?
Speak truth. Some public [cause] or only thine?”

“ ’I come,’” said he, “’to hear, if any fame
Breathed of my father to thy notice came.
My house is sack’d; my fat works of the field
Are all destroy’d; my house doth nothing yield.
But enemies, that kill my harmless sheep
And sinewy oxen, nor will ever keep Their steers without them. And these men are they That woo my mother, most inhumanely Committing injury on injury.
To thy knees therefore I am come, t’attend Relation of the sad and wretched end
My erring father felt, if witnessed by Your own eyes; or the certain news that fly From others’ knowledges. For, more than is The usual heap of human miseries,
His mother bore him to. Vouchsafe me then (Without all ruth of what I can sustain)
The plain and simple truth of all you know.
Let me beseech so much, if ever vow
Was made, and put in good effect to you
At Troy (where sufferance bred you so much smart)
Upon my father, good Ulysses’ part;
And quit it now to me (himself in youth)
Unfolding only the unclosed truth.”

* Helen counterfeited the wives’ voices of those kings of Greece that were in the wooden horse, and calls their husbands.
The Fourth Book of Homer's Odyssey.

He, deeply sighing, answer'd him; "O shame,
That such poor vassals should affect the fame!
To share the joys of such a worthy bed!
As when a hind, her calves late farrowed,
To give suck, enters the bold lion's den,
He rooks of hills and herby valleys then
For food (there feeding) hunting; but at length
Returning to his cavern, gives his strength.
The lives of both the mother and her brood
In deaths indecent; so the winterers' blood Must pay Ulysses' powers as sharp an end,
O woe to Jove, Apollo, and thy friend
The wise Minerva, that thy father was
As once he was, when he his spirits did rear Against Philomelides, in a fight Perform'd in well-built Lesbos, where, down-right
He strook the earth with him, and gat a shout
Of all the Grecians. O, if now full out
He were as then, and with the wooers coped, Shore-liv'd they all were, and their nuptials hoped Would prove as desperate. But, for thy demand Enforced with prayers, I'll let thee understand
The truth directly, nor decline a thought,
Much less deceive, or soothe thy search in fraught.
But what the old and still-true-spoken God,
That from the sea breathes oracles abroad,
Disclosed to me, to thee I'll all impart,
Nor hide one word from thy solicitous heart.
I was in Ægypt, where a mighty time
The Gods detain'd me, though my natural clime
I never so desired, because their homes
I did not meet with perfect hecatombs.
For they will put men evermore in mind,
How much their masterly commandments bind.
There is, besides, a certain island, call'd Pharos,
That with the high-waved sea is wall'd,
Just against Ægypt, and so much remote,
As in a whole day, with a fore-gale smote,
A hollow ship can sail. And this isle bears
A port most portly, where sea-passengers Put in still for fresh water, and away to sea again. Yet here the Gods did stay My fleet full twenty days; the winds, that are Masters at sea, no prosperous puff would spare
To put us off; and all my victuals here
Had quite corrupted, as my men's minds were,
Had not a certain Goddess given regard,
And pitied me in an estate so hard;
And 'twas Idotea, honour'd Proteus' seed,
That old sea-farer. Her mind I made bleed
With my compassion, when (walk'd all alone,
From all my soldiers, that were ever gone
About the isle on fishing with hooks bent; Hunger their bellies on her errand sent)
She came close to me, spake, and thus began:
"Of all men thou art the most foolish man,
Or slack in business, or stay'st here of choice,
And dost in all thy sufferances rejoice,
That thus long livest detain'd here, and no end Canst give thy tarryance. Thou dost much offend
The minds of all thy fellows." I replied:
"Whoever thou art of the Deified,
I must affirm, that no way with my will I make abode here: but, it seems, some ill
The Gods, inhabiting broad heaven, sustain Against my getting off. Inform me then,
For Godheads all things know, what God is he That stays my passage from the fishy sea?
"Stranger," said she, "I'll tell thee true: these lives
An old sea-farer in these seas, that gives A true solution of all secrets here;
Who deathless Proteus is, th' Ægyptian peer,
Who can the deeps of all the seas exquiere;
Who Neptune's priest is, and, they say, the sire
That did beget me. Him, if any way
Thou couldst inveigle, he would clear display
Thy course from hence, and how far off doth lie Thy voyage's whole scope through Neptune's sky.
Informing thee, O God-preserved, beside,
If thy desires would so be satisfied.
Whatever good or ill hath got event,
In all the time thy long and hard course spent,
Since thy departure from thy house.' This said;
Again I answer'd: 'Make the sleights display'd Thy father useth, lest his foresight see,
Or his foreknowledge taking note of me,
He flies the fix'd place of his used abode.
'Tis hard for man to countermine with God.'
She straight replied: 'I'll utter truth in all:
When heaven's supremest height the sun doth skal,
The old Sea-tell-truth leaves the deeps, and hides
Amidst a black storm, when the West with chides, In caves still sleeping. Round about him sleep (With short feet swimming forth the foamy deep
The sea-calves, lovely Haloysynes call'd,
From whom a noisome odour is exhaled,
Got from the whirl-pools, on whose earth they lie.
Here, when the morn illustrates all the sky,
I'll guide, and seat thee in the fittest place
For the performance thou hast now in chase.
In mean time, reach thy fleet, and choose out three Of best exploit, to go as aids to thee.
But now I'll shew thee all the old God's sleights:
He first will number, and take all the sights
Of those his guard, that on the shore drive.
When having view'd, and told them forth by fives,
He takes place in their midst, and there doth sleep,
Like to a shepherd midst his flock of sheep.
In his first sleep, call up your hardiest cheer,
Vigour and violence, and hold him there,
In spite of all his strivings to be gone.
He then will turn himself to every one
Of all things that in earth creep and respire.
In water swim, or shine in heavenly fire.
Yet still hold you him firm, and much the more Press him from passing. But when, as before,
When sleep first bound his powers, his form ye see,
Then cease your force, and th' old hero free;
And then demand, which heaven-born it may be
That so afflicts you, hindering your retreat,
And free sea-passage to your native seat;
This said, she dived into the wary seas;
And I my course did to my ships address,
That on the sands stuck: where arrived, we made Our supper ready. Then the Ambrosian shade
Of night fell on us, and to sleep we fell.
Rosy Aurora rose; we rose as well:
And three of them on whom I most relied,
For firm at every force, I chose, and hid.
Straight to the many-river-served seas;
And all assistance ask'd the Deities.
Mean time Idotha the sea's broad breast
Embraced; and brought for me, and all my rest,
Four of the sea-calves' skins but newly oned
To work a wile which she had fashioned Upon her father. Then, within the sand
A covert digging, when these calves should land,
She sat expecting. We came close to her;
She placed us orderly, and made us wear
Each one his calves' skin. But we then must pass.
A huge exploit. The sea-calves' savour was So passing sour, they still being bred at seas,
It much afflicted us; for who can please
To lie by one of these same sea-bred whales?
But she preserves us, and to memory calls
A rare commodity; she fetch'd to us Ambrosia, that an air most glorious Bears still about it, which she point'd round
Our either nostrills, and in it quite drown'd.
The nasty whale-smell. Then the great event
The whole morn's date, with spirits patient,
We lay expecting. When bright noon did flame.
Forth from the sea, in shoals the sea-calves came,
And orderly, at last lay down and slept
Along the sands. And then th' old sea-god crept
From forth the deeps, and found his fat calves there, Survey'd, and numbered, and came never near
The craft we used, but told us five for calves,
His temples then diseased with sleep he sav'd;
And in rusk'd we, with an abhorr'd cry,
Cast all our hands about him manfully;
And then th' old Forger all his forms began:
First was a lion with a mighty mane,
Then next a dragon, a pied panther then,
A vast boar next, and suddenly did strain
All into water. Last he was a tree, Curl'd all at top, and shot up to the sky.
We, with resolved hearts, held him firmly still,
When th' old one (held too strait for all his skill)
To extricate) gave words, and question'd me:
'Which of the Gods, O Atreus' son,' said he,
'Advised and taught thy fortitude this slight,
To take and hold me thus in my despite?'
'What asks thy wish now?' I replied.
'Thou know'st: Why dost thou ask? What wiles are these thou show'st?
I have within this isle been held for wind
A wondrous time, and can by no means find An end to my retention. It hath spent
The very heart in me. Give thou then vent
To doubts thus bound in me (ye Gods know all),
Which of the Godheads doth so foully fall
On my addression home, to stay me here,
Avert me from my way, the fisly clear Bar'd to my passage?' He replied: 'Of force,
If to thy home thou wisth free recourse,
To Jove, and all the other Deities,
Thou must exhibit solemn sacrifice;
And then the black sea for thee shall be clear, Till thy loved country's settled reach. But where Ask these rites thy performance? 'Tis a fate
To thee and thy affairs appropriate,
That thou shalt never see thy friends, nor tread Thy country's earth, nor see inhabited Thy so magnificent house, till thou make good Thy voyage back to the Egyptian flood,

Whose waters fell from Jove: and there hast given
To Jove, and all Gods housed in ample heaven, Devoted hecatombs, and then free ways
Shall open to thee, clear'd of all delays.
This told he; and, me thought, he brake my heart,
In such a long and hard course to divert
My hope for home, and charge my back retreat
As far as Egypt. I made answer yet:
'Th 'tis fitter, thy charge I'll perfect; but before Resolve me truly, if their natural shore
All those Greeks, and their ships, do safe enjoy.
That Nestor and myself left, when from Troy
We first rais'd sail? Or whether any died
At sea a death unwish'd? Or, satisfied, When war was past, by friends embraced,
in peace
Resign'd their spirits?" He made answer:
"Cease To ask so far. It fits thee not to be So cunning in thine own calamity.
Nor seek to learn what learn'd thou shouldst forget.
Men's knowledges have proper limits set,
And should not prease into the mind of God.
But 'twill not long be, as my thoughts abode,
Before thou buy this curious skill with tears.
Many of those, whose states so temp'rt thine ears,
Are stoop'd by death, and many left alive;
One chief of which in strong hold doth survive.
Amidst the broad sea. Two, in their retreat,
Are done to death. I list not to repeat
Who fell at Troy; thyself was there in fight.
But in return swift Ajax lost the light,
In his long-oar'd ship. Neptune, yet, awhile Saft him unwrack'd, to the Gyrcean isle,
A mighty rock removing from his way.
And surely he had escapd the fatal day,
In spite of Pallas, if to that foul deed
He in her fane did, (when he ravish'd
The Trojan prophetess) he had not here
Adjoin'd an impious boast, that he would bear,
Despite the Gods, his ship safe through the waves
Then rais'd against him. These his impious brav'tes

Cassandra.
When Neptune heard, in his strong hand he took His massy trident, and so soundly strook
The rock Gyraean, that in two it cleft;
Of which one fragment on the land he left,
The other fell into the troubled seas;
At which first rush'd Ajax Oiliades,
And split his ship; and then himself afloat
Swum on the rough waves of the world's vast moat, Till having drunk a salt cup for his sin,
There perish'd he. Thy brother yet did win
The wreath from death, while in the waves they strove, Afflicted by the reverend wife of Jove.
But when the steep mount of the Malian shore
He seem'd to reach, a most tempestuous biore,
Far to the fishy world that sighs so sore,
Straight ravish'd him again as far away,
As to th' extreme bounds where the Argrians stay,
Where first Thyestes dwelt, but then his son Ægisthus Thyestiades lived. This done,
When his return untouch'd appear'd again,
Back turn'd the Gods the wind, and set him then Hard by his house. Then, full of joy, he left His ship, and close t' his country earth he cleft;
Kiss'd it, and wept for joy; pour'd tear on tear,
To set so wisely his footing there.
But see, a sentinel that all the year
Crafty Ægisthus in a watchtower set
To spy his landing, for reward as great As two gold talents, all his powers did call
To strict remembrance of his charge, and all Discharged at first sight; which at first he cast
On Agamemnon, and with all his haste Inform'd Ægisthus. He an instant train Laid for his slaughter: Twenty chosen men
Of his plebeians he in ambush laid;
His other men he charged to see purvey'd
A feast; and forth, with horse and chariots graced,
He rode t' invite him, but in heart embrac'd Horrible welcomes, and to death did bring,
With treacherous slaughter, the unwary king.
Received him at a feast, and, like an ox
Slain at his manger, gave him bits and knocks.

No one left of Atrides' train, nor one Saved to Ægisthus, but himself alone:
All strw'd together there the bloody court.
This said, my soul he sunk with his report,
Flat on the sands I fell; tears spent their store;
I light abhor'd: my heart would live no more.
When dry of tears, and tired with tumbling there,
Th' old Tell-truth thus my daunted spirits did cheer:
'No more spend tears nor time, O Atreus' son;
With ceaseless weeping never wish was won.
Use uttermost assay to reach thy home,
And all unawes upon the murtherer come,
For torture, taking him thyself alive;
Or let Orestes, that should far out-strive Thee in fit vengeance, quickly quit the light
Of such a dark soul; and do thou the rite
Of burial to him with a funeral feast.'
With these last words I fortified my breast,
In which again a generous spring began
Of fitting comfort, as I was a man;
But, as a brother, I must ever mourn.
Yet forth I went, and told him the return
Of these I knew; but he had named a third,
Held on the broad sea, still with life inspired;
Whom I besought to know, though like wise dead,
And I must mourn alike. He answered:
'He is Laertes' son; whom I beheld
In Nymph Calypso's palace, who compell'd
His stay with her; and, since he could not see His country earth, he mourn'd incessantly.
For he had neither ship instruct with oars,
Nor men to fetch him from those stranger shores.
Where leave we him, and to thy self descend;
Whom not in Argos Fate nor Death shall end,
But the immortal ends of all the earth,
So ruled by them that order death by birth,
The fields Elysian, Fate to thee will give;
Where Rhadamanthus rules; and where men live
A never-troubled life, where snow, nor showers, Nor icksome Winter spends his fruitless powers,
But from the ocean Zephyr still resumes
A constant breath, that all the fields perfumes.'
THE FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEY.

Which, since thou marriedst Helen, are thy hire,
And Jove himself is by her side thy sire.'
This said; he dived the deepsome watery heaps;
I and my tried men took us to our ships,
And worlds of thoughts I varied with my steps.

Arrived and shipp'd, the silent solemn night
And sleep becrept us of our visual light.
At morn, masts, sails, rear'd, we sat, left the shores,
And beat the foamy ocean with our cars.
Again then we the Jove-fall'n flood did fetch
As far as Ægypt; where we did beseech
The Gods with hecatombs; whose anger ceased.
I tomb'd my brother that I might be bless'd.
All rites perform'd, all haste I made for home,
And all the prosperous winds about were come,
I had the passport now of every God,
And here closed all these labours' period.
Here stay then till th' eleventh or twelfth day's light,
And I'll dismiss thee well, gifts exquisite Preparing for thee; chariot, horses three,
A cup of curious frame to serve for thee,
To serve th' immortal Gods with sacrifice,
Mindful of me while all suns light thy skies.'

He answer'd: "Stay me not too long time here, Though I could sit attending all the year.
Nor should my house, nor parents, with desire Take my affections from you; so on fire
With love to hear you are my thoughts; but so My Pylian friends I shall afflict with woe, Who mourn even this stay. Whatsoever be The gifts your grace is to bestow on me, Vouchsafe them such as I may bear and have,
For your sake ever. Horse, I list not to have,
To keep in Ithaca, but leave them here
To your soil's dainties, where the broad fields bear
Sweet cyppers grass, where men-fed lote doth flow,
Where wheat-like spelt, and wheat itself doth grow,

Where barley, white, and spreading like a tree;
But Ithaca hath neither ground to be
For any length it comprehends, a race
To try a horse's speed, nor any place
To make him fat in; fitter far to feed
A cliff-bred goat, than raise or please a steed.

Of all isles, Ithaca doth least provide Or meads to feed a horse, or ways to ride."
He, smiling, said: "Of good blood art thou, son.
What speech, so young! what observation Hast thou made of the world! I well am pleased To change my gifts to thee, as being con-fess'd Unfit indeed, my store is such I may.
Of all my house-gifts then, that up I lay
For treasure there, I will bestow on thee
The fairest, and of greatest price to me.
I will bestow on thee a rich carved cup,
Of silver all, but all the brims wrought up
With finest gold; it was the only thing
That the heroidal Sidonian king Presented to me, when we were to part
At his receipt of me; and 'twas the art
Of that great Artist that of heaven is free;
And yet even this will I bestow on thee."
This speech thus ended, guests came, and did bring Muttons for presents, to the God-like king,
And spirit-promoting wine, that strenuous makes.
Their riband-wreathed wives brought fruit
And cakes.
Thus in this house did these their feast apply;
And in Ulysses' house activity
The woovers practis'd; tossing of the spear,
The stone, and hurling; thus delighted, when They exercised such insolence before,
Even in the court that wealthy pavements wore.

Antinous did still their strife's decide,
And he that was in person deified,
Eurymachus; both ring-leaders of all,
For in their virtues they were principal.
These by Neomen, son to Phronius, Were sided now, who made the question thus:
"Antinous! does any friend here know,
When this Telemachus returns, or no,
From sandy Pylus? He made bold to take My ship with him; of which, I now should make
THE FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Fit use myself, and sail in her as far As spacious Elis, where of mine there are Twelve delicate mazes, and under their sides go Laborious mules, that yet did never know
The yoke, nor labour; some of which should bear
The taming now, if I could fetch them there.

This speech the rest admired, nor dream'd that he Neleian Pylos ever thought to see,
But was at field about his flocks' survey,
Or thought his herdsmen held him so away.

Eupitheus' son, Antinous, then replied:
"When went he? or with what train dignified
Of his selected Ithacensis youth?
Prent men, or bondmen, were they? Tell the truth.
Could he effect this? let me truly know.
To gain thy vessel did he violence show,
And used her 'gainst thy will? or had her free,
When fitting question he had made with thee?"

Noemon answer'd: "I did freely give My vessel to him: who deserves to live
That would do other, when such men as he Did in distress ask? he should churlish be
That would deny him. Of our youth the best Amongst the people, to the interest
His charge did challenge in them, giving way,
With all the tribute all their powers could pay.
Their captain, as he took the ship, I knew,
Who Mentor was, or God. A deity's shew Mask'd in his likeness. But, to think 'twas he,
I much admire; for I did clearly see,
But yester-morning, God-like Mentor here;
Yet th' other evening he took shipping there,
And went for Pylos." Thus went he for home,
And left the rest with envy overcome;
Who sat, and pastime left. Eupitheus' son, Sad, and with rage his entrails overrun,
His eyes like flames, thus interposed his speech:
"Strange thing; an action of how proud a reach
The Fourth Book of Homer's Odysseys.

Which Jove will fail them in. Telemachus Their purpose is, as he returns to us,
To give their sharp steels in a cruel death;
Who now is gone to learn, if fame can breathe
News of his sire, and will the Pylian shore,
And sacred Sparta, in his search explore."
This news dissolved to her both knees and heart,
Long silence held her ere one word would part,
Her eyes stood full of tears, her small soft All late use lost; that yet at last had choice
Of wonted words, which briefly thus she used:
"Why left my son his mother? why refused
His wit the solid shore, to try the seas,
And put in ships the trust of his distress,
That are at sea to men unbridled horse,
And run, past rule, their far-engaged
course;
Amidst a moisture past all mean unstaid?
No need compelld this. Did he it, afraid
To live and leave posterity his name?"
"I know not," he replied, "if th' humour came From current of his own instinct, or flow'd
From others' instigations; but he vow'd
Attempt to Pylos, or to see desiered His sire's return, or know what death he died."
This said, he took him to Ulysses' house
After the wooers; the Ulyssen' spouse, Run through with woes, let torture seize her mind,
Nor in her choice of state-chairs stood inclined
To take her seat, but th' abject threshold chose Of her fair chamber for her loathed repose,
And mournd most wretch-like. Round about her fell
Her handmaids, join'd in a continuat yell,
From every corner of the palace, all
Of all degrees tuned to her comforts' fall
Their own dejections; to whom her complaint
She thus enforced: "The Gods, beyond constraint
Of any measure, urge these tears on me;
Nor was there ever dame of my degree
So past degree grieved. First, a lord so
good,
That had such hardly spirits in his blood,
That all the virtues was ador'd withal,
That all the Greeks did their superior call,
To part with thus, and lose. And now a
son,
So worthy beloved, a course to run Beyond my knowledge; whom rude tempests have Made far from home his most inglorious grave.
Unhappy wenches, that no one of all (Though in the reach of evry one must fall
His taking ship) sustain'd the careful mind,
To call me from my bed; who this design'd
And most vow'd course in him had either
stay'd,
(How much soever hasted) or dead laid He should have left me. Many a man I have,
That would have call'd old Dolius my slave, (That keeps my orchard, whom my father gave
At my departure) to have run, and told Laertes this; to try if he could hold From running through the people, and from tears,
In telling them of these vow'd murthere's; That both divine Ulysses' hope, and his,
Resolve to end in their conspiracies."
His nurse then, Euryclea, made reply:
"Dear sovereign, let me with your own hands die,
Or cast me off here, I'll not keep from thee
One word of what I know. He trusted me
With all his purpose; and I gave him all The bread and wine for which he pleased to call.
But then a mighty oath he made me swear,
Not to report it to your royal ear
Before the twelfth day either should appear,
Or you should ask me when you heard him
gone.
Impair not then your beauties with your mean,
But wash, and put untarnish'd garments on
Ascend your chamber with your ladies here,
And pray the seed of goat-nursed Jupiter,
Divine Athena, to preserve your son,
And she will save him from confusion.
Th' old king, to whom your hopes stand so inclined
For his grave counsels, you perhaps may find Unfit affected, for his age's sake.
But heaven-kings wax not old, and therefore make Fit prayers to them; for my thoughts never will
Believe the heavenly powers conceit so ill
THE FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

The seed of righteous Arcesias, *
To end it utterly, but still will please
In some place evermore some one of them
To save, and deck him with a diadem;
Give him possession of erected towers,
And far-stretch'd fields, crown'd all of fruits
And flowers.*

This eased her heart, and dried her Humorous eyes.
When having wash'd, and weeds of sacrifice
Pur'd, and unstrain'd with her distrustful tears,
Put on, with all her women-ministers
Up to a chamber of most height she rose,
And cakes of salt and barley did impose
Within a wicker basket; all which broke In decent order, thus she did invoke:
"Great Virgin of the goat-preserved God,
If ever the inhabited abode
Of wise Ulysses held the fatted thighs
Of sheep and oxen, made thy sacrifice
By his devotion, hear me, nor forget
His pious services; but save see set
His dear son on these shores, and banish hence
These woeers past all mean in insolence."
This said, she shriek'd, and Pallas heard her prayer.
The woeers broke with tumult all the air
About the shady house; and one of them,
Whose pride his youth had made the more extreme,
Said, "Now the many-wooer-honour'd queen
Will surely satiate her delayful spleen,
And one of us in instant nuptials take.
Poor dame, she dreams not, what design we make Upon the life and slaughter of her son."
So said he; but so said was not so done;
Whose arrogant spirit in a vaunt so vain Antinous chid, and said: "For shame, contain These braving speeches: who can tell
Who hears who hears
Are we not now in reach of others' ears?
If our intentions please us, let us call
Our spirits up to them, and let speeches fall.
By watchful danger men must silent go:
What we resolve on, let's not say, but do."
This said, he chose out twenty men, that bore
Best reckoning with him, and to ship and shore
All hasted, reach'd the ship, launch'd, raised the mast,
Put sails in, and with leather loops made fast

The oars; sails hoisted, arms their men did bring,
All giving speed and form to everything.
Then to the high deeps their rigg'd vessel driven,
They supp'd, expecting the approaching even.
Mean space, Penelope her chamber kept
And bed, and neither eat, nor drank, nor slept;
Her strong thoughts wrought so on her blameless son, Still in contention, if he should be done to death, or 'scape the impious wooers' design.

Look how a lion, whom men-troops combine
To hunt, and close him in a crafty ring,
Much varied thought conceives, and fear doth sting
For urgent danger; so fared she, till sleep
All juncture of her joints and nerves did sleep
In his dissolving humour. When, at rest, Pallas her favours varied, and addrest
An idol, that Iphthim a did present
In structure* of her every lineament,
Great-soul'd Icarus' daughter, whom for spouse
Eumeleus took, that kept in Phérins' house,
This to divine Ulysses' house she sent,
To try her best mean how she might content
Mournful Penelope, and make relent
The strict addiction in her to deplore.
This idol,† like a worm, that less or more Contracts or strains her, did itself convey Beyond the wards or windings of the key,
Into the chamber, and, above her head
Her seat assuming, thus she comforted Distress'd Penelope: "Doth sleep thus seize Thy powers, affected with so much disease?
The Gods, that nothing troubles, will not see Thy tears nor griefs, in any least degree
Sustain'd with cause; for they will guard thy son Safe to his wish'd and native mansion,
Since he is no offender of their states,
And they to such are firmer than their fates."
The wise Penelope received her thus,
Bound with a slumber most delicious.

Vol. III.
And in the port of dreams: "O sister, why Repair you hither, since so far off lie
Your house and household? You were never here Before this hour, and would you now give cheer
To my so many woes and miseries? Affecting fitly all the faculties
My soul and mind hold, having lost before
A husband, that of all the virtues bore
The palm amongst the Greeks, and whose renown
So ample was that Fame the sound hath blown Through Greece and Argos to her very heart.
And now again, a son, that did convert
My whole powers to his love, by ship is gone;
A tender plant, that yet was never grown
To labour's taste, nor the commerce of men;
For whom more than my husband I complain;
And lest he should at any sufferance touch (Or in the sea, or by the men so much Estranged to him that must his consorts be) Fear and chill trembling shake each joint of me.
Besides, his danger sets on foes profess'd
To way-lay his return, that have address'd Plots for his death." The scarce-discerned Dream, Said: "Be of comfort, nor fears so extreme Let thus dismay thee; thou hast such a mate
Attending thee, as some at any rate
Would wish to purchase, for her power is great;
Minerva pities thy delights' defeat, Whose grace hath sent me to foretell thee these."
"If thou," said she, "be of the Goddesses
And hearest her tell thee these, thou mayst as well
From her tell all things else. Deign then to tell,
If yet the man to all misfortunes born,
My husband, lives, and sees the sun adorn
The darksome earth, or hides his wretched head
In Pluto's house, and lives amongst the dead?"
"I will not," she replied, "my breath exhale
In one continued and perpetual tale, Lives he or dies he. "Tis a filthy use,
To be in vain and idle speech profuse."
This said, she, through the key-hole of the door, Vanish'd again into the open bower.
Icarius' daughter started from her sleep,
And joy's fresh humour her loved breast did steep,
When now so clear, in that first watch of night,
She saw the seen Dream vanish from her sight.
The wooers shipp'd, the sea's moist waves did ply,
And thought the prince a haughty death should die.
There lies a certain island in the sea,
Twixt rocky Samos and rough Ithaca,
That clifty is itself, and nothing great,
Yet holds convenient havens, that two ways let Ships in and out, call'd Asteris; and there
The wooers hoped to make their massacre.
THE FIFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

A SECOND Court on Jove attends;
Who Hermes to Calypso sends,
Commanding her to clear the ways
Ulysses sought; and she obeys.
When Neptune saw Ulysses free,
And so in safety ploughed the sea,
Enraged, he ruffles up the waves,
And splits his ship. Leucothoe saves
His person yet, as being a Dame
Whose Godhead govern'd in the frame
Of those seas' temper. But the mean,
By which she curbs dread Neptune's spleen,
Is made a jewel, which she takes From off her head, and that she makes Ulysses on his bosom wear.
About his neck, she ties it there,
And, when he is with waves beset,
Bids wear it as an amulet,
Commanding him, that not before
He touch'd upon Phaeacia's shore,
He should not part with it, but then Return it to the sea again,
And cast it from him. He performs;
Yet, after this, bides bitter storms,
And in the rocks sees death engraven,
But on Phaeacia's shore is saved.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

E. Ulysses builds
A ship; and gains
The glassy fields;
Pays Neptune pains.

AURORA rose from high-born Thilion's bed,
That men and Gods might be illustrated,
And then the Deities sat. Imperial Jove,
That makes the horrid murmur beat above,
Took place past all, whose height for ever springs,
And from whom flows th' eternal power of things.
Then Pallas, mindful of Ulysses, told
The many cares that in Calypso's hold
He still sustains; when he had felt before
So much affliction, and such dangers more.
"O Father," said she, "and ye ever blest, Give never king hereafter interest
In any aid of yours, by serving you;
By being gentle, humane, just; but grow rude, and for ever scornful of your rights,
All justice ordering by their appetites.

Since he, that ruled as it in right behoved,
That all his subjects as his children loved,
Finds you so thoughtless of him and his birth.
Thus men begin to say, ye rule in earth,
And grudge at what ye let him undergo,
Who yet the least part of his sufferance know:
Thral'd in an island, shipwreck'd in his tears,
And, in the fancies that Calypso bears,
Bound from his birthright, all his shipping gone,
And of his soldiers not retaining one.
And now his most-loved son's life doth inflame
Their slaughterous envies; since his father's fame
He puts in pursuit, and is gone as far
As sacred Pylos, and the singular Dame-breeding Sparta." This, with this reply,
The Cloud-assembler answer'd: "What words fly
Thine own remembrance, daughter? Hast not thou
The counsel given thyself, that told thee how Ulysses shall with his return address
His wooers' wrongs? And, for the safe access His son shall make to his innate port,
Do thou direct it, in as curious sort
As thy wit serves thee; it obeys thy powers;
And in their ship return the speedless wooers."
Then turn'd he to his issue Mercury,
And said: "Thou hast made good our embassy
To th' other Statists; to the Nymph then now,
On whose fair head a tuft of gold doth grow,
Bear our true-spoken counsel, for retreat
Of patient Ulysses; who shall get
No aid from us, nor any mortal man,
But in a patch'd-up skiff (built as he can,

* Eri σχέδιος πολυπροσομένον, in rata multa vinculis digatus.
And suffering woes even to the twentieth day
At fruitful Scheria let him breathe his way,
With the Phaeacians, that half Deities live,
Who like a God will honour him, and give His wisdom, clothes, and ship, and brass, and gold,
More than for gain of Troy he ever told;
Where, at the whole division of the prey,
If he a savor were, or got away
Without a wound, if he should grudge,
'twas well.
But th' end shall crown all; therefore Fate will deal
So well with him, to let him land, and see His native earth, friends, house and family.
Thus charged he; nor Argicleus denied,
But to his feet his fair wing'd shoes he tied,
Ambrosian, golden; that in his command
Put either sea, or the unmeasured land,
With pace as speedy as a puff of wind.
Then up his rod went, with which he declined
The eyes of any waker, when he pleased,
And any sleeper, when he wish'd, diseased.
This took; he stoop'd Phoebus, and thence Glide through the air, and Neptune's confluence Kiss'd as he flew, and check'd the waves as light
As any sea-nymph in her fishing flight
Her thick wings scounging in the savoury seas,
Like her, he pass'd a world of wilderness;
But when the far-off isle he touch'd, he went Up from the blue sea to the continent,
And reach'd the ample cavern of the Queen,
Whom he within found; without seldom seen
A sun-like fire upon the hearth did flame;
The matter precious, and divine the frame;
Of cedar cleft and incense was the pile,
That breathed an odour round about the isle.
Herself was seated in an inner room,
Whom she sweetly sang he heard, and at her loom.
About a curious web, whose yarn she threw In with a golden shuttle. A grove grew
In endless spring about her cavern round,
With odorous cypress, pines, and poplars,
Crown'd,
Where hawks, sea-owls, and long-tongued bititors bred,
And other birds their shady pinions spread;
All fowls maritimal; none roosted there,
But those whose labours in the waters were.
A vine did all the hollow cave embrace,
Still green, yet still ripe bunches gave it grace.
Four fountains, one against another, pour'd
Their silver streams; and meadows all Enflower'd
With sweet balm-gentle, and blue violets hid,
That deck'd the soft breasts of each fragrant mead.
Should any one, though he immortal were,
Arrive and see the sacred objects there,
He would admire them, and be over-joy'd;
And so stood Hermes' ravish'd powers employ'd.
But having all admired, he enter'd on The ample cave, nor could be seen unknown Of great Calypso (for all Deities are Prompt in each other's knowledge, though so far Sever'd in dwellings) but he could not see Ulysses there within; without was he Set sad ashore, where 'twas his use to view
Th' unquiet sea, sigh'd, wept, and empty drew His heart of comfort. Placed here in her throne,
That beams cast up to admiration, Divine Calypso question'd Hermes thus:
"For what cause, dear and much-esteem'd by us,
Thou golden-ro'd-adorne Mercury,
Arrivest thou here? thou hast not used t' apply Thy passage this way. Say, whatever be Thy heart's desire, my mind commands it thee,
If in my means it lie, or power of fact.
But first, what hospitable rites exact, Come yet more near, and take." This said, she set
A table forth, and furnish'd it with meat,
Such as the Gods taste; and served in with it Vermilion nectar. When with banquet fit
He had confirm'd his spirits, he thus express'd
His cause of coming: "Thou hast made request, Godess of Goddesses, to understand
My cause of touch here; which thou shalt command,
And know with truth: Jove caused my course to thee Against my will, for who would willingly
Lackey along so vast a lake of brine,
Near to no city that the Powers divine Receives with solemn rites and hecatombs?
But Jove’s will ever all law overcomes,
No other God can cross or make it void.
And he affirms, that one the most annoy’d
With woes and toils of all those men that fought For Priam’s city, and to end hath brought Nine years in the contention, is with thee.
For in the tenth year, when Troy victory
Was won, to give the Greeks the spoil of Troy, Return they did profess, but not enjoy,
Since Pallas they incensed; and she the waves
By all the winds’ power, that blew o’er their graves.
And there they rested. Only this poor one,
This coast, both winds and waves have cast upon;
Whom now forthwith he wills thee to dismiss,
Affirming that th’ unalter’d Destinies
Not only have decreed he shall not die
Apart his friends, but of necessity
Enjoy their sights before those fatal hours,
His country earth reach, and erected towers.”

This strook a love-check’d horror through her powers,
When, naming him, she this reply did give:
“Insinuate are ye Gods, past all that live,
In all things you affect; which still converts
Your powers to envies. It afflicts your hearts, That any Goddess should, as you obtain
The use of earthly dames, enjoy the men,
And most in open marriage. So ye fared,
When the delicious-finger’d Morning shared Orion’s bed; you easy-living States
Could never satisfy your emulous hates,
Till in Orygia the precise-lived Dame,
Gold-throned Diana, on him rudely came,
And with her swift shafts slew him. And such pains, (When rich-hair’d Ceres pleased to give the reins
To her affections, and the grace did yield Of love and bed, amidst a three-cropp’d field,
To her Ision) he paid angry Jove,
Who lost no long time notice of their love,
But with a glowing lightning was his death.
And now your envy labour underneath
A mortal’s choice of mine; whose life I took To liberal safety, when his ship Jove strook
With red-hot flashes, piece-meal in the seas,
And all his friends and soldiers, succourless Perish’d but he. Him, cast upon this coast
With blasts and billows, I, in life given lost, Preserved alone, loved, nourish’d, and did vow
To make him deathless, and yet never grow Crooked, or worn with age, his whole life long:
But since no reason may be made so strong
To strive with Jove’s will, or to make it vain,
No not if all the other Gods should strain
Their powers against it, let his will be law;
So he afford him fit means to withdraw,
As he commands him, to the raging main.
But means from me he never shall obtain,
For my means yield nor men, nor ship, nor oars,
To set him off from my so envied shores,
But if my counsel and good will can aid
His safe pass home, my best shall be assay’d.”
“Vouchsafe it so,” said heaven’s ambassador, “And deign it quickly. By all means abhor
T’ incense Jove’s wrath against thee, that with grace
He may hereafter all thy wish embrace.”
Thus took the Argus-killing God his wings.
And since the reverend Nymph these awful things Received from Jove, she to Ulysses went;
Whom she ashyre found, drown’d in discontent,
His eyes kept never dry he did so mourn,
And waste his dear age for his wish’d return;
Which still without the cave he used to do,
Because he could not please the Goddess so.
At night yet, forced, together took their rest,
The willing Goddess and th’ unwilling Guest;
But he all day in rocks, and on the shore,
The vex’d sea view’d, and did his fate deplore.
Him, now, the Goddess coming near bespake:
“Unhappy man, no more discomfort take
For my constraint of thee, nor waste thine age;
I now will passing freely disengage
Thy irksome stay here. Come then, fell thee wood,
And build a ship, to save thee from the flood.
I'll furnish thee with fresh wave, bread, and wine
Ruddy and sweet, that will the piner pine;
Put garments on thee, give thee winds foresight,
That every way thy home-bent appetite
May safe attain to it; if so it please
At all parts all the heaven-housed Deities
That more in power are, more in skill than I,
And more can judge what fits humanity.
He stood amazed at this strange change in her,
And said: "O Goddess! thy intents prefer
Some other project than my parting hence, Commanding things of too high consequence.
For my performance, that myself should build
A ship of power, my home assays to shield Against the great sea of such dread to pass; While not the best-built ship that ever was Will pass exulting, when such winds as Jove Can thunder up their trims and tacklings prove.
But could I build one, I would ne'er aboard,
Thy will opposed; nor won, without thy word
Given in the great oath of the Gods to me,
Not to beguile me in the least degree."
The Goddess smiled, held hard his hand,
And said:
"O' ye are a shrewd one, and so habited
In taking heed; thou know'st not what it is To be unwary, nor use words amiss.
How hast thou charm'd me, were I ne'er so sly!
Let earth know then, and heaven, so broad,
so high,
And th' under-sunk waves of th' infernal stream, (Which is an oath, as terribly supreme,
As any God swears) that I had no thought
But stood with what I spake, nor would have wrought, Nor counsel'd, any act against thy good;
But ever diligently weigh'd, and stood

On those points in persuading thee, that I Would use myself in such extremity.
For my mind simple is, and innocent,
Not given by cruel sleights to circumvent;
Nor bear in my breast a heart of steel,
But with the sufferer willing sufferance feel." This said, the Grace of Goddesses led home:
He traced her steps; and, to the cavern come,
In that rich throne, whence Mercury arose.
He sat. The Nymph herself did then appose
For food and beverage to him all best meat
And drink, that mortals use to taste and eat,
Then sat she opposite, and for her feast
Was nectar and ambrosia address'd
By handmaids to her. Both, what was prepared Did freely fall to. Having fitly fare'd,
The Nymph Calypso this discourse began:
"Jove-bred Ulysses! many-witted man!
Still is thy home so wish'd? so soon, away?
Be still of cheer, for all the worst I say.
But, if thy soul knew what a sum of woes
For thee to cast up, thy stern Fates impose, Ere to the country earth thy hopes attain,
Undoubtedly thy choice would here remain.
Keep house with me, and be a liver ever.
Which, methinks, should thy house and thee disserve.
Though for thy wife there thou art set on fire,
And all thy days are spent in her desire;
And though it be no boast in me to say
In form and mind I match her every way.
Nor can it fit a mortal dame's compare,
T' affect those terms with us that deathless are."
The great in counsels made her this reply:
"Renown'd, and to be reverence, Deity,
Let it not move thee, that so much I vow,
My comforts to my wife; though well I know
All cause myself why wise Penelope
In wit is far inferior to thee;
In feature, stature, all the parts of show,
She being a mortal, an immortal thou,
Old ever growing, and yet never old.
Yet her desire shall all my days see told,
Adding the sight of my returning day,
And natural home. If any God shall lay
His hand upon me as I pass the seas,
I'll bear the worst of what his hand shall please;"
As having given me such a mind as shall
The more still rise the more his hand lets fall.
In wars and waves my sufferings were not small.
I now have suffer’d much; as much before,
Hereafter let as much result, and more.”
This said, the sun set, and earth shadows gave;
When these two (in an in-room of the cave, Left to themselves) left love no rites undone.
The early Morn up, up he rose, put on His in and out weed. She herself enchances Amidst a white robe, full of all the Graces, Ample, and pleated thick like fishy scales;
A golden girdle then her waist impales;
Her head a veil decks; and abroad they come;
And now began Ulysses to go home.
A great axe first she gave, that two ways cut,
In which a fair well-polish’d helm was put,
That from an olive bough received his frame.
A plainer then. Then led she, till they came To lofty woods that did the isle confine.
The fir-tree, poplar, and heaven-scaling pine,
Had there their offspring. Of which, those that were
Of driest matter, and grew longest there,
He chose for lighter sail. This place thus shown,
The Nymph turn’d home. He fell to felling down,
And twenty trees he stoop’d in little space,
Plain’d, used his plumb, did all with artful grace.
In meantime did Calypso wimbles bring.
He bored, closed, nail’d, and order’d everything;
And look how much a ship’wright will allow A ship of burthen (one that best doth know What fits his art) so large a keel he cast;
Wrought up her decks, and hatches, sideboards, mast;
With willow wadings arm’d her to resist
The billows’ outrage, added all she miss’d, Sail-yards, and stern for guide. The Nymph then brought Linen for sails, which with dispatch he wrought.

Gables, and halsters, tackleings. All the frame
In four days’ space* to full perfection came.
The fifth day, they dismiss’d him from the shore,
Weeds neat and odorous gave him, victualls’ store,
Wine, and strong waters, and a prosperous wind,
To which, Ulysses, (fit to be divined)
His sails exposed, and hoised. Off he gat;
And cheerful was he. At the stern he sat,
And steer’d right artfully. Nor sleep could seize His eye-lids. He beheld the Pleiades:
The Bear, surnamed the Wain, that round doth move
About Orion, and keeps still above
The billowy ocean; the slow-setting star
Bootes call’d, by some the Waggoner.
Calypso warn’d him he his course should steer;
Still to his left hand. Seventeen days did clear
The cloudy night’s command in his moist way,
And by the eighteenth light he might display
The shady hills of the Phaeacian shore,
For which, as to his next abode, he bore.
The country did a pretty figure yield,
And look’d from off the dark seas like a shield.
Imperious Neptune, making his retreat
From th’ Æthiopian earth, and taking seat
Upon the mountains of the Solymi,
From thence, far off discovering, did desire Ulysses his fields plowing. All on fire
The sight straight set his heart, and made desire
Of weak run over, it did boil so high.
When, his head nodding, “O impiety,”
He cried out; “now the Gods’ inconstancy
Is most apparent, altering their designs
Since I the Æthiops saw, and here confines
To this Ulysses’ fate his misery,
The great mark, on which all his hopes rely, Lies in Phæacia. But I hope he shall Feel woe at height, ere that dead calm be fall.”

* This four days’ work (you will say) is too much for one man; and Pliny affirms, that Hiero (a king of Sicily) in five-and-forty days built two hundred and twenty ships, rigged them, and put to sea with them.
THE FIFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

This said; he, begging,* gather'd clouds from land,
Frighted the seas up, snatch'd into his hand
His horrid trident, and aloft did toss (Of all the winds) all storms he could engross,
All earth took into sea with clouds, grim Night
Fell tumbling headlong from the cope of light,
The East and South winds justled in the air,
The violent Zephyr, and North making-fair, Roll'd up the waves before them. And then bent Ulysses' knees, then all his spirit was spent.
In which despair, he thus spake: "Woe is me!
What was I born to, man of misery!
Fear tells me now, that, all the Goddess said,
Truth's self will author; that Fate would be paid Grief's whole sum due from me, at sea, before
I reach'd the dear touch of my country's shore.
With what clouds Jove heaven's heighten'd forehead binds!
How tyrannize the wraths of all the winds!
How all the tops he bottoms with the deeps.
And in the bottoms all the tops he steep's!
Thus dreadful is the presence of our death.
Thrice, four times blest were they that sunk beneath Their fates at Troy, and did to nought contend
But to renown Atrides with their end!
I would to God, my hour of death and fate
That day had held the power to terminate,
When showers of darts my life bore underpress'd
About divine Æacides deceased.
Then had I been allotted to have died,
By all the Greeks with funeralls glorified;
(Whence death, encouraging good life, had grown) Where now I die, by no man mourn'd nor known."
This spoke, a huge wave took him by the head,
And hurl'd him o'er-board; ship and all it laid

Inverted quite amidst the waves, but he Far off from her sprawl'd, strow'd about the sea.
His stern still holding, broken off, his mast
Burst in the midst, so horrible a blast
Of mix'd winds strook it. Sails and sail-yards fell Amongst the billows; and himself did dwell
A long time under water; nor could get
In haste his head out, wave with wave so met.
In his depression; and his garments too,
Given by Calypso, gave him much to do,
Hindering his swimming; yet he left not so
His drenched vessel, for the overthrow
Of her nor him; but gat at length again,
Wrastling with Neptune, hold of her; and then Sat in her bulk, insulting over death,
Which, with the salt stream prest to stop his breath,
He scape'd, and gave the sea again to give To other men. His ship so striv'd to live, Floating at random, cuff'd from wave to wave.
As you have seen the North-wind when he drave
In autumn heaps of thorn-fed grass-hoppers Hither and thither, one leap this way and bear.
Another that, and makes them often meet
In his confused gales; so Ulysses' fleet
The winds hurl'd up and down; now Boreas
Toss'd it to Notus, Notus gave it pass
To Eurus, Eurus Zephyr made pursue
The horrid tennis. This sport call'd the view Of Cadmus' daughter, with the narrow heel, Ino Leucothea, that first did feel
A mortal dame's desires, and had a tongue,
But now had th' honour to be named among The marine Godheads. She with pity saw Ulysses justled thus from flaw to flawl,
And, like a cormorand in form and flight,
Rose from a whirl-pool, on the ship did light
And thus bespeak him: "Why is Neptune thus In thy pursuit extremely furious, Oppressing thee with such a world of ill, Even to thy death? He must not serve his will,
Though 'tis his study. Let me then advise
As my thoughts serve; thou shalt not be unwise
To leave thy weeds and ship to the commands
Of these rude winds, and work out with thy hands
Pass to Phaeacia; where thy austere Fate
Is to pursue thee with no more such hate.
Take here this tablet, with this riband strange,
And see it still about thy bosom hung;
By whose eternal virtue never fear
To suffer thus again, nor perish here.
But when thou touchest with thy hand the shore,
Then take it from thy neck, nor wear it more;
But cast it far off from the continent,
And then thy person far ashore present."
Thus gave she him the tablet; and again,
Turn'd to a cormorant, dived, past sight,
To the main.
Patient Ulysses sigh'd at this, and stuck
In the conceit of such fair-spoken luck,
And said: "Alas, I must suspect even this,
Lest any other of the Deities
Add sleight to Neptune's force, to counsel me
To leave my vessel, and so far off see
The shore I aim at. Not with thoughts Too clear
Will I obey her; but to me appear
These counsels best; as long as I perceive
My ship not quite dissolved, I will not leave
The help she may afford me, but abide,
And suffer all woes till the worst be tried,
When she is split, I'll swim; no miracle can,
Past near and clear means, move a knowing man."
While this discourse employ'd him, Neptune raised A huge, a high, and horrid sea, that seized Him and his ship, and toss'd them through the lake.
As when the violent winds together take Heaps of dry chaff, and hurl them every way;
So his long wood-stack Neptune strook astra!
Then did Ulysses mount on rib, perforce,
Like to a rider of a running horse,
To stay himself a time, while he might shift
His drenched weeds, that were Calypso's gift.
When putting straight Leucothea's amulet
About his neck, he all his forces set
To swim, and cast him prostrate to the seas.
When powerful Neptune saw the ruthless preace
Of perils seige him thus, he moved his head,
And this betwixt him and his heart he said:
"So, now feel ills enow, and struggle so,
Till to your Jove-loved islanders you row.
But my mind says, you will not so avoid
This last task too, but be with sufferance toy'd."
This said, his rich-maned horse he moved,
And reach'd His house at Aege. But Minerva fetch'd
The winds from sea, and all their ways but one Barr'd to their passage; the bleak North alone
She set to blow; the rest she charged to keep Their rages in, and bind themselves in sleep.
But Boreas still flew high to break the seas,
Till Jove-bred Ithacus the more with ease
The navigation-skill'd Phaeacian states
Might make his refuge; Death and angry Fates
At length escaping. Two nights, yet, and days
He spent in wrestling with the sable seas;
In which space, often did his heart propose Death to his eyes. But when Aurora rose,
And threw the third light from her orient hair,
The winds grew calm, and clear was all the air,
Not one breath stirring. Then he might descry,
Raised by the high seas, clear, the land was nigh.
And then, look how to good sons that esteem
Their father's life dear, (after pains extreme, Felt in some sickness, that hath held him long)
Down to his bed, and with affections strong Wasted his body, made his life his load,
As being inflicted by some angry God.
When on their prayers they see descend at length
Health from the heavens, clad all in spirit and strength,
The sight is precious; so, since here should end Ulysses' toils, which therein should extend Health to his country, held to him his sire,
And on which long for him disease did tire.
And then, besides, for his own sake to see The shores, the woods so near, such joy had he,
As those good sons for their recover'd sire.
Then labour'd feet and all parts to aspire
To that wish'd continent; which when as near
He came, as Clamour might inform an ear,
He heard a sound beat from the sea-bred rocks,
Against which gave a huge sea horrid shocks,
That belch'd upon the firm land weeds and foam,
With which were all things hid there, where no room
Of fit capacity was for any port,
Nor from the sea for any man's resort,
The shores, the rocks, and cliffs, so prominent were.
"O," said Ulysses then, "now Jupiter
Hath given me sight of an unhoped-for shore,
Though I have wrought these seas so long, so sore.
Of rest yet no place shews the slenderest prints,
The rugged shore so bristled is with bints Against which every way the waves so flock,
And all the shore shews as one eminent rock,
So near which 'tis so deep, that not a sand
Is there for any tired foot to stand,
Nor fly his death-fast following miseries,
Lest, if he land, upon him foreright flies
A churlish wave, to crush him 'gainst a cliff,
Worse than vain rendering all his landing strife.
And should I swim to seek a haven else-where,
Or land less way-beat, I may justly fear
I shall be taken with a gale again,
And cast a huge way off into the main;
And there the great Earth-shaker (having seen
My so near landing, and again his spleen Forcing me to him) will some whale send out, (Of which a horrid number here about His Amphitrite breeds) to swallow me,
I well have proved, with what malignity
He treads my steps." While this discourse he held,
A cursed surge 'gainst a cutting rock impell'd
His naked body, which it gash'd and tore.
And had his bones broke, if but one sea more
Had cast him on it. But she prompted him,
That never fail'd, and bade him no more swim
Still off and on, but boldly force the shore.
And hug the rock that him so rudely tore;
Which he with both hands sigh'd and clasp'd, till past
The billow's rage was; which scaped, back so fast
The rock repulsed it, that it reft his hold,
Sucking him from it, and far back he roll'd.
And as the polypus that (forced from home
Amidst the soft sea, and near rough land come
For shelter 'gainst the storms that beat on him
At open sea, as she abroad doth err)
A deal of gravel, and sharp little stones,
Needfully gathers in her hollow bones;
So he forced hither by the sharper ill, Shunning the smoother, where he best hoped, still
The worst succeeded; for the cruel friend,
To which he cling'd for succour, off did rend
From his broad hands the scaken flesh so sore.
That off he fell, and could sustain no more.
Quite under water fell he; and, past fate,
Hapless Ulysses there had lost the state
He held in life; if, still the grey-eyed Maid
His wisdom prompting, he had not assay'd
Another course, and ceased t' attempt that shore.
Swimming, and casting round his eye t' explore
Some other shelter. Then the mouth he found
Of fair Callicoe's flood; whose shores were crown'd.

* Pallas.
THE FIFTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

With most apt succours; rocks so smooth they seem’d Polish’d of purpose; land that quite redeem’d
With breathless coverts th’ others’ blasted shores.
The flood he knew, and thus in heart implores:
“King of this river! hear; whatever name
Makes thee invoked, to thee I humbly frame My flight from Neptune’s furies. Reverend is To all the ever-living Deities
What erring man soever seeks their aid.
To thy both flood and knees a man dismay’d
With varied sufferance sues. Yield then some rest
To him that is thy suppliant profess’d.”
This, though but spoke in thought, the Godhead heard,
Her current straight stay’d, and her thick waves clear’d
Before him, smooth’d her waters, and, just where He prayed, half-drown’d, entirely saved him there.
There with he came, his both knees faltering, both His strong hands hanging down, and all with froth
His cheeks and nostrils flowing, voice and breath
Spent to all use, and down he sunk to death.
The sea had soak’d his heart through; all his veins
His toils had rack’d t’ a labouring woman’s pains.*
Dead weary was he. But when breath did find A pass reciprocal, and in his mind
His spirit was recollected, up he rose,
And from his neck did th’ amulet unloose,
That Io gave him; which he hurl’d from him
To sea. It sounding fell, and back did swim
With th’ ebbing waters, till it straight arrived
Where Io’s fair hand it again received,
Then kiss’d he th’ humble earth; and on he goes,
Till bulrushes shew’d place for his repose.

Where laid, he sigh’d, and thus said to his soul:
“O me, what strange perplexities control
The whole skill of thy powers in this event! What feel I? If till care-nurse night be spent
I watch amidst the flood, the sea’s chill breath,
And vegetant dews, I fear will be my death;
So low brought with my labours. Towards day
A passing sharp air ever breathes at sea.
If I the pitch of this next mountain scale,
And shady wood, and in some thicket fall
Into the hands of Sleep, though there the cold
May well be check’d, and healthful slumbers hold Her sweet hand on my powers, all care allay’d, Yet there will beasts devour me. Best appaid Doth that course make me yet; for there, some strife, Strength, and my spirit, may make me make for life;
Which, though impair’d, may yet be fresh applied,
Where peril possible of escape is tried.
But he that fights with heaven, or with the sea,
To indigression adds impiety.”
Thus to the woods he hasted; which he found
Not far from sea, but on far-seeing ground.
Where two twin underwoods he enter’d on,
With olive-trees and oil-trees overgrown; Through which the moist force of the loud-voiced wind Did never beat, nor ever Phoebus shined,
Nor shower beat through, they grew so one in one,
And had, by turns, their power t’ exclude the sun.
Here enter’d our Ulysses; and a bed Of leaves huge, and of huge abundance, spread With all his speed. Large he made it, for there
For two or three men ample coverings were, Such as might shield them from the winter’s worst, Though steel* it breathed, and blew as it would burst.

* A metaphorical hyperbole, expressing the winter’s extremity of sharpness.
Patient Ulysses joy'd, that ever day Shew'd such a shelter. In the midst he lay,
Store of leaves heaping high on every side.
And as in some out-field a man doth hide
A kindled brand, to keep the seed of fire,
No neighbour dwelling near, and his desire

Served with self-store, he else would ask of none,
But of his fore-spent sparks rakes th' ashes on;
So this out-place Ulysses thus receives,
And thus naked virtue's seed lies hid in leaves.
Yet Pallas made him sleep as soon as men Whom delicacies all their flatteries deign;
And all that all his labours could comprise Quickly concluded in his closed eyes.

THE END OF THE FIFTH BOOK.
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.
MINERVA in a vision stands
Before Nausicaa; and commands
She to the flood her weeds should bear,
For now her nuptial day was near.
Nausicaa her charge obeys,
And then with other virgins plays,
Their sports make waked Ulysses rise,
Walk to them, and beauteous apples sate
Of food and clothes. His naked sight Puts th' other maids, afraid, to flight;
Nausicaa only boldly stays,
And gladly his desire obeys.
He, furnish'd with her favours shown,
Attends her and the rest to town.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
Zephyr. Here olive leaves
T' hide shame began.
The maid receives
The naked man,
A much-sustaining, patient, heavenly man, Whom Toll* and Sleep had worn so weak and wan,
Thus won his rest. In mean space Pallas went To the Phaeacian city, and descent
That first did brood Hyperia's lands divide,
Near the vast Cyclops, men of monstrous pride,
That prey'd on those Hyperians, since they were
Of greater power; and therefore longer there Divine Nausithous dwelt not; but arose,
And did for Scheria all his powers dispose,
Far from ingenious art-inventing men.
But there did he erect a city then;
First drew a wall round, then he houses builds,
And then a temple to the Gods, the fields Lastly dividing. But he, stoop'd by Fate, Dived to th' infernals; and Alcinous sate
In his command, a man the Gods did teach Commanding counsels. His house held the reach

Of grey Minerva's project; to provide That great-soul'd Ithacus might be supplied With all things fitting his return. She went Up to the chamber, where the fair descent*
Of great Alcinous slept; a maid, whose parts
In wit and beauty wore divine deserts.
Well-deck'd her chamber was; of which the door
Did seem to lighten, such a gloss it bore Betwixt the posts, and now flew ope to find The Goddess entry. Like a puff of wind
She reach'd the virgin bed; near which there lay Two maids, to whom the Graces did convey Figure and manners. But above the head
Of bright Nausicaa did Pallas tread
The subtle air, and put the person on
Of Dymas' daughter, from comparison Exempt in business naval. Like his seed
Minerva look'd now;† whom one year did bread
With bright Nausicaa, and who had gain'd Grace in her love, yet on her thus complained:
"Nausicaa! why bred thy mother one
So negligent in rites so stood upon By other virgins? Thy fair garments lie Neglected by thee, yet thy nuptials nigh;
When rich in all attire both thou should'st be,
And garments give to others honouring thee,
That lead thee to the temple. Thy good name Grows amongst men for these things; they inflame
Father and reverend mother with delight.
Come, when the Day takes any wink from Night,
Let's to the river, and repurify
Thy wedding garments. My society
Shall freely serve thee for thy speedier aid, Because thou shalt no more stand on the maid.

* οἵτιν' καὶ σαρκίτης ὀφρυνον - Sommo et labore afflictus. Sleep (καταπροσυψω) for the want of sleep.
† Intending Dymas' daughter.
The best of all Phaeacia woo thy grace,
Where thou wert bred, and owest thyself a race.
Up, and stir up to thee thy honour'd sire,
To give thee mules and coach, thee and thy tire, Veils, girdles, mantles, early to the flood
To bear in state. It suits thy high-born blood.
And far more fits thee, than to foot so far;
For far from town thou know'st the bath-fountains are.
This said, away blue-eyed Minerva went Up to Olympus, the firm continent
That bears in endless being the deified kind,
That's neither souse'd with showers, nor shook with wind,
Nor chill'd with snow, but where Serenity flies Exempt from clouds, and ever-beamy skies
Circle the glittering hill, and all their days
Give the delights of blessed Deity praise.
And hither Pallas flew, and left the maid,
When she had all that might excite her said.
Straight rose the lovely Morn, that up did raise Fair-veil'd Nausicaa, whose dream her praise
To admiration took; who no time spent
To give the rapture of her vision vent
To her loved parents, whom she found within.
Her mother sat at fire, who had to spin
A rock, whose tincture with sea-purple shined;
Her maids about her. But she chanced to find Her father going abroad, to council call'd
By his grave Senate; and to him exhalted.
Her smother'd bosom was: "' Loved sire,
"Will you not now command a coach for me,
Stately and complete? fit for me to bear
To wash at flood the weeds I cannot wear

* This familiar and near wanton carriage of Nausicaa to her father, joined with that virgin modesty expressed in her after, is much praised by the graver of Homer's expositors; with her father's loving allowance of it, knowing her shamefacedness and judgment would not let her exceed at any part. Which note is here inserted, not as if this were more worthy the observation than other everywhere stewed flowers of precept; but because this more generally pleasing subject may perhaps find more fitness for the stay of most readers.

Before repurified? Yourself it fits
To wear fair weeds, as every man that sits In place of council. And five sons you have,
Two wed, three bachelors; that must be brave
In every day's shift, that they may go dance;
For these three last with these things must advance
Their states in marriage; and who else but I,
Their sister, should their dancing rites supply?"
This general cause she shew'd, and would not name
Her mind of nuptials to her sire, for shame.
He understood her yet, and thus replied:
"Daughter! nor these, nor any grace beside.
I either will deny thee, or defer,
Mules, nor a coach, of state and circular, Fitting at all parts. Go, my servants shall Serve thy desires, and thy command in all."
The servants then commanded soon obey'd, Fetch'd coach, and mules join'd in it. Then the Maid Brought from the chamber her rich weeds, and laid All up in coach; in which her mother placed
A mound of victuals, varied well in taste,
And other junkets. Wine she likewise fill'd
Within a goat-skin bottle, and distill'd
Sweet and moist oil into a golden chalice,
Both for her daughter's, and her handmaid's use,
To soften their bright bodies, when they rose Cleansed from their cold baths. Up to coach then goes
Th' observed Maid; takes both the scourge
And reins; and to her side her handmaid straight attains.
Nor these alone, but other virgins, graced
The nuptial chariot. The whole bevy placed, Nausicaa scourged to make the coach-mules run
That neigh'd, and paced their usual speed, and soon
Both maids and weeds brought to the riverside,
Where baths for all the year their use supplied.
Whose waters were so pure they would not stain,
But still ran fair forth; and did more renown Apt to purge stains, for that purged stain within,
Which by the water's pure store was not seen.
These, here arrived, the mules uncoacht, and drave
Up to the gulfy river's shore, that gave Sweet grass to them. The maids from coach then took Their clothes, and steep'd them in the sable brook:
Then put them into springs, and trod them clean.
With cleanly feet; adventuring wagers then,
Who should have soonest and most cleanly done.
When having throughly cleansed, they spread them on The flood's shore, all in order. And then, where The waves the pebbles wash'd, and ground was clear,
They bathed themselves, and all with glittering oil Smooth'd their white skins; refreshing then their toil
With pleasant dinner, by the river's side. Yet still watch'd when the sun their clothes had dried.
Till which time, having dined, Nausicaa
With other virgins did at stool-ball play,
Their shoulder-reaching head-tires laying by.
Nausicaa, with the wrists of ivory,
The liking stroke strook, singing first a song,
As custom order'd, and amidst the throng
Made such a shew, and so past all was seen,
As when the chaste-born, arrow-loving Queen,
Along the mountains gliding, either over Spartan Taygetus, whose tops far discover,
Or Eurymanthus, in the wild boar's chase,
Or swift-hooved hart, and with her Jove's fair race,
The field Nymphs, sporting; amongst whom, to see How far Diana had priority
(Though all were fair) for fairness; yet of all,
(As both by head and forehead being more tall)

Ilatona triumph'd, since the dullest sight
Might easily judge whom her pains brought to light;
Nausicaa so, whom never husband tamed,
Above them all in all the beauties flamed.
But when they now made homewards, and array'd,
Ordering their weeds disorder'd as they play'd, Mules and coach ready, then Minerva thought
What means to wake Ulysses might be wrought,
That he might see this lovely-sighted maid,
Whom she intended should become his aid,
Bring him to town, and his return advance. Her mean was this, " though thought a stool-ball chance:
The queen now, for the upstroke, strook the ball
Quite wide off th' other maids, and made it fall Amidst the whirlpools. At which out shriek'd all,
And with the shriek did wise Ulysses wake: Who, sitting up, was doubtful who should make That sudden outcry, and in mind thus striv'd:
"On what a people am I now arrived? At civil hospitable men, that fear
The Gods? or dwell injurious mortals here?
Unjust, and churlish? like the female cry
Of youth it sounds. What are they? Nymphs bred high
On tops of hills, or in the founts of floods, In herby marshes, or in leavy woods?
Or are they high-spoke men I now am near?
I'll prove, and see."

With this, the wary peer Crept forth the thicket, and an olive bough Broke with his broad hand; which he did bestow
In covert of his nakedness, and then Put hasty head out. Look how from his den
A mountain lion looks, that, all embraed
With drops of trees, and weather-beaten-hued.

* The piety and wisdom of the Poet was such, that (agreeing with the Sacred Letter) not the least of things he makes come to pass sine Numinis providentia. As Spondanus well notes of him.
Bold of his strength, goes on, and in his eye
A burning furnace glows, all bent to prey
On sheep, or oxen, or the upland hart,
His belly charging him, and he must part Stakes with the herdsman in his beasts' attempt,
Even where from rape their strengths are most exempt;
So wet, so weather-beat, so stung with need,
Even to the home-fields of the country's breed
Ulysses was to force forth his access,
Though merely naked; and his sight did press
The eyes of soft-hair'd virgins. Horrid was His rough appearance to them; the hard pass
He had at sea stuck by him. All in flight
The virgins scatter'd, frighted with this sight,
About the prominent windings of the flood.
All but Nausicaa fled; but she fast stood:
Pallas had put a boldness in her breast,
And in her fair limbs tender fear com-press.
And still she stood him, as resolved to know
What man he was; or out of what should grow His strange repair to them. And here was he Put to his wisdom; if her virgin knee
He should be bold, but kneeling, to em-brace;
Or keep aloof, and try with words of grace,
In humblest suppliance, if he might ob-tain
Some cover for his nakedness, and gain
Her grace to show and guide him to the town.
The last he best thought, to be worth his own,
In weighing both well; to keep still aloof,
And give with soft words his desires their proof;
Lest, pressing so near as to touch her knee,
He might incense her maiden modesty.
This fair and filed speech then shew'd this was he:
"Let me beseech, O queen, this truth of thee,
Are you of mortal, or the deified race?
If of the Gods, that th' ample heavens em-brace,
I can resemble you to none above
So near as to the chaste-born birth of Jove,
The beauteous Cynthia. Her you full pre-sent;
In grace of every God-like lineament,
Her goodly magnitude, and all th' address
You promise of her very perfectness.
If sprung of humanes, that inhabit earth,
Thrice blest are both the authors of your birth;
Thrice blest your brothers, that in your deserts
Must, even to rapture, bear delighted hearts,
To see, so like the first trim of a tree,
Your form adorn a dance. But most blest be,
Of all that breathe, that hath the gift t' engage Your bright neck in the yoke of marriage,
And deck his house with your commanding merit.
I have not seen a man of so much spirit,
Nor man, nor woman, I did ever see,
At all parts equal to the parts in thee.
T' enjoy your sight, doth admiration seize My eyes, and apprehensive faculties.
Lately in Delos (with a charge of men Arrived, that render'd me most wretched then,
Now making me thus naked) I beheld
The burthen of a palm, whose issue swell'd About Apollo's fane, and that put on A grace like thee; for Earth had never none
Of all her sylvan issue so adorn'd,
Into amaze my very soul was turn'd,
To give it observation; as now thee
To view, O virgin, a stupidity
Past admiration strikes me, join'd with fear
To do a suppliant's due, and press so near,
As to embrace thy knees. Nor is it strange,
For one of fresh and firmest spirit would change
T' embrace so bright an object. But, for me
A cruel habit of calamity
Prepared the strong impression thou hast made:
For this last day did fly night's twentieth shade
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Since I, at length, escaped the sable seas;
When in the mean time th' unrelenting press
Of waves and stern storms toss'd me up And down,
From th' isle Ogygia. And now God hath thrown My wreck on this shore; that perhaps I may My miseries vary here; for yet their stay,
I fear, Heaven hath not order'd, though, before
These late afflictions, it hath lent me store.
O queen, deign pity then, since first to you
My fate importunes my distress to vow.
No other dame, nor man, that this Earth own,
And neighbour city, I have seen or known.
The town then show me; give my nakedness
Some shelter to shelter it, if to these seas
Linen or woollen you have brought to cleanse.
God give you, in requital, all th' amends
Your heart can wish, a husband, family,
And good agreement. Nought beneath the sky
More sweet, more worthy is, than firm consent
Of man and wife in household government.
It joys their wishers-well, their enemies wounds,
But to themselves the special good redounds."
She answer'd: "Stranger I I discern in thee
Nor sloth, nor folly reigns; and yet I see Th' art poor and wretched. In which I conclude,
That industry nor wisdom make endured
Men with those gifts that make them best to th' eye;
Love only orders man's felicity.
To good and bad his pleasure fashions still
The whole proportion of their good and ill.
And he, perhaps, hath form'd this plight in thee,
Of which thou must be patient, as he free.
But after all th' wand'rings, since thy way,
Both to our earth, and near our city, lay,
As being exposed to our cares to relieve,
Weeds, and what else a humane hand should give
To one so supplicant and tamed with woe, Thou shalt not want. Our city I will show,
And tell our people's name: This neighbour town,
And all this kingdom, the Phaeacians own.
And (since thou seem'dst so far to know my birth, And madest a question, if of heaven or earth,)
This earth hath bred me; and my father's name
Alicinus is, that in the power and frame
Of this isle's rule is supereminent."
Thus, passing him, she to the virgins went,
And said: "Give stay both to your feet and fright.
Why thus disperse ye for a man's mere sight?
Esteem you him a Cyclop, that long since Made use to prey upon our citizens?
This man no moist man is, nor waterish thing,
That's ever flitting, ever ravishing
All it can compass; and, like it, doth range
In rape of women, never staid in change).
This man is truly manly, wise, and staid,
In soul more rich the more to sense decay'd,
Who nor will do, nor suffer to be done,
Acts lewd, and abject; nor can such a one Greet the Phaeacians with a mind ensuious.
Dear to the Gods they are, and he is pious.
Besides, divided from the world we are,
The part out of it, billows circular
The sea revolving round about our shore;
Nor is there any man that enters more Than our own countrymen, with what is brought From other countries. This man, minding nought
But his relief, a poor unhappy wretch, Wreck'd here, and hath no other land to fetch,
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Him now we must provide for: from Jove* came
All strangers, and the needy of a home;
Who any gift, though me'er so small it be,
Esteem as great, and take it gratefully.
And therefore, virgins, give the stranger food,
And wine; and see ye bathe him in the flood,
Near to some shore to shelter most inclined.
To cold-bath-bathers hurtful is the wind,
Not only rugged making th’ outward skin,
But by his thin powers pierceth parts within.
This said, their flight in a return they set,
And did Ulysses with all grace entreat, Shew’d him a shore wind-proof, and full of shade;
By him a shirt and utter mantle laid,
A golden jug of liquid oil did add,
Bade wash, and all things as Nausicaa bade.

Divine Ulysses would not use their aid;
But thus he bespake them: "Every lovely maid, Let me entreat to stand a little by,
That I, alone, the fresh flood may apply
To cleanse my bosom of the sea-wrought brine,
And then use oil, which long time did not shine
On my poor shoulders.† I’ll not wash in sight
Of fair-hair’d maidens. I should blush outright,
To bathe all bare by such a virgin light."
They moved, and mused a man had so much grace,
And told their mistress what a man he was.

He cleansed his broad soil’d shoulders, back, and head
Yet never tamed, but now had foam and weed Knit in the fair curls. Which dissolved, and he Slick’d all with sweet oil, the sweet charity
The untouch’d virgin shew’d in his attire
He clothed him with. Then Pallas put a fitness,
More than before, into his sparkling eyes,
His late soil set off with his soon fresh guise.
His locks, cleansed, curl’d the more, and match’d, in power
To please an eye, the Hyacinthian flower.
And as a workman, that can well combine Silver and gold, and make both strive to shine,
As being by Vulcan, and Minerva too,
Taught how far either may be urged to go
In strife of eminence, when work sets forth
A worthy soul to bodies of such worth,
No thought reproving th’ act, in any place,
Nor Art no debt to Nature’s liveliest grace;
So Pallas wrought in him a grace as great
From head to shoulders, and ashore did seat
His goodly presence. To which such a guise
He shew’d in going, that it ravish’d eyes.
All which continued, as he sat apart,
Nausicaa’s eye struck wonder through her heart,
Who thus bespake her consort: "Hear me, you,
Fair-wristed virgins; this rare man, I know, Treads not our country earth, against the will
Of some God throne’d on the Olympian hill.
He shew’d to me, till now, not worth the note,
But now he looks as he had godhead got.
I would to heaven my husband were no worse,
And would be call’d no better; but the course
Of other husbands pleased to dwell out here.
Observe and serve him with our utmost cheer."
She said; they heard and did. He drunk and eat
Like to a harpy; having touch’d no meat
A long time before. But Nausicaa now Thought of the more grace she did lately vow

* According to another translator:

"Ab Jove nam supplex pater procedit et hospes, Res beneo, at chara est, magni quoque munera instar."

Which I cite to shew his good when he keeps him to the original, and near in any degree expounds it.

† He taught their youths modesty by his aged judgment. As receiving the custom of maids then used to that entertainment of men, notwithstanding the modesty of that age, could not be corrupted inwardly for those outward kind observations of guests and strangers, and was therefore privileged. It is easy to avoid shew; and those that most curiously avoid the outward construction, are ever most tainted with the inward corruption.
THE SIXTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Had horse to chariot join'd, and up she rose;
Up cheer'd her guest, and said: "Guest, now dispose Yourself for town, that I may let you see My father's court, where all the peers will be
Of our Phaeacian state. At all parts, then, Observe to whom and what place y' are t' attain;
Though I need usher you with no advice,
Since I suppose you absolutely wise.
While we the fields pass, and men's labours
there,
So long, in these maids' guides, directly
bear
Upon my chariot (I must go before For cause that after comes, to which this
more
Be my induction) you shall then soon end Your way to town, whose towers you see ascend*
To such a steepness. On whose either side
A fair port stands, to which is nothing wide An enterer's passage; on whose both hands ride
Ships in fair harbours; which once past, you win
The goodly market-place (that circles in A fane to Neptune, built of curious stone,
And passing ample) where munition, Gables, and masts, men make, and polish'd ears;
For the Phaeacians are not conquerors
By bows nor quivers; cars, masts, ships they are
With which they plow the sea, and wage their war.
And now the cause comes why I lead the
way,
Not taking you to coach: The men that sway
In work of those tools that so fit our state,
Are rude mechanicals, that rare and late Work in the market-place; and those are they,
Whose bitter tongues I shun, who straight would say,
(For these vile vulgares are extremely proud,
And foully-languaged) 'What is he, allow'd
To coach it with Naucissa? so large a set,
And fairly fashion'd? where were these two met?
He shall be sure her husband. She hath been Gadding in some place, and, of foreign men

Fitting her fancy, kindly brought him
home
In her own ship. He must, of force, be come
From some far region; we have no such
man.
It may be, praying hard, when her heart ran
On some wish'd husband, out of heaven some God
Dropp'd in her lap; and there lies she at road
Her complete life-time. But, in sooth, if she,
Ranging abroad, a husband, such as he Whom now we saw, laid hand on, she was wise;
For none of all our nobles are of prise Enough for her; he must beyond sea
come,
That wins her high mind, and will have her
home.
Of our peers many have importuned her, Yet she will none.' Thus these folks will confer
Behind my back; or, meeting, to my face
The foul-mouth rout dare put home this disgrace.
And this would be reproaches to my fame,
For, even myself just anger would inflame,
If any other virgin I should see,
Her parents living, keep the company
Of any man, to any end of love,
Till open nuptials should her act approve,
And therefore hear me, guest, and take such way,
That you yourself may compass, in your
stay,
Your quick deduction by my father's
grace;
And means to reach the root of all your race.
We shall, not far out of our way to town,
A never-fell'd grove find, that poplars crown,
To Pallas sacred, where a fountain flows;
And round about the grove a meadow grows,
In which my father holds a manor-house, Deck'd all with orchards, green, and odorous,
As far from town as one may hear a shout.
There stay, and rest your foot-pains, till full out
We reach the city; where, when you may guess
We are arrived, and enter our access Within my father's court, then put you on
For our Phaeacian state; where, to be shown

* The city's description so far forth as may in part, induce her promised reason, why she took not Ulysses to coach with her.
My father's house, desire. Each infant there Can bring you to it; and yourself will clear Distinguish it from others, for no shows
The city-buildings make compared with these That king Alcinous' seat doth celebrate.
In whose roofs, and the court (where men of state,
And suitors sit and stay) when you shall hide, Straight pass it, entering further, where abide My mother, with her withdrawn house-wiferies,
Who still sits in the fire-shine, and applies
Her rock, all-purple, and of pompous show,
Her chair placed 'gainst a pillar, all a-row
Her maids behind her set; and to her here
My father's dining-throne looks, seated where He pours his choice of wine in, like a God,
This view once past, for th' end of your abode,
Address suit to my mother, that her mean
May make the day of your redemption seen,
And you may frolic straight, though far away
You are in distance from your wished stay.
For, if she once be won to wish you well,
Your hope may instantly your passport seal;
And thenceforth sure abide to see your friends,
Fair house, and all to which your heart contends.'
This said, she used her shining scourge,
And lash'd.
Her mules, that soon the shore left where she wash'd,
And, knowing well the way, their pace was fleet,
And thick they gather'd up their nimble feet.

Which yet she temper'd so,* and used her scourge
With so much skill, as not to over-urge
The foot behind, and make them struggle so
From close society. Firm together go Ulysses and her maids. And now the sun Sunk to the waters, when they all had won
The never-fell'd, and sound-exciting wood, Sacred to Pallas; where the god-like good Ulysses rested, and to Pallas pray'd:
"Hear me, of goat-kept Jove th' unconquer'd Maid!
Now throughly hear me; since, in all the time
Of all my wreck, my prayers could never climb Thy far-off ears; when noiseful Neptune toss'd Upon his watery bristles my emboss'd
And rock-torn body. Hear yet now, and deign
I may of the Phæacian state obtain Pity, and grace." Thus pray'd he, and she heard;
By no means yet, exposed to sight, appear'd.
For fear t' offend her uncle, the supreme
Of all the Sea-Gods,† whose wrath still extreme Stood to Ulysses, and would never cease.
Till with his country shore he crown'd his peace.

* Not without some little note of our omniscient Homer's general touch of the least fitness lying in his way, may this courtly discretion be described in Nausicaa be observed, if you please.
† More of our Poet's curious and sweet piety.

THE END OF THE SIXTH BOOK.
THE SEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

NAUSICAA arrives at town:
And then Ulysses. He makes known
His suit to Arete; who view Takes of his vesture, which she knew,
And asks him from whose hands it came.
He tells, with all the hapless frame
Of his affairs in all the while Since he forsook Calypso’s isle.

ANOTHER.

*Hera. The honour’d minds,
And welcome things,
Ulysses finds
In Scheria’s kings.

Thus pray’d the wise and God-observing man.
The Maid, by free force of her palfreys, wan
Access to town, and the renowned court
Reach’d of her father; where, within the port,
She stay’d her coach, and round about her came
Her brothers, made as of immortal frame,
Who yet disdain’d not, for her love, mean deeds,
But took from coach* her mules, brought in her weeds.
And she ascend her chamber; where purvey’d
A quick fire was by her old chamber-maid, Eurymedusa, th’ Aperian born,
And brought by sea from Apera t’ adorn
The court of great Alcinos, because He gave to all the blest Phaeacians laws,
And, like a heaven-born power in speech, acquired
The people’s ears. To one then so admired, Eurymedusa was esteem’d no worse
Than worth the gift; yet now, grown old, was nurse

To ivory-arm’d Nausicaa; gave heat
To all her fires, and dress’d her privy meat.
Then rose Ulysses, and made way to town;
Which ere he reach’d, a mighty mist was thrown
By Pallas round about him, in her care,
Lost, in the sway of envies popular.
Some proud Phaeacian might foul language pass, Justle him up, and ask him what he was,
Entering the lovely town yet, through the cloud.
Pallas appear’d, and like a young wench show’d Bearing a pitcher, stood before him so
As if objected purposely to know What there he needed; whom he question’d thus:
"Know you not, daughter, where Alcinos,
That rules this town, dwells? I, a poor distrest Mere stranger here, know none I may request
To make this court known to me." She replied:
"Strange father, I will see you satisfied
In that request. My father dwells just by The house you seek for; but go silently,
Nor ask, nor speak to any other. I shall be enough to shew your way. The men
That here inhabit do not entertain
With ready kindness strangers, of what worth
Or state sover, nor have taken forth
Lessons of civil usage or respect
To men beyond them. They, upon their powers
Of swift ships building, top the watery towers,
And Jove hath given them ships, for sail so wrought,
They cut a feather, and command a thought."*

* Hac fuit illius aetatis simplicitas; nam vel fratresque quemque amor tenuit suit, ut libenter hanc reddentibus charisimam torui operam praestiterint. Spond.

* Nee ignem oculi pereo ut vobis, naves veloce velutem ferunt, atque voce faciata.
This said, she usher'd him, and after he trod in the swift steps of the Deity. The free-sail'd seamen could not get a sight of our Ulysses yet, though he forthright both by their houses and their persons past; Pallas about him such a darkness cast by her divine power, and her reverend care, she would not give the town-born cause to stare. He wonder'd, as he past, to see the ports; the shipping in them; and for all resorts the goodly market-steds; and aisles beside for the heroes; walls so large and wide; rampires so high, and of such strength withal, it would with wonder any eye appall. At last they reach'd the court, and Pallas said: 'Now, honour'd stranger, I will see obey'd Your will, to shew our ruler's house; 'tis here; where you shall find kings celebrating feast. Enter amongst them, nor admit a fear. More hold a man is, 'tis prevals the more, Though man nor place he ever saw before. You first shall find the queen in court, whose name is Arete, of parents born the same. That was the king her spouse; their pedigree I can report.* The great Earth-shaker, he of Periboea (that her sex out-shone, And youngest daughter was) Euryomedon, who of th' unmeasured-minded giants sway'd. Th' imperial sceptre, and the pride allay'd Of men so impious with cold death, and died himself soon after) got the magnified in mind, Nausithous; whom the kingdom's state first held in supreme rule. Nausithous gat Rhexenor, and Alcinous, now king. Rhexenor (whose seed did no male fruit spring.

And whom the silver-bow-graced Phoebus slew young in the court) his shed blood did renew, In only Arete, who now is spouse To him that rules the kingdom in this house, And is her uncle, king Alcinous, who honours her past equal. She may boast More honour of him than the honour'd* most Of any wife in earth can of her lord, How many more soever realms afford, That keep house under husbands. Yet no more her husband honours her, than her blst Of gracious children. All the city cast eyes on her as a Goddess, and give taste of their affections to her in their prayers, Still as she decks the streets; for, all affairs wrapt in contention, she dissolves to men. Whom she affects, she wants no mind to deign goodness enough. If her heart stand inclined To your dispatch, hope all you wish to find, Your friends, your longing family, and all. That can within your most affections fall." This said, away the grey-eyed Goddess flew Along th' untamed sea, left the lovely hunt Scheria presented, out-flew Marathon, And ample-stretched Athens lighted on; where to the house, that casts so thick a shade,† of Erechtheus the ingressions made. Ulysses to the lofty-built court Of king Alcinous made bold resort; Yet in his heart cast many a thought before The brazen pavement of the rich court bore His enter'd person. Like heaven's two main lights, the rooms illustrated both days and nights. On every side stood firm a wall of brass, Even from the threshold to the innermost pass. Which bore a roof up that all sapphire was. The brazen thresholds both sides did entomb. Silver pilasters, hung with gates of gold; whose portal was of silver; over which a golden cornice did the front enrich. On each side, dogs, of gold and silver framed, The house's guard stood; which the Deity lamed;

* For the more perspicuity of this pedigree, I have here set down the diagram, as Spondaus hath it. Neptune begat Nausithous of Periboea. By Nausithous, Rhexenor, Alcinous, were begot. By Rhexenor, Arete, the wife of her uncle Alcinous.

† The honour of Arete (or virtue) alleg.

† Jupiter, Zeus.
With knowing inwards had inspired, and made
That death nor age should their estates invade.
Along the wall stood every way a throne,
From th' entry to the lobby, every one Cast over with a rich-wrought cloth of state.
Beneath which the Phaecean princes sate
At wine and food, and feasted all the year.
Youths forged of gold, at every table there,
Stood holding flaming torches, that, in light,
Gave through the house each honourn'd guest his light,
And, to encounter feast with house-wifery,
In one room fifty women did apply
Their several tasks. Some, apple-colour'd corn Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn.
Some work in looms; no hand least rest
But all had motion apt, as aspen leaves.
And from the weeds they wove, so fast they laid,
And so thick thrust together thread by thread,
That th' oil, of which the wool had drunk his fill,
Did with his moisture in light dews distill.
As much as the Phaecean men excel'd
All other countrymen in art to build
A swift-sail'd ship; so much the women there,
For work of webs, past other women were.
Past mean, by Pallas' means, they understood
The grace of good works; and had wits as good.
Without the hall, and close upon the gate,
A goodly orchard-ground was situate,
Of near ten acres; about which was led A lofty quickset. In it flourished
High and broad fruit trees, that pomegranate bore, Sweet figs, pears, olives; and a number more.
Most useful plants did there produce their store,
Whose fruits the hardest winter could not kill, Nor hottest summer wither. There was still Fruit in his proper season all the year.
Sweet Zephyr breathed upon them blasts
Of varied tempers. These he made to bear Ripe fruits, these blossoms. Pear grew after pear, Apple succeeded apple, grape the grape,
Fig after fig came; time made never rape
Of any dainty there. A spirtely vine
Spread here his root, whose fruit a hot sunshine Made ripe betimes; here grew another green.
Here some were gathering, here some pressing, seen.
A large-allotted several each fruit had
And all th' adorn'd grounds their appearance made In flower and fruit, at which the king did aim
To the precisest order he could claim.
Two fountains graced the garden; of which, one Pour'd out a winding stream that over-run
The grounds for their use chiefly, th' other went Close by the lofty palace-gate, and lent
The city his sweet benefit. And thus
The Gods the court deck'd of Alcinous.
Patient Ulysses stood a while at gaze,
But, having all observed, made instant pace
Into the court; where all the peers he found,
And captains of Phaeacia, with cups crown'd
Offering to sharp-eyed Hermes, to whom last
They used to sacrifice, when sleep had cast
His inclination through their thoughts,
But these
Ulysses pass'd, and forth went; nor their eyes
Took note of him, for Pallas stopp'd the light With mists about him, that, unstay'd, he might First to Alcinous, and Arete, Present his person; and, of both them, she
By Pallas' counsel, was to have the grace Of foremost greeting. Therefore his embrace He cast about her knee. And then off flew
The heavenly air that hid him. When his view,
With silence and with admiration strook
The court quite through; but thus he silence broke:
"Divine Hecaxenor's offspring, Arete,
To thy most honour'd husband, and to thee,
* Mercury."
A man whom many labours have distrest
Is come for comfort, and to every guest:
To all whom heaven vouchsafe delightsome lives,
And after to your issue that survives
A good resignment of the goods ye leave,
With all the honour that yourselves receive Amongst your people. Only this of me
Is the ambition; that I may but see (By your vouchsafed means, and betimes vouchedaf)
My country earth; since I have long been left
To labours, and to errors, barr'd from end,
And far from benefit of any friend.""
He said no more, but left them dumb with that,
Went to the hearth, and in the ashes sat,
Aske the fire. At last their silence brake,
And Echaeus, th' old hero, spake;
A man that all Phaeacians pass'd in years,
And in persuasive eloquence all the peers, Knew much, and used it well; and thus spake he:
"Alcinous! it shews not decently,
Nor doth your honour what you see admit,
That this your guest should thus abjectly sit,
His chair the earth, the hearth his cushion,
Ashes as if approved for food. A throne, Adorn'd with due rites, stands you more in hand
To see his person placed in, and command
That instantly your heralds fill in wine,
That to the God that doth in lightnings shine
We may do sacrifice; for he is there,
Where these his reverend suppliants appear.
Let what you have within be brought abroad,
To sup the stranger. All these would have show'd
This fit respect to him, but that they stay For your precedence, that should grace the
way."
When this had added to the well-inclined
And sacred order of Alcinous' mind, Then of the great in wit the hand he seised,
And from the ashes his fair person raised,
Advanced him to a well-adorned throne,
And from his seat raised his most loved
son,
Laodamas, that next himself was set,
To give him place. The handmaid then did get An ewer of gold, with water fill'd, which placed
Upon a caldron, all with silver graced, She pour'd out on their hands. And then was spread
A table, which the butler set with bread,
As others served with other food the board,
In all the choice the present could afford.
Ulysses meat and wine took; and then thus
The king the herald call'd: "Pontoneus! Serve wine through all the house, that all may pay
Rites to the Lightener, who is still in way
With humble suppliants, and them pursues With all benign and hospitable dues." Pontoneus gave act to all he will'd,
And honey-sweetness-giving-minds* wine fill'd,
Disposing it in cups for all to drink.
All having drunk what either's heart could think.
Fit for due sacrifice. Alcinous said:
"Hear me, ye dukes that the Phaeacians lead,
And you our counsellors, that I may now Discharge the charge my mind suggests to
you,
For this our guest: Feast past, and this night's sleep,
Next morn, our senate summon'd, we will keep Jouists, sacred to the Gods, and this our guest
Receive in solemn court with fitting feast;
Then think of his return, that, under hand
Of our deduction, his natural land (Without more toil or care, and with delight,
And that soon given him, how far hence dissipate
Soever it can be) he may ascend;
And in the mean time without wrong attend,
Or other want, fit means to that ascent.†
What, after, austere Fates shall make th' event Of his life's thread, (now spinning, and began
When his pain'd mother freed his root of
man)
He must endure in all kinds. If some God
Perhaps abides with us in his abode,
And other things will think upon than we,
The Gods' wills stand; who ever yet were
free

† Ascent to his country's shore.
Of their appearance to us, when to them
We offer'd hecatombs of fit esteem,
And would at least sit with us, even where we Order'd our session. They would likewise be Encounterers of us, when in way alone
About his fit affairs went any one.
Nor let them cloak themselves in any care
To do us comfort, we as near them are,
As are the Cyclops*, or the impious race
Of earthy giants, that would heaven out-face.

Ulysses answer'd: "Let some other doubt Employ your thoughts than what your words give out,
Which intimate a kind of doubt that I Should shadow in this shape a Deity.
I bear no such least semblance, or in wit,
Virtue, or person. What may well beft
One of those mortals, whom you chiefly know
Bears up and down the burthen of the wo Appropriate to poor man, give that to me;
Of whose moans I sit in the most degree,
And might say more, sustaining grieves that all
The Gods consent to; no one 'twixt their fall
And my unpitied shoulders letting down
The least diversion. Be the grace then shown,
To let me taste your free-given food in peace.
Through greatest grief the belly must have ease;
Worse than an envious belly nothing is.
It will command his strict necessities,
Of men most grieved in body or in mind,
That are in health, and will not give their kind

* Bustahius will have this comparison of the Phæsicians with the Giants and Cyclops to proceed out of the inverentur virulence of Antinous to the Cyclops, who were cause (as is before said) of their remove from their country; and with great endeavour labours the approbation of it; but (under his peace) from the purpose: for the sense of the Poet is clear, that the Cyclops and Giants being in part the issue of the Gods, and yet afterward their defers, (as Polyp. hereafter dare profess) Antinous (out of bold and mainy reason, even to the face of one that might have been a God, for the past mainy appearance he made there) would tell him, and the rest in him, that if they grace those Cyclops with their open appearance, that, though descended from them, durst yet deny them, they might much more do them the honour of their open presence that adored them.

A desperate wound. When most with cause I grieve,
It bids me still, " Eat, man, and drink, and live;"
And this makes all forgot. Whatever ill
I ever bear, it ever bids me fill.
But this ease is but forced, and will not last,
Till what the mind likes be as well embraced;
And therefore let me wish you would partake
In your late purpose; when the morn shall make Her next appearance, deign me but the grace, Unhappy man, that I may once embrace My country earth. Though I be still thrust at By ancientills, yet make me but see that;
And then let life go, when withal I see My high-roof'd large house, lands, and family.
This all approved; and each will'd every one,
"Since he hath said so fairly, set him gone."
Feast past and sacrifice; to sleep all vow
Their eyes at either's house. Ulysses now
Was left here with Alcinous, and his Queen,
The all-loved Arete. The handmaids then
The vessel of the banquet took away.
When Arete set eye on his array;
Knew both his out and under weed, which she Made with her maids; and mused by what means he Obtain'd their wearing; which she made request
To know, and wings gave to these speeches: " Guest!
First let me ask, what, and from whence you are?
And then, who graced you with the weeds you wear?
Said you not lately, you had err'd at seas,
And thence arrived here?" Laertiates
To this thus answer'd: " 'Tis a pain, O Queen, Still to be opening wounds wrought deep and green,
Of which the Gods have open'd store in me;
Yet your will must be served. Far hence, at sea,
There lies an isle, that bears Ogygia's name,
Where Atlas' daughter, the ingenious dame,
Fair-hair'd Calypso lives; a Goddess grave,
And with whom men nor Gods society have:
Yet I, past man unhappy, lived alone,
By Heaven's wrath forced, her house companion.

For Jove had with a fervent lightning cleft
My ship in twain, and far at black sea left Me and my soldiers; all whose lives I lost.
I in mine arms the keel took, and was lost
Nine days together up from wave to wave.

The tenth grim night, the angry Deities drove Me and my wrack on th' isle, in which doth dwell

Dreadful Calypso; who exactly well Received and nourish'd me, and promise made
To make me deathless, nor should age invade
My powers with his deserts through all my days.

All moved not me, and therefore, on her stays,
Seven years she made me lie; and there spent I

The long time, steeping in the misery
Of ceaseless tears the garments I did wear,
From her fair hand. The eighth revolved year (Or by her changed mind, or by charge of Jove)

She gave provoked way to my wish'd remove,
And in a many-jointed ship, with wine
Dainty in savour, bread, and weeds divine.
Sign'd, with a harmless and sweet wind,
My pass.

Then seventeen days at sea I homeward was,
And by the eighteenth the dark hills appear'd

That your earth thrusts up. Much my heart was cheer'd, Unhappy man, for that was but a beam,
To show I yet had agonies extreme
To put in sufferance, which th' Earth-shaker sent,

Crossing my way with tempests violent,
Unmeasured seas up-lifting; nor would give The billows leave to let my vessel live
The least time quiet; that even sigh'd to bear

Their bitter outrage, which, at last, did tear
Her sides in pieces, set on by the winds.

I yet through-swam the waves that your shore binds,
Till wind and water threw me up to it:
When, coming forth, a ruthless billow smit Against huge rocks, and an accessibly shore.

My mangied body. Back again I bore,
And swum till I was fall'n upon a flood,
Whose shores, methought, on good advantage stood

For my receipt, rock-free, and fenced from wind;
And this I put for, gathering up my mind.
Then the divine night came, and treading earth,

Close by the flood that had from Jove her birth,
Within a thicket I repos'd; when round
I ruffled up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate.
And here my heart, long time exeruciate.

Amongst the leaves I rested all that night,
Even till the morning and meridian light.
The sun declining then, delightsome sleep
No longer laid my temples in his steep;
But forth I went, and on the shore might see

Your daughter's maids play. Like a Deity
She shined above them; and I pray'd to her,
And she in disposition did prefer Noblest, and wisdom, no more low than might Become the goodness of a Goddess' height.

Nor would you therefore hope, supposed distrest

As I was then, and old, to find the least Of any grace from her, being younger far.

With young folks Wisdom makes her commerce rare.
Yet she in all abundance did bestow
Both wine,* that makes the blood in humans grow,
And food; and bathed me in the flood; and gave

The weeds to me which now ye see me have.
This through my griefs I tell you, and 'tis true.

Alone answer'd: "Guest! my daughter knew Least of what most you give her; nor became
The course she took, to let with every dame

* Altoq oivis, Vinum calcacendî vim habens.
Your person lackey; nor hath with them brought Yourself home too; which first you had besought."
"O blame her not," said he, "heroical lord,
Nor let me hear against her worth a word.
She faultless is, and wish’d I would have gone
With all her women home, but I alone
Would venture my receipt here; having fear
And to prevent all accidents that were
Of likely issue; both your wrath to move,
And to inflame the common people’s love
Of speaking ill, to which they soon give place.

We men are all a most suspicious race."
"My guest," said he, "I use not to be stirr’d
To wrath too rashly: and where are preferr’d
To men’s conceits things that may both ways fail,
The noblest ever should the most prevail.
Would love our Father, Pallas, and the Sun,
That were still as now, and could but run
One fate with me, you would my daughter wed,
And be my son-in-law: still vow’d to lead
Your rest of life here. I a house would give,
And household goods, so freely you would live,
Confined with us. But ’gainst your will shall none Contain you here, since that were violence done
To love our Father. For your passage home,
That you may well know we can overcome
So great a voyage, thus it shall succeed:
To-morrow shall our men take all their heed,
While you securely sleep, to see the seas
In calmest temper; and, if that will please,
Shew you your country and your house ere night,
Though far beyond Euboza be that sight.

And this Euboza, as our subjects say
That have been there and seen, is far away, Farthest from us of all the parts they know;
And made the trial when they help’d to row
The gold-lock’d Rhadamanth, to give him view
Of earth-born Tityus; whom their speeds did shew.
In that far-off Euboza, the same day
They set from hence; and home made good their way
With ease again, and him they did convey.
Which I report to you, to let you see How swift my ships are, and how matchlessly
My young Phaeacians with their ours prevail.
To beat the sea through, and assist a sail."
This cheer’d Ulysses, who in private pray’d:
"I would to love our Father, what he said,
He could perform at all parts; he should then;
Be glorified for ever, and I gain
My natural country." This discourse they had;
When fair-arm’d Areté her handmaids bade
A bed make in the portico, and ply
With clothes, the covering tapestry,
The blankets purple; well-napp’d waistcoats too,
To wear for more warmth. What these had to do,
They torches took and did. The bed they purvey’d.
They moved Ulysses for his rest, and said:
"Come guest, your bed is fit, now frame to rest."

Motion of sleep was gracious to their guest;
Which now he took profoundly, being laid Within a loop-hole tower, where was convey’d
The sounding portico. The King took rest
In a retired part of the house; where drest
The Queen herself a bed, and trundle-bed,
And by her lord reposèd her reverend head.

THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Peers of the Phaeacian State
A Council call, to console
Ulysses with all means for home.
The Council to a banquet come,
Invited by the King. Which done,
Assays for hurling of the stone
The youths make with the stranger-king.
Demodocus, at least, doth sing
'Th' adultery of the God of Arms
With Her that rules in amorous charms;
And after sings the entercourse
Of acts about th' Epean horse.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Ωξε. The council's frame
At fleet applied.
In strifes of game
Ulysses tried.

Now when the rosy-finger'd Morn arose,
The sacred power Alcinous did dispose Did likewise rise; and, like him, left his ease
The city-razer Laertides.
The Council at the navy was design'd;
To which Alcinous, with the sacred mind,
Came first of all. On polish'd stones they sate, Near to the navy. To increase the state,
Minerva took the herald's form on her,
That served Alcinous, studious to prefer Ulysses' suit for home. About the town
She made quick way, and fill'd with the renown
Of that design the ears of every man, Proclaiming thus: 'Peers Phaeacians! And men of Council, all haste to the court,
To hear the stranger that made late resort
To king Alcinous, long time lost at sea,
And s in person like a Dryly.'
This all their powers set up, and spirit instill'd,
And straight the court and seats with men were fill'd.
The whole state wonder'd at Laertes' son,
When they beheld him. Pallas put him on A supernatural and heavenly dress;
Enlarged him with a height, and goodliness
In breast and shoulders, that he might appear Gracious, and grave, and reverend; and bear
A perfect hand on his performance there
In all the trials they resolved to impose.
All met, and gather'd in attention close,
Alcinous thus bespake them: "Dukes, and lords,
Hear me digest my hearty thoughts in words.
This stranger here, whose travels found my court,
I know not, nor can tell if his resort
From East or West comes; but his suit is this:
That to his country-earth we would dismiss
His hither-forced person, and doth bear
The mind to pass it under every peer;
Whom I prepare, and stir up, making known
My free desire of his deduction.
Nor shall there ever any other man
That tries the goodness Phaeacian
In me, and my court's entertainment, stay,
Mourning for passage, under least delay.
Come then, a ship into the sacred seas,
New-buil'd, now launch we; and from out our prease
Choose two-and-fifty youths, of all, the best.
To use an oar. All which see straight impress,
And in their car-bound seats. Let others ride Home to our court, commanding instantly
The solemn preparation of a feast,
In which provision may for any guest
Be made at my charge. Charge of these low things
I give our youth. You, sceptre-bearing kings, Consort me home, and help with grace to use
This quest of ours; no one man shall refuse.
Some other of you haste, and call to us
The sacred singer, grave Demodocus,
To whom hath God given song, that can excite
The heart of whom he listeth with delight."
This said, he led. The sceptre-bearers Their free attendance; and with all speed went
The herald for the sacred man in song,
Youths two-and-fifty, chosen from the throng,
Went, as was will'd, to the untamed sea's shore;
Where come, they launch'd the ship, the mast it bore Advanced, sails hoised, every seat his oar Gave with a leather thong. The deep moist then They further reach'd. The dry streets
Flow'd with men,
That troop'd up to the king's capacious court,
Whose porticoes were choked with the resort
Where walls were hung with men, young, old, trust there
In mighty concourse; for whose promised cheer
Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine, Two crook-haunch'd beeves; which feed and dress'd, divine
The show was of so many a jovial guest,
All set together at so set a feast.
To whose accomplish'd state the herald then
The lovely singer led; who past all mean
The Muse affected, gave him good and ill,
His eyes put out, but put in soul at will.
His place was given him in a chair all graced
With silver studs, and 'gainst a pillar placed;
Where, as the centre to the state, he rests,
And round about the circle of the guests.
The herald on a pin above his head
His soundful harp hung, to whose height he led His hand for taking of it down at will;
A board set by with food, and forth did fill
A bowl of wine, to drink at his desire.
The rest then fell to feast, and, when the fire
Of appetite was quench'd, the Muse inflamed
The sacred singer. Of men highest famed
He sung the glories, and a poem penn'd,
That in applause did ample heaven ascend.
Whose subject was, the stern contention
Betwixt Ulysses and great Thetis's son,
As, at a banquet sacred to the Gods.
In dreadful language they express'd their odds.
When Agamemnon sat rejoiced in soul
To hear the Greek peers jar in terms so foul;
For augur Phcebus in presage had told The King of men (desirous to unfold
The war's perplex'd end, and being therefore gone
In heavenly Pythia to the porch of stone,
That then the end of all griefs should begin "Twixt Greece and Troy, when Greece (with strife to win
That wish'd conclusion) in her kings should jar,
And plead, if force or wit must end the war.
This brave contention did the poet sing,
Expressing so the spleen of either king,
That his large purple weed Ulysses held.
Before his face and eyes, since thence distill'd Tears uncontain'd; which he obscured, in fear
To let th' observing presence note a tear.
But, when his sacred song the mere divine
Had given an end, a goblet crown'd with wine Ulysses, drying his wet eyes, did seize,
And sacrificed to those Gods* that would please
'T inspire the poet with a song so fit
To do him honour, and renown his wit.
His tears then stay'd. But when again began,
By all the kings' desires, the moving man,
Again Ulysses could not choose but yield
To that soft passion, which again, withheld.
He kept so cunningly from sight, that none (Except Alcinous himself alone)
Discern'd him moved so much. But he sat next,
And heard him deeply sigh; which his pretext
Could not keep hid from him. Yet he conceal'd His utterance of it, and would have it held

THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEY.

From all the rest, brake off the song, and this Said to those ear-affecting peers of his:
"Princes, and peers! we now are satiate
With sacred song, that fits a feast of state;
With wine, and food. Now then to field,
and try
In all kinds our approved activity;
That this our guest may give his friends to know,
In his return, that we as little owe
To fights and wrestlings, leaping, speed of race,
As these our court-rites; and commend our grace In all to all superior." Forth he led,
The peers and people troop'd up to their head.
Nor must Demodocus be left within;
Whose harp the herald hung upon the pin,
His hand in his took, and abroad he brought The heavenly Poet, out the same way wrought
That did the Princes, and what they would see With admiration, with his company They wish'd to honour. 'To the place of game
These throng'd; and after, routs of other came
Of all sort, infinite. Of youths that strove, Many and strong rose to their trial's love.
Up rose Acroneus,* and Ocyalus, Elatreus, Prymneus, and Anchialus, Nautesus, Ethreus, Thoon, Proreus, Fonteus, and the strong Amphialus, Son to Teetonides Polyneus. Up rose to these the great Euryalus, In action like the homicide of war. Naubollides, that was for person far Past all the rest, but one he could not pass, Nor any thought improve, Laodamas, Up Anabesineus then arose; And three sons of the Sceptre-state, and those Were Hallius, and fore-praised Laodamas, And Clytoneus like a God in grace.

These first the foot-game tried, and from the lists Took start together. Up the dust in mists They hurli'd about, as in their speed they flew;
But Clytoneus first of all the crew A stitch's length in any fallow field Made good his pace; when, where the judges yield The prize and praise, his glorious speed arrived.
Next, for the boisterous wrestling game they strived;
At which Eurialus the rest outshone. At leap Amphialus. At the hollow stone Elatreus excelled. At buffets, last, Laodamas, the king's fair son, surpass'd. When all had striven in these assays their fill, Laodamas said: "Come friends, let's prove what skill This stranger hath attain'd to in our sport.
Methinks, he must be of the active sort, His calves, thighs, hands, and well-knit shoulders show That Nature disposition did bestow To fit with fact their form. Nor wants he prize. But sour affliction, made a mate with time, Makes time the more seen. Nor imagine I, A worse thing to enforce debility Than is the sea; though nature ne'er so strong Knits one together." "Nor conceive you wrong," Replied Eurialus, "but prove his blood With what you question." In the midst then stood Renown'd Laodamas, and proved him thus: "Come, stranger-father, and assay with us Your powers in these contentions. If your show Be answer'd with your worth, 'tis fit that you Should know these conflicts. Nor doth glory stand On any worth more, in a man's command, Than to be strenuous both of foot and hand. Come then, make proof with us, discharge your mind Of discontentments; for not far behind
The Eighth Book of Homer's Odysseys.

Comes your deduction.* Ship is ready now, And men, and all things." "Why," said he, "dost thou Mock me, Laodamas! and these strifes bind My powers to answer? I am more inclined To cares than conflict. Much sustain'd I have, And still am suffering. I come here to crave, In your assemblies, means to be dismiss'd, And pray both kings and subjects to assist." Euryalus an open brawl began, And said: "I take thee, sir, for no such man As fits these honour'd strifes. A number more Strange men there are that I would choose before. To one that loves to lie a ship-board much, Or is the prince of sailors; or to such As traffic far and near, and nothing mind But freight, and passage, and a foreright wind; Or to a victualler of a ship; or men That set up all their powers for rampant gain: I can compare, or hold you like to be: But, for a wrestler, or of quality Fit for contentions noble, you abhor From worth of any such competitor." Ulysses, frowning, answer'd: "Stranger! far Thy words are from the fashions regular Of kind, or honour. Thou art in thy guise Like to a man that authors injuries.† I see, the Gods to all men give not all Manly addiction, wisdom, words that fall, Like dice, upon the square still. Some man takes Ill form from parents; but God often makes That fault of form up with observed repair Of pleasing speech, that makes him held for fair, That makes him speak securely, makes him shine In an assembly with a grace divine. Men take delight to see how evenly lie His words as teep in honey modesty. Another, then, hath fashion like a God, But in his language he is foul and broad:

And such art thou. A person fair is given, But nothing else is in thee sent from heaven; For in thee lurks a base and earthy soul, And 't has compell'd me, with a speech most foul, To be thus bitter. I am not unseen In these fair strifes, as thy words overween, But in the first rank of the best I stand; At least I did, when youth and strength of hand Made me thus confident; but now am worn With toils and labours, as a man born To bear all anguish. Suffer'd much I have: The war of men, and the inhumane wave, Have I driven through at all parts: but with all My waste in suffrance, what yet may fall In my performance at these strifes I'll try; Thy speech hath moved, and made my wrath run high." This said, with robe and all, he grasp'd a stone, A little graver than was ever thrown By these Phaeacians in their wrestling rout, More firm, more massy; which, turn'd round about, He hurried him with a hand so strong It sung, and flew, and over all the throng, (That at the others' marks stood) quite it went; Yet down fell all beneath it, fearing speat The force that drove it flying from his hand As it a dart were, or a walking wand; And far past all the marks of all the rest His wing stole way; when Pallas straight unprist A mark at fall of it, resembling then One of the navy-given Phaeacian men, And thus advanced Ulysses: "One, though blind, O stranger, groping, may thy stone's fall find, For not amidst the rout of marks it fell, But far before all. Of thy worth think well, And stand in all strifes. No Phaeacian here This bound can either better or come near." Ulysses joy'd to hear that one man yet Used him benignly, and would truth abet In those contentions; and then thus smooth He took his speech down: "Reach me that now, youth,
THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEY.

You shall, and straight I think, have one such more,
And one beyond it too. And now, whose core Stands sound and great within him, since ye have Thus put my spleen up, come again and brave
The guest ye tempted, with such gross
disgrace,
At wrestling, buffets, whirlbat, speed of race;
At all, or either: I except at none,
But urge the whole state of you; only one,
I will not challenge in my forced boast,
And that's Laodamas,* for he's mine host.
And who will fight, or wrangle, with his friend?
Unwise he is, and base, that will contend With him that feeds him in a foreign
place;
And takes all edge off from his own sought
grace.
None else except I here, nor none despise,
But wish to know, and prove his faculties,
That dares appear now. No strife ye can name
Am I unskill'd in; reckon any game
Of all that are, as many as there are In use with men. For archery I dare Affirm myself not mean. Of all a troop I'll make the first foe with mine arrow stope,
Though with me ne'er so many fellows bend
Their bows at mark'd men, and affect their end.
Only was Philoctetes with his bow Still my superior, when we Greeks would
show
Our archery against our foes of Troy.
But all, that now by bread frail life enjoy,
I far hold my inferiors. Men of old,
None now alive shall witness me so bold
To vaunt equality with such men as these,
Echalian Eurytus, Hercules,
Who with their bows durst with the Gods contend;
And therefore caught Eurytus soon his end,

Nor died at home, in age, a reverend man;
But by the great incensed Delphian
Was shot to death, for daring competence
With him in all an archer's excellence.
A spear I'll hurl as far as any man Shall shoot a shaft. How at a race I can Bestir my feet, I only yield to fear,
And doubt to meet with my superior here.
So many seas so too much have misused My limbs for race, and therefore have diffused
A dissolution through my loved knees."
This said, he still'd all talking properties.
Alcinous only answer'd: "O my guest,
In good part take we what you have been pcrest
With speech to answer. You would make appear
Your virtues therefore, that will still shine
where
Your only look is. Yet must this man give Your worth ill language; when, he does not live
In sort of mortals (whenceso'er he springs, That judgment hath to speak becoming things)
That will deprave your virtues. Note then
now
My speech, and what my love presents to
you;
That you may tell heroes, when you come to banquet with your wife and birth at
home,
(Mindful of our worth) what deserves your Hath put on our parts likewise, in remove From sire to son, as an inherent grace Kind, and perpetual. We must needs give place
To other countrymen, and freely yield
We are not blameless in our fights of field, Buffets, nor wrestlings; but in speed of feet,
And all the equipage that fits a fleet,
We boast us best; for table ever spread
With neighbour feasts, for garments varied.
For poesy, music, dancing, baths, and beds.
And now, Phaeacians, you that bear your heads
And feet with best grace in enamouring dance,
Enflame our guest here, that he may advance
Our worth past all the world's to his home
friends,
As well for the unmatch'd grace that commends
Your skills in footing of a dance, as their
That fly a race best. And so, all affairs
At which we boast us best, he best may try,
As sea-race, land-race, dance, and poesy.
Some one with instant speed to Court retire,
And fetch Demodoc his soundful lyre."
This said the God-graced king; and quite resort
Pontonous made for that fair harp to Court,
Nine of the lot-choos'd public rulers rose,
That all in those contention did dispose,
Commanding a most smooth ground, and a wide,
And all the people in fair game aside.
Then with the rich harp came Pontonous,
And in the midst took place Demodocus.
About him then stood forth the choice young men,
That on man's first youth made fresh entry then,
Had art to make their natural motion sweet,
And shook a most divine dance from their feet,
That twinkled* star-like, moved as swift, and fine,
And beat the air so thin, they made it shine.†
Ulysses wonder'd at it, but amazed
He stood in mind, to hear the dance so phrased.
For, as they danced, Demodocus did sing,
The bright-crown'd Venus' love with Battle's king:
As first they closely mix'd in th' house of fire.
What worlds of gifts won her to his desire,
Who then the night and day-bed did defile
Of good king Vulcan. But in little while The Sun their mixture saw, and came and told.
The bitter news did by his ears take hold Of Vulcan's heart. Then to his forge he went,
And in his shrewd mind deep stuff did invent.
His mighty anvil in the stock he put,
And forged a net that none could loose or cut,
That when it had them, it might hold them fast.
Which having finish'd, he made utmost haste

Up to the dear room where his wife he woo'd,
And, madly wrath with Mars, he all bestrow'd
The bed, and bed-posts, all the beam above,
That cross'd the chamber; and a circle strove
Of his device to wrap in all the room.
And 'twas as pure, as of a spider's loom
The web before 'tis woven. No man nor God Could set his eye on it, a sleight so odd
His art shew'd in it. All his craft bespent
About the bed, he feign'd as if he went To well-built Lemnos, his most loved town
Of all towns earthly; nor left this unknown
To golden-bridle-using Mars, who kept
No blind watch over him, but, seeing stopt
His rival so aside, he hasted home
With fair-wreathed Venus' love stung, who was come
New from the Court of her most mighty Sire.
Mars enter'd, wrung her hand, and the retire
Her husband made to Lemnos told; and said:
"Now, love, is Vulcan gone, let us to bed, He's for the barbarous Sintians." Well appay'd Was Venus with it; and afresh assay'd
Their old encounter. Down they went; and straight About them cling'd the artificial sleight
Of most wise Vulcan; and were so ensnared,
That neither they could stir their course prepared
In any limb about them, nor arise.
And then they knew, they would no more disguise
Their close conveyance, but lay, forced, stone-still.
Back rush'd the both-foot-crook'd, but straight in skill,
From his near scout-hole turn'd, nor ever went
To any Lemnos, but the sure event
Left Phoebus to discover, who told all.
Then home hopp'd Vulcan, full of grief and gall, Stood in the portal, and cried out so high,
That all the Gods heard: "Father of the sky,
And every other deathless God," said he,
"Come all, and a ridiculous object see,
And yet not sufferable neither. Come,
And witness how, when still I step from home,

* Μαραμπόγης σώδων. Μαραμπόγη signifies splendor vibrans; a twinkled splendid: μαραμπογίωσαν, vibrare rotutis radiis solares.
† Air rarefied turns first.
Lame that I am, Jove's daughter doth profess
To do me all the shameful offices,
Indulgences, despite, that can be thought;
And loves this all-things-making-come-to-nought.

Since he is fair forsooth, foot-sound, and I Took in my brain a little, legg'd awry;
And no fault mine, but all my parents' fault.
Who should not get, if mock me with my half?
But see how fast they sleep, while I, in mean,
Am only made an idle looker-on.
One bed their turn serves, and it must be given;
I think yet, I have made their self-loves shine.
They shall no more wrong me, and none perceive;
Nor will they sleep together, I believe,
With too hot haste again. Thus both shall lie
In craft and force, till the extremity
Of all the dower I gave her site (to gain
A dogged set-faced girl, that will not stain
Her face with blushing, though she shame her head).
He pays me back. She's fair, but was no maid.

While this long speech was making, all were come
To Vulcan's wholly-brason-founded home.
Earth-shaking Neptune, useful Mercury,
And fast-shot Phœbus, No She-Deity,
For shame, would show there. All the giv'n-good Gods Stood in the portal, and past periods
Gave length to laughter; all rejoiced to see That which they said, that no impiety Finds good success at th' end. "And now," said one,
"The slow outgoes the swift. Lame Vulcan, known To be the slowest of the Gods, outgoes Mars the most swift. And this is that which grows To greatest justice: that adultery's sport, Obtain'd by craft, by craft of other sort (And lame craft too) is plagued, which grieves the more,
That sound limbs turning lame the lame* restore."

* Intending them sound of foot, when they outgo the soundest.

This speech amongst themselves they entertain'd;
When Phœbus thus ask'd Hermes: "Thus enclain'd Wouldst thou be, Hermes, to be thus disclosed?
Though with thee golden Venus were repos'd?"
He soon gave that an answer: "O," said he,
"Thou king of archers, wouldst were thus with me.
Though thrice so much shame; nay, though infinite
Were pour'd about me, and that every light,
In great heaven shining, witness'd all my harms.
So golden Venus slumber'd in mine arms."
The Gods again laugh'd; even the watery state Wring out a laughter, but propitiate
Was still for Mars, and pray'd the God of fire
He would dissolve him, offering the desire
He made to Jove to pay himself, and said,
All due debts should be by the Gods repa'd.
"Pay me no words," said he, "where deeds lend pain,
Wretched the words are given for wretched men.
How shall I bind you in th' Immortals' sight,
If Mars be once loosed, nor will pay his right?"
"Vulcan," said he, "if Mars should fly, nor see Thy right repaid, it should be paid by me."
"Your word, so given, I must accept," said he.
Which said, he loosed them. Mars then rush'd from sky,
And stoop'd cold Thrace. The laughing Deity
For Cyprus was, and took her Paphian state, Where she a grove, ne'er cut, hath consecrate.
All with Arabian odours fumed, and hath An altar there, at which the Graces bathe,
And with immortal balms besmoothe her skin,
Fit for the bliss Immortals solace in;
Deck'd her in to-be-studied attire,
And apt to set beholders' hearts on fire.

* This is τὸ τὰ μυκὰ μεγάλα, &c. Parus magni discretion; grave sentence out of lightest vapour.
This sung the sacred Muse, whose notes and words
The dancers' feet kept as his hands his chords.
Ulysses much was pleased, and all the crew.
This would the king have varied with a new And pleasing measure, and performed by Two, with whom none would strive in dancery;
And those his sons were, that must therefore dance
Alone, and only to the harp advance Without the words. And this sweet couple was Young Hallus and divine Laodamas; Who danced a ball dance. Then the rich-wrought ball,
(That Polybus had made, of purple all)
They took to hand. One threw it to the sky,
And then danced back; the other, capering high,
Would surely catch it ere his foot touch'd
ground,
And up again advanced it, and so found
The other cause of dance; and then did he Dance lofty tricks, till next it came to be His turn to catch, and serve the other still.
When they had kept it up to either's will,
They then danced ground tricks, oft mix'd hand in hand,
And did so gracefully their change command,
That all the other youth that stood at pause,
With deafening shouts, gave them the great applause.
Then said Ulysses: "O past all men here
Clear, not in power, but in desert as clear,
You said your dancers did the world surpass,
And they perform it clear, and to amaze."
This won Alcinous' heart, and equal prize
He gave Ulysses, saying: "Matchless wise, Princes and rulers, I perceive our guest,
And therefore let our hospitable best
In fitting gifts be given him: twelve chief kings
There are that order all the glorious things
Of this our kingdom; and, the thirteenth, I Exist, as crown to all. Let instantly
Be thirteen garments given him, and of gold Precious and fine, a talent. While we hold
This our assembly, be all fetch'd, and given,
That to our feast prepared, as to his heaven,
Our guest may enter. And, that nothing be Left unperform'd that fits his dignity, Euryalus shall here conciliate
Himself with words and gifts, since past our rate
He gave bad language." This did all commend And give in charge; and every king did send His herald for his gift. Euryalus, Answering for his part, said: "Alcinous! Our chief of all, since you command, I will
To this our guest by all means reconcile,
And give him this entirely-metall'd sword,
The handle massy silver, and the board,
That gives it cover, all of ivory,
New, and in all kinds worth his quality."
This put he straight into his hand, and said:
"Frolie, O guest and father; if words fled Have been offensive, let swift whirlwinds take And ravish them from thought. May all Gods make Thy wife's sight good to thee, in quick retreat
To all thy friends, and best-loved breeding seat,
Their long miss quitting with the greater joy;
In whose sweet vanish all thy worst annoy."
"And frolie thou to all height, friend," said he.
"Which heaven confirm with wish'd felicity:
Nor ever give again desire to thee
Of this sword's use, which with affects so free,
In my reclaim, thou hast bestow'd on me."
This said, awhart his shoulders he put on The right fair sword; and then did set the sun.
When all the gifts were brought, which back again

Were by the honour'd heralds borne to Court;
Which his fair sons took, and from the resort
Laid by their reverend mother. Each his throne

THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

In king Alcinous’ command ascended;
Whom he to pass as much in gifts contended,
And to his queen said: “Wife! see brought me here
The fairest cabinet I have, and there
Impose a well-cleanse’d in and utter weed;
A caldron heat with water, that with speed
Our guest well-bath’d, and all his gifts made sure.
It may a joyful appetite procure
To his succeeding feast, and make him hear,
The poet’s hymn with the securer ear.
To all which I will add my bowl of gold,
In all frame curious, to make him hold
My memory always dear; and sacrifice
With it at home to all the Deities.”
Then Arete her maids charged to set on A well-sized caldron quickly. Which was done; Clear water pour’d in, flame made so entire,
It gilt the brass, and made the water fire.
In mean space, from her chamber brought the queen
A wealthy cabinet, where, pure and clean,
She put the garments, and the gold bestow’d
By that free State, and then the other vow’d
By her Alcinous, and said: “Now, guest,
Make close and fast your gifts, lest, when you rest
A ship-board sweetly, in your way you meet
Some loss, that less may make your next sleep sweet.”
This when Ulysses heard, all sure he made,
Enclosed and bound safe; for the saving trade
The reverend for her wisdom, Circe, had In fore-years taught him. Then the handmaid bade His worth to bathing; which rejoiced his heart,
For, since he did with his Calypso part,
He had no hot baths; none had favour’d him,
Nor been so tender of his kingly limb.
But all the time he spent in her abode,
He lived respected as he were a God.
Cleansed then and balm’d, fair shirt and robe put on,
Fresh come from bath, and to the feasters gone, Nausicaa, that from the Gods’ hands took
The sovereign beauty of her blessed look,
Stood by a well-carved column of the room,
And through her eye her heart was overcome
With admiration of the port imprest
In his aspect, and said: “God save you, guest!
Be cheerful, as in all the future state
Your home will shew you in your better fate.
But yet, even then, let this remember’d be,
Your life’s price I lent, and you owe it me.”
The varied in all counsels gave reply:
“Nausicaa! flower of all this empery!
So Juno’s husband, that the strife for noise
Makes in the clouds, bless me with strife of joys.
In the desired day that my house shall show,
As I, as to a Goddess there shall vow,
To thy fair hand that did my being give,
Which I’ll acknowledge every hour I live.”
This said, Alcinous placed him by his side.
Then took they feast, and did in parts divide
The several dishes, fill’d out wine, and then
The strived-for, for his worth, of worthy men,
And reverenced of the State, Demodocus,
Was brought in by the good Pontonus.
In midst of all the guests they gave him place,
Against a lofty pillar; when this grace
The graced with wisdom did him: From the chine,
That stood before him, of a white-tooth’d swine,
Being far the daintiest joint, mix’d through with fat.
He carv’d to him, and sent it where he sat
By his old friend the herald, willing thus:
“Herald, reach this to grave Demodocus,
Say, I salute him, and his worth embrace.
Poets deserve, past all the human race,
Reverend respect and honour; since the queen
Of knowledge, and the supreme worth in men,
The Muse, informs them, and loves all their race.”
This reach’d the herald to him, who the grace Received encouraged; which, when feast was spent, Ulysses ampliﬁed to this ascent: “Demodocus! I must prefer you far,
Past all your sort; if, or the Muse of war,

He sung, besides, the Greeks' eruption
From those their hollow crafts, and horse foregone;
And how they made depopulation tread
Beneath her feet so high a city's head.
In which affair, he sung in other place,
That of that ambush some man else did make
The Ilion towers than Laertiae's;
But here he sung, that he alone did seize,
With Menelaus, the ascended roof
Of Prince Deiphobus, and Mars-like proof
Made of his valour; a most dreadful fight Daring against him; and there vanquish'd quite.
In little time, by great Minerva's aid,
All Ilion's remnant, and Troy level laid.
This the divine expressor did so give Both act and passion, that he made it live,
And to Ulysses' facts did breathe a fire
So deadly'ly quickening, that it did inspire
Old death with life, and render'd life so sweet,
And passionate, that all there felt it fleet;
Which made him pity his own cruelty,
And put into that ruth so pure an eye
Of human frailty, that to see a man Could so revive from death, yet no way can Defend from death,—his own quick powers it made Feel there death's horrors, and he felt life fade,
In tears his feeling brain swet; for, in things
That move past utterance, tears ope all their springs.
Nor are there in the powers that all life bears
More true interpreters of all than tears.
And as a lady mourns her sole-loved lord,
That fall'n before his city by the sword,
Fighting to rescue from a cruel fate
His town and children, and in dead estate
Yet panting, seeing him, wraps him in her arms, Weeps, shrieks, and pours her health into his arms,
Lies on him, striving to become his shield
From foes that still assail him, spears impell'd Through back and shoulders, by whose points embrued,
They raise and lead him into servitude,

* As by the divine fury directly inspired so,
for Ulysses' glory.
† In that the slaughters he made were expressed so lively.

THE EIGHTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Labour, and languor; for all which the dame
Eats down her cheeks with tears, and feeds life's flame
With miserable sufferance; so this king
Of tear-sweet anguish oped a boundless spring;
Nor yet was seen to any one man there But king Alcinous, who sat so near He could not 'scape him, sighs, so choked, so broke
From all his tempers; which the king did take Both note and grave respect of, and thus spake:
"Hear me, Phaeacian councillors and peers,
And cease Demodocus; perhaps all ears
Are not delighted with his song; for, ever Since the divine Muse sung, our guest hath never Contain'd from secret mournings. It may fall
That something sung he hath been grieved within,
As touching his particular. Forbear,
That feast may jointly comfort all hearts
here,
And we may cheer our guest up; 'tis our best
In all due honour. For our reverend guest
Is all our celebration, gifts, and all,
His love hath added to our festival.
A guest, and suppliant too, we should esteem
Dear as our brother; one that doth but dream
He hath a soul, or touch but at a mind Deathless and manly, should stand so inclined.
Nor cloak you longer with your curious wit,
Loved guest, what ever we shall ask of it.
It now stands on your honest state to tell,
And therefore give your name, nor more conceal
What of your parents, and the town that bears
Name of your native, or of foreigners That near us border, you are call'd in fame.
There's no man living walks without a
name,
Noble nor base, but had one from his birth Imposed as fit as to be borne. What earth,
People, and city, own you? give to know.
Tell but our ships all, that your way must
show.

For our ships* know th' expressed minds of
men,
And will so most intentively retain Their scopes appointed, that they never err,
And yet use never any man to steer,
Nor any rudders have, as others need.
They know men's thoughts, and whither 'tends their speed,
And there will set them; for you cannot
name
A city to them, nor fat soil, that Fame
Hath any notice given, but well they know,
And will fly to them, though they ebb and flow
In blackest clouds and nights; and never bear
Of any wrack or rock the slenderest fear.
But this I heard my sire Nausithous say, Long since, that Neptune, seeing us convey So safely passengers of all degrees,
Was angry with us; and upon our seas
A well-built ship we had, near harbour
come
From safe deduction of some stranger
home,
Made in his flitting billows stick stone still;
And dimm'd our city, like a mighty hill With shade east round about it. This report,
The old king* made; in which miraculous sort,
If God had done such things, or left undone.
At his good pleasure be it. But now, on,
And truth relate us; both [from] whence you err'd,
And to what clime of men would be transferr'd,
With all their fair towns, be they as they
are;
If rude, unjust, and all irregular,
Or hospitable, bearing minds that please
The mighty Deity. Which one of these You would be set at, say, and you are
there.
And therefore what afflicts you? why, to hear

* This repepology or affirmation of miracles, how impossible soever in these times assured, yet in those ages they were neither absurd nor strange. Those inanimate things having (it seemed) certain Genii, in whose powers, they supposed their ships' faculties. As others have affirmed oaks to have sense of hearing; and so the ship of Argos, was said to have a mast made of Dodonean oak, that was vocal, and could speak.
† Intending his father Nausithous.
The fate of Greece and Ilion, mourn you so?
The Gods have done it; as to all they do Destine destruction, that from thence may rise
A poem to instruct posterities.
Fell any kinsman before Ilion?
Some worthy sire-in-law, or like-near son,

Whom next our own blood and self-race we love?
Or any friend perhaps, in whom did move
A knowing soul, and no unpleasing thing?
Since such a good one is no underling
To any brother; for, what fits true friends, True wisdom is, that blood and birth transcend."
THE NINTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses here is first made known;
Who tells the stern contention
His powers did 'gainst the Cicones try;
And thence to the Lotophagi
Extends his conquest; and from them
Assays the Cyclop Polyphemus,
And, by the crafts his wits apply,
He puts him out his only eye.

ANOTHER.

Torna. The strangely fed
Lotophagi.
The Cicones fed.
The Cyclop's eye.

Ulysses thus resolved the king's demands:
"Alcinous, in whom this empire stands,
You should not of so natural right disheerit
Your princely feast, as take from it the spirit.
To hear a poet, that in accent brings
The Gods' breasts down, and breathes them as he sings,
Is sweet, and sacred;* nor can I conceive In any common-weal, what more doth give Note of the just and blessed empery,
Than to see comfort universally Cheer up the people, when in every roof
She gives observers a most human proof
Of men's contents. To see a neighbour's feast Adorn it through; and theret bear the breast
Of the divine Muse; men in order set;
A wine-page* waiting; tables crown'd with meat,
Set close to guests that are to use it skill'd;
The cup-boards furnish'd, and the cups still fill'd;
This shews, to my mind, most humanely fair,
Nor should you, for me, still the heavenly air,

That stir'd my soul so; for I love such tears
As fall from fit notes, beaten through mine ears
With recitations of what heaven hath done,
And break from hearty apprehension
Of God and goodness, though they shew my ill.
And therefore doth my mind excite me still,
To tell my bleeding moan; but much more now,
To serve your pleasure, that to over-flow
My tears with such cause may by sighs be driven,
Though ne'er so much plagued I may seem by heaven.
And now my name; which way shall lead to all My miseries after, that their sounds may fall Through your ears also, and shew (having fied
So much affliction) first, who rests his head
In your embraces, when, so far from home,
I knew not where I obtain it resting-room.
I am Ulysses Laertides,
The fear of all the world for policies,
For which my facts as high as heaven resound.
I dwell in Ithaca, earth's most renown'd,
All over-shadow'd with the shake-leaf* hill,
Tree-famed Neritus; whose near confines fill Islands a number, well-inhabited,
That under my observance taste their bread;
Dulichius, Samos, and the full-of-food* Zaeceithus, likewise grace with store of wood.
But Ithaca, though in the seas it lie,
Yet lies she so aloft she casts her eye
Quite over all the neighbour continent;
Far northward situate, and, being lent

* Ευωσφόλος, quattuoriem sex agitantem frondes.
† Quodam quibus corpus alitur et vita sustentatur ubi appellatur.
But little favour of the morn and sun,
With barren rocks and cliffs is over-run;
And yet of hardy youths a nurse of name;
Nor could I see a soil, where'er I came,
More sweet and wishful. Yet, from hence was I Withheld with horror by the Deity, Divine Calypso, in her cavy house,
Enflamed to make me her sole lord and spouse.
Circe, too, that knowing dame,
Whose veins the like affections did enflame, Detain'd me likewise. But to neither's love
Could I be tempted; which doth well approve,
Nothing so sweet is as our country's earth,
And joy of those from whom we claim our birth.
Though roofs far richer we far off possess,
Yet, from our native, all our more is less.
To which as I contended, I will tell
The much-distress-conferring facts that fell
By Jove's divine prevention, since I set
From ruin'd Troy my first foot in retreat.
From Ilion ill winds cast me on the coast
The Cicon's hold, where I employ'd mine host For Ismarus, a city built just by My place of landing; of which victory
Made me expugner. I depeopled it,
Strew all the men, and did their wives remit,
With much spoil taken; which we did divide,
That none might need his part. I then applied
All speed for flight; but my command therein,
Fools that they were, could no observance win
Of many soldiers, who, with spoil fed high,
Would yet fill higher, and excessively Fell to their wine, gave slaughter on the shore Cloven-footed beeves and sheep in mighty store.
In mean space, Cicon's did to Cicon's cry,
When, of their nearest dwellers, instantly
Many and better soldiers made strong head,
That held the continent, and managed
Their horse with high skill, on which they would fight, Whereof twain of mightiest cause served, and again alight,
With soon seen vantage and on foot contend.
Their concourse swift was, and had never end;
As thick and sudden 'twas, as flowers and leaves
Dark spring discovers, when she light* receives.
And then began the bitter Fate of Jove
To alter us unhappy, which even strove
To give us sufferance. At our fleet we made Enforced stand; and there did they invade
Our thrust-up forces; darts encounter'd darts,
With blows on both sides; either making parts
Good upon either, while the morning shone,
And sacred day her bright increase held on Though much out-match'd in number; but as soon
As Phoebus westward fell, the Cicon's won Much hand of us; six proved soldiers fell,
Of every ship, the rest they did compel
To seek of Flight escape from Death and Fate.
Thence sad in heart we sail'd; and yet our state Was something cheer'd, that (being o'er-match'd so much In violent number) our retreat was such As saved so many. Our dear loss the less,
That they survived, so like for like success,
Yet left we not the coast, before we call'd
Home to our country earth the souls exhaled
Of all the friends the Cicon's overcame.
Thrice call'd we on them by their several name,†
And then took leave. Then from the angry North Cloud-gathering Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth Against our navy, cover'd shore and all
With gloomy vapours. Night did head-long fall
From frowning heaven. And then hurl'd here and there Was all our navy; the rude winds did tear
In three, in four parts, all their sails; and down Driven under hatches were we, prest to drown.

* After night, in the first of the morning.
† The ancient custom of calling home the dead.
Up rush'd we yet again, and with tough hand (Two days, two nights, entoil'd) we gat near land, labours and sorrows eating up our minds.
The third clear day yet, to more friendly winds
We masts advanced, we white sails spread, and sate.
Forewinds and guide again did iterate
Our case and home-hopes; which we clear had reach'd,
Had not, by chance, a sudden north-wind fetch'd,
With an extreme sea, quite about again
Our whole endeavours, and our course constrain
To giddy round, and with our bow'd sails greet Dreadful Mæleia, calling back our fleet
As far forth as Cythera. Nine days more Adverse winds toss'd me; and the tenth, the shore,
Where dwell the blossom-fed Lotusphagi,
I fetch'd; fresh water took in, instantly Fell to our food aship-board, and then sent Two of my choice men to the continent (Adding a third, a herald) to discover What sort of people were the rulers over
The land next to us. Where, the first they sent Were the Lotusphagi, that made them eat,
Their country-diet, and no ill intent
Hid in their hearts to them; and yet th' event
To ill converted it, for, having eat
Their dainty viands, they did quite forget (As all men else that did but taste their feast)
Both countrymen and country, nor adrest
Any return t' inform what sort of men Made fix'd abode there; but would needs maintain Abode themselves there, and eat that food ever.
I made out after, and was lain to sever
Th' enchanted knot by forcing their retreat,
That striving, and wept, and would not leave their meat
For heaven itself. But, dragging them to fleet,
I wrapt in sure bands both their hands and feet
And cast them under hatches, and away
Commanded all the rest without least stay,
Lest they should taste the lotè too, and forget
With such strange raptures their despised retreat.
All then abroad, we beat the sea with oars;
And still with sad hearts sail'd by out-way shores.
Till th' out-law'd Cyclops' land we fetch'd; a race
Of proud-lived loafers, that never sow,
Nor put a plant in earth, nor use a plow,
But trust in God for all things; and their earth,
Unsown, unplow'd, gives every offspring birth
That other lands have; wheat, and barley, vines
That bear in goodly grapes delicious wines;
And Jove sends showers for all. No council there Nor councillors, nor laws; but all men bear
Their heads aloft on mountains, and those steep,
And on their tops too; and their houses keep In vaulty caves, their households govern'd all
By each man's law, imposed in several,
Nor wife, nor child awed, but as he thinks good,
None for another caring. But there stood Another little isle, well stored with wood,
Berwixt this and the entry: neither nigh
The Cyclops' isle, nor yet far off doth lie.
Men's want it suffer'd, but the men's supplies
The goats made with their inarticulate cries.
Goats beyond number this small island breeds,
So tame, that no access disturbs their feeds;
No hunters, that the tops of mountains scale,
And run through woods with toil, seek them at all.
Nor is the soil with flocks fed down, nor plow'd,
Nor ever in it any seed was sow'd.
Nor place the neighbour Cyclops their delights
In brave vermilion-prow-deck'd ships; nor wrights Useful, and skillful in such works as need Perfection to those traffic's that exceed Their natural confines; to fly out and see Cities of men, and take in mutually
The pleasure of others; to themselves they live,
And to their island that enough would give A good inhabitant; and time of year
Observe to all things art could order there.
There, close upon the sea, sweet meadows spring,
That yet of fresh streams want no watering
To their soft burthens, but of special yield.
Your vines would be there; and your common field
But gentle work make for your plow, yet bear
A lofty harvest when you came to shear;
For passing fat the soil is. In it lies
A harbour so opportune, that no tides, Halser, or gables need, nor anchors cast.*
Whom storms put in there are with stay embraced,
Or to their full wills safe, or winds aspire
To pilots' uses their more quick desire.
At entry of the haven, a silver ford
Is from a rock-inpressing fountain pour'd,
All set with sable poplars. And this port Were we arrived at, by the sweet resort
Of some God guiding us, for 'twas a night
So ghastly dark all port was past our sight.
Clouds hid our ships, and would not let the moon Afford a beam to us; the whole isle won
By not an eye of ours. None thought the bire
That then was up, shoved waves against the shore,
That then to an unmeasured height put on; We still at sea esteem'd us, till alone
Our feet put in itself. And then were strook
Our gather'd sails; our rest ashore we took.
And day expected. When the morn gave fire,
We rose, and walk'd, and did the isle admire;
The Nymphs, Jove's daughters, putting up a herd
Of mountain goats to us, to render cheer'd My fellow soldiers. To our fleet we flew,
Our crooked bows took, long-piled darts, and drew Ourselves in three parts out; when, by the grace
That God vouchsafed, we made a gainful chase.
Twelve ships we had, and every ship had nine Fat goats allotted [it], ten only mine.
Thus all that day, even till the sun was set.
We sat and feasted, pleasant wine and meat Plenteously taking; for we had not spent
Our ruddy wine ship-board; supplemen't Of large sort each man to his vessel drew,
When we the sacred city overthrew That held the Cicones. Now then saw we near The Cyclops' late-praised island, and might hear
The murmurs of their sheep and goats, and see Their smokes ascend. The sun then set, and we,
When night succeeded, took our rest ashore.
And when the world the morning's favour wore,
I call'd my friends to council, charging them
To make stay there, while I took ship and stream,
With some associates, and explored what men
The neighbour isle held; if of rude disdain, Churlish and tyrannous, or minds bewray'd Pious and hospitable. Thus much said,
I boarded, and commanded to ascend
My friends and soldiers, to put off, and lend Way to our ship. They boarded, sat, and beat.
The old sea forth, till we might see the seat
The greatest Cyclop held for his abode,
Which was a deep cave, near the common road
Of ships that touch'd there, thick with laurels spread,
Where many sheep and goats lay shadowed;
And, near to this, a hall of torn-up stone,
High built with pines, that heaven and earth attone.
And lofty-fronted oaks; in which kept house
A man in shape immane, and monsterous,
Fed all his flocks alone, nor would afford Commerce with men, but had a wit abhor'd, His mind his body answering. Nor was he Like any man that food could possibly Enhance so hugely, but, beheld alone,
Shew'd like a steep hill's top, all overgrown
With trees and brambles; little thought
Had I
Of such vast objects. When, arrived so nigh,
Some of my loved friends I made stay aboard,
To guard my ship, and twelve with me I shored,
The choice of all. I took besides along
A goat-skin flagon of wine, black and strong,
That Maro did present, Euantheus' son,
And priest to Phoebus, who had mansion In Thracian Iamarus (the town I took).
He gave it me, since I (with reverence strook Of his grave place, his wife and children's good) Freed all of violence. Amidst a wood, Sacred to Phoebus, stood his house; from whence
He fetched the gifts of varied excellence;
Seven talents of fine gold; a bowl all framed Of massy silver; but his gift most famed Was twelve great vessels, fill'd with such rich wine
As was incorruptible and divine.
He kept it as his jewel, which none knew
But he himself, his wife, and he that drew.
It was so strong, that never any fill'd A cup, where that was but by drops instill'd.
And drunk it off, but 'twas before allay'd
With twenty parts in water; yet so sway'd
The spirit of that little, that the whole
A sacred odour breathed about the bowl.
Had you the odour smelt and scent it cast,
It would have vex'd you to forbear the taste.
But then, the taste gain'd too, the spirit it wrought
To dare things high set up an end my thought.
Of this a huge great flagon full I bore,
And, in a good large knapsack, victuals' store;
And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That so illiterate was and upland rude
That laws divine nor human he had learn'd.
With speed we reach'd the cavern; nor discern'd

His presence there, his flocks he fed at field.
Entering his den, each thing beheld did yield
Our admiration; shelves with cheeses heap'd;
Sheds stuff'd with lambs and goats, distinctly kept,
Distinct the biggest, the more mean distinct,
Distinct the youngest. And in their precincts,
Proper and peaceful, stood the troughs and pails,
In which he milk'd; and what was given at meals, Set up a creaming; in the evening still
All scouring bright as dew upon the hill.
Then were my fellows instant to convey Kids, cheeses, lambs, ashpanty-board, and away Sail the salt billow. I thought best not so.
But better otherwise; and first would know,
What guest-gifts he would spare me.
Little knew
My friends on whom they would have prey'd. His view Proved after, that his inwards were too rough
For such bold usage. We were bold enough
In what I suffer'd; which was there to stay,
Make fire and feed there, though bear none away.
There sat we, till we saw him feeding come,
And on his neck a burthen lugging home,
Most highly huge, of sere-wood, which the pile
That fed his fire supplied all supper while.
Down by his den he threw it, and up rose
A tumult with the fall. Afraid, we close Withdraw ourselves, while he into a cave
Of huge receipt his high-fed cattle drove,
All that he milk'd; the males he left without His lofty roofs, that all bestrow'd about With rams and buck-goats were. And then a rock
He lift aloft, that damm'd up to his flock.
The door they enter'd; 'twas so hard to wield,
That two-and-twenty waggons, all four-wheeld, (Could they be loaded, and have teams that were Proportion'd to them) could not stir it there.
Thus making sure, he kneel'd and milk'd his ewes,
And braying goats, with all a milker's dues;
Then let in all their young, then quick did dress
His half milk up for cheese, and in a press
Of wicker press'd it; put in bowls the rest,
To drink and eat, and serve his supping feast.
All works dispatch'd thus, he began his fire;
Which blown, he saw us, and did thus inquire:
"Ho! guests! what are ye? whence sail ye these seas?
Traffic, or rove ye, and like thieves oppress Poor strange adventurers, exposing so Your souls to danger, and your lives to woe?"
This utter'd he, when fear from our hearts took The very life, to be so thunder-strook
With such a voice, and such a monster see;
But thus I answer'd:*
*Erring Grecians, we
From Troy were turning homewards; but by force
Of adverse winds, in far-diverted course,
Such unknown ways took, and on rude seas tossed,
As Jove decreed, are cast upon this coast.
Of Agamemmon, famous Atreus' son,
We boast ourselves the soldiers; who hath won Renown that reacheth heaven, to overthrow
So great a city, and to ruin so
So many nations. Yet at thy knees lie
Our prostrate bosoms, forced with prayers to try
If any hospitable right, or boon
Of other nature, such as have been won By laws of other houses, thou wilt give.
Revere the Gods, thou greatest of all that live.

We suppliants are; and hospitable Jove
Pours wreak on all whom prayers want power to move,
And with their plagues together will provide That humble guests shall have their wants supplied.
He cruelly answer'd: 'O thou fool,' said he,
'To come so far, and to importune me
With any God's fear, or observed love;
We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed Jove,
Nor other Blest ones; we are better far.
To Jove himself dare I bid open war;
To thee, and all thy fellows, if I please.
But tell me, where's the ship, that by the seas Hath brought thee hither? If far off, or near, Inform me quickly.' These his temptings were;
But I too much knew not to know his mind,
And craft with craft paid, telling him the wind (Thrust up from sea by him that shakes the shore)
Had dash'd our ships against his rocks, and tore Her ribs in pieces close upon his coast,
And we from high wreck saved, the rest were lost.
He answer'd nothing, but rush'd in, and took Two of my fellows up from earth, and strook Their brains against it. Like two whelps they flew About his shoulders, and did all embrue
The blushing earth. No mountain lion tore
Two lambs so sternly, lapp'd up all their gore;
Gush'd from their torn-up bodies, limb by limb (Trembling with life yet) ravish'd into him.
Both flesh and marrow-stuffed bones he eat,
And even th' unleas'd entrails made his meat.
We, weeping, cast our hands to heaven, to view
A sight so horrid. Desperation flew,
With all our after lives, to instant death,
In our believed destruction. But when breath
The fury of his appetite had got,
Because the gulf his belly reach'd his throat,
THE NINTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSseys.

Man's flesh, and goat's milk, laying layer on layer, I'll near choked up was all the pass for air. Along his den, amongst his cattle, down He rush'd, and streak'd him. When my mind was grown Desperate to step in, draw my sword, and part His bosom where the strings about the heart Circle the liver, and add strength of hand. But that rash thought, more staid, did countermand, For there we all had perish'd, since it past Our powers to lift aside a log so vast, As bair'd all outscope; and so sigh'd away, The thought all night, expecting active day. Which come, he first of all, his fire enflames, Then milks his goats and ewes, then to their dams Lets in their young, and, wondrous orderly, With manly haste dispatch'd his housewife. Then to his breakfast, to which other two Of my poor friends went; which eat, out then go His herds and fat flocks, lightly putting by The curtilish bar, and closed it instantly. For both those works with ease as much as he did, As you would ope and shut your quiver lid. With storms of whistlings then his flock he drive Up to the mountains; and occasion gave For me to use my wits, which to their height I strived to screw up, that a vengeance might By some means fall from thence, and Pallas now Afford a full ear to my neediest vow. This then my thoughts prefer'd: a huge club lay Close by his milk-house, which was now in way To dry and season, being an olive-tree Which late he fell'd, and, being green, must be Made lighter for his manage. 'Twas so vast, That we resembled it to some fit mast, To serve a ship of burthen that was driven With twenty oars, and had a bigness given To bear a huge sea. Full so thick, so tall, We judged this club; which I, in part, hew'd small, And cut a fathom off. The piece I gave Amongst my soldiers, to take down, and shave; Which done, I sharpen'd it at top, and then, Harden'd in fire, I hid it in the den Within a nasty dunghill reeking there, Thick, and so moist it issued everywhere. Then made I lots cast by my friends to try Whose fortune served to dare the bored-out eye Of that man-eater; and the lot did fall On four I wish'd to make my aid of all, And I the fifth made, chosen like the rest. Then came the Even, and he came from the feast Of his fat cattle, drive in all, nor kept One male abroad; if, or his memory slept By God's direct will, or of purpose was His driving in of all then, doth surpass My comprehension. But he closed again The mighty bar, milk'd, and did still maintain All other observation as before. His work all done, two of my soldiers more At once he snatch'd up, and to supper went. Then dared I words to him, and did present A bowl of wine, with these words: 'Cyclop! take A bowl of wine, from my hand, that may make Way for the man's flesh thou hast eat, and show What drink our ship held; which in sacred vow I offer to thee to take ruth on me In my submission home. Thy rages be Now no more sufferable. How shall men, Mad and inhuman that thou art, again Greet thy abode, and get thy actions grace. If thus thou ragest, and eat'st up their race.' He took, and drank, and vehemently joy'd To taste the sweet cup; and again employ'd My flagon's power, entreating more, and said: 'Good guest, again afford my taste thy aid,'
And let me know thy name, and quickly now,
That in thy recompense I may bestow
A hospitable gift on thy desert,
And such a one as shall rejoice thy heart.
For to the Cyclops too the gentle earth
Bears generous wine, and Jove augments her birth,
In store of such, with showers; but this rich wine
Fell from the river, that is mere divine,
Of nectar and ambrosia. ’This again
I gave him, and again; nor could the fool abstain,
But drank as often. When the noble juice
Had wrought upon his spirit, I then gave use
To fairer language, saying: ’Cyclop! now,
As thou demand’st, I’ll tell thee my name; do thou Make good thy hospitable gift to me.
My name is No-Man; No-Man each degree
Of friends, as well as parents, call my name.’
He answer’d, as his cruel soul became:
’No-Man! I’ll eat thee last of all thy friends,
And this is that in which so much amends
I vow’d to thy deservings; thus shall be My hospitable gift made good to thee.’
This said, he upwards fell, but then bent round
His fleshy neck; and Sleep, with all crowns crown’d, Subdued the savage. From his throat brake out My wine, with man’s-flesh goblets, like a spout;
When, loaded with his cups, he lay and decreed;
And then took I the club’s end up, and gore
The burning coal-heap, that the point might heat; Confirm’d my fellow’s minds, lest Fear should let Their vow’d assay, and make them fly my aid.
Straight was the olive lever, I had laid Amidst the huge fire to get hardening, hot,
And blow’d extremely, though ’twas green; which got From forth the cinders, close about me stood
My hardy friends; but that which did the good Was God’s good inspiration, that gave A spirit beyond the spirit they used to have;
Who took the olive spar, made keen before,
And plunged it in his eye, and up I bore, Bent to the top close, and help’d for it in,
With all my forces. And as you have seen
A shipwright bore a naval beam, he o’er Thrusts at the auger’s frooste, works still aloof.
And at the shank help others, with a cord
Wound round about to make it sooner bored,
All plying the round still; so into his eye
The fiery stake we labour’d to imply,
Out gush’d the blood that scalded, his eyeball Thrust out a flaming vapour, that scorched’d all His brows and eye-lids, his eye-strings did crack,
As in the sharp and burning rafter brake.
And as a smith, to harden any tool,
Broad axe, or mattock, in his trough doth cool
The red-hot substance, that so fervent is
It makes the cold wave straight to seethe and hiss;
So sod and hiss’d his eye about the stake.
He roar’d withal, and all his cavern brake
In claps like thunder. We did frighted fly, Dispersed in corners. He from forth his eye
The fixed stake pluck’d; after which the blood Flow’d freshely forth; and, mad, he hurl’d the wood About his hovel. Out he then did cry For other Cyclops, that in caverns by Upon a windy promontory dwell’d;
Who, hearing how impetuously he yell’d,
Rush’d every way about him, and inquired,
What ill afflict’d him, that he expir’d
Such horrid elamours, and in sacred Night
To break their sleeps so? Ask’d him, if his fright Came from some mortal that his hocks had driven?
Or if by craft, or might, his death were given?
He answer’d from his den: ’By craft, nor might,
No man hath given me death.’ They then said right;
’If no man hurt thee, and thyself alone,
That which is done to thee by Jove is done;
And what great Jove inflicts no man can fly.
Pray to thy Father yet, a Deity,*

* Neptune.
And prove, from him if thou canst help acquire,
Thus spake they, leaving him; when all on fire
My heart with joy was, that so well my wit
And name deceived him; whom now pain did split,
And groaning up and down, he groaning tried
To find the stone, which found, he put aside;
But in the door sat, feeling if he could (As his sheep issued) on some man lay hold; Esteeming me a fool, that could devise
No stratagem to scape his gross surprise.
But I, contending what I could invent
My friends and me from death so imminent
To get deliver'd, all my wiles I wove (Life being the subject) and did this approve:
Fat fleecy rams, most fair, and great, lay there,
That did a burthen like a violet bear.*
These, while this learn'd-in-villany did sleep,
I yoked with osiers cut there, sheep to sleep,
Three in a rank, and still the mid sheep bore
A man about his belly, the two more March'd on his each side for defence. I then,
Choosing myself the fairest of the den,
His fleecy belly under-crept, embraced
His back, and in his rich wool wrapt me fast
With both my hands, arm'd with as fast a mind.
And thus each man hung, till the morning shined;
Which come, he knew the hour, and let abroad.
His male-flocks first, the females unmilk'd stood Bleating and braying, their full bags so sore
With being unemptied, but their shepherd more
With being unsighted; which was cause his mind Went not a milking. He, to wreak inclined,
The backs felt, as they pass'd, of those male dams,
Gross fool, believing, we would ride his rams.
Nor ever knew that any of them bore
Upon his belly any man before.
The last ram came to pass him, with his wool
And me together, loaded to the full,
For there did I hang; and that ram hestay'd,
And me with al had in his hands, my head

* Wool of a violet colour.

Troubled the while, not causelessly, nor least.
This ram he grooped, and talk'd to: 'Lazy beast!'
Why last art thou now? thou hast never used
To lag thus hindmost, but still first hasted bruised
The tender blossom of a flower, and held
State in thy steps, both to the flood and field,
First still at fold at even, now last remain?
Dost thou not wish I had mine eye again,
Which that abhor'd man No-Man did put out,
Assisted by his execrable rout,
When he had wrought me down with wine? but he Must not escape my wreak so cunningly.
I would to heaven knew'st, and could but speak,
To tell me where he lurks now; I would break
His brain about my cave, strew'd here and there,
To ease my heart of those foul ills that were.
Th' infictions of a man I prized at nought.'
Thus let he him abroad; when I, once brought A little from his hold, myself first loosed,
And next my friends. Then draye we, and disposed,
His strait-legg'd fat fleece-bearers over land,
Even till they all were in my ships' command;
And to our loved friends shew'd our pray'd-for sight, Escaped from death. But, for our loss, outright
They brake in tears; which with a look I stay'd,
And bade them take our boot in. They obey'd,
And up we all went, sat, and used our oars
But having left as far the savage shores
As one might hear a voice, we then might see
The Cyclop at the haven; when instantly
I stay'd our oars, and this insolence used:
' Cyclop! thou should'st not have so much abused Thy monstrous forces, to oppose their least Against a man immortal, and a guest,
And eat his fellows: thou mightst know there were Some ills behind, rude swain, for thee to bear:
That fear’d not to devour thy guests, and break
All laws of humans. Jove sends therefore wreak,
And all the Gods, by me. This blew the more
His burning fury; when the top he tore
From off a huge rock, and so right a throw
Made at our ship, that just before the prow
It overflow and fell, miss’d mast and all Exceeding little; but about the fall
So fierce a wave it raised, that back it bore
Our ship so far, it almost touch’d the shore.
A head-hook then, a far-extended one,
I snatch’d up, thrust hard, and so set us gone
Some little way; and straight commanded all
To help me with their oars, on pain to fall Again on our confusion. But a sign
I with my head made, and their oars were mine
In all performance. When we off were set, (Then first, twice further) my heart was so great,
It would again provoke him, but my men
On all sides rush’d about me, to contain,
And said: ‘Unhappy! why will you provoke
A man so rude, that with so dead a stroke,
Giv’n with his rock-dart, made the sea thrust back.
Our ship so far, and near hand forced our wreck?
Should he again but hear your voice resound,
And any word reach, thereby would be found
His dart’s direction, which would, in his fall, Crush piece-meal us, quite split our ship, and all;
So much dart wields the monster. Thus urged they Impossible things, in fear; but I gave way
To that wrath which so long I held deprest,
By great necessity conquer’d, in my breast: ‘Cyclop! if any ask thee, who imposed*
Th’ unsightly blemish that thine eye enclos’d,

Say that Ulysses, old Laertes’ son Whose seat is Ithaca, and who hath won Surname of City-razer, bore it out.
At this, he Bray’d so loud, that round about
He drove affrighted echoes through the air,
And said: ‘O beast! I was premonish’d fair,
By aged prophecy, in one that was A great and good man, this should come to pass;
And how’tis proved now! Augur Telemus, Surnamed Eurymides (that spent with us His age in augury, and did exceed In all pressage of truth) said all this deed
Should this event take, author’d by the hand
Of one Ulysses, who I thought was man’d
With great and goodly personage, and bore
A virtue answerable; and this shore
Should shake with weight of such a conqueror;
When now a wea’ling came, a dwarfy thing,
A thing of nothing; who yet wit did bring,
That brought supply to all, and with his wine
Put out the flame where all my light did shine.
Come, land again, Ulysses! that my hand
May guest-rites give thee, and the great command,
That Neptune hath at sea, I may convert
To the deduction where abides thy heart,
With my solicitings, whose son I am,
And whose fame boasts to bear my father’s name.
Nor think my hurt offends me, for my sire
Can soon repose in it the visual fire,
At his free pleasure; which no power beside Can boast, of men, or of the deified.’
I answer’d: ‘Would to God I could compel Both life and soul from thee, and send to hell
Those spoils of nature. Hardly Neptune then Could cure thy hurt, and give thee all again.’
Then flew fierce vows to Neptune, both his hands
To star-born heaven cast: ‘O thou that all lands
Gird’st in thy ambient circle, and in air
Shakest the curl’d tresses of thy sapphire hair,

* Ulysses’ continued insolence, no more to repeat what he said to the Cyclop, than to let his hearers know epithets, ad estimation in the world.

VOL. III.
If I be thine, or thou mayst justly vaunt Thou art my father, hear me now, and grant,
That this Ulysses, old Laertes' son,
That dwells in Ithaca, and name hath won
Of City-ruiner, may never reach His natural region. Or if to fetch That, and the sight of his fair roofs and
friends,
Be fatal to him, let him that amends
For all his miseries, long time and ill,
Smart for, and fail of; nor that fate fulfil,
Till all his soldiers quite are cast away In others' ships. And when, at last, the
day
Of his sole-landing shall his dwelling show,
Let Detriment prepare him wrongs enow.'
Thus pray'd he Neptune; who, his sire, appear'd,
And all his prayer to every syllable heard.
But then a rock, in size more amplified
Than first, he ravish'd to him, and implied
A dismal strength in it, when, wheel'd about.
He sent it after us; nor flaw'd it out
From any blind aim, for a little pass Beyond our fore-deck from the fall there was,
With which the sea our ship gave back
upon,
And shrunk up into billows from the stone,
Our ship again repelling near as near The shore at first. But then our rowers were, Being warn'd, more arm'd, and stronglier stemm'd the flood
That bore back on us, till our ship made
good
The other island, where our whole fleet lay,
In which our friends lay mourning for our
stay,
And every minute look'd when we should land.
Where, now arrived, we drew up to the sand,
The Cyclop's sheep dividing, that none
there
Of all our privates might be wrung, and
bear
Too much on power. The ram yet was alone
By all my friends made all my portion Above all others; and I made him then
A sacrifice for me and all my men To cloud-compelling Jove that all commands,
To whom I burn'd the thighs; but my sad hands
Received no grace from him, who studied how
To offer men and fleet to overthrow.
All day, till sunset, yet, we sat and eat,
And liberal store took in of wine and meat.
The sun then down, and place resign'd to shade,
We slept. Morn came, my men I raised, and made
All go aboard, weigh anchor, and away.
They boarded, sat, and beat the aged sea; And forth we made sail, sad for loss before,
And yet had comfort since we lost no
more.
* No occasion let pass to Ulysses' piety in our Poet's singular wit and wisdom.
THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

MEMENT.
United us,
The wise Æolus,
Crested with gilded wings;
White was the eagle's beak,
And as wise as one,
Whom no man would alone,
Ulysses' guide, and seen,
The hundredfold men,
The hundredfold enclose,
To keep them in their fold, house,
Who first the heal'd and did press.
Fortune was and did at last attain
To where the Laestrygones dwell.
Where twelve ships lost, and fell
On the Leucas coast, whose shore
He sends Eurylochus to explore,
Dividing with half his men;
Who go, and turn no more again,
All, save Eurylochus, to swine.
By Circe turned,
Their stays incline
Ulysses to their search, who get
Of Mercury an antidote,
Which moly was, 'gainst Circe's charms,
And so avoids his soldiers' harms.
A year with Circe all remain,
And then their native forms regain,
On utter shores a time they dwell,
While Æolus descends to hell.

ANOTHER.

Eumaeus,
Great Æolus,
And Circe, friends;
Finds Æolus;
And all descend.

To the Æolian island we attain'd,
That swam about still on the sea, where reign'd
The god-loved Æolus Hippopotades.
A wall of steel it had; and in the seas
A wave-beat-smooth-rock moved about the wall.

Twelve children in his house imperial Were born to him; of which six daughters were,
And six were sons, that youth's sweet flower did bear.
His daughters to his sons he gave as wives;
Who spent in feastful comforts all their lives,

Close seated by their sire and his grave spouse.
Past number were the dishes that the house
Made ever savour; and still full the hall
As long as day shined; in the night-time, all Slept with their chaste wives, each his fair \carved bed
Most richly furnish'd; and this life they led.

We reach'd the city and fair roof of these,
Where, a whole month's time, all things that might please
The king vouchsafed us; of great Troy inquired,
The Grecian fleet, and how the Greeks retired;
To all which I gave answer as behoved.
The fit time come, when I dismission mov'd,
He nothing would deny me, but address
My pass with such a bounty, as might best Teach me contentment; for he did unfold
Within an ox-hide, feed at nine years old,
All t' airy blasts that were of stormy kinds.
Saturnius made him Steward of his winds,
And gave him power to raise and to assuage.
And these he gave me, curb'd us of their rage,
Which in a glittering silver band I bound,
And hung-up in my ship, enclosed round
That no egress any breath could find;
Only he left abroad the Western wind,
To speed our ships, and us with blasts secure.
But our securities made all unsure;
Nor could he consummate our course alone,
When all the rest had got egress.
Which thus succeeded: Nine whole days and nights
We sail'd in safety; and the tenth, the lights Borne on our country-earth we might deserys,
So near we drew; and yet even then fell I,
Being overwatch’d, into a fatal sleep;
For I would suffer no man else to keep The foot that ruled my vessel’s course, to lead
The faster home. My friends then Envy fed
About the bag I hung-up, and supposed
That gold and silver I had there enclosed,
As gift from Æolus, and said: ’O heaven!
What grace and grave price is by all men given
To our commander! Whate’er coast
Or town he comes to, how much he engross
Of fair and precious prey, and brought from Troy!
We the same voyage went, and yet enjoy
In our return these empty hands for all.
This bag, now, Æolus was so liberal
To make a guest-gift to him; let us try
Of what consists the fair-bound treasury,
And how much gold and silver it contains.’
Ill counsel present approbation gains.
They op’d the bag, and out the vapours
brake,
When instant tempest did our vessel take,
That bore us back to sea, to mourn anew
Our absent country. Up amazed I flew,
And desperate things discoursed; if I should cast
Myself to ruin in the seas, or taste
Amongst the living more moan, and sus-tain?
Silent, I did so, and lay hid again Beneath the hatches, while an ill wind took
My ships back to Æolia, my men strook With woe enough. We pump’d and landed
then,
Took food, for all this; and of all my men
I took a herald to me, and away Went to the court of Æolus, where they Were feasting still; he, wife, and children,
set Together close. We would not at their meat
Thrust in; but humbly on the threshold sat.
He then, amazed, my presence wonder’d at,
And call’d to me: ’Ulysses! How thus back
Art thou arrived here? what foul spirit brace

Into thy bosom, to retire thee thus?
We thought we had deduction curious Given thee before, to reach thy shore and
home;
Did it not like thee? I, even overcome With worthy sorrow, answer’d: ’My ill
men
Have done me mischief, and to them hath been My sleep th’ unhappy motive; but do you,
Dearest of friends, deign succour to my vow.
Your powers command it. Thus endeav’r’d I
With soft speech to repair my misery.
The rest with ruth sat dumb: but thus
spake he:
‘Away, and quickly quit my land of thee.
Thou worst of all that breathe: it fits not me
To convoy, and take in, whom heavens expose.
Away, and with thee go the worst of woes,
That seek’st my friendship, and the Gods thy foes.
Thus he dismiss’d me, sighing. Forth
we sail’d,
At heart afflicted: and now wholly fail’d
The minds my men sustain’d, so spent they were
With toiling at their oars, and worse did
bear
Their growing labours; and they caused their groused
By self-will’d follies; nor now ever thought To see their country more. Six nights and days
We sail’d; the seventh we saw fair Lamos rise.
Her lofty towers, the Leastrygonian state
That bears her ports so far distemper’d;
Where* shepherd calls out, he at home
Is call’d out by the other that doth come

* This place suffers different construction in all the Commentaries, in which all err from the mind of the Poet, as in a hundred other places (which yet I want time to approve) especially about ἔγγος γὰρ ἡμῖν, &c. Præter omnes utcōn et diei sunt uile (or similiter, which ēgōn sig-ifies); which they will have to be understood, that the days in that region are long, and the nights short; where Homer intends, that the equinoctial is there; for how else is the course of day and night near or equal? But therefore the night’s-man hath his double hire, being as long about his charge as the other; and the night being more dangerous, &c. And if the day were so long, why should the night’s-man be preferred in wages.
THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

From charge abroad, and then goes he to sleep,
The other issuing; he whose turn doth keep
The night observance hath his double hire;
Since day and night in equal length expire
About that region, and the night's watch weighs At twice the day's ward, since the charge that's laid Upon the nights-man (besides breach of sleep)
Exceeds the days-man's; for one oxen keep.
The other sheep. But when the haven we found, (Exceeding famous, and environ'd round
With one continuance rock, which so much bent
That both ends almost met, so prominent They were, and made the haven's mouth passing strait).
Our whole fleet in we got; in whose recoll Our ships lay anchor'd close. Nor needed we Fear harm on any stays,* Tranquility
So purely sat there, that waves great nor small Did ever rise to any height at all.
And yet would I no entry make, but stay'd Alone without the haven, and thence sur
From out a lofty watch-tower raised there,
The country round about; nor anywhere
The work of man or beast appear'd to me,
Only a smoke from earth break I might see.
I then made choice of two, and added more,
A herald for associate, to explore What sort of men lived there. They went, and saw A beaten way, through which carts used to draw, Wood from the high hills to the town, and met A maid without the port, about to get Some near spring-water. She the daughter was Of mighty Laestrygonian Antiphas,
And to the clear spring call'd Artacia went,
To which the whole town for their water sent.

To her they came, and ask'd who govern'd there,
And what the people whom he order'd were?
She answer'd not, but led them through the port,
As making haste to shew her father's court.
Where enter'd, they behold, to their affright,
A woman like a mountain-top in height,
Who rush'd abroad, and from the council-place,
Call'd home her horrid husband Antiphas.*
Who, deadly-minded, straight he snatch'd up one,
And fell to supper. Both the rest were gone;
And to the fleet came. Antiphas a cry Drave through the city; which heard, instantly
This way and that innumerable sorts,
Not men but giants, issued through the ports,
And mighty flints from rocks tore, which they threw Amongst our ships; through which an ill noise flew
Of shiver'd ships, and life-expiring men,
That were, like fishes, by the monsters slain,
And borne to sad feast. While they slaughter'd these,
They were engaged in all th' advantages
The close-mouth'd and most dead-calm haven could give;
I, that without lay, made some means to live,
My sword drew, cut my gables, and to oars
Set all my men; and, from the plagues those shores
Let fly amongst us, we made haste to fly,
My men close working as men loth to die.
My ship flew freely off; but theirs that lay
On heaps in harbours could enforce no way Through these stern fates that had engaged them there.
Forth our sad remnant sail'd, yet still retain'd
The joys of men, that our poor few remain'd.
Then to the isle Ætea we attain'd,
Where fair-hair'd, dreadful, eloquent Circe reign'd.
Ætea's sister both by damc and sire,
Both daughters to heaven's man-enlightening fire,

* For being cast on the stays, as ships are by weather.

* Antiphas was king there.
And Perse, whom Oceanus begat,
The ship-fit port here soon we landed at,
Some God directing us. Two days, two nights,

We lay here pining in the fatal spights
Of toil and sorrow; but the next third day
When fair Aurora had inform'd, quick way I made out of my ship, my sword and lance
Took for my surer guide, and made advance

Up to a prospect; I assay to see
The works of men, or hear mortality

In some wise accessible, I might Behold from Circe's house (that in a grove Set thick with trees stood) a bright vapour move,

I then grew* curious in my thought to try
Some fit inquiry, when so spritely fly
I saw the yellow smoke; but my discourse
A first retiring to my ship gave force
To give my men their dinner, and to send (First that adventure of myself) some friend.
Being near my ship, of one so desolate
Some God had pity, and would recreate
My woes a little, putting up to me
A great and high-palm'd hart, that fatally,
Just in my way itself, to taste a flood,
Was then descending; the sun heat had sure
Importuned him, besides the temperature
His natural heat gave. Howsoever, I Made up to him, and let my javelin fly, That struck him through the mid-part of his chine,
And made him, braying, in the dust confine
His flying forces. Forth his spirit flew;
When I stepped in, and from the death's wound drew My arrowy-bitten lance; there let him
lie
Till I, of cut-up osiers, did imply A withe a fathom long, with which his feet
I made together in a sure league meet, Stoop'd under him, and to my neck I heaved
The mighty burthen, of which I received A good part on my lance, for else I could
By no means with one hand alone uphold

Joind with one shoulder so deathful load.
And so, to both my shoulders, both hands
stood
Needful assistants; for it was a deer Goodly-well-grown; when (coming something near Where rode my ships) I cast it down, and rear'd

My friends with kind words; whom by name I cheer'd,
In note particular, and said: 'See friends,
We will not yet to Pluto's house; our ends
Shall not be hasten'd, though we be declined

In cause of comfort, till the day design'd By Fate's fix'd finger. Come, as long as food
Or wine lasts in our ship, let's spirit our blood,

And quit our care and hunger both in one.'
This said, they frolick'd, came, and look'd
upon
With admiration the huge-bodied beast;
And when their first-served eyes had done their feast,
'They wash'd, and made a to-be-strived-for meal
In point of honour. On which all did dwell
The whole day long. And, to our venison's
store,
We added wine till we could wish no more.
Sun set, and darkness up, we slept, till
light
Put darkness down; and then did I excite
My friends to counsel, uttering this:
'Now, friends,
Afford unpassionate ear; though ill Fate lends
So good cause to your passion, no man knows
The reason whence and how the darkness
grows;
The reason how the morn is thus begun;
The reason how the man-enlightening sun

* Magna, curiosus cogito.
† Αλθώς κανόνω. Αλθώς signifying vultus, by reason of the fire mixed with it. Fumus qui at dann aliquid ascendit.
Dives under earth; the reason how again
He rears his golden head. Those counsels,
then,
That pass our comprehension, we must leave
To him that knows their causes; and receive
Direction from him in our acts, as far As he shall please to make them regular,
And stoop them to our reason. In our state
What then behoves us? Can we estimate, With all our counsels, where we are? Or know (Without instruction, past our own skills)
how,
Put off from hence, to steer our course the
more?
I think we cannot. We must then explore
These parts for information; in which way
We thus far are: last morn I might display
(From off a high-raised cliff) an island lie Girt with the unmeasured sea, and is so nigh
That in the midst I saw the smoke arise Through tufts of trees. This rests then to advise,
Who shall explore this. This struck dead their hearts,
Remembering the most execrable parts
That Laestrygonian Antiphates had play'd,
And that foul Cyclop that their fellows bray'd Betwixt his jaws; which moved them so,
they cried.
But idle tears had never wants supplied,
I in two parts divided all, and gave To either part his captain. I must have The charge of one; and one of God-like look,
Eurylochus, the other. Lots we shook,
Put in a casque together, which of us Should lead th' attempt; and 'twas Eurylochus.
He freely went, with two-and-twenty more;
All which took leave with tears; and our eyes wore
The same wet badge of weak humanity.
These in a dale did Circe's house descry,
Of bright stone built, in a conspicuous
way.
Before her gates hill-wolves, and lions, lay;
Which with her virtuous drugs so tame she made,
That wolf nor lion would one man invade
With any violence, but all arose, Their huge long tails wag'd, and in fawns would close,
As loving dogs when masters bring them
home
Relics of feast, in all observance come
And soothe their entries with their fawns and bounds,
All guests still bringing some scraps for their hounds;
So, on these men, the wolves and lions ramp'd,
Their horrid paws set up. Their spirits were damp'd
To see such monstrous kindness, stay'd at gate,
And heard within the Goddess elevate
A voice divine, as at her web she wrought, Sublime, and glorious, and past earthly thought,
As all the housewiferies of Deities are,
To hear a voice so ravishingly rare, Polites (one exceeding dear to me,
A prince of men, and of no mean degree
In knowing virtue, in all acts whose mind Discreet cares all ways used to turn, and wind)
Was yet surprized with it, and said: 'O
friends,
Some one abides within here, that commends
The place to us, and breathes a voice divine,
As she some web wrought, or her spindle's twine
She cherish'd with her song; the pavement rings
With imitation of the tunes she sings,
Some woman, or some Goddess, 'tis:
Assay
'To see with knocking.' Thus said he,
and they
Both knock'd, and call'd; and straight her shining gates
She open'd, issuing, bade them in to cates.
Led, and unseen, they follow'd all; but one,
Which was Eurylochus, who stood alone
Without the gates, suspicious of a sleight.
They enter'd, she made sit; and her deceit
She cloak'd with thrones, and goodly chairs of state;
Set herby honey, and the delicate Wine brought from Smyrna, to them;
meal and cheese;
But harmful venoms she commix'd with these,
That made their country vanish from their thought.
Which eat, she touch'd them with a rod that wrought.

* Kebróς, cuius animus curas prudentes versat.
THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Their transformation far past humane wents;
Swine’s snouts, swine’s bodies, took they, bristles, grunts,
But still retain’d the souls they had before,
Which made them mourn their bodies’ change the more.
She shut them straight in stydes, and gave them meat,
Oak-mast, and beech, and cornel-fruit, they eat,
Grovelling like swine on earth, in foulest sort.
Eurylochus straight hasted the report
Of this his fellows’ most remorseful fate.
Came to the ships, but so excruciate
Was with his woe, he could not speak a word:
His eyes stood full of tears, which shew’d how stored
His mind with moan remain’d. We all admired, Ask’d what had chanced him, earnestly desired
He would resolve us. At the last, our eyes Enflamed in him his fellows’ memories,
And out his grief burst thus: ‘You will’d; we went Through those thick woods you saw;* when a descent
Shew’d us a fair house, in a lightsome ground,
Where, at some work, we heard a heavenly sound
Breathed from a Goddess’, or a woman’s, breast.
They knock’d, she oped her bright gates; each her guest
Her fair invitation made; nor would they stay,
Fools that they were, when she once led the way.
I enter’d not, suspecting some deceit.
When all together vanish’d, nor the sight
Of any one (though long I look’d) mine eye
Could any way discover.’ Instantly,
My sword and bow reach’d; I bade show the place,
When down he fell, did both my knees embrace,
And pray’d with tears thus: ‘O thou kept of God,
Do not thyself lose, nor to that abode
Lead others rashly; both thyself, and all Thou venturest thither, I know well, must fall

* Seeing them, he thought of his fellows.

In one sure ruin: with these few then fly;
We yet may shun the others’ destiny.’
I answer’d him: ‘Eurylochus! stay thou,
And keep the ship then, eat and drink; I now
Will undertake th’ adventure; there is cause
In great Necessity’s unalter’d laws.’
This said, I left both ship and seas, and on Along the sacred valleys all alone
Went in discovery, till at last I came Where of the main-medicine-making Dame
I saw the great house; where encounter’d me
The golden-rod-sustaining Mercury, Even entering Circe’s doors. He met me in A young man’s likeness, of the first-flower’d chin, Whose form hath all the grace of one so young;
He first call’d me, then my hand he wrung,
And said: ‘Thou no-place-finding-forrepose, Whither, alone, by these hill-confinces, goes Thy erring foot? Th’ art entering Circe’s house, Where, by her medicines, black, and sorcerous,
Thy soldiers all are shut in well-arm’d stydes,
And turn’d to swine. Art thou arrived with pride Fit for their ransoms? Thou comest out no more,
If once thou enter’st, like thy men before
Made to remain here. But I’ll guard thee free,
And save thee in her spite: receive of me
This fair and good receipt; with which once arm’d, Enter her roofs, for th’ art to all proof charm’d Against the ill day: I will tell thee all Her baneful counsel. With a festival She’ll first receive thee, but will spicce thy bread With flowery poisons; yet unalter’d Shall thy firm form be, for this remedy Stands most approved ‘gainst all her sorcery,
Which thus particularly shun: When she Shall with her long rod strike thee, instantly Draw from thy thigh thy sword, and fly on her
As to her slaughter. She, surprised with fear
And love, at first will bid thee to her bed.
Nor say the Goddess nay, that welcomed Thou may'st with all respect be, and procure Thy fellows' freedoms. But before, make sure Her favours to thee; and the great oath take With which the blessed Gods assurance make
Of all they promise; that no prejudice
(By stripping thee of form, and faculties)
She may so much as once attempt on thee.'
This said, he gave his antidote to me,
Which from the earth he pluck'd, and told me all
The centre of it, with what Deities call
The name it bears; and Moly* they impose
For name to it. The root is hard to loose
From hold of earth by mortals; but Gods' power
Can all things do. 'Tis black, but bears a flower
As white as milk. And thus flew Mercury Up to immense Olympus, gliding by The sylvan island. I made back my way
To Circe's house, my mind of my assay
Much thought revolving. At her gates I stay'd
And call'd; she heard, and her bright doors display'd, Invited, led; I follow'd in, but traced
With some distraction. In a throne she placed My welcome person; of a curious frame
'Twas, and so bright I sat as in a flame;
A foot-stool added. In a golden bowl
She then suborn'd a potion, in her soul
Deform'd things thinking; for amidst the wine
She mix'd her man-transforming medicine;
Which when she saw I had devour'd, she then
No more observed me with her soothing vein,
But strook me with her rod, and to her styce
Bade, 'Out, away, and with thy fellows lie.'
I drew my sword, and charged her, as I meant
To take her life. When out she cried, and bent

Beneath my sword her knees, embracing mine,
And, full of tears, said: 'Who? of what high line
Art thou the issue? whence? what shores sustain Thy native city? I amazed remain
That, drinking these my venoms, th' art not turn'd.
Never drunk any this cup but he mourn'd In other likeness, if it once had past
The ivory bounders of his tongue and taste. All but thyself are brutishy declined:
Thy breast holds firm yet, and unchanged thy mind.
Thou canst be therefore none else but the man
Of many virtues: Ithacensis,
Deep-souled Ulysses: who, I oft was told, By that sly God that bears the rod of gold,
Was to arrive here in retreat from Troy. Sheathe then thy sword, and let my bed enjoy
So much a man, that when the bed we prove,
We may believe in another's love.'
I then: 'O Circe, why entreat'st thou me
To mix in any human league with thee,
When thou my friends hast beasts turn'd? and thy bed
Tender'st to me, that I might likewise lead
A beast's life with thee, soften'd, naked stripp'd,
That in my blood thy banes may more be steep'd.
I never will ascend thy bed, before
I may affirm, that in heaven's sight you shine
The great oath of the Gods, that all attempt To do me ill is from your thoughts exempt.'
I said; she swore: when, all the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adorned bed,
But thus prepared: four handmaids served her there,
That daughters to her silver fountains were:
To her bright-sea-observing sacred floods,
And to her uncet consecrated woods.
One deck'd the throne-tops with rich clothes of state,
And did with silks the foot-pace consecrate. Another silver tables set before
The pompous throne, and golden dishes' store
Served in with several feast. A third fill'd wine.
The fourth brought water, and made fuel shine

* The herb Moly, which, with Ulysses' whole narration, hath in chief an allegorical exposition. Notwithstanding I say with our Spondanis, Credo in hoc vasto mundi ambitue ex torno nas innumerar sus mirando facultatis; adeo, ut ne quidem vult qua ad transformanda corpora pertinax, jure et mundo eximii possit, &c.
In ruddy fires beneath a womb of brass,
Which heat, I bathed; and odorous water was Dispersed lightly on my head and neck,
That might my late heart-hurting sorrows check With the refreshing sweetness; and, for that,
Men sometimes may be something delicate.
Bathed, and adorn'd, she led me to a throne
Of massy silver, and of fashion
Exceeding curious. A fair foot-stool set,
Water apposed, and every sort of meat
Set on th' elaborately-polish'd board,
She wish'd my taste employ'd; but not a word
Would my ears taste of taste; my mind had food.
That must digest; eye-meat would do me good.
Circe (observing that I put no hand
To any banquet, having countermand
From weighler cares the light cates could excuse) Bowing near me, these wing'd words did use:
'Why sits Ulysses like one dumb, his mind Lessening with languors? Nor to food inclined, Nor wine? Whence comes it? out of any fear
Of more illusion? You must needs forbear
That wrongful doubt, since you have heard me swear.'
'O Circe!' I replied, 'what man is he,
Awed with the rights of true humanity,
That dares taste food or wine, before he sees
His friends redeem'd from their deformities?
If you be gentle, and indeed incline
To let me taste the comfort of your wine,
Dissolve the charms that their forced forms enchain,
And show me here my honour'd friends like men.'
This said, she left her throne, and took her rod,
Went to her styre, and let my men abroad,
Like swine of nine years old. They opposite stood,
Observed their brutish form, and look'd for food;
When, with another medicine, every one
All over smeard, their bristles all were gone,
Produced by malice of the other bane,
And every one, asthrash, look'd up a man.
Both younger than they were, of stature more
And all their forms much goodlier than before.
All knew me, cling'd about me, and a cry
Of pleasing mourning flew about so high,
The horrid roof resounded; and the queen
Herself was moved to see our kind so keen:
Who bade me now bring ship and men ashore,
Our arms, and goods in caves hid, and restore Myself to her, with all my other men.
I granted, went, and oped the weeping vein
In all my men; whose violent joy to see My safe return was passing kindly free
Of friendly tears, and miserably wept.
You have not seen young heifers (highly kept,
Fill'd full of daisies at the field, and driven Home to their bowels, all so sprightly given That no room can contain them, but about Race by their dams, and let their spirits out
In ceaseless bleating), of more joyous plight
Than my kind friends, even crying out with sight
Of my return so doubted; circled me
With all their welcomes, and as cheerfully Disposed their rapt minds, as if there they saw Their natural country, cliffy Ithaca,
And even the roofs where they were bred and born,
And vow'd as much, with tears: 'O your return
As much delights us, as in you had come
Our country to us, and our natural home.
But what unhappy fate hath reft our friends?
I gave unlook'd-for answer, that amends
Made for their mourning, bade them first of all Our ship ashore draw, then in caverns stall
Our styro cattle, hide our mutual prize,
'And then,' said I, 'attend me, that your eyes,
In Circe's sacred house, may see each friend.
Eating and drinking banquets out of end.'
They soon obey'd; all but Eurylochus,
Who needs would stay them all, and counsel'd thus:
'O wretches! whither will ye? why are you Fond of your mischiefs? and such gladness show
For Circe's house, that will transform ye all To swine, or wolves, or lions? Never shall Our heads get out, if once within we be,
But stay compell'd by strong necessity,
So wrought the Cyclop, when t' his cave our friends
This bold one led on, and brought all their ends
By his one indiscretion.' I for this Thought with my sword (that desperate head of his Hewn from his neck) to gash upon the
ground
His mangled body, though my blood was bound
In near alliance to him. But the rest With humble suit contain'd me, and request,
That I would leave him with my ship
alone,
And to the sacred palace lead them on.
I led them; nor Eurylochus would stay
From their attendance on me, our late fray Strook to his heart so. But mean time, my
men,
In Circe's house, were all, in several bain, Studiously sweeten'd, smug'd with oil, and deced'd
With fn and out weeds, and a feast select Served in before them; at which close we found
They all were set, cheer'd, and carousing round.
When (mutual sight bad, and all thought on) then
Feast was forgotten,* and the moan again
About the house flew, driven with wings of joy.
But then spake Circe: 'Now, no more annoy:
I know myself what woes by sea, and
shore,
And men unjust have plagued enough
before
Your injured virtues: here then feast as long,
And be as cheerful, till ye grow as strong
As when ye first forsook your country-earth.
Ye now fare all like exiles; not a mirth, Flash'd in amongst ye, but is quench'd
again
With still renew'd tears; though the besten vein

Of your distresses should, methink, be now Benumb with sufferance.' We did well allow
Her kind persuasions, and the whole year stay'd.
In varied feast with her When, now array'd
The world was with the spring, and orby hours
Had gone the round again through herbs
and flowers,
The months absolved in order, till the days
Had run their full race in Apollo's rays, My friends remember'd me of home, and said,
If ever Fate would sign my pass, delay'd
It should be now no more. I heard them
well,
Yet that day spent in feast, till darkness fell,
And sleep his virtues through our vapours shed.
When I ascended sacred Circe's bed,
Implied my pass, and her performed vow
Which now my soul urged, and my soldiers
now
Afflicted me with tears to get them gone.
All these I told her, and she answered
these:
'Much-skill'd Ulysses Laertides!
Remain no more against your wills with me,
But take your free way; only this must be Perform'd before you steer your course for
home:
You must the way to Pluto overcome,
And stern Persephone, to form your pass.
By th' aged Theban soul Tiresias,
The dark-brow'd prophet, whose soul yet can see
Clearly, and firmly; grave Persephone, (Even dead) gave him a mind that he alone
Might sing truth's solid wisdom, and not one
Prove more than shade in his comparison.'
'This broke my heart; I sunk into my bed,
Mourn'd, and would never more be contiforted
With light, nor life. But having now expressed
My pains enough to her in my unrest,
That so I might prepare her ruth, and get All I held fit for an affair so great,
I said: 'O Circe, who shall steer my course To Pluto's kingdom? Never ship had force

* ἡ ἰδούται ἐνώνητα. Commemorabatque somnia. Intending all their miseries, excapes, and meetings.
To make that voyage. The divine in voice
Said: 'Seek no guide, raise you your mast, And hoist your ship's white sails, and then sit you at peace.
The fresh North Spirit shall waft ye through the seas.
But, having past the Ocean, you shall see
A little shore, that to Persephone
Puts up a consecrated wood, where grows Tall firs, and swell its their fruits soon lose.
Cast anchor in the gulls, and go alone
To Pluto's dark house, where, to Acheron Cocytus runs, and Pyriphlegethon;
Cocytus born of Styx, and where a rock
Of both the mild floods bears the roaring shock.
The dark hero, great Tiresias,
Now coming near, to gain propitious pass,
Dig (of a cubit every way) a pit,
And pour to all that are deceased in it A solemn sacrifice. For which, first take Honey and wine, and their commixion make;
Then sweet wine neat; and thirdly water pour;
And lastly add to these the whitest flour.
Then vow to all the weak necks of the dead
Offerings a number; and, when thou shalt tread
The Ithacensis shore, to sacrifice
A hero never-tamed, and most of prize,
A pile of all thy most esteemed goods Enfainting to the dear streams of their bloods;
And, in secret rites, to Tiresias vow
A ram coal-black at all parts, that doth
flow
With fat and fleece, and all thy flocks doth
lead.
When the all-calling nation of the dead*
Thou thus hast pray'd to, offer on the place
A ram and ewe all black; being turn'd in face
To dreadful Erebos, thyself aside
The flood's shore walking. And then, gratified
With flocks of souls of men and dames deceased
Shall all thy pious rites be. Straight
address'd

See then the offering that thy fellows slew, Flay'd, and imposed in fire; and all thy crew
Pray to the state of either Deity,
Grave Pluto, and severe Persephone.
Then draw thy sword, stand firm, nor suffer one
Of all the faint shades of the dead and
gone
T approach the blood, till thou hast heard their king,
The wise Tiresias; who thy offering
Will instantly do honour, thy home ways,
And all the measure of them by the seas,
Amphly unfolding. *This the Goddess told:
And then the Morning in her throne of
gold Survey'd the vast world; by whose orient
light
The Nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright,
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weed,
Robes fine, and curious, and upon my
head
An ornament that glitter'd like a flame;
Girt me in gold; and forth betimes I came Amongst my soldiers, roused them all from sleep,
And bade them now no more observance
keep
Of ease, and feast, but straight a shipboard
fall,
For now the Goddess had inform'd me all.
Their noble spirits agreed; nor yet so clear
Could I bring all off, but Ilpenor there His heedless life left. He was youngest man
Of all my company, and one that wan
Least fame for arms, as little for his brain;
Who (too much steep'd in wine, and so made fain
To get refreshing by the cool of sleep, Apath his fellows, plunged in vapours
deep,
And they as high in tumult of their way) Suddenly waked and (quite out of the stay A sober mind had given him) would descend
A huge long ladder, forward, and an end Fell from the very roof, full pitching on The dearest joint his head was placed
upon;
Which, quite dissolved, let loose his soul to hell,
I to the rest; and Circe's means did tell
Of our return, as crossing clean the hope
I gave them first, and said: 'You think

THE TENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Of our endeavours now is straight for home;
No; Circe otherwise design'd, whose doom Enjoin'd us first to greet the dreadful house
Of austere Pluto and his glorious spouse,
To take the counsel of Tiresias
(The reverend Theban) to direct our pass.
This brake their hearts, and grief made tear their hair.
But grief was never good at great affair;
It would have way yet. We went woful on To ship and shore, where was arrived as soon
Circe unseen, a black ewe and a ram
Binding for sacrifice, and, as she came, Vanish'd again, unwitness'd by our eyes;
Which grieved not us, nor check'd our sacrifice;
For who would see God, loth to let us see? This way or that bent; still his ways are free.
THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses’ way to Hell appears;
Where he the grave Tiresias hears;
Enquires his own and others’ fates;
His mother sees, and th’ after states
In which were held by sad decease Heroes, and heroessse());//
A number, that at Troy waged war;
As Ajax that was still at jar
With Ithacus, for th’ arms he lost;
And with the great Achilles’ ghost.

ANOTHER.

Another, Aérya: Ulysses here
Invokes the dead.
The lives appear
Hereafter led.

Here drew we up our ship, our sheep we drew,
And walk’d the shore till we attain’d a view
Of that sad region Circe had fore-show’d,
And then the sacred offerings to be vow’d, Eurylochus and Persius took and bore.
When I my sword drew, and earth’s womb did gore Till I a pit digg’d of a cubit round,
Which with the liquid sacrifice we crown’d,
First honey mix’d with wine, then sweet wine neat,
Then water pour’d in, last the flour and heat.
Much I importuned then the weak-nest dead,
And vow’d when I the barren soil she tread
Of clifly Ithaca, amidst my hall
To kill a heifer, my clear best of all,
And give in offering, on a pile compose
Of all the choice goods my whole household Enclosed.
And to Tiresias himself, alone,
A sheep coal-black, and the selectest one
Of all my flocks. When to the power beneath
The sacred nation that survive with deal My prayers and vows had done devotion’t fit,
I took the offerings, and upon the pit Bereft their lives. Out gush’d the sable blood,
And round about me fled out of the floor The souls of the deceased. There cluster’d then Youth, and their wives, much-suffer’d aged men,
Soft tender virgins that but new came there By timeless death, and green their sorrows were.
There men-at-arms, with armours all ensnared,
Wounded with lance’s, and with faulchion’d, In numbers, up and down the ditch, and stalk,
And threw unmeasured cries about their walk,

ARRIVED now at our ship, we launch’d, and set
Our mast up, put forth sail, and in did get Our late got cattle. Up our sails, we went,
My wayward fellows mourning* now th’ event,
A good companion yet, a toreright wind, Circe (the excellent utterer of her mind) Supplied our murmuring consorts with, that was Both speed and guide to our adventurous pass.
All day our sails stood to the winds, and made Our voyage prosperous. Sun then set, and shade
All ways obscuring, on the bounds we fell Of deep Oceanus, where people dwell Whom a perpetual cloud obscures outright;
To whom the cheerful sun lends never light;
Nor when he mounts the star-sustaining heaven,
Nor when he stoops earth, and sets up the even,
But Night holds fix’d wings, feather’d all with banes, Above those most unblest Cimmerians.

* They mourn’d the event before they knew it.
THE ELEVENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

And fix upon my sepulchre the ear* With which alive I shook the aged seas, And had of friends the dear societies.'

I told the wretched soul I would fulfill And execute th' utmost point his will; And, all the time we sadly talk'd, I still My sword above the blood held; when aside The idol of my friend still amplified His plaint, as up and down the shades he err'd.

Then my deceased mother's soul appear'd, Fair daughter of Autolyces the great, Grave Anticlea, whom, when forth I set For sacred Ilion, I had left alive. Her sight much moved me, and to tears did drive My note of her decease; and yet not she (Though in my ruth she held the highest degree) Would I admit to touch the sacred blood, Till from Tiresias I had understood What Circe told me. At the length did land Theban Tiresias' soul, and in his hand Sustain'd a golden sceptre, knew me well, And said: 'O man unhappy, why to hell, Admitt'st thou dark arrival, and the light The sun gives leavest, to have the horrid sight Of this black region, and the shadows here? Now sheathe thy sharp sword, and the pit forbear, That I the blood may taste, and then relate The truth of those acts that affect thy fate.'

I sheathed my sword, and left the pit, till

The black blood tasting, thus instructed me: 'Renown'd Ulysses! All unask'd I know That all the cause of thy arrival now Is to enquire thy wish'd retreat for home: Which hardly God will let thee overcome; Since Neptune still will his opposition try, With all his laid-up anger, for the eye His loved son lost to thee; and yet through all Thou suffering course (which must be capital) If both thine own affections, and thy friends' Thou wilt contain; when thy access ascends The three-fork'd island, having scaped the seas, (Where ye shall find fed on the flowery leas

Fat flocks, and ovin, which the Sun doth own,
To whom are all things as well heard as shown,
And never dare one head of those to slay,
But hold unharmed on your wished way.
Though through enough affliction, yet secure
Your Fates shall land ye; but presage says sure,
If once ye spoil them, spoil to all thy friends,
Spoil to thy fleet; and if the justice ends;
Short of thyself, it shall be long before,
And that length forced out with afflictions' store,
When, losing all thy fellows, in a sail
Of foreign built (when most thy Fates prevail In thy deliverance) thus th' event shall sort:
Thou shalt find shipwreck raging in thy port,
Proud men thy goods consuming, and thy wife
Urging with gifts, give charge upon thy life.
But all thy wrongs revenge shall end to thee;
And once, or cunning, set with slaughter free Thy house of all thy spoilers. Yet again
Thou shalt a voyage make, and come to men
That know no sea, nor ships, nor oars that are Wings to a ship, nor mix with any fare*
Salt's savoury vapour. Where thou first shalt land,
This clear-given sign shall let thee understand,
That there those men remain: assume ashore
Up to thy royal shoulder a ship oar,
With which, when thou shalt meet one on the way That will in country admiration say "What dost thou with that man upon thy neck?"
There fix that wan oar, and that shore deck
With sacred rites to Neptune; slaughter there
A ram, a bull, and (who for strength doth bear
The name of husband to a herd) a boar.
And, coming home, upon thy natural shore,
Give pious hecatombs to all the Gods (Degrees observed). And then the periods
Of all thy labours in the peace shall end
Of easy death; which shall the less extend His passion to thee, that thy foe, the Sea,
Shall not enforce it, but Death's victory
Shall chance in only earnest-pray'd age
Obtain'd at home, quite emptied of his rage:
Thy subjects round about thee, rich and blest.
And here hath 'Truth summ'd up thy vital rest.'
I answer'd him: 'We will suppose all these Decreed in Deity; let it likewise please Tiresias to resolve me, why so near
The blood and me my mother's soul doth bear,
And yet nor word, nor look, vouchsafe her son?
Dost she not know me?' 'No,' said he,
'nor none
Of all these spirits, but myself alone,
Knows anything till he shall taste the blood.
But whomsoever you shall do that good,
He will the truth of all you wish unfold;
Who you envy it to, will all withhold.'
Thus said the kingly soul, and made retreat
Amidst the inner parts of Pluto's seat,
When he had spoke thus by divine instinct.
Still I stood firm, till to the blood's pre-ecinct
My mother came, and drunk; and then she knew I was her son, had passion to renew
Her natural plaints, which thus she did pursue:
'How is it, O my son, that you alive
This deadly-darksome region underdive?
'Twixt which, and earth, so many mighty seas,
And horrid currents, interpose their prease?
Oceanus in chief; which none (unless More help'd than you) on foot now can transgress.

And now the part of age that irksome is

Nor by disease invaded, vast and foul,

She thus; 'when I had great desire to prove My arms the circle where her soul did
move.
Thrice proved I, thrice she vanish'd like a

Or fleeting shadow, which strook much more deep
The wounds my woes made, and made ask her why
She would my love to her embraces fly,
And not vouchsafe that even in hell we might Pay pious Nature her unalter'd right,
And give Vexation here her cruel fill?
Should not the Queen here, to augment the ill
Of every sufferance, which her office is,
Enforce thy idol to afford me this?'
'O son,' she answer'd, 'of the race of
men
The most unhappy, our most equal Queen
Will mock no solid arms with empty shade,
Nor suffer empty shades again to invade Flesh, bones, and nerves; nor will defraud the fire
Of his last dews, that, soon as spirits expire
And leave the white bone, are his native right,
When, like a dream, the soul assumes her
flight.
The light then of the living with most
haste,
O son, contend to. This thy little taste
Of this state is enough; and all this life
Will make a tale fit to be told thy wife.'
This speech we had; when now repair’d to me
More female spirits, by Persephone Driven on before her. All th’ heroes’ wives,
And daughters, that led there their second lives,
About the black blood throng’d. Of whom yet more
My mind impell’d me to inquire, before
I let them altogether taste the gore;
For then would all have been dispersed, and gone Thick as they came. I, therefore, one by one Let taste the pit, my sword drawn from my thigh, And stand betwixt them made, when severally,
All told their stocks. The first, that quench’d her fire,
Was Tyro, issued of a noble sire.
She said she sprung from pure Salamoneus’ bed,
And Cretheus, son of Aolus, did wed;
Yet the divine flood Enipeus loved,
Who much the most fair stream of all floods moved.
Near whose streams Tyro walking, Neptune came,
Like Enipeus, and enjoy’d the dame.
Like to a hill, the blue and snaky flood Above th’ immortal and the mortal stood,
And hid them both, as both together lay,
Just where his current falls into the sea.
Her virgin waist dissolved; she slumber’d then;
But when the God had done the work of men,
Her fair hand gently wringing, thus he said: ‘Woman I rejoice in our combined bed;
For when the year hath run his circle round (Because the Gods’ loves must in fruit abound)
My love shall make, to cheer thy teeming moans, Thy one dear burthen bear two famous sons;
Love well, and bring them up: go home, and see That, though of more joy yet I shall be free, Thou dost not tell, to glorify thy birth,
Thy love is Neptune, shaker of the earth.’
This said, he plunged into the sea; and she,
Begot with child by him, the light let see Great Pelias, and Neleus, that became In Jove’s great ministry, of mighty fame,
Pelias in broad Ioleus held his throne,
Wealthy in cattle; th’ other royal son Ruled sandy Pylos. To these issue more
This queen of women to her husband bore, Aeson, and Pheres, and Amythaon
That for his fight on horseback stoop’d to none.
Next her, I saw admired Antiope, Asopus’ daughter, who, (as much as she Boasted attraction of great Neptune’s love)
Bosom’d her child in the arms of Jove,
And two sons likewise at one burthen bore
To that her all-controlling paramour.
Amphion, and fair Zethus; that first laid Great Thebes’ foundations, and strong walls convey’d
About her turrets, that seven ports enclosed.
For though the Thebans much in strength reposed,
Yet had not they the strength to hold their own,
Without the added aids of wood and stone.
Alemna next I saw, that famous wife
Was to Amphitrion, and honours’d life.
Gave to the lion-hearted Hercules,
That was of Jove’s embrace the great increase.
I saw, besides, proud Creon’s daughter there,
Bright Megara, that nuptial yoke did wear
With Jove’s great son, who never field did try
But bore to him the flower of victory.
The mother then of Oedipus I saw,
Fair Epicasta, that, beyond all law,
Her own son married, ignorant of kind;
And he, as darkly taken in his mind,
His mother wedded, and his father slew.
Whose blind act heaven exposed at length to view,
And he in all-loved Thebes the supreme state
With much moan managed, for the heavy fate
That Gods laid on him. She made violent flight
To Pluto’s dark house from the loathed light, Beneath a steep beam strangled with a cord,
And left her son, in life, pains as abhorrd As all the furies pour’d on her in hell.
Then saw I Chloris, that did so excel
In answering beauties, that each part had all.
Great Neleus married her, when gifts not small
Had won her favour term’d by name of dower.
She was of all Amphion’s seed the flower;
Amphion, call'd Iasides, that then Ruled strongly Mynitean Orokhomen,
And now his daughter ruled the Pylian
throne;
Because her beauty's empire overshone.
She brought her wise-aved husband, Neleus, Nestor much honour'd, Periclymenus,
And Chromius, sons with sovereign virtues graced;
But after brought a daughter that surpass'd,
Rare-beauted Pero, so for form exact
That nature to a miracle was rack'd In her perfections, blaze'd with th' eyes of
men;
That made of all the countries' hearts a chain,
And drew them suitors to her. Which her sire
Took vantage of, and, since he did aspire
To nothing more than to the broad-brow'd herd
Of oxen, which the common fame so
rear'd
Own'd by Iphicles, not a man should be
His Pero's husband, that from Plyface Those never-yet-driven oxen could not drive:
Yet these a strong hope held him to achieve,
Because a prophet, that had never err'd,
Had said, that only he should be prefer'd
To their possession. But the equal fate
Of God withstood his stealth; inextricate Imprisoning bands, and sturdy churlish swains
That were the herdsmen, who withheld with chains
The stealthy attempter; which was only he
That dared abet the act with prophecy; None else would undertake it, and he must;
The king would needs a prophet should be just.
But when some days and months expired
were,
And all the hours had brought about the
year,
The prophet did so satisfy the king (Iphicles, all his cunning questioning)
That he enfranchis'd him; and, all worst done,
Jove's counsel made th' all-safe conclusion.
Then saw I Leda, link'd in nuptial
chain
With Tyndarus, to whom she did sustain Sons much renown'd for wisdom; Castor
one,
That pass'd, for use of horse, comparison;
And Pollux, that excell'd in whirlbat
fight;
Both these the fruitful Earth bore, while the
light
Of life inspired them; after which, they found
Such grace with Jove, that both lived under ground,
By change of days; life still did one sustain,
While th' other died; the dead then lived
again,
The living dying; both of one self date
Their lives and deaths made by the Gods and Fate.
Iphimedia after Leda came,
That did derive from Neptune too the
name
Of father to two admirable sons,
Life yet made short their admirations;
Who God-opposed Otus had to name,
And Ephialtes far in sound of fame.
The prodigal Earth so fed them, that they grew
To most huge stature, and had fairest hue
Of all men, but Orion, under heaven.
At nine years old nine cubits they were driven
Abroad in breadth, and sprung nine fathoms high.
They threaten'd to give battle to the sky,
And all th' Immortals. They were setting
on Ossa upon Olympus, and upon Steep Ossa leavy Pelus, that even They might a highway make with lofty heaven;
And had perhaps perform'd it, had they lived.
Till they were striplings: but Jove's son deprived
Their limbs of life, before th' age that begins
The flower of youth, and should adorn their chins.
Phaedra and Procris, with wise Minos' flame, Bright Ariadne, to the offering came,
Whom whilom Theseus made his prise from Crete,
That Athens' sacred soil might kiss her
feet,
But never could obtain her virgin flower,
Till, in the sea-girl Dia, Dion's power Detain'd his homeward haste; where (in her fane,
By Bacchus witness'd) was the fatal wane
Of her prime glory. Maera, Clymene,
I witness'd there; and loathed Eriphyle,
That honour'd* gold more than she loved her spouse.
But all th' heroesses in Pluto's house
That then encounter'd me, exceeds my might?
To name or number, and ambrosian night
Would quite be spent, when now the formal hours
Present to sleep our all-disposed powers,
If at my ship, or here; my home-made vow
I leave for fit grace to the Gods and you."
This said; the silence his discourse had made
With pleasure held still through the house's shade,
When white-arm'd Arete this speech began:
"Phaeacians! how appears to you this man,
So kindly-person'd, and so match'd with mind?
My guest he is, but all you stand combined
In the renown he doth us. Do not then With careless haste dismiss him, nor the main
Of his dispatch to one so needy main,
The Gods' free bounty gives us all just claim To gods enow." This speech, the oldest man
Of any other Phaeacian,
The grave hero, Echines, gave All approbation, saying: "Friends! ye have The motion of the wise queen, in such words,
As have not miss'd the mark, with which accords
My clear opinion. But Alcinous, In word and work, must be our rule." He thus;
And then Alcinous said: "This then must stand,
If while I live I rule in the command
Of this well-skill'd-in-navigation state:
Endure then, guest, though most importunate
Be your affects for home. A little stay
If your expectation bear, perhaps it may Our gifts make more complete. The cares of all Your due deduction asks; but principal
I am therein the ruler." He replied:
"Alcinous! the most duly glorified

With rule of all; of all men, if you lay Commandment on me of a whole year's stay,
So all the while your preparations rise,
As well in gifts as* time, ye can devise
No better wish for me; for I shall come Much fuller-handed, and more honour'd, home,
And dearer to my people, in whose loves
The richer evermore the better proves."
He answer'd: "There is argued in your sight
A worth that works not men for benefit,
Like propliers or impostors; of which crew,
The gentle black Earth feeds not up a few,
Here and there wanderers, blanching tales
And lies,
Of neither praise, nor use. You move our eyes
With form, our minds with matter, and our ears
With elegant oration, such as bears
A music in the order'd history
It lays before us. Not Demodocus
With sweeter strains hath used to sing to us
All the Greek sorrows, wept out in your own.
But say; of all your worthy friends, were none Objected to your eyes, that consorts were To Ilion with you? and served destiny there?
This night is passing long, unmeasured, none
Of all my household would to bed yet: on Relate these wondrous things. Were I with you,
If you would tell me but your woes, as now,
Till the divine Aurora shew'd her head,
I should in no night relish thought of bed."
"Most eminent king," said he, "times all must keep;
There's time to speak much, time as much to sleep.
But would you hear still, I will tell you still,
And utter more, more miserable ill
Of friends than yet, that scaped the dismal wars,
And perish'd homewards, and in household jars,
Waged by a wicked woman. The chaster Queen
No sooner made these lady-ghosts unseen,
Here and there flitting, but mine eye-sight won
The soul of Agamemnon, Atreus' son,

* Amphiarus was her husband, whom she betrayed to his ruin at Thebes, for gold taken of Adrastus her brother.

† Here he begins his other relation.
Sad, and about him all his train of friends,
That in Ægisthus’ house endured their ends
With his stern fortune, having drunk the blood,
He knew me instantly, and forth a flood
Of springing tears gush’d; out he thrust his hands,
With will t’embrace me, but their old commands
Flow’d not about him, nor their weakest part.
I wept to see, and moan’d him from my heart,
And ask’d: ‘O Agamemnon! King of men!
What sort of cruel death hath render’d slain Thy royal person? Neptune, in thy fleet?
Heaven and his hellish billows making meet,
Rousing the winds? Or have thy men by land Done thee this ill, for using thy command,
Past their consents, in diminution
Of those full shares their worths by lot had won
Of sheep or oxen? or of any town,
In covetous strife, to make their rights thine own,
In men or women prisoners?’ He replied:
‘By none of these, in any right, I died;
But by Ægisthus and my murderous wife (Bid to a banquet at his house) my life Hath thus been rent me, to my slaughter led.
Like to an ox pretended to be fed,
So miserably fell I; and with me
My friends lay massacred; as when you see
At any rich man’s nuptials, shot, or feast,
About his kitchen white-tooth’d swine lie drest.
The slaughters of a world of men thine eyes,
Both private and in prease of enemies
Have personally witness’d; but this one Would all thy parts have broken into moan,
To see how strew’d about our cups and cates,
As tables set with feast, so we with fates,
All gash’d and slain lay, all the floor embred
With blood and brain. But that which most I rue, Flew from the heavy voice that Priam’s seed,
Cassandra breathed; whom she that wit doth feed
With baneful crafts, false Clytemnestra, slew, Close sitting by me; up my hands I threw
From earth to heaven; and tumbling on my sword
Gave wretched life up; when the most abhor’d,
By all her sex’s shame, forsook the room,
Nor deign’d, though then so near this heavy home,
To shut my lips, or close my broken eyes.
Nothing so heap’d is with impieties,
As such a woman that would kill her spouse
That married her a maid. When to my house
I brought her, hoping of her love in heart,
To children, maids, and slaves. But she (in th’ art Of only mischief hearty) not alone
Cast on herself this foul aspersion,
But loving dames, hereafter, to their lords
Will bear, for good deeds, her bad thoughts and words.’
‘Alas,’ said I, ’that Jove should hate the lives Of Atreus’ seed so highly for their wives,
For Menelaus’ wife a number fell;
For dangerous absence thine sent thee to hell.’
‘For this,’ he answer’d, ’be not thou most kind Than wise to thy wife: never all thy mind
Let words express to her. Of all she knows, Curbs for the worst still in thyself repose.
But thou by thy wife’s wiles shalt lose no blood;
Exceeding wise she is, and wise in good.
Icarus’ daughter, chaste Penelope,
We left a young bride, when for battle we Forsook the nuptial peace, and at her breast
Her first child suckling; who, by this hour, blest, Sits in the number of surviving men.
And his bliss she hath, that she can contain,
And her bliss thou hast, that she is so wise;
For, by her wisdom, thy returned eyes
Shall see thy son; and he shall greet his sire
With fitting welcomes; when in my retire,
My wife denies mine eyes my son’s dear sight,
And, as from me, will take from him the light,
Before she adds one just delight to life,
Or her false wit one truth that fits a wife.
For her sake therefore let my harms advise,
That though thy wife be ne'er so chaste and wise,
Yet come not home to her in open view,*
With any ship or any personal shew.
But take close shore disguised, nor let her know,
For 'tis no world to trust a woman now.
But what says Pame? Doth my son yet survive,
In Orchomen, or Pylus? or doth live
In Sparta with his uncle? yet I see Divine Orestes is not here with me.
I answer'd, asking: 'Why doth Atreus' son
Enquire of me? who yet arrived where none
Could give to these news any certain wings?
And 'tis absurd to tell uncertain things,'
Such sad speech past us; and as thus we stood,
With kind tears rendering unkind fortunes good,
Achilles' and Patroclus' soul appear'd,
And his soul, of whom never ill was heard,
The good Antilochus, and the soul of him.
That all the Greeks past both for force and limb, Excepting the unmatch'd Æacides, Illustrious Ajax. But the first of these
That saw, acknowledged, and saluted me,
Was Thetis' conquering son, who (heavily)
His state here taking said: 'Unworthy breath!
What act yet mightier imagineth
Thy venturous spirit? How dost thou descend
These under regions, where the dead man's end
Is to be look'd on, and his foolish shade?'
I answer'd him: 'I was induced t' invade
These under parts, most excellent of Greece,
To visit wise Tiresias, for advice
Of virtue to direct my voyage home
To rugged Ithaca; since I could come
To note in no place, where Achæa stood,
And so lived ever, tortured with the blood In man's vain veins. Thou therefore,
Thetis' son,
Hast equall'd all, that ever yet have won
The bliss the earth yields, or hereafter shall.
In life thy eminence was adored of all,
Even with the Gods; and now, even dead, I see 'Thy virtues propagate thy empery
To a renew'd life of command beneath;
So great Achilles triumphs over death.'
This comfort of him this encounter found:
'Urge not my death to me, nor rub that wound;
I rather wish to live in earth a swain.
Or serve a swain for hire, that scarce can gain Bread to sustain him, than, that life once gone,
Of all the dead sway the imperial throne.
But say, and of my son some comfort yield,
If he goes on in first fights of the field,
Or lurks for safety in the obscure rear?
Or of my father if thy royal ear
Hath been advertised, that the Phthian throne
He still commands, as greatest Myrmidon?
Or that the Phthian and Thessalian rage
(Now feet and hands are in the hold of age)
Despire his empire? Under those bright rays,
In which heaven's fervour hurls about the days,
Must I no more shine his revenger now,
Such as of old the lion overthrow Witness'd my anger, th' universal host Sending before me to this shady coast,
In fight for Grecia. Could I now resort,
(But for some small time) to my father's court,
In spirit and power as then, those men should find My hands inaccessible, and of fire my mind,
That durst, with all the numbers they are strong,
Unseat his honour, and suborn his wrong.'
This pitch still flew his spirit, though so low.
And this I answer'd thus: 'I do not know
Of blameless Peleus any least report;
But of your son, in all the utmost sort,
I can inform your care with truth, and thus:
From Scyros princely Neoptolemus
By fleet I convey'd to the Greeks, where he Was chief, at both parts, when our gravity Retired to council, and our youth to fight.
In council still so fiery was Conceit.
In his quick apprehension of a cause,
That first he ever spake, nor past the laws
Of any grave stay, in his greatest haste.
None would contend with him, that counsel'd last;
Unless illustrious Nestor, he and I Would sometimes put a friendly contrary
On his opinion. In our fights, the preaze
Of great or common, he would never cease,
But far before fight ever. No man there,
For force, he forced. He was slaughterer
Of many a brave man in most dreadful fight
But one and other whom he rest of light,
In Grecian succour, I can neither name,
Nor give in number. The particular fame
Of one man's slaughter yet I must not pass; Eurypylus Telephides he was,
That fell beneath him; and with him the falls
Of such huge men went, that they shew'd like whales*
Ramp'd about him. Neoptolemus
Set him so sharply, for the sumptuous Favours of mistresses he saw him wear;
For past all doubt his beauties had no peer
Of all that mine eyes noted, next to one,
And that was Memnon, Tithon's Sun-like son.
Thus far, for fight in public, may a taste Give of his eminence. How far surpass
His spirit in private, where he was not seen.
Nor glory could be said to praise his spleen,
This close note I excepted. When we sat
Hid in Epeus' horse, no optimates
Of all the Greeks there had the charge to ope
And shut the straigent† but I. My scope
To note then each man's spirit in a strait
Of so much danger, much he might be hit by me, than others, as, provoked,
I shifted place still; when, in some I smoked Both privy tremblings, and close vent of tears.
In him yet not a soft conceit of theirs
Could all my search see, either his wet eyes
Plied still with wipings, or the godly guise

His person all ways put forth, in least part,
By any tremblings, shew'd his touch'd-at heart.
But ever he was urging me to make Way to their sally, by his sign to shake
His sword hid in his scabbard, or his lance Loaded with iron at me. No good chance
His thoughts to Troy intended. In th' event, High Troy depopulate, he made ascent
To his fair ship, with prise and treasure store
Safe; and no touch away with him he bore
Of far-off-hurt'd lance, or of close-fought sword,
Whose wounds for favours war doth oft afford,
Which he (though sought) miss'd in war's closest wage.
In close fights Mars doth never fight, but rage.*
This made the soul of swift Achilles tread
A march of glory through the herby mead,
For joy to hear me so renown his son;
And vanish'd stalking. But with passion Stood th' other souls strout, and each told his bane.
Only the spirit Telamonian*
Kept far off, angry for the victory
I won from him at fleet; though arbitly
Of all a court of war pronounced it mine,
And Pallias' self. Our prise were th' arms divine
Of great Acaides,† proposed t' our fames
By his bright Mother;† at his funeral games,
I wish to heaven I ought not to have won;
Since for those arms so high a head so soon
The base earth cover'd. Ajax, that of all The host of Greece had person capital,
And acts as eminent, excepting his Whose arms those were, in whom was nought amiss.
I tried the great soul with soft words, and said:
'Ajax! great son of Telamon, array'd
In all our glories! what I not dead resign Thy wrath for those cursed arms? The Powers divine
In them forget all our banes, in thine own one,
In thy grave fall our tower was overthrown.

* This place (and a number more) is most miserably mistaken by all translators and commentors.
† The horse abovesaid.

* Ajax the son of Telamon.
† Achilles.
‡ Thebis.
We mourn, for ever maim'd, for thee as much
As for Achilles; nor thy wrong doth touch
In sentence, any but Saturnus' doom;
In whose hate was the host of Greece become A very horror: who express'd it well
Insigning thy fate with this timeless hell.
Approach then, king of all the Grecian merit,
Repress thy great mind and thy flamy spirit,
And give the words I give thee worthy ear.
All this no word drew from him, but less near
The stern soul kept; to other souls he fled,
And glid along the river of the dead.
Though anger moved him, yet he might have spoke,
Since I to him. But my desires were strook With sight of other souls. And then I saw Minos, that minister'd to Death a law,
And Jove's bright son was. He was set, and sway'd
A golden sceptre; and to him did plead
A sort of others, set about his throne
In Pluto's wide-door'd house; when straight came on Mighty Orion, who was hunting there
The herds of those beasts he had slaughter'd here
In desert hills on earth. A club he bore, Entirely steel, whose virtues never wore.
Tityus I saw; to whom the glorious earth
Open'd her womb, and gave unhappy birth.
Upwards, and flat upon the pavement, lay
His ample limbs, that spread in their display
Nine acres' compass. On his bosom sat
Two vultures, digging, through his cauld of fat,
Into his liver with their crooked beaks;
And each by turns the concrete entrail breaks
(As smiths their steel beat) set on either side.
Nor doth he ever labour to divide
His liver and their beaks, nor with his hand Offer them off; but suffers by command Of th' angry Thunderer, offering to enforce
His love Latona, in the close recourse
She used to Pytho through the dancing land, Smooth Panopeus. I saw likewise stand,
Up to the chin, amidst a liquid lake,
Tortur'd Tantalus, yet could not slake
His burning thirst. Oft as his scornful cup
Th' old man would taste, so oft 'twas swallow'd up,
And all the black earth to his feet descried.
Divine power (plaguing him) the lake still dried.
About his head, on high trees, clustering hung,
Pears, apples, granates, olives ever young,
Delicious figs, and many fruit-trees more
Of other burthen; whose alluring store
When th' old soul strived to pluck, the winds from sight, In gloomy vapours, made them vanish quite.
There saw I Sisyphus in infinite moan,
With both hands heaving up a massy stone;
And on his tip-toes racking all his height.
To wrest up to a mountain-top his freight;
When rest to rest it there (his nerves quite spent)
Down rush'd the deadly quarry, the event
Of all his torture new to raise again;
To which straight set his never-rested pain.
The sweat came gushing out from every pore,
And on his head a standing mist he wore,
Reeking from thence, as if a cloud of dust
Were raised about it. Down with these was thrust
The idol of the force of Hercules,
But his firm self did no such fate oppress,
He feasting lives amongst th' Immortal States,
White-ankled Hebe and himself make mates
In heavenly nuptials. Hebe, Jove's dear race,
And Juno's, whom the golden sandals grace.
About him flew the clamours of the dead
Like fowls, and still stoop'd cussing at his head.
He with his bow, like Night, stalked up and down,
His shaft still nock'd, and hurling round his frown
At those vex'd hoverers, aiming at them still,
And still, as shooting out, desire to still.
A horrid bawdrick wore he thwart his breast,
The thong all gold, in which were forms impost
Where art and miracle drew equal breaths,
In bears, boars, lions, battles, combats, deaths.
Who wrought that work did never such before,
Nor so divinely will do ever more.
Soon as he saw, he knew me, and gave speech:
'Son of Laertes, high in wisdom's reach,
And yet unhappy wretch, for in this heart.
Of all exploits achieved by thy desert,
Thy worth but works out some sinister fate,
As I in earth did. I was generate
By Jove himself, and yet past mean op
By one my far inferior, whose proud hest Imposed abhorred labours on my hand.
Of all which one was, to descend this strand,
And hale the dog from thence. He could not think
An act that danger could make deeper sink.
And yet this depth I drew, and fetch'd as high,
As this was low, the dog. The Deity

Of sleight and wisdom, as of downright power,
Both stoop'd, and raised, and made me conqueror.'
This said, he made descent again as low
As Pluto's court; when I stood firm for show
Of more heroes of the times before,
And might perhaps have seen my wish of more,
(As Theseus and Pirithous, derived From roots of Deity) but before th' achieved Rare sight of these, the rank-soul'd multitude
In infinite flocks rose; venting sounds so rude,
That pale Fear took me, lest the Gorgon's head
Rush'd in amongst them, thrust up, in my dread, By grim Persephone. I therefore sent My men before to ship, and after went.
Where, boarded, set, and launch'd, the ocean wave
Our ears and forewinds speedy passage gave.

THE END OF THE ELEVENTH BOOK.
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.
He shews from Hell his safe retreat
To th' isle Æaea, Circe's seat;
And how he scapesthe Sirens' calls,
With th' erring rocks, and waters' falls,
That Scylla and Charybdis break;
The Sun's stolen herd; and his sad wreak
Both of Ulysses' ship and men,
His own head searing scarce the pain.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
Më. The rocks that err'd;
The Sirens' call;
The Sun's stolen herd;
The soldiers' fall.

Our ship now past the straits of th' ocean flood,
She plow'd the broad sea's billows, and made good
The isle Æaea, where the palace stands
Of th' early riser with the rosy hands,
Active Aurora; where she loves to dance,
And where the Sun doth his prime beams advance.

When here arrived, we drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the re-saluted sand,
Found on the shore fit resting for the night,
Slept, and expected the celestial light.

Soon as the white-and-red-mix'd-finger'd Dame
Had girt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house before,
To fetch deceased Eipenor to the shore.

Straight swell'd the high banks with fell'd heaps of trees,
And, full of tears, we did due exequies
To our dead friend. Whose corse consumed with fire,
And honour'd arms, whose sepulchre entire,
And over that a column raised, his cairn,
Curiously carved, to his desire before,
Upon the top of all his tomb we fix'd.
Of all rites fit his funeral pile was mix'd.
Nor was our safe ascent from Hell conceal'd
From Circe's knowledge; nor so soon reveal'd

But she was with us, with her bread and food,
And ruddy wine, brought by her sacred brood
Of woods and fountains. In the midst she stood,
And thus saluted us: 'Unhappy men,
That have (inform'd with all your senses) been In Pluto's dismal mansion. You shall die
Twice now, where others, that Mortality
In her fair arms holds, shall but once decease, But eat and drink out all conceit of these,
And this day dedicate to food and wine,
The following night to sleep. When next shall shine
The cheerful morning, you shall prove the seas.

Your way, and every act ye must address,
My knowledge of their order shall design,
Lest with your own bad counsels ye incline Events as bad against ye, and sustain
By sea and shore, the woful ends that reign
In wilful actions.' Thus did she advise
And, for the time, our fortunes were so wise
To follow wise directions. All that day
We sat and feasted. When his lower way
'The Sun had enter'd, and the Even the high,
My friends slept on their gables; she and I (Led by her fair hand to a place apart,
By her well-sorted) did to sleep convert
Our timid powers; when all things Fate let fall
In our affair she ask'd; I told her all.
To which she answer'd: 'These things thus took end.
And now to those that I inform attend,
Which you remembering, God himself shall be
The blessed author of your memory,
First to the Sirens ye shall come, that taint
The minds of all men whom they can acquaint
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

With their attractions. Whosoever shall, For want of knowledge moved, but hear the call Of any Siren, he will so despise Both wife and children, for their sorceries, That never home turns his affections’s stream, Nor they take joy in him, nor he in them. The Sirens will so soften with their song (Shrill, and in sensual appetite so strong) His loose affections, that he gives them head. And then observe: They sit amidst a mead, And round about it runs a hedge or wall Of dead men’s bones, their witter’d skins and all Hung all along upon it; and these men Were such as they had fawn’d into their fen, And then their skins hung on their hedge of bones. Sail by them therefore, thy companions Beforehand causing to stop every ear With sweet soft wax so close, that none may hear A note of all their charmsions. Yet may you, If you affect it, open ear allow To try their motion; but presume not so To trust your judgment, when your senses go So loose about you, but give strict command To all your men, to bind you foot and hand Sure to the mast, that you may safe approve How strong in instigation to their love Their rapting tunes are. If so much they move, That, spite of all your reason, your will stands To be enchained both of feet and hands, Charge all your men before to slight your charge, And rest so far from fearing to enlarge That much more sure they bind you. When your friends Have outsail’d these, the danger that transcends Rests not in any counsel to prevent, Unless your own mind finds the tract and bent Of that way that avoids it. I can say That in your course there lies a twofold way,

The right of which your own taught present wit, And grave divine, must prompt. In general yet Let this inform you: Near these Sirens’ shore Move two steep rocks, at whose feet lie and roar The black sea’s cruel billows; the blessing Gods Call them the Rovers. Their aborn’d abodes No bird can pass; no not the doves, whose fear Sire Jove so loves that they are said to bear Ambrosia to him, can their ravine scope, But one of them falls ever to the rape Of those sly rocks; yet Jove another still Adds to the rest, that so may ever fill The sacred number. Never ship could alight. The nimble peril wing’d there, but did run With all her bulk, and bodies of her men, To utter ruin. For the seats retain Not only their outrageous shrewdness, But fierce assistants of particular fear And supernatural mischief, they expire, And those are whirlwinds of devouring fire Whisking about still. Th’ Argive ship alone, (Which bore the care of all men) got her gone.

* ἰδεῖνα ταγωρία. Columba timida. What these doves were, and the whole mind of this place, the great Macedon asking Chiron Amphipolites, he answered: They were the Pleiades or seven Stars. One of which besides his proper imperfection of being amblyope, i.e. ades exitis, sed subobscurum, ut vis apparent) is utterly obscured or let by these rocks. Why then, or how, Jove still supplied the lost one, that the number might be full, Atheneus falls to it, and helps the other out; interpreting it to be affirmed of their perpetual septenary number, though there appeared but six. But how lame and lachrymose these prosers shew in their affected expositions of the poetical mind, this and an hundred others, spent in mere presumptuous guess at this inaccessible Poet, I hope will make plain to the most envious of any thing done, besides their own set censures, and most arrogant overweenings. In the 23 of the Iliads (being χειρὶ) at the games celebrated at Patroclus’ funerals, they tied to the top of a mast ταγωρία τειγωρία, timidal columbanum, to shoot at for a game, so that by these great men’s above said expositions they shot at the Pleiades.

† Naur i. p. 632. &c. Novus omnisurus curse: the ship that held the care of all men, or of all things: which our critics will needs
Come from Areta. Yet perhaps even she had wrack’d at those rocks, if the Deity, That lives by Jove’s side, had not lent her hand
To their transmission; since the man, that man’d
In chief that voyage, she in chief did love.
Of these two spiritful rocks, the one doth shooe
Against the height of heaven her pointed brow.
A black cloud binds it round, and never sky Lends to the sharp point; not the clear blue sky
Let’s ever view it, not the summer’s eye,
Not fervent autumn’s. None that death could end Could ever scale it, or, if up, descend, Though twenty hands and feet he had for hold.
A polish’d ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock so round, whose midst a gloomy cell
Shrouds so far westward that it seems to hell.
From this keep you as far, as from his bow
An able young man can his shaft bestow.
For here the *whuling Scylla shrouds her face,
That breathes a voice at all parts no more base

Than are a newly-kitten’d kitling’s cries,
Herself a monster yet of boundless size,
Whose sight would nothing please a mortal’s eyes;
No nor the eyes of any God, if he (Whom nought should fright) fell foul on her, and she Her full shape shew’d. Twelve foul feet bear about Her ugly bulk. Six huge long necks look’d out Of her rank shoulders; every neck doth let
A ghastly head out; every head three set,
Thickly furred together, of abhorred teeth,
And every tooth stuck with a sable death.
She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where (glowing round her rock) to fish she falls;
And up rush dolphins, dogfish; sometimes whales,
If got within her when her rapine feeds;
For ever-groaning Amphitrite breezes
About her whirlpool an unmeasured store.
No sea-man ever boasted touch of shore

* edens: but in what kind horribilis? Not for the gravity or greatness of her voice, but for the unworthy or disproportionate small whining of it; she being in the vast frame of her body, as the very words ἡπαθήν ἄνωθεν signify, monstrum ingena; whose disproportion and deformity is too poetically (and therein elegantly) ordered for fat and flat prosers to comprehend. Nor could they make the Poet’s words serve their comprehension; and therefore they add of their own, ἅλκης, from whence λακηβια is derived, signifying ὄρεστη, or ἀντιδελαί chaining. And Ἵλοι αἰσχροὶ ἄνωθεν is to be expounded, catull usque or recent uini, not leonis. But thus they both and abuse the incomparable expressor, because they knew not how otherwise to be monstrous enough themselves to help out the monster. Imagining so huge a great body must needs have a voice as huge; and then would not our Homer have likened it to a lion’s whoop’s voice, but to the lion’s own; and all had been much too little to make a voice answerable to her hugeness. And therefore found our inimitable master a new way to express her monstruous disproportion; performing it so, as there can be nihil usurp. And I would fain learn of my learned detractor, that will needs have me only translate out of the Latin, what Latin translation tells me this? or what Grecian hath ever found this and a hundred other such? Which may be some poor instance, or proof, of my Grecian faculty, as far as old Homer goes in his two simple Poems, but not a syllable further will my silly spirit presume.
That there touch’d with his ship, but still she fed
Of him and his; a man for every head
Spawling his ship off. You shall then deseery
The other humber rock, that moves so nigh
Your dart may mete the distance. It receives A huge wild fig-tree, curl’d with ample leaves, Beneath whose shades divine Charybdis sits, Supping the black deeps. Thrice a day her pith
She drinking all dry, and thrice a day again
All up she belches, baneful to sustain.
When she is drinking, dare not near her draught,
For not the force of Neptune (if once caught)
Can force your freedom. Therefore, in your strife
To scape Charybdis, labour all, for life
To row near Scylla, for she will but have
For her six heads six men; and better save
The rest, than all make offerings to the wave.’
This need she told me of my loss, when I Desired to know, if that Necessity,
When I had scared Charybdis’ outrages,
My powers might not revenge, though not redress?
She answer’d: ‘O unhappy! art thou yet
Enflamed with war, and thirst to drink thy sweat?
Not to the Gods give up both arms and will?
She deathless is, and that immortal ill
Grave, horrid, outrageous, not to be subdued,
That men must suffer till they be renew’d.
Nor lives there any virtue that can fly
The vicious outrage of their cruelty.
Shouldst thou put arms on, and approach the rock,
I fear six more must expiate the shock.
Six heads six men ask still. Hoise sail, and fly,
And, in thy flight, aloud on Gratus cry [Great Scylla’s mother, who exposed to light
That bane of men] and she will do such right
To thy observance, that she down will tread
Her daughter’s rage, nor let her show a head.

From thenceforth then, for ever past her care,
Thou shalt ascend the isle triangular,
Where many oxen of the Sun are fed,
And fatted flocks. Of oxen fifty head
In every herd feed, and their herds are seven;
And of his fat flocks is their number even.
Increase they yield not, for they never die.
There every shepherdess a Deity.
Fair Phaethusa, and Lampetie,
The lovely Nymphs are that their guardians be,
Who to the daylight’s lofty-going flame
Had gracious birthright from the heavenly Dame, Still young Neera; who (brought forth and bred) Far off dismiss’d them, to see duly fed
Their father’s herds and flocks in Sicily.
These herds and flocks if to the Deity Ye leave, as sacred things, untouched, and on Go with all fit care of your home, alone, (Though through some sufferance) you yet safe shall land
In wished Ithaca. But if impious hand
You lay on those herds to their hurts, I then Presage sure ruin to thy ship and men.
If thou escapest thyself, extending home
Thy long’d-for landing, thou shalt loaded come
With store of losses, most exceeding late,
And not consorted with a saved mate.’
This said, the golden-throned Aurora rose,
She her way went, and I did mine dispose
Up to my ship, weigh’d anchor, and away.
When reverend Circe help’d us to convey Our vessel safe, by making well inclined
A seaman’s true companion, a forewind,
With which she fill’d our sails; when, fitting all
Our arms close by us, I did sadly fall
To grave relation what concern’d in fate
My friends to know, and told them that the state Of our affairs’ success, which Circe had Presaged to me alone, must yet be made
To one nor only two known, but to all;
That, since their lives and deaths were left to fall
In their elections, they might life elect,
And give what would preserve it fit effect.
I first inform’d them, that we were to fly
The heavenly-singing Sirens’ harmony,
And flower-adorning meadow; and that I Had charge to hear their song, but futter'd fast
In bands, unfavour'd, to th' erect'd mast;
From whence, if I should pray, or use command,
To be enlarged, they should with much more band Contain my struggles. This I simply told To each particular, nor would withhold
What most enjoin'd mine own affection's stay.
That theirs the rather might be taught t' obey.
In meantime flew our ships, and straight we fetch'd
The Sirens' isle; a spleenless wind so stretch'd
Her wings to waft us, and so urged our keel.
But having reach'd this isle, we could not feel
The least gasp of it, it was stricken dead,
And all the sea in prostrate slumber spread:
The Sirens' devil charm'd all. Up then we flew My friends to work, strook sail, together drew,
And under hatches stow'd them, sat, and pried
Their polish'd oars, and did in curls divide
The white-head waters. My part then came on:
A mighty waxen cake I set upon,
Chopp'd it in fragments with my sword, and wrought
With strong hand every piece, till all were soft.
The great power of the sun, in such a beam
As then fell burning from his diadem,
To liquefaction help'd us. Orderly
I stopp'd their ears; and they as fair did ply
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other halsers made me soundly fast.
Then took they seat, and forth our passage strook,
The foamy sea beneath their labour shook.
Row'd on, in reach of an erect'd voice,
The Sirens soon took note, without our noise;
Tuned those sweet accents that made charms so strong,
And these learn'd numbers made the Sirens' song:
"Come hark, thou worthy of a world of praise,
That best so high the Grecian glory raise;"
Their freedoms open. I could not believe
But they remember’d it, and wish’d them give My equal care and means now equal trust.
The strength they had for stirring up they must Rouse and extend, to try if Jove had laid His powers in theirs up, and would add his aid.
To escape even that death. In particular then,
I told our pilot, that past other men
He must must bear firm spirits, since he sway’d
The continent that all our spirits convey’d,
In his whole guide of her. He saw there boil
The fiery whirlpools that to all our spoil Inclosed a rock, without which he must steer,
Or all our ruins stood concluded there.
All heard me and obey’d, and little knew
That, shunning that rock, six of them should rue
The wreck another hid. For I conceal’d
The heavy wounds, that never would be heal’d,
To be by Scylla open’d; for their fear
Would then have robb’d all of all care to steer,
Or stir an oar, and made them hide beneath;
When they and all had died an idle death.
But then even I forgot to shun the harm Circe forewarn’d; who will I should not arm,
Nor shew myself to Scylla, lest in vain
I ventured life. Yet could not I contain.
But arm’d at all parts, and two lances took.
Up to the forecastle went, and thence did look
That rocky Scylla would have first appear’d
And taken my life with the friends I fear’d.
From thence yet no place could afford her sight,
Though through the dark rock mine eye threw her light,
And ransack’d all ways. I then took a strait
That gave myself, and some few more, receipt Twixt Scylla and Charybdis; whence we saw How horribly Charybdis’ throat did draw
The brackish sea up, which when all abroad
She spit again out, never caldron sod
With so much fervour, fed with all the store
That could enrage it; all the rock did roar
With troubled waters; round about the tops
Of all the steep crags flew the foamy drops.
But when her draught the sea and earth dissunder’d,
The troubled bottoms turn’d up, and she thunder’d,
Far under shore the swart sands naked lay.
Whose whole stern sight the startled blood did fray
From all our faces. And while we on her
Our eyes bestow’d thus to our ruin’s fear,
Six friends had Scylla snatch’d out of our keel,
In whom most loss did force and virtue feel.
When looking to my ship, and lending eye
To see my friends’ estates, their heels turn’d high,
And hands cast up, I might discern, and hear Their calls to me for help, when now they were To try run in their last extremities.
And as an angler medicine for surprise
Of little fish sits pouring from the rocks,
From out the crook’d horn of a fold-bred ox,
And then with his long angle hoists them high
Up to the air, then slightly hurl’s them by,
When helpless sprawling on the land they lie;
So easily Scylla to her rock had rapt
My woful friends, and so unhelp’d, entrapt Struggling they lay beneath her violent rape;
Who in their torments, desperate of escape,
Shriek’d as she tore, and up their hands to me Still threw for sweet life. I did never see,
In all my sufferance ransacking the seas,
A spectacle so full of miseries.
Thus having fled these rocks (these cruel dames) Scylla, Charybdis) where the king of flames Hath offerings burn’d to him, our ship put in The island that from all the earth doth win
The epithet Faustless; where the broad of head
And famous oxen, for the Sun are fed,
With many fat flocks of that high-gone God.
Set in my ship, mine ear reach’d where we rood.
The bellowing of oxen, and the bleat
Of fleecy sheep, that in my memory’s seat
Put up the forms that late had been impress’d
By dread Æsculap Circe, and the best Of souls and prophets, the blind Theban seer,
The wise Tiresias, who was grave decreer
Of my return’s whole means. Of which this one
In chief he urged; that I should always shun
The island of the man-delighting Sun.
When, sad at heart for our late loss, I pray’d
My friends to hear fit counsel (though dismay’d With all ill fortunes) which was given to me
By Circe’s and Tiresias’ prophecy;
That I should fly theisle where was adored
The Comfort of the world, for ills abhor’d
Were ambush’d for us there; and therefore will’d
They should put off and leave the isle.
This kill’d
Their tender spirits; when Eurylochus
A speech that vex’d me utter’d, answering thus:
* Cruel Ulysses! Since thy nerves are sound
In strength, the more spent; and no toils confound Thy able limbs, as all beat out of steel;
Thou ablest us too, as unapt to feel
The teeth of Labour and the spell of Sleep,
And therefore still wet waste us in the deep;
Nor let us land to eat, but madly now
In night put forth, and leave firm land to strow
The sea with errors. All the rabid flight
Of winds that ruin ships are bred in night.
Who is it that can keep off cruel Death,
If suddenly should rush out th’ angry breath
Of Notus, or the eager-spirited West?
That cuff ships dead, and do the Gods their best!
Serve black Night still with shore, meat, sleep, and ease,
And offer to the Morning for the seas."
This all the rest approved, and then knew I
That past all doubt the devil did apply
His slaughterous works. Nor would they be withheld;
I was but one, nor yielded but compell’d;
But all that might contain them I assay’d,
A sacred oath on all their powers I laid,
That if with herds or any richest flocks
We chance’d t’ encounter, neither sheep nor ox
We once should touch, nor (for that constant ill That follows folly) scorn advice and kill,
But quiet sit us down and take such food
As the immortal Circe had bestow’d.
They swore all this in all severest sort;
And then we anchor’d in the wending port.
Near a fresh river, where the long’d-for shore
They all flew out to, took in victuals store,
And, being full, thought of their friends, and wept.
Their loss by Scylla, weeping till they slept.
In night’s third part, when stars began to stoop,
The Cloud-assembler put a tempest up.
A boisterous spirit he gave it, drave out all His flocks of clouds, and let such darkness fall
That Earth and Seas, for fear, to hide were driven.
For with his clouds he thrust out Night from heaven.
At morn we drew our ships into a cave,
In which the Nymphs that Phoebus’ cattle drave Fair dancing-rooms had, and their seats of state.
I urged my friends then, that, to shun their fate,
They would observe their oath, and take the food
Our ship afforded, nor attempt the blood
Of those fair herds and flocks; because they were
That dreadful God’s that all could see and hear.
They stood observant, and in that good mind
Had we been gone; but so adverse the wind Stood to our passage, that we could not go.
For one whole month perpetually did blow
Impetuous Notus; not a breath’s repair
But his and Eurus’ ruled in all the air.
As long yet as their ruddy wine and bread
Stood out amongst them, so long not a head
THE TWELFTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSES.

Of all those oxen fell in any strife
Amongst those students for the gut and life.
But when their victuals fail'd they fell to prey, Necessity compell'd them then to stray
In rape of fish and fowl; whatever came
In reach of hand or hook, the belly's flame Afflicted to it. I then fell to prayer,
And (making to a close retreat repair,
Free from both friends and winds) I wash'd my hands,
And all the Gods besought, that held commands
In liberal heaven, to yield some mean to stay
Their desperate hunger, and set up the way
Of our return restrain'd. The Gods, instead Of giving what I pray'd for, power of deed,
A deathless sleep did on my lids distill,
For men to work upon my friends their ill.
For whiles I slept, there waked no mean to curb Their headstrong wants; which he that did disturb My rule in chief at all times, and was chief
To all the rest in counsel to their grief, Knew well, and of my present absence took His fit advantage, and their iron stroke
At highest heat. For, feeling their desire
In his own entrails, to allay the fire
That Famine blew in them, he thus gave way.
To that affection: 'Hear what I shall say,
Though words will stanch no hunger, every death
To us poor wretches that draw temporal breath
You know is hateful; but, all know, to die
The death of Famine is a misery Past all death's comeliness. Let us, therefore take The chief of this fair herd, and offerings make
To all the deathless that in broad heaven live;
And in particular vow, if we arrive
In natural Ithaca, to straight erect
A temple to the haughty-in-aspect,
Rich and magnificent, and all within Deck it with relics many and divine.
If yet he stands incensed, since we have slain
His high-brow'd herd, and, therefore, will sustain Desire to wrack our ship, he is but one;
And all the other Gods that we alone
With our divine rites will their suffrage give
To our design'd return, and let us live.
If not, and all take part, I rather crave
To serve with one sole death the yawning wave,
Than in a desert island lie and serve,
And with one pined life many deaths observe.'
All cried: 'He counsels nobly,' and all speed
Made to their resolute driving; for the feed
Of those coal-black, fair, broad-brow'd, sun-loved bees
Had place close by our ships. They took the lives
Of seven, most eminent; about their fall
Stood round, and to the States celestial Made solemn vows; but other rites their ship
Could not afford them, they did, therefore, strip
The curl'd-head oak of fresh young leaves, to make
Supply of service for their barley-cake.
And on the sacredly-enflamed, for wine,
Pour'd purest water, all the parts divine Spitting and roasting; all the rites beside Orderly using. Then did light divide
My low and upper lids; when, my repair
Made near my ship, I met the delicate air
Their roast exhale. Out instantly I cried,
And said: 'O Jove, and all ye Deified,
Ye have oppress'd me with a cruel sleep,
While ye confer'd on me a loss as deep
As Death descends to. To themselves alone
My rude men left ungovern'd, they have done
A deed so impious, I stand well assured,
That you will not forgive though ye procured.'
Then flew Lampetel with the ample robe
Up to her father with the golden globe,
Ambassador t' inform him that my men
Had slain his oxen. Heart-inciped then, he cried: 'Revenge me, Father, and the rest Both ever-living and for ever blest.
Ulysses' impious men have drawn the blood
Of those my oxen, that it did me good
To look on, walking all my starry round,
And when I trod earth all with meadows crown'd.
Without your full amends I'll leave heaven quite; Dis and the dead adorning with my light,
The Cloud-herd answer'd; 'Son! thou shalt be ours,
And light those mortals in that mine of flowers;
My red-hot flash shall graze but on their ship,
And eat it, burning, in the boiling deep.'
This by Calypso I was told, and she Inform'd it from the verger Mercury.
Come to our ship, I chid and told by name
Each man how impiously he was to blame.
But chiding got no peace; the bees were slain.
When straight the Gods forewent their following pain
With dire ostents. The hides the flesh had lost Crept all before them. As the flesh did roast,
It bellow'd like the ox itself alive.
And yet my soldiers did their dead bees drive
Through all these prodigies in daily feasts.
Six days they banqueted and slew fresh beasts;
And when the seventh day Jove reduced the wind
That all the month raged, and so in did bind Our ship and us, was turn'd and calm'd, and we Launch'd, put up masts, sails hoised, and to sea.
The island left so far that land nowhere
But only sea and sky had power t appear.
Jove fix'd a cloud above our ship, so black
That all the sea it darken'd. Yet from wreck
She ran a good free time, till from the West
Came Zephyr ruffling forth, and put his breast Out in a singing tempest, so most vast
It burst the gables that made sure our mast;
Our masts came tumbling down; our cattle down
Rush'd to the pump, and by our pilot's crown
The main-mast pass'd his fall, pash'd all his skull,
And all this wrack but one flaw made at full.
Off from the stern the sternsman diving fell,
And from his sinews flew his soul to hell.
Together all this time Jove's thunder child,
And through and through the ship his lightning glide,
Till it embraced her round; her bulk was fill'd
With nasty sulphur, and her men were kill'd, Tumbled to sea, like sea-mews swim about,
And there the date of their return was out.
I toss'd from side to side still, till all broke Her flat were with the storm, and she did choke
With let-in surges; for the mast torn down
Tore her up piecemeal, and for me to drown Left little undissolved. But to the mast
There was a leather thong left, which I cast
About it and the keel, and so sat tost
With baneful weather, till the West had lost His stormy tyranny. And then arose
The South, that bred me more abhorred woes;
For back again his blasts expell'd me quite On ravenous Charybdis. All that night
I totter'd up and down, till Light and I
At Scylla's rock encounter'd, and the nigh Dreadful Charybdis. As I drawe on these,
I saw Charybdis supping up the seas,
And had gone up together, if the tree
That bore the wild figs had not rescued me:
To which I leapt, and left my keel, and high Clambering upon It did as close imply
My breast about it as a reremouse could;
Yet might my feet on no stub fasten hold
To ease my hands: the roots were crept so low
Beneath the earth, and so aloft did grow
The far-spread arms that (though good height I gat)
I could not reach them. To the main bole
I therefore still must cling; till up again
She belch'd my mast, and after that amain
My keel came tumbling. So at length it chanced
To me, as to a judge that long advanced
To judge a sort of hot young fellows' jars,
At length time frees him from their civil wars,
When glad he riseth and to dinner goes;
So time, at length, released with joys my woes,
And from Charybdis' mouth appear'd my keel,
To which, my hand now loosed and now my heel,
I altogether with a huge noise dropp'd;
Just in her midst fell, where the mast was propp'd;
And there row'd off with owers of my hands.
God and man's Father would not from her sands
Let Scylla see me; for I then had died
That bitter death that my poor friends supplied.

Nine days at sea I hover'd; the tenth night
In th' isle Ogygia, where, about the bright
And right renown'd Calypso, I was cast
By power of Deity; where I lived embraced With love and feasts. But why should I relate Those kind occurrences? I should iterate
What I in part to your chaste queen and you So late imparted. And, for me to grow
A talker over of my tale again,
Were past my free contentment to sustain;"
THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses (shipp’d, but in the even,
With all the presents he was given,
And sleeping then) is set next mom
In full scope of his wish’d return,
And treads unknown his country-shore,
Whose search so many winters were.
The ship (returning, and arrived Against the city) is deprived
Of form; and, all her motion gone,
Transform’d by Neptune to a stone.

Ulysses (let to know the strand Where the Phaeacians made him land)
Consults with Pallas, for the life
Of every woeer of his wife.
His gifts she hides within a cave,
And him into a man more grave,
All hid in wrinkles, crooked, gray,
Transform’d; who so goes on his way.

ANOTHER.

Nē. Phaeacia
Ulysses leaves;
Whom Ithaca,
Unaware, receives.

He said; and silence all their tongues contain’d,
In admiration, when with pleasure chain’d Their ears had long been to him. At last brake
Alcinous silence, and in this sort spake
To th’ Ithacian; Laertes’ son:
"O Ithacus! However over-run With former sufferings in your way for
home,
Since ’twas, at last, your happy fate to come
To my high-roof’d and brass-foundation’d
house,
I hope, such speed and pass auspicious
Our loves shall yield you, that you shall no more
Wander, nor suffer, homewards, as before.
You then, whoever that are ever
graced
With all choice of authorized power to taste
Such wine with me as warms the sacred rage,
And is an honorary* given to age,

With which ye likewise hear divinely sing,
In honour’s praise, the poet of the king,
I move, by way of my command, to this:
That where in an elaborate chest there lies
A present for our guest, attires of price,
And gold engraven with infinite device;
I wish that each of us should add beside A tripod, and a caldron, amplified With size, and metal of most rate, and great;
For we, in council of taxation met,
Will from our subjects gain their worth
again;
Since ’tis unequal one man should sustain
A charge so weighty, being the grace of all,
Which borne by many is a weight but small."

Thus spake Alcinous, and pleased the rest;
When each man closed with home and sleep his feast.
But when the colour-giving light arose,
All to the ship did* all their speeds dispose,
And wealth, that honest men makes,
brought with them.
All which even he that wore the diadem Stow’d in the ship himself, beneath the seats
The rowers sat in; stooping, lest their lets
In any of their labours he might prove.
Then home he turn’d, and after him did
move
The whole assembly to expected feast.
Among whom he a sacrifice adrest
And slew an ox to weather-wielding Jove; Beneath whose empire all things are, and
move.
The thighs then roasting, they made glorious cheer.
Delighted highly; and amongst them there
The honour’d-of-the-people used his voice, Divine Demodocus. Yet, through this choice
Of cheer and music, had Ulysses still An eye directed to the Eastern hill,

* Intending in chief the senators, with every man’s addition of gift.
† Εὐπόροις ἔλεος, bone honestos faciens ut.
To see him rising that illustrates all,
For now into his mind a fire did fall
Of thirst for home. And as in hungry vow
To needful food a man at fixed plow (To whom the black ox all day long hath turn'd
The stubborn falls up, his stomach burn'd
With empty heat and appetite to food,
His knees afflicting with his spirit-spent blood)
At length the long-expected sun-set sees,
That he may sit to food, and rest his knees;
So to Ulysses set the friendly light
The sun afforded, with as wish'd a sight.
Who straight bespake that oar-affecting State;
But did in chief his speech appropriate
To him by name, that with their rule was crown'd.
"Alcinous! of all men most renown'd,
Dismiss me with as safe pass as you vow
(Your offering past), and may the Gods to you
In all contentment use as full a hand;
For now my landing here and stay shall stand
In all perfection with my heart's desire,
Both my so safe deduction to aspire,
And loving gifts; which may the Gods to me
As best in use make as your acts are free;
Even to the finding firm in love and life,
With all desired event, my friends and wife.
When, as myself shall live delighted there,
May you with your wives rest as happy here,
Your sons and daughters, in particular state,
With every virtue render'd consummate;
And, in your general empire, may ill never Approach your land; but good your good quiet ever."
This all applauded, and all jointly cried:
"Dismiss the stranger: He hath dignified With fit speech his dismissal." Then the king Thus charged the herald: "Fill for offering A bowl of wine; which through the whole large house Dispose to all men; that, propitious
Our father Jove made with our prayers, we may Give home our guest in full and wished way."

This said, Pontous commix'd a bowl
Of such sweet wine as did delight the soul.
Which making sacred to the blessed Gods,
That hold in broad heaven their supreme abodes,
God-like Ulysses from his chair arose,
And in the hands of th' empress did impose
The all-round cup; to whom (fair spoke) he said:
"Rejoice, O Queen, and be your joys repaid
By heaven, for me, till age and death succeed;
Both which inflict their most unwelcome need
On men and dames alike. And, first, for me,
I must from hence, to both: Live you here free,
And ever may all living blessings spring;
Your joy in children, subjects, and your king."
This said, divine Ulysses took his way;
Before whom the unalterable sway
Of king Alcinous' virtue did command
A herald's fit attendance to the strand
And ship appointed. With him likewise went Handmaids, by Arete's injunction sent.
One bore an out and in-weed, fair and sweet,
The other an embroider'd cabinet,
The third had bread to bear, and muddy wine;
All which, at sea and ship arrived, resign
Their freight confer'd. With fair attendants then,
The sheets and bedding of the man of men,
Within a cabin of the hollow keel,
Spread, and made soft; that sleep might sweetly seal
His restful eyes; he enter'd, and his bed
In silence took. The rowers ordered Themselves in several seats, and then set gone
The ship; the gable from the hollow stone Dissolved, and weigh'd-up; all, together, close Then beat the sea. His lids in sweet repose Sleep bound so fast, it scarce gave way to breath Inexorable, most dear, next of all to death.
THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS

And as amid a fair field four brave horse
Before a chariot, stung into their course
With fervent lashes of the smarting scourge,
That all their fire blows high, and makes them urge To utmost speed the measure of their ground;
So bore the ship aloft her fiery bound;
About whom rush'd the billows black and vast,
In which the sea-roars burst. As firm as fast
She plied her course yet; nor her winged speed
The falcon gentle could for pace exceed;
So cut she through the waves, and bore a man
Even with the Gods in counsels; that began
And spent his former life in all miscase;
Battles of men, and rude waves of the seas;
Yet now securely slept, forgetting all.
And when heaven's brightest star, that first doth call
The early morning out, advanced her head,
Then near to Ithaca the billow-bred Phaeacian ship approach'd. There is a port,
That th' aged sea-God Phorcys makes his fort,
Whose earth the Ithacensian people own.
In which two rocks inaccessible are grown Far forth into the sea, whose each strength binds
The boisterous waves in from the high-flowing winds On both the out-parts so, that all within The well-built ships, that once their harbour win,
In his calm bosom, without anchor rest,
Safe, and unstir'd. From forth the haven's high crest Branch the well-brawn'd arms of an olive-tree;
Beneath which runs a cave from all sun free,
Cool, and delightful, sacred to th' access
Of Nymphs, whose surnames are the Naiades;
In which flew humming bees, in which lay thrown Stone cups, stone vessels, shingles, all of stone;
With which the Nymphs their purple mantles wove,
In whose contexture art and wonder strove.

In which pure springs perpetually ran;
To which two entries were; the one for man,
On which the North breathed; 'tli' other
For the gods,
On which the South; and that bore no abodes
For earthly men, but only deathless feet
Had there free way. This port these men thought meet
To land Ulysses, being the first they knew.
Drew then their ship in, but no further drew Than half her bulk reach'd, by such cunning hand
Her course was managed. Then her men took land,
And first brought forth Ulysses, bed, and all That richly furnish'd it, be still in thrall
Of all-subduing sleep. Upon the sand
They set him softly down; and then the strand They strew'd with all the goods he had, bestow'd
By the renown'd Phaeacians, since he show'd
So much Minerva. At the olive root
They drew them then in heap, most far from foot
Of any traveller; lest, ere his eyes
Resumed their charge, they might be others' prize.
These then turn'd home; nor was the sea's supreme Forgetful of his threats, for Polyphem Bent at divine Ulysses, yet would prove (Ere their performance) the decree of Jove.
"Father! no more the Gods shall honour me, Since men despise me, and those men that see
The light in lineage of mine own loved race."
I vow'd Ulysses should, before the grace
Of his return, encounter woes enow
To make that purchase dear; yet did not vow
Simply against it, since thy brow had bent
To his reduction, in the fore-consent
Thou hadst vouchsafed it; yet, before my mind Hath full power on him, the Phaeacians find Their own minds' satisfaction with his pass;
So far from suffering what my pleasure was,

* The Phaeacians were descended originally from Neptune.
That ease and softness now is habited
In his secure breast: and his careless head Return’d in peace of sleep to Ithaca.
The brass and gold of rich Phæacia Rocking his temples; garments richly woven,
And worlds of prize, more than was ever strown
From all the conflicts he sustain’d at Troy,
If safe he should his full share there enjoy." The shower-dissolver answer’d: "What a speech
Hath pass’d thy palate, O thou great in reach
Of wreckful empire! Far the Gods remain From scorn of thee; for were a work of pain
To prosecute with ignominy one That sways our abiest and most ancient throne.
For men, if any so beneath in power Neglect thy high will, now or any hour
That moves hercafter, take revenge to thee, Soothe all thy will and be thy pleasure free."
"Why then," said he, "thou blacker of the fumes
That dim the sun, my licensed power resumes
Act from thy speech; but I observe so much
And fear thy pleasure, that, I dare not much
At any inclination of mine own,
Till thy consenting influence be known.
But now this curious-built Phæacian ship,
Returning from her convoy, I will strip
Of all her fleeting matter, and to stone Transform and fix it (just when she hath
gone
Her full time home, and jets before their preace
In all her trim) amids the sable seas,
That they may cease to convey strangers still,
When they shall see so like a mighty hill
Their glory stick before their city’s grace,
And my* hands cast a mask before her face."
"O friend," said Jove, "it shews to me the best
Of all earth’s objects, that their whole preace, drest
In all their wonder, near their town shall stand,
And stare upon a stone, so near the land,

So like a ship, and dam up all their lights,
As if a mountain interposed their sights."
When Neptune heard this, he for Scheria
went,
Whence the Phæacians took their first
descent.
Which when he reach’d, and, in her swiftest pride,
The water-treader by the city’s side
Came cutting close, close he came swiftly
on,
Took her in violent hand, and to a stone
Turn’d all her sylvan substance; all below Firm’d her with roots, and left her. This strange show
When the Phæacians saw, they stupid
stood,
And ask’d each other, who amidst the flood Could fix their ship so in her full-speed
home,
And quite transparent make her bulk become?
Thus talk’d they; but were far from knowing how These things had issue. Which their king did show,
And said: "O friends, the ancient pro-pecies
My father told me, to all our eyes Are now in proof. He said, the time would
come,
When Neptune, for our safe conducting
home
All sorts of strangers, out of envy fired,
Would meet our fairest ship as she retired,
And all the goody shape and speed we boast
Should like a mountain stand before us lost
Amids the moving waters; which we see Perform’d in full end to our prophecy.
Hear then my counsel, and obey me then:
Renounce henceforth our convoy home of
men,
Whoever shall hereafter greet our town;
And to th’ offended Deity’s renown Twelve chosen oxen let us sacred make,
That he may pity us, and from us take
This shady mountain. They, in fear, obey’d, Slew all the beees, and to the Godhead pray’d;
The dukes and princes all empresning
round
The sacred altar; while whose tops were
crown’d,
Divine Ulysses, on his country’s breast Laid bound in sleep, now rose out of his
rest:

* ἀμφεκαλόαν, superiusiecto aliquid tamen tegmen nov operimium.
Nor (being so long removed) the region knew.
Besides which absence yet, Minerva threw A cloud about him, to make strange the more
His safe arrival, lest upon his shore
He should make known his face, and utter all
That might prevent th' event that was to fail.
Which she prepared so well, that not his wife
Presented to him, should perceive his life;
No citizen, no friend, till righteous fate
Upon the woera' wrongs were consummate.
Through which cloud all things showed now to the king
Of foreign fashion: the enflorer'd spring
Amongst the trees there; the perpetual waves;
The rocks, that did more high their foreheads raise
To his rapt eye than naturally they did;
And all the haven, in which a man seem'd hid
From wind and weather, when storms loudest chid.
He therefore, being risen, stood and view'd
His country earth; which, not perceived, he rued;
And, striking with his hurl'd-down hands his thighs,
He mourn'd, and said: "O me! Again where lies My desert way? To wrongful men and rude,
And with no laws of human right ended?
Or are they human, and of holy minds?
What fits my deed with these so many kinds Of goods late given? What with myself will flood And errors do? I would to God, these goods
Had rested with their owners; and that I Had fall'n on kings of more regality,
To grace out my return, that loved indeed,
And would have given me consorts of fit speed
To my distresses' ending! But, as now
All knowledge flies me where I may bestow
My labour'd purchase: here they shall not stay, Least what I cared for, others make their prey.
O Gods! I see the great Phæacians then
Were not all just and understanding men;
That land me elsewhere than their vaunts pretended.
Assuring me my country should see ended
My miseries told them, yet now eat their vaunts.
O Jove! great Guardian of poor suppliants,
That others sees, and notes too, shutting in All in thy plagues that most presume on sin, Revenge me on them. Let me number now
The goods they gave, to give my mind to know
If they have stolen none in their close retreat."
The goodly caldrons then, and tripods, set
In several ranks from out the heap, he told.
His rich wrought garments too, and all his gold,
And nothing lack'd; and yet this man did mourn
The but supposed miss of his home return,
And creeping to the shore with much complaint;
Minerva (like a shepherd, young, and quaint,
As kings' sons are, a double mantle cast
Athwart his shoulders, his fair goers graced
With fitted shoes, and in his hand a dart)
Appear'd to him, whose sight rejoiced his heart.
To whom he came, and said: "O friend!
Since first I meet your sight here, be all good the worst
That can join our encounter. Fare you fair, Nor with adverse mind welcome my re pair,
But guard these goods of mine, and succour me,
As to a God I offer prayers to thee,
And low access make to thy loved knee.
Say truth, that I may know, what country then,
What common people live here, and what men?
Some famous isle is this? Or gives it vent,
Being near the sea, to some rich continent?"
She answer'd: Stranger, whatsoe'er you are,
Y're either foolish, or come passing far,
That know not this isle, and make that doubt trouble,
For 'tis not so exceedingly ignoble,
But passing many know it; and so many,
That of all nations there abides not any,
From where the morning rises and the sun,
To where the even and night their courses run,
But know this country. Rocky 'tis, and rough,
And so for use of horse unapt enough,
Yet with sad* barrenness not much infested,
Since clouds are here in frequent rains digested,
And flowery dews. The compass is not great,
The little yet well-fill'd with wine and wheat.
It feeds a goat and ox well, being still Water'd with floods, that ever over-fill
With heaven's continual showers; and wooded so,
It makes a spring of all the kinds that grow.
And therefore, Stranger, the extended name
Of this dominion makes access by fame
From this extreme part of Achaia
As far as Ilion, and 'tis Ithaca."

This joy'd him much, that so unknown
Turn'd to his country. Yet so wise a hand
He carried, even of this joy, flown so high
That other end he put to his reply
Than straight to show that joy, and lay abroad
His life to strangers. Therefore he be-stow'd
A veil on truth; for evermore did wind
About his bosom a most crafty mind.
Which thus his words show'd: "I have far at sea,
In spacious Crete, heard speak of Ithaca,
Of which myself, it seems, now reach the shore,
With these my fortunes; whose whole value more
I left in Crete amongst my children there;
From whence I fly for being the slaughterer
Of royal Idomen's most-loved son,
Swift-foot Orylochus, that could out-run Profess'd men for the race. Yet him I slew, Because he would deprive me of my due
In Trojan prize; for which I suffer'd so (The rude waves piercing) the redoubled woe
Of mind and body in the wars of men.
Nor did I gratify his father then

With any service, but, as well as he Sway'd in command of other soldiery,
So, with a friend withdrawn, we waylaid him,
When gloomy night the cope of heaven did dim.
And no man knew; but, we lodged close,
he came,
And I put out to him his vital flame,
Whose slaughter having author'd with my sword,
I instant flight made, and straight fell aboard
A ship of the renown'd Phoenicin stat';
When prayer, and pay at a sufficient rate,
Obtain'd my pass of men in her command;
Whom I enjoin'd to set me on the land
Of Pylos, or of Ithas the divine,
Where the Ipeians in great empire shine.
But force of weather check'd that course to them,
Though (loth to fail me) to their most extreme They spent their willing powers. But, forced from thence,
We err'd, and put in here, with much expense,
Of care and labour; and in dead of night,
When no man there served any appetite
So much as with the memory of food,
Though our estates exceeding needystood.
But, going ashore, we lay; when gentle sleep
My weary powers invaded, and from ship
They fetching these my riches, with just hand
About me laid them, while upon the sand Sleep bound my senses; and for Sidon they (Put off from hence) made sail, while here I lay, Left sad alone." The Goddess laugh'd, and took His hand in hers, and with another look (Assuming then the likeness of a dame, Lovely and goody, expert in the frame Of virtuous housewiferies) she answer'd thus:
"He should be passing sly, and covetous
Of stealth,* in men's deccits, that coted thee
In any craft, though any God should be Ambitious to exceed in subtily.
Thou still-wit-varying wretch! Insatiate!
In over-reaches: Not secure thy state

* ΄Εκλησιον, furandi avidus.
† Σκέλες ποιολογητα, varia et multiplicita habenus consilia.
Without these wiles, though on thy native shore
Thou sett’st safe footing? but upon thy store
Of false words still spend, that even from thy birth
Have been thy best friends? Come, our either worth Is known to either. Thou of men art far,
For words and counsels, the most singular;
But I above the Gods in both may boast
My still-tried faculties. Yet thou hast lost
The knowledge even of me, the seed of Jove, Pallas Atheneia, that have still out-strove
In all thy labours their extremes, and stood.
Thy sure guard ever, making all thy good
Known to the good Phaeacians, and received.
And now again I greet thee, to see weaved
Fresh counsels for thee; and will take on me
The close reserving of these goods for thee,
Which the renown’d Phaeacian States bestowed
At thy deduction homewards, only moved With my both spirit and counsel. All which grace
I now will amplify, and tell what case
Thy household stands in; uttering all those pains
That of mere need yet still must rack thy veins.
Do thou then freely bear, nor one word give
To man nor dame to shew thou yet dost live,
But silent suffer over all again
Thy sorrows past, and bear the wrongs of men."
"Goddess," said he, "unjust men, and unwise,
That author injuries and vanities,
By vanities and wrongs should rather be Bound to this ill-bearing destiny,
Than just and wise men. What delight hath heaven,
That lives unhurt itself, to suffer given Up to all damage those poor few that strive
To imitate it, and like the Deities live?
But where you wonder that I know you not Through all your changes, that skill is not got By sleight or art, since thy most hard-hit face
Is still distinguish’d by thy free-given grace.
And therefore, truly to acknowledge thee
In thy encounters, is a mystery
In men most knowing; for to all men thou Takest several likeness. All men think they know
Thee in their wits; but, since thy seeming view Appears to all, and yet thy truth to few,
Through all thy changes to discern thee right Asks chief love to thee, and inspired light.
But this I surely know; that some years past
I have been often with thy presence graced,
All time the sons of Greece waged war at Troy;
But when Fate’s full hour let our swords enjoy
Our vows in sack of Priam’s lofty town,
Our ships all boarded, and when God had blown Our fleet in sunder, I could never see
The seed of Jove, nor once distinguish thee Boarding my ship, to take one woe from me.
But only in my proper spirit involved,
Err’d here and there, quite slain, till heaven dissolved Me, and my ill; which chanced not, till thy grace
By open speech confirm’d me, in a place Fruitful of people, where, in person, thou Didst give me guide, and all their city show
And that was the renown’d Phaeacian earth.
Now then, even by the author of thy birth, Vouchsafe my doubt the truth (for far it flies
My thoughts that thus should fall into my mind’s eyes Conspicuous Ithaca, but fear I touch
At some far shore, and that thy wit is such Thou dost delude me) is it sure the same
Most honour’d earth that bears my country’s name?"
"I see," said she, "thou wilt be ever thus
In every worldly good incredulous.
And therefore have no more the power to see Frail life more plagued with infidelity
In one so eloquent, ingenious, wise.
Another man, that so long miseries
THE THIRTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Had kept from his loved home, and thus return’d
To see his house, wife, children, would have burn’d
In headlong lust to visit. Yet t’ inquire
What states they hold, affects not thy desire, Till thou hast tried if in thy wife there be A sorrow wasting days and nights for thee
In loving tears, that then the sight may prove A full reward for either’s mutual love.
But I would never credit in you both Least cause of sorrow; but well knew the truth
Of this thine own return, though all thy friends,
I knew as well, should make returnless ends.
Yet would not cross mine uncle Neptune so
To stand their safeguard, since so high did go
His wrath for thy extinction of the eye
Of his loved son. Come then, I’ll shew thee why I call this isle thy Ithaca, to ground
Thy credit on my words: This haven is own’d
By th’ aged sea-god Phorcys, in whose brow
This is the olive with the ample bough,
And here, close by, the pleasant-shaded cave
That to the Fount-Nymphs th’ Ithacensians gave,
As sacred to their pleasures. Here doth run
The large and cover’d den, where thou hast done
Hundreds of offerings to the Naiaides,
Here Mount Nerius shakes his curled tress
Of shady woods.” This said, she clear’d the cloud
That first deceived his eyes; and all things show’d
His country to him. Glad he stood with sight
Of his loved soil, and kiss’d it with delight;
And instantly to all the Nymphs he paid
(With hands held up to heaven) these vows, and said:
“Ye Nymphs the Naiaides, great seed of Jove,
I had conceit that never more should move
Your sight in these spheres of my erring eyes;
And therefore, in the fuller sacrifice
Of my heart’s gratitude, rejoice, till more
I pay your names in offerings as before;
Which here I vow, if Jove’s benign descent
The mighty Pilgrager, with life convent
My person home, and to my saved decease
Of my loved son’s sight add the sweet increase.”
“Be confident,” said Pallas, “nor oppress Thy spirits with care of these performances;
But these thy fortunes let us straight repose
In this divine cave’s bosom, that may close Reserve their value; and we then may see How best to order other acts to thee.”
Thus enter’d she the light-excluding cave,
And through it sought some inmost nook
To save
The gold, the great brass, and robes richly-wrought, Given to Ulysses. All which in he brought,
Laid down in heap; and she imposed a stone Close to the cavern’s mouth. Then sat they on The sacred olive’s root, consulting how To act th’ insulting wooers’ overthrow;
When Pallas said: “Examine now the means
That best may lay hand on the impudence
Of those proud wooers, that have now three years Thy roof’s rule sway’d, and been bold offerers
Of suit and gifts to thy renowned wife.
Who for thy absence all her desolate life
Dissolves in tears till thy desired return.
Yet all her wooers, while she thus doth mourn,
She holds in hope, and every one affords
(In fore-sent message) promise; but her words Bear other utterance than her heart approves.”
“O Gods,” said Ithacus, “it now behoves
My fate to end me in the ill decease That Agamemnon underwent, unless You tell me, and in time, their close intents.
Advise then means to be revenged events
We both resolve on. Be thyself so kind
To stand close to me, and but such a mind
Breathe in my bosom, as when th’ Flion towers
We tore in cinders. O if equal powers
Thou wouldst enflame amidst my nerves as then,
I could encounter with three hundred men,
Thy only self, great Goddess, had to friend,
In those brave ardours thou wert wont t’ extend.”
"I will be strongly with thee," answer'd she,
"Nor must thou fail, but do thy part with me.
When both whose powers combine, I hope
The bloods
And brains of some of these that waste thy goods Shall strew thy goodly pavements. Join we then;
I first will render thee unknown to men,
And on thy solid lineaments make dry
Thy now smooth skin; thy bright-brown euris imply
In hoary matings; thy broad shoulders clothe
In such a cloak as every eye shall loathe;
Thy bright eyes blear and wrinkle; and so change
Thy form at all parts, that thou shalt be strange.
To all the wooers, thy young son, and wife,
But to thy herdman first present thy life,
That guards thy swine, and wisheth well to thee,
That loves thy son and wife Penelope.
Thy search shall find him set aside his herd,
That are with taste-delighting acorns rear'd,
And drink the dark-deep water of the spring.
Bright Arethusa, the most nourishing Raiser of herds. There stay, and, taking seat Aside thy herdman, of the whole state treat
Of home occurrences; while I make access
To fair-dame-breeding Sparta, for regress
Of loved Telemachus, who went in quest
Of thy loved fame, and lived the welcome guest Of Menelaus." The much-know'r said:
"Why wouldst not thou, in whose grave breast is bred
The art to order all acts, tell in this His error to him? Let those years of his Amids the rude seas wander, and sustain
The woes there raging, while unworthy men Devour his fortunes?" "Let not care extend Thy heart for him," said she, "myself did send His person in thy search, to set his worth,
By good fame blown, to such a distance forth.
Nor suffer's he in any least degree
The grief you fear; but all variety
That plenty can yield in her quietest fare,
In Menelaus' court, doth sit and share.
In whose return from home, the wooers yet
Lay bloody ambush, and a ship have set
To sea, to intercept his life before
He touch'd again his birth's attempted shore.
All which, my thoughts say, they shall never do,
But rather, that the earth shall overgo
Some one at least of these love-making men,
By which thy goods so much impair sustain."
Thus using certain secret words to him,
She touch'd him with her rod, and every limb
Was hid all-over with a wither'd skin;
His bright eyes blear'd; his brow curls white and thin;
And all things did an aged man present.
Then, for his own weeds, shirt and coat, all rent,
Tann'd, and all-soo't with noisome smoke,
She put him on; and, over all, a cloak
Made of a stag's huge hide, of which was worn
The hair quite off; a scrip, all patch'd and torn,
Hung by a cord, oft broke and knit again;
And with a staff did his old limbs sustain.
Thus having both consulted of't event,
They parted both; and forth to Sparta went
The gray-eyed Goddess, to see all things done
That appertain'd to wise Ulysses' son.
THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses meets amidst the field
His swain Eumaeus; who doth yield Kind guest-rites to him, and relate Occurrences of his wrong’d estate.

ANOTHER.

£. Ulysses fains
For his true good:
His pious swain’s
Faith understood.

But the rough way took from forth the port,
Through woods and hill-tops, seeking the resort
Where Pallas said divine Eumaeus lived;
Who of the fortunes, that were first achieved
By God-like Ithacus in household rights,
Had more true care than all his prostyletes.*
He found him sitting in his cottage door,
Where he had raised to every airy brier
A front of great height; and in such a place
That round ye might behold, of circular grace
A walk so wond’rd about it; which the swain
(In absence of his far-gone sovereign)
Had built himself, without his queen’s supply,
Or old Laeites’, to see safely lie
His housed herd. The inner part he wrought Of stones, that thither his own labours brought,
Which with an hedge of thorn he fenced about,
And compass’d all the hedge with pales cleft out
Of sable oak, that here and there he fix’d Frequent and thick. Within his yard he mix’d Twelve styes to lodge his herd; and every styte
Had room and use for fifty swine to lie;

But those were females all. The male Swine slept
Without doors ever; nor was their herd kept Fair like the females*, since they suffer’d still Great diminution, he being forced to kill
And send the fattest to the dainty feasts
Affected by th’ ungodyly wooing guests.
Their number therefore but three hundred were
And sixty. By them mastiffs, as austere
As savage beasts, lay ever; their fierce strain Bred by the herdsman, a mere prince of men,
Their number four. Himself was then applied
In cutting forth a fair-hued ox’s hide,
To fit his feet with shoes. His servants held Guard of his swine; three, here and there, at field,
The fourth he sent to city with a sow,
Which must of force be offer’d to the vow
The wooers made to all satisy,
To serve which still they did those offerings ply.
The fate-born dogs to bark* took sudden view
Of Odysseus, and upon him flew
With open mouth. He, cunning to appal
A fierce dog’s fury, from his hand let fall
His staff to earth, and sat him careless down.
And yet to him had one foul wrong been shown Where most his right lay; had not instantly
The herdsman let his hide fall, and his cry (With frequent stones flung at the dogs) repell’d
This way and that their eager course they held;
When through the entry past, he thus did mourn:
“O father! How soon had you near been torn

* Προσωποι, materies adhaerent: item, qui rebus mundanis dictatis est.
By these rude dogs, whose hurt had branded me
With much neglect of you! But Deity Hath given so many other sighs and cares
To my attendant state, that well unseen
You might be hurt for me, for here I lie Grieving and mourning for the Majesty
That, God-like, wondred to be ruling here;
Since now I fat his swine for others' cheer
Where he, perhaps, errs hungry up and down,
In countries, nations, cities, all unknown;
If any where he lives yet, and doth see
The sun's sweet beams. But, father, follow me,
That, cheer'd with wine and food, you may disclose
From whence you truly are, and all the woes Your age is subject to." This said, he led Into his cottage, and of cemetery
A thicken'd hurdle, on whose top he strow'd
A wild-goat's shaggy skin, and then bestow'd
His own couch on it, that was soft and great.
Ulysses joy'd to see him so entreat
His uncouth presence, saying: "Jove requite,
And all th' immortal Gods, with that delight
Thou most desirest, thy kind receipt of me,
O friend to humane hospitality."
Eumaeus answer'd: "Guest! If one much worse Arrived here than thyself, it were a curse
To my poor means, to let a stranger taste Contempt for fit food. Poor men, and unplaced
In free seats of their own, are all from Jove Commended to our entertaining love.
But poor is th' entertainment I can give,
Yet free and loving. Of such men as live
The lives of servants, and are still in fear
Where young lords govern, this is all the cheer
They can afford a stranger. There was one
That used to manage this now desert throne,
To whom the Gods deny return, that show'd
His curious favour to me, and bestow'd Possessions on me, a most-wish'd wife,
A house, and portion, and a servant's life,
Fit for the gift a gracious king should give;
Who still took pains himself, and God made thrive
His personal endeavour, and to me
His work the more increased, in which you see I now am conversant. And therefore much His hand had help'd me, had Heaven's will been such,
He might have here grown old. But he is gone,
And would to God the whole succession
Of Helen might go with him, since for her
So many men died, whose fate did confer
My liege to Troy, in Agamemnon's grace,
To spoil her people, and her turrets race."
This said, his coat to him he straight did gird,
And to his styes went that contain'd his herd;
From whence he took out two, slew both, and cut Both fairly up; a fire enflamed, and put
To spit the joints; which roasted well, he set
With spit and all to him, that he might eat
From thence his food in all the singing heat,
Yet dredged it first with flour; then fill'd his cup
With good sweet wine; sat then, and cheer'd him up:
"Eat now, my guest, such lean swine as are meat
For us poor swains; the fat the wooers eat,
In whose minds no shame, no remorse, doth move,
Though well they know the blest Gods do not love
Ungodly actions, but respect the right,
And in the works of pious men delight.
But these are worse than impious, for those That love't injustice, and profest them foes
To other nations, enter on their land;
And Jupiter (to shew his punishing hand Upon th' invaded, for their penance then) gives favour to their foes, though wicked men,
To make their prey on them; who, having freight
Their ships with spoil enough, weigh anchor straight,
And each man to his house (and yet even these) Doth powerful fear of God's just vengeance seize Even for that prize in which they so rejoice;
But these men, knowing (having heard the voice Of God by some means) that sad death hath reft
The ruler here, will never suffer left Their unjust wooing of his wife, nor take Her often answer, and their own roofs
make
Their fit retreats; but (since uncheck’d they may)
They therefore will, make still his goods their prey Without all spare or end. There is no day Nor night sent out from God, that ever they Provoke with one beast’s blood, or only two,
But more make spoil of; and the wrongs they do
In meat’s excess, to wine as well extend,
Which as excessively their riots spend,
Yet still leave store; for sure his means were great;
And no hero, that hath choicest seat
Upon the fruitful neighbour continent,
Or in this isle itself, so opulent
Was as Ulysses; no, nor twenty such,
Put altogether, did possess so much.
Whose herds and flocks I’ll tell to every head:
Upon the continent he daily fed
Twelve herds of oxen, no less flocks of sheep,
As many herds of swine, stalls large and steep,
And equal sort of goats, which tenants there,
And his own shepherds kept. Then fed he here
Eleven fair stalls of goats, whose food hath yield
In the extreme part of a neighbour field.
Each stall his herdsman hath, an honest swain,
Yet every one must every day sustain
The load of one beast (the most fat, and best Of all the stall-fed) to the wooers’ feast.
And I, for my part, of the swine I keep (With four more herdsmen) every day help steep
The wooers’ appetites in blood of one,
The most select our choice can fall upon.”
To this Ulysses gave good ear, and fed,
And drunk his wine, and vex’d, and ravished
His food for mere vexation. Seeds of ill
His stomach sow’d, to hear his goods go still.
To glut of wooers. But his dinner done,
And stomach fed to satisfaction;
He drank a full bowl, all of only wine,
And gave it to the guardian of his swine,
Who took it, and rejoiced; to whom he said:
“O friend, who is it that, so rich, hath paid
Price for thy service, whose commended power,
Thou sayst, to grace the Grecian conqueror,
At Ilion perish’d? Tell me; it may fall
I knew some such. The great God knows, and all The other deathless Godheads, if I can,
Far having travel’d, tell of such a man.”
Eumaeus answer’d: “Father, never one,
Of all the strangers that have touch’d upon
This coast, with his life’s news could ever yet
Of queen, or loved son, any credit get.
These travellers, for clothes, or for a meal,
At all adventures, any lie will tell.
Nor do they trade for truth. Not any man
That saw the people Ithacensis,
Of all their sort, and had the queen’s supplies,
Did ever tell her any news, but lies.
She graciously receives them yet, inquires
Of all she can, and all in tears expires.
It is th’ accustom’d law, that women keep,
Their husbands elsewhere dead, at home to weep.
But do thou quickly, father, forge a tale;
Some coat, or cloak, to keep thee warm withal,
Perhaps some one may yield thee; but for him,
Vultures and dogs have torn from every limb
His porous skin, and forth his soul is fled.
His corse at sea to fishes forfeited;
Or on the shore lies hid in heaps of sand,
And there hath he his ebb, his native strand
With friends’ tears flowing. But to me past all Were tears created; for I never shall Find so humane a royal master more,
Whatever sea I seek, whatever shore.
Nay, to my father, or my mother’s love
Should I return, by whom I breathe and move,
Could I so much joy offer; nor these eyes (Though my desires sustain extremities
For their sad absence) would so fain be blest
With sight of their lives, in my native nest,
As with Ulysses dead; in whose last rest,
O friend, my soul shall love him. He’s not here,
Nor do I name him like a flatterer,
But as one thankful for his love and care
To make a poor man; in the rich so rare.
And be he past all shores where sun can shine,
I will invoke him as a soul divine.

"O friend," said he, "to say, and to believe,
He cannot live, doth too much license give To incredulity; for, not to speak
At needy random, but my breath to break
In sacred oath, Ulysses shall return.
And when his sight recumbers those that mourn
In his own roofs, then give me cloak, and cost,
And garments worthy of a man of note.
Before which, though need urged me never so,
I'll not receive a thread, but naked go.
No less I hate him than the gates of hell
That poorness can force an untruth to tell.
Let Jove then (heaven's chief God) just witness bear;
And this thy hospitable table here;
Together with unblamed Ulysses' house,
In which I find receipt so gracious.
What I affirm'd of him shall all be true.
This instant year thine eyes even here shall view
Thy lord Ulysses, Nay, ere this month's end, Return'd full home, he shall revenge extend To every one, whose ever deed hath done Wrong to his wife and his illustrious son.
"O father," he replied, "I'll neither give Thy news reward, nor doth Ulysses live.
But come, enough of this, let's drink and eat,
And never more his memory repeat.
It grieves my heart to be remember'd thus
By any one, of one so glorious.
But stand your oath in your assertion strong.
And let Ulysses come, for whom I long;
For whom his wife, for whom his aged sire,
For whom his son consumes his god-like fire;
Whose chance I now must mourn, and ever shall.
Whom when the Gods had brought to be as tall
As any upright plant, and I had said
He would amongst a court of men have sway'd
In counsels, and for form have been admired.
Every with his father, some God misinspired,
Or man took from him his own equal mind,
And pass'd him for the Pylian shore to find His long-lost father. In return from whence,
The woeers' pride waylays his innocence;
That of divine Arestus all the race
May fade to Ithaca, and not the grace Of any name left to it. But leave we His state, however; if surprised he be,
Or if he scape; and may Saturnius' hand
Protect him safely to his native land.
Do you then, father, shew your griefs, and cause
Of your arrival here; nor break the laws
That truth prescribes you, but relate your name
And of what race you are, your father's fame,
And native city's; ship and men unfold
That to this isle convey'd you, since I hold Your here arrival was not all by shore,
Nor that your feet your aged person bore."
He answer'd him: "I'll tell all strictly true,
If time, and food, and wine enough, accrue Within your roof to us, that freely we May sit and banquet. Let your business be Discharged by others; for, when all is done,
I cannot easily, while the year doth run
His circle round, run over all the woes, Beneath which, by the course the Gods dispose,
My sad age labours. First, I'll tell you then,
From ample Crete I fetch my native strain;
My father wealthy, whose house many a life
Brought forth and bred besides by his true wife.
But me a bond-maid bore, his concubine.
Yet tender'd was I as his lawful line
By him of whose race I my life profess, Castror his name, surnamed Hylacides.
A man, in fore-times, by the Cretan state
For goods, good children, and his fortunate Success in all acts, of no mean esteem.
But death-conferring Fates have banish'd him
To Pluto's kingdom. After whom his sons
By lots divided his possessions,
And gave me passing little; yet bestow'd
A house on me, to which my virtues wo'd
A wife from rich men's roots; nor was borne low, Nor last in fight, though all nerves fail me now.
But I suppose that you, by thus much seen, Know by the stubble what the corn hath been.
For, past all doubt, affliction past all mean Hath brought my age on; but, in seasons past,
Both Mars and Pallas have with boldness graced,
And fortitude, my fortunes, when I chused Choice men for ambush, prest to have produced Ill to mine enemies; my too venturous spirit
Set never death before mine eyes, for merit.
But, far the first advanced still, still I strook Dead with my lance whoever overtook
My speed of foot. Such was I then for war.
But rustie actions ever fled me far,
And household thrift; which breeds a famous race.
In oar-driven ships did I my pleasures place,
In battles, light darts, arrows: sad things all,
And into others’ thoughts with horror fall.
But what God put into my mind, to me I still esteem’d as my felicity,
As men of several metals are address’d,
So several forms are in their souls impress’d.

Before the sons of Greece set foot in Troy,
Nine times, in chief, I did command enjoy
Of men and ships against our foreign foe,
And all I lightly wish’d succeeded so.
Yet, after this, I much exploit achieved,
When straight my house in all possessions thrived.
Yet, after that, I great and reverend grew Amongst the Cretans, till the Thunderer drew
Our forces out in his foe-Troy decrees;
A hateful service that dissolved the knees
Of many a soldier. And to this was I,
And famous Idomen, enjoin’d to apply
Our ships and powers. Nor was there to be heard
One reason for denial, so prefer’d
Was the unreasonable people’s rumour.
Nine years we therefore fed the mortal humour,
And in the tenth, de-peopling Priam’s town,
We sail’d for home. But God had quickly blown
Our fleet in pieces; and to wretched me
The counsellor Jove did much mishap decree.
For, only one month, I had leave to enjoy
My wife and children, and my goods to employ.

But, after this, my mind for Egypt stood,
When nine fair ships I rigg’d forth for the flood,
Mann’d them with noble soldiers, all things fit
For such a voyage soon were won to it.
Yet six days after stay’d my friends in feast,
While I in banquets to the Gods address’d Much sacred matter for their sacrifice.
The seventh, we boarded; and the Northern skies
Lent us a frank and passing prosperous gale, ‘Fore which we bore as free and easy sail
As we had back’d a full and froward tide;
Nor felt one ship misfortune for her pride;
But safe we sat, our sailors and the wind Consenting in our convoy. When heaven shined
In sacred radiance of the fifth fair day,
To sweetly-water’d Egypt reach’d our way,
And there we anchor’d; where I charg’d my men
To stay aboard, and watch. Dismissing then Some scouts to get the hill-tops, and discover,
They (to their own intemperance given over) Straight fell to forage the rich fields, and thence Enforce both wives and infants, with th’ expences
Of both their bloods. When straight the rumour flew Up to the city. Which heard, up they drew
By day’s first break, and all the field was fill’d
With foot and horse, whose arms did all things gild.
And then the lightning-loving Deity cast
A foul light on my soldiers; nor stood fast
One man of all. About whom mischief stood,
And with his stern steel drew in streams the blood
The greater part fed in their dissolute veins;
The rest were saved, and made enthralled swains
To all the basest usages there bred.
And then, even Jove himself supplied my head
With saving counsel; though I wish’d to die,
And there in Egypt with their slaughters lie.
So much grief seized me; but Jove made me yield, Disheelm my head, take from my neck my shield,
Hurl from my hand my lance, and to the troop
Of horse the king led instantly made up,
Embrace, and kiss his knees; whom pity won
To give me safety, and (to make me shun
The people's outrage, that made in amain,
All jointly fired with thirst to see me slain)
He took me to his chariot, weeping, home,
Himself with fear of Jove's wrath overcome;
Who yielding souls receives, and takes most ill;
All such as well may save yet love to kill.
Seven years I sojourn'd here, and treasure gat
In good abundance of th' Egyptian state;
For all would give; but when th' eighth year began,
A knowing fellow (that would gnaw a man)
Like to a vermin, with his hellish brain,
And many an honest soul even quick had slain.
Whose name was Phoenix) close accosted me,
And with insinuations, such as he Practised on others, my consent he gain'd;
To go into Phœnicia, where remain'd
His house, and living. And with him I lived
A complete year; but when were all arrived,
The months and days, and that the year again
Was turning round, and every season's reign Renew'd upon us, we for Libya went;
When, still inventing crafts to circumvent,
He made pretext that I should only go
And help convey his freight; but thought not so;
For his intent was to have sold me there
And made good gain for finding me a year.
Yet him I follow'd, though suspecting this;
For, being aboard his ship, I must be his Of strong necessity. She ran the flood (Driven with a northern gale, right free, and good) Amids the full stream, full on Crete. But then Jove plotted death to him and all his men.

For (put off quite from Crete, and so far gone
That shore was lost, and we set eye on none,
But all shew'd heaven and sea) above our keel
Jove pointed right a cloud as black as hell, Beneath which all the sea hid, and from whence Jove thunder'd as his hand would never thence,
And thick into our ship he threw his flash,
That 'gainst a rock, or flat, her keel did dash
With headlong rapture. Of the sulphur all Her bulk did savour; and her men let fall
Amids the surges, on which all lay lost
Like sea-gulls, round about her sides, and lost.
And so God took all home-return from them.
But Jove himself, though plunged in that extreme,
Recover'd me by thrusting on my hand
The ship's long mast. And, that my life might stand
A little more up, I embraced it round;
And on the rude winds, that did ruins sound,
Nine days we hover'd. In the tenth black night
A huge sea cast me on Thesprotia's height,
Where the hero Phidon, that was chief
Of all the Thesprotis, gave my wreck relief,
Without the price of that redemption
That Phœnix fish'd for. Where the king's loved son Came to me, took me by the hand, and led Into his court my poor life, surfeited
With cold and labour; and because my wrack Chanced on his father's shore, he let not lack My plight or coat, or cloak, or anything Might cherish heat in me. And here the king
Said, he received Ulysses as his guest,
Observed him friend-like, and his course address
Home to his country, shewing there to me
Ulysses' goods, a very treasury
Of brass, and gold, and steel of curious frame.
And to the tenth succession of his name

*Ἀνὴρ ἀντιλαμβάνεται εἰς ἡμέρας τρόπος.
† Ἀναμένω, εἰς ἐμπτώσις αὐτοῦ ἐκτίθετον.
He laid up wealth enough, to serve beside
In that king's house, so hugely amplified His treasure was. But from his court the king
Affirm'd him shipp'd for the Dodonean
spring,
To hear, from out the high-hair'd oak of Jove,
Counsel from him for means to remove To his loved country, whence so many a year
He had been absent; if he should appear Disguised, or manifest; and further swore
In his mid court, at sacrifice, before
These very eyes, that he had ready there Both ship and soldiers, to attend and bear Him to his country. But, before, it chanced
That a Thesprotian ship was to be lanch'd
For the much-corn-renown'd Dulichian
land,
In which the king gave to his men com-mmand
To take, and bring me under tender hand
To king Acastus. But, in ill design
Of my poor life, did their desires combine,
So far forth, as might ever keep me under In fortune's hands, and tear my state in sunder.
And when the water-treader far away Had left the land, then plotted they the
day
Of my long servitude, and took from me Both coat and cloak, and all things that might be Grace in my habit, and in place put on These tatter'd rags, which now you see
upon My wretched bosom. When heaven's light took sea,*
They fetch'd the field-works of fair Ithaca,
And in the arm'd ship, with a well-wreath'd cord,
They straitly bound me, and did all dis-board
To shore to supper, in contentious rout.
Yet straight the Gods themselves took from about
My pressed limbs the bands, with equal case.
And I, my head in rags wrapp'd, took the seas.
Descending by the smooth stern, using
then
My hands for oars, and made from these bad men

Long way in little time. At last, I fetch'd, A goodly grove of oaks, whose shore I
reach'd,
And cast me prostrate on it. When they knew My thus-made prostrate, about the shores they flew,
But, soon not finding, held it not their best
To seek me further, but return'd to rest Aboard their vessel. Me the Gods lodged close,
Conducting me into the safe repose
A good man's stable yielded. And thus Fate
This poor hour added to my living date."
"O wretch of guests," said he, "thy tale hath stir'd
My mind to much ruth, both how thou hast err'd
And suffer'd, hearing in such good parts shown.
But what thy changed relation would make known
About Ulysses, I hold neither true, Nor will believe. And what need'st thou pursue
A lie so rashly, since he sure is so
As I conceive, for which my skill shall go.
The safe return my king lacks cannot be,
He is so envied of each Deity,
So clear, so cruelly. For not in Troy
They gave him end, nor let his corpse
The hands of friends (which well they might have done,
He managed arms to such perfection,
And should have had his sepulchre, and
all,
And all the Greeks to grace his funeral :
And this had given a glory to his son Through all times future); but his head is run
Unseen, unhonour'd, into Harpies' maws.
For my part, I'll not meddle with the cause;
I live a separate life amongst my swine,
Come at no town for any need of mine,
Unless the circularly-witted queen*
(When any far-come guest is to be seen That brings her news) commands me bring a brawn,
About which (all things being in question drawn
That touch the king) they sit; and some are sad
For his long absence, some again are glad

* At sunset.
To waste his goods unwreak'd: all talking still.
But, as for me, I nourish'd little will
To inquire or question of him, since the man
That feign'd himself the fled Æolian,
For slaughtering one, through many regions stray'd,
In my stall, as his diversory, stay'd.
Where well entreating him, he told me then,
Amongst the Cretans, with king Idomen,
He saw Ulysses at his ship's repair,
That had been brush'd with the enraged air;
And that in summer, or in autumn, sure,
With all his brave friends and rich furniture,
He would be here: and nothing so, nor so.
But thou, an old man, taught with so much woe
As thou hast suffer'd, to be season'd true,
And brought by his fate, do not here pursue
His gratulations with thy cunning lies;
Thou canst not sooth so through my faculties.
For I did never either honour thee
Or give thee love to bring these tales to me;
But in my fear of hospitable Jove
Thou didst to this pass my affections move.
"You stand exceeding much incredulous," Replied Ulysses, "to have witness'd thus My word and oath, yet yield no trust at all.
But make we now a covenant here, and call
The dreadful Gods to witness that take seat
In large Olympus: if your king's retreat
Prove made, even hither, you shall furnish me
With cloak, and coat, and make my passage free
For loved Dulichius: if, as fits my vow,
Your king return not, let your servants throw
My old limbs headlong from some rock most high,
That other poor men may take fear to lie."
The bardsman, that had gifts in him divine, Replied: "O guest, how shall this fame of mine
And honest virtue, amongst men, remain
Now, and hereafter, without worthy stain,
If I, that led thee to my bower here,
And made thee fitting hospitable cheer,
Should after kill thee, and thy loved mind Force from thy bones? Or how should stand inclined With any faith my will t' importune Jove,
In any prayer hereafter for his love?
Come, now 'tis supper's hour, and instant haste
My men will make home, when our sweet repast We'll taste together." This discourse they held,
In mutual kind, when from a neighbour fire.
His swine and swine-herds came, who in their cotes Inclosed their herds for sleep, which mighty Throats laid out in entering. Then the God-like swain His men enjoin'd thus: "Bring me to be slain
A chief swine female for my stranger guest;"
When altogether we will take our feast, Refreshing now our spirits, that all day take Pains in our swine's good, who may therefore make
For our pains with them all, amends with one:
Since others eat our labours, and take none."
This said, his sharp steel hew'd down wood,
And they
A passing fat swine haled out of the sty,
Of five years old, which to the fire they put.
When first Eumæus from the front did cut
The sacred hair, and cast it in the fire,
Then pray'd to heaven; for still before desire
Was served with food, in their so rude abodes,
Not the poor swine-herd would forget the Gods.
Good souls they bore, how bad soever were The habits that their bodies' parts did bear.
When all, the deathless Deities besought That wise Ulysses might be safely brought Home to his house; then with a log of oak Left lying by, high lifting it, a stroke
He gave so deadly it made life expire.
Then cut the rest her throat, and all in fire
They bid and sanged her, cut her up; and then
The master took the office from the men,
Who on the altar did the parts impose
That served for sacrifice; beginning close
About the belly, thorough which he went,
And all (the chief fat gathering) gave it vent (\textit{Part dredged with flour}) into the sacred flame;
Then cut they up the joints, and roasted them,
Drew all from spit, and served in dishes all.
Then rose Eumæus (who was general In skill to guide each act his fit event)
And, all in seven parts cut, the first part went To service of the Nymphs and Mercury;
To whose names he did rites of piety
In vows particular; and all the rest
He shared to every one; but his loved guest
He graced with all the chine, and of that king,
To have his heart cheer'd, set up every string,
Which he observing said: "I would to Jove, Eumæus, thou livest in his worthy love
As great as mine, that givest to such a guest
As my poor self of all thy goods the best."
Eumæus answer'd: "Eat, unhappy wretch,
And to what here is at thy pleasure reach.
This I have, this thou want'st; thus God will give,
Thus take away, in us, and all that live.
To his will's equal centre all things fall;
His mind he must have, for he can do all."
Thus having eat, and to his wine descended,
Before he served his own thirst, he commanded
The first use of it in fit sacrifice
(As of his meat) to all the Deities;
And to the city-racer's hand this trust
The second cup, whose place was next his side.
Mesaulius did distribute the meat,
(To which charge was Eumæus solely set,
In absence of Ulysses, by the queen And old Laertes) and this man had been Bought by Eumæus, with his faculties, Employ'd then in the Taphian merchandise.

But now, to food apposed, and order'd thus.
All fell. Desire sufficed, Mesaulius Did take away. For bed then next they were,
All throughly satisfied with complete cheer.
The night then came, ill, and no taper shined;
John mird her whole date; th' over-watery wind
Zephyr blew loud; and Laertades (Approving kind Eumæus' carefulness
For his whole good) made far about assay,
To get some cast-off cassock (lest he lay That rough night cold) of him, or any one Of those his servants; when he thus begun:
"Hear me, Eumæus, and my other friends,
I'll use a speech that to my glory tends,
Since I have drunk wine past my usual guise, \textit{Strong wine commands the fool and moves the wise.}
Moves and impels him too to sing and dance,
And break in pleasant laughters; and, perchance, Prefer a speech too that were better in
But when my spirits once to speak begin,
I shall not then dissemble. Would to heaven,
I were as young, and had my forces driven
As close together, as when once our powers
We led to ambush under th' Ilion towers;
Where Ithacus and Memelus were
The two commanders, when it pleased them there
To take myself for third; when to the town
And lofty walls we led, we couch'd close down,
All arm'd, amids the osiers and the reeds,
Which oftentimes th' o'er-flowing river feeds.
The cold night came, and th' icy northern gale Blew bleak upon us, after which did fall
A snow so cold, it cut as in it beat
A frozen water, which was all concrete
About our shields like crystal, All made fail Above our arms to clothe, and clothe again."
And so we made good shift, our shields beside Clapp’d close upon our clothes, to rest and hide
From all discovery. But I, poor fool,
Left my weeds with my men, because so cool
I thought it could not prove; which thought my pride
A little strengthen’d, being loth to hide
A goodly glittering garment I had on;
And so I follow’d with my shield alone,
And that brave weed. But when the night near ended Her course on earth, and that the stars descended I jogg’d Ulysses, who lay passing near,
And spake to him, that had a nimble ear,
Assuring him, that long I could not lie
Amongst the living, for the terevency
Of that sharp night would kill me, since as then My evil angel made me with my men Leave all weeds but a fine one. But I know
’Tis vain to talk; here wants all remedy now.
This said, he bore that understanding part
In his prompt spirit that still show’d his art
In fight and counsel, saying (in a word,
And that low-whisper’d) peace, lest you afford
Some Greek note of your softness. No word more,
But made as if his stern austerity bore
My plight no pity; yet, as still he lay
His head reposing on his hand, gave way
To this invention: ‘Hear me friends, a dream (That was of some celestial light a beam)
Stood in my sleep before me, prompting me With this fit notice: ‘We are far,’ said he, ‘From out our fleet. Let one go then,
and try
If Agamemnon will afford supply
To what we now are strong.’ This stirr’d a speed
In Thoas to th’ affair; whose purple weed
He left for haste; which then I took, and lay
In quiet after, till the dawn of day.
This shift Ulysses made for one in need,
And would to heaven, that youth such spirit did feed
Now in my nerves, and that my joints were knit
With such a strength as made me then held fit
To lead men with Ulysses. I should then Seem worth a weed that fits a herdsman’s men;
For two respects, to gain a thankful friend,
And to a good man’s need a good extend.”
“O father,” said Eumeus, “thou hast shown Good cause for us to give thee good renown,
Not using any word that was not freed
From all least ill. Thou, therefore, shalt not need Or coat, or other thing, that aptly may Beseeem a wretched suppliant for defray Of this night’s need. But, when her golden throne
The morn ascends, you must resume your own;
For here you must not dream of many weeds,
Or any change at all. We serve our needs
As you do yours: one back, one coat.
But when Ulysses’ loved son returns, he then Shall give you coat and cassock, and bestow
Your person where your heart and soul is now.”
This said, he rose, made near the fire his bed,
Which all with goats’ and sheep-skins he besprend
All which Ulysses with himself did line.
With whom, besides, he changed a gaberdine,
Thick lined, and soft; which still he made his shift
When he would dress him ‘gainst the horrid drift
Of tempest, when deep winter’s season blows.
Nor pleased it him to lie there with his sows;
But while Ulysses slept there, and close by
The other youngers, he abroad would lie,
And therefore arm’d him. Which set cheerful fare Before Ulysses’ heart, to see such care
Of his goods taken, how far off soever
His fate, his person, and his wealth should sever.
First then, a sharp-edged sword be girt about His well-spread shoulders, and (to shelter out The sharp West wind that blew) he put him on A thick-lined jacket; and yet cast upon

All that the large hide of a goat well-fed.
A lance then took he, with a keen steel head,
To be his keep-off both 'gainst men and dogs.
And thus went he to rest with his male hogs.
That still abroad lay underneath a rock,
Shield to the North-wind's ever eager shock.

THE END OF THE FOURTEENTH BOOK.
THE ARGUMENT.

Minerva to his native seat
Exhorts Ulysses’ son’s retreat,
In bed, and waking. He receives Gifts of Atridas, and so leaves
The Spartan court. And, going aboard, Doth favourable way afford To Theodolymenus, that was The Argive augur, and sought pass, Fled for a slaughter he had done.
Eumaeas tells Laertes’ son,
How he became his father’s man,
Being sold by the Phocian
For some agreed-on faculties,
From forth the Syrian Isle made prize.
Telemachus, arrived at home,
Doth to Eumæus’ cottage come.

ANOTHER.

O, from Sparta’s strand
Makes safe access
To his own land
Ulyssides.

In Lacedemon,* large, and apt for dances,
Athenian Pallas her access advances
Up to the great-in-soul Ulysses’ seed, Suggesting his return now fit for deed.
She found both him and Nestor’s noble son
In bed, in front of that fair mansion,
Nestorides surprised with pleasing sleep,
But on the watch Ulysses’ son did keep;
Sleep could not enter; cares did so excite
His soul, through all the solitary night,
For his loved father. To him, near; she said:

“Telemachus! ‘Tis time that now were stay’d Thy foreign travels; since thy goods are free
 For those proud men that all will eat from thee;
 Divide thy whole possessions, and leave
 Thy too-late presence nothing to receive.
 Incite the shrill-voiced Memelious then,
 To send thee to thy native seat again,

While thou mayst yet find in her honour strong Thy blameless mother, ‘gainst thy father’s wrong.
 For both the father, and the brothers too,
 Of thy loved mother, will not suffer so Extended any more her widow’s bed,
 But make her now her richest wooer wed,
 Eurymachus, who chiefly may augment
 Her gifts, and make her jointure eminent.
 And therefore haste thee, lest, in thy despite,
 Thy house stand empty of thy native right.
 For well thou know’st what mind a woman bears;
 The house of him, whoever she endears
 Herself in nuptials to, she sees increased;
 The issue of her first loved lord deceased
 Forgotten quite, and never thought on more.
 In thy return then, the re-counted store
 Thou find’st reserved, to thy most trusted maid Commit in guard, till heaven’s powers have purvey’d
 A wife, in virtue and in beauty’s grace,
 Of fit sort for thee, to supply her place.
 And this note more I’ll give thee, which repose In sure remembrance: The best sort of those That woo thy mother watchful scouts address,
 Both in the straits of th’ Ithacensian seas,
 And dusty Samos, with intent I’ invade.
 And take thy life, ere thy return be made.
 Which yet I think will fail, and some of them
 That waste thy fortunes taste of that extreme
 They plot for thee. But keep off far from shore,
 And day and night sail, for a fore-right biore,
 Whoever of th’ Immortals that vow guard
 And scape to thy return, will see prepared.
 As soon as thou arrivest, dismiss to town Thy ship and men; and first of all make down

* ἔνωσαν Ανακλησαν, in quod ambiit ut pulchri chori duci posseunt, vel ducentur; which the vulgar translations turn therefore, εταμε, οι ἄνθρωποι.
To him that keeps thy swine, and doth Occasion meet,
A tender care to see thee well survive.
There sleep; and send him to the town, to tell
The chaste Penelope, that safe and well
Thou livest in his charge, and that Pylos' sands
The place contain'd from whence thy person lands."
Thus she to large Olympus made ascent.
When with his heel a little touch he lent
To Nestor's son, whose sleep's sweet chains he loosed, Bade rise, and see in chariot inclosed Their one-hooved horse, that they might straight be gone.
"'No such haste," he replied; "Night holds her throne,
And dims all way to course of chariot.
The morn will soon get up. Nor see forgot
The gifts with haste, that will, I know, be rich,
And put into our coach with gracious speech
By lance-famed Menelaus. Not a guest Shall touch at his house, but shall store his breast
With fit mind of an hospitable man,
To last as long as any daylight can His eyes recomfort, in such gifts as he Will proofs make of his hearty royalty."
He had no sooner said, but up arose
Aurora, that the golden hills repose.
And Menelaus, good at martial cries,
From Helen's bed raised, to his guest applies His first appearance. Whose repair made known
'T Ulisses' loved son, on his robe was thrown About his gracious body, his cloak cast
Athwart his ample shoulders, and in haste Abroad he went, and did the king accost:
"Atrides, guarded with heaven's defined host,
Grant now remission to my native right,
My mind now urging mine own house's sight."
"Nor will I stay," said he, "thy person long, Since thy desires to go are grown so strong.
I should myself be angry to sustain
The like detention urged by other men.
Who loves a guest past mean, past mean will hate,
The mean in all acts bears the best estate,
A like ill 'tis to thrust out such a guest
As would not go, as to detain the rest.

We should a guest love, while he loves to stay;
And, when he likes not, give him loving way.
Yet suffer so, that we may gifts impose
In coach to thee; which are our hands enclose,
Thine eyes shall see, lest else our loves may close.
Besides, I'll cause our women to prepare
What our house yields, and merely so much fare
As may suffice for health. Both well will do,
Both for our honour and our profit too.
And, serving strength with food, you after may
As much earth measure as will match the day.
If you will turn your course from sea, and go Through Greece and Argos (that myself may so); Keep kind way with thee) I'll join horse, and guide
'T our humane cities. Nor ungratified
Will any one remit us; some one thing
Will each present us, that along may bring Our pass with love, and prove our virtues blazed;
A caldron, or a tripod, richly-brazed,
Two mules, a bowl of gold, that hath his price
Heighen'd with emblems of some rare device."
The wise prince answered: "I would gladly go Home to mine own, and see that govern'd so That I may keep what I for certain hold,
Not hazard that for only hoped-for gold.
I left before me none so all ways fit
To give it guard, as mine own trust with it.
Besides, in this broad course which you propose;
My father seeking, I myself may lose."
When this the shrill-voiced Menelaus heard,
He charged his queen and maids to see prepared Breakfast, of what the whole house held for best.
To him rose Eteoneus from his rest;
Whose dwelling was not far off from the court,
And his attendance his command did sort

THE FIFTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

With kindling fires, and furthering all the rost,
In act of whose charge heard no time he lost,
Himself then to an odorous room descended,
Whom Megapenthe and his queen attended.
Come to his treasury, a two-ear'd cup
He chose of all, and made his son bear up A silver bowl. The queen then taking stand Aside her chest, where by her own fair hand
Lay vests of all hues wrought, she took out one Most large, most artful; chiefly fair, and shone
Like to a star; and lay of all the last.
Then through the house with either's gift they pass'd;
When to Ulysses' son Atrides said:
"Telemachus, since so entirely sway'd Thy thoughts are with thy vow'd return now tender'd,
May Juno's thundering husband see it render'd Perfect at all parts, action answering thought.
Of all the rich gifts, in my treasure sought,
I give thee here the most in grace and best.
A bowl but silver, yet the brim's comprest
With gold, whose fabric his desert doth bring From Vulcan's hand, presented by the king
And great heroic of Sidonia's state
When at our parting he did consume
His whole house-keeping. This do thou command."
This said, he put the round bowl in his hand.
And then his strong son Megapenthe placed
The silver cup before him, amply grace'd With work and lustre. Helen (standing by,
And in her hand the robe, her housewifery)
His name remembering, said: "And I present, Loved son, this gift to thee, the monument
Of the so-many-loved Helen's hands,
Which, at the knitting of thy nuptial bands,
Present thy wife. In mean space, may it lie
By thy loved mother; but to me apply
Thy pleasure in it; and thus take thy way
To thy fair house, and country's wished stay."
Thus gave she to his hands the veil; and he
The acceptance author'd joyfully.

Which in the chariot's chest Pisistratus
Placed with the rest, and held miraculous.
The yellow-headed king then led them all
To seats and thrones placed in his spacious hall.
The hand-maid water brought, and gave it stream
From out a fair and golden ewer to them,
From whose hands to a silver caldron fled
The troubled wave. A bright board then she spread,
On which another reverend dame set bread.
To which more servants store of victuals served.
Eteoneus was the man that kerved,
And Megapenthe fill'd them all their wine.
All fed and drank, till all felt care decline
For those refreshings, Both the guests did go
To horse, and coach, and forth the portico
A little issued, when the yellow King Brought wine himself, that, with an offering To all the Gods, they might their journey take.
He stood before the Gods, and thus he spake:
"Farewell young Princes: to grave Nestor's ear
This salutation from my gratitude bear:
'That I profess, in all our lion wars,
He stood a careful father to my cares."
To whom the wise Ulyssides replied:
"With all our utmost shall be signified, Jove-kept Atrides, your right royal will:
And would to God, I could as well fulfill Mine own mind's gratitude, for your free grace.
In telling to Ulysses, in the place
Of my return, in what accomplish'd kind
I have obtain'd the office of a friend
At your deservings; whose fair end you crown
With gifts so many, and of such renown."
His wish, that he might find in his retreat
His father safe return'd (to so repeat The king's love to him) was saluted thus:
An eagle rose, and in her seres did truss
A goose, all-white, and huge, a household prize.
Which men and women (crying out upon)
Pursued, but she, being near the guests, her flight
Made on their right hand, and kept still fore-right Before their horses; which observed by The spirits in all their minds took joys extreme;
Which Nestor's son thus question'd: "Jove-kept king,"
Yield your grave thoughts, if this ostentful thing (This eagle, and this goose) touch us, or
you?"
He put to study, and not knowing how
To give fit answer, Helen took on her Th' ostent's solution, and did this prefer:
""Hear me, and I will play the prophet's part,
As the Immortals cast it in my heart;
And as, I think, will make the true sense
known:
As this Jove's bird, from out the mountains flown, (Where was her eyrie, and whence rose her race,) Truss'd up this goose, that from the house did graze,
So shall Ulysses, coming from the wild
Of seas and sufferings, reach, unreconciled,
His native home; where even this hour he is;
And on those house-fed wooers those wrongs of his
Will shortly wreak, with all their miseries."
""O," said Telemachus, "if Saturnian Jove
To my desires thy dear presage approve,
When I arrive, I will perform to thee
My daily vows, as to a Deity."
This said, he used his scourge upon the horse,
That through the city freely made their course
To field, and all day made that first speed
good,
But when the sun set, and obscurity stood
In each man's way, they ended their access
At Phers, in the house of Diocles, Son to Orsilochus, Alpheus' seed,
Who gave them guest-rites; and sleep's natural need.
They that night served there. When Aurora rose,
They join'd their horse, took coach, and did dispose

Their course for Pylos; whose high city soon
They reach'd. Nor would Telemachus be won
To Nestor's house, and therefore order'd thus:
His speech to Nestor's son, Pisistratus:
"'How shall I win thy promise to a grace
That I must ask of thee? We both embrace
The names of bed-fellows; and in that name
Will glory as an adjunct of our fame;
Our fathers' friendship, our own equal age,
And our joint travel, may the more engage Our mutual concord. Do not then assay, (My God-loved friend) to lead me from my way
To my near ship, but take a course direct
And leave me here, lest thy sire's respect,
In his* desire to love me, hinder so
My way for home, that have such need to go."
This said, Nestorides held all discourse
In his kind soul, how best he might enforce Both promise and performance; which, at last,
He vow'd to venture, and directly cast
His horse about to fetch the ship and shore.
Where come, his friend's most lovely gifts he bore Aboard the ship, and in her hind-deck placed
The veil that Helen's curious hand had grazed,
And Menealus' gold, and said: "Away,
Nor let thy men, in any least date, stay:
But quite put off, ere I get home, and tell
The old duke, you are past; for passing well
I know his mind to so exceed all force
Of any prayer, that he will stay your course,
Himself make hither, all your course call back,
And, when he hath you, have no thought to rack
Him from his bounty; and to let you part
Without a present; but be vex'd at heart
With both our pleadings, if we once but move
The least repression of his fiery love."
Thus took he coach, his fair-manned steeds scourged on Along the Pylian city, and anon
His father’s court reach’d; while Ulysses’ son Bade board, and arm; which with a thought was done.
His rowers set, and he rich o’ers firing
In his hind-deck, for his secure retiring,
To great Athena, * to his ship came flying
A stranger, and a prophet, as relying On wished passage, having newly slain
A man at Argos; yet his race’s vein
Flow’d from Melampus, who in former date
In Pylos lived, and had a huge estate,
But fled his country; and the punishing hand
Of great-soul’d Neleus, in a foreign land
From that most famous mortal having held
A world of riches, nor could be compell’d
To render restitution in a year.
In mean space, living as close prisoner
In court of Phylacus, and for the sake Of Neleus’ daughter mighty cares did take,
Together with a grievous languor sent From grave Erinys, † that did much torment
His vexed conscience; yet his life’s expense
He seaped, and drave the loud-voiced oxen thence,
To breed-sheep Pylos, bringing vengeance thus Her foul demerit to great Neleus,
And to his brother’s house reduced his wife,
Who yet from Pylos did remove his life
For feed-horse Argos, where his fate set down
A dwelling for him; and in much renown
Made govern many Argives; where a spouse
He took to him, and built a famous house.
There had he borne to him Antiphates,
And forceful Mantius. To the first of these Was great Oicleus born: Oicleus got Amphiaraus, that the popular state
Had all their health in; whom even from his heart
Jove loved, and Phoebus in the whole desert
Of friendship held him; yet not bless’d so much
That age’s threshold he did ever touch,
But lost his life by female bribery.*
Yet two sons author’d his posterity, Alcmene, and renown’d Amphipolus.
Mantius had issue Polyphidius,
And Clytus; but Aurora ravish’d him,
For excellence of his admired limb.
And interested him amongst the Gods.
His brother knew men’s good and bad abodes
The best of all men, after the decease
Of him that perish’d in unnatural peace
At spacious Thebes. Apollo did inspire
His knowing soul with a prophets fire.
Who, angry with his father, took his way
To Hypermia; where (making stay)
He prophesied to all men, and had there
A son born Theoclymenus, who here
Came to Telemachus, and found aboard
Himself at sacrifice, whom in a word
He thus saluted: “O friend, since I find,
Even here at ship, a sacrificing mind
Inform your actions, by your sacrifice,
And by that worthy choice of Deities
To whom you offer; by yourself, and all
These men that serve your course martial,
Tell one that asks the truth; nor give it close,
Both who, and whence you are? From what seed rose Your royal person? And what city’s towers Hold habitation to your parents’ powers?”
He answer’d: “Stranger! The sure truth is this:
I am of Ithaca; my father is (Or was) Ulysses; but austere death now Takes his state from him; whose event to know.
Himself being long away, I set forth thus
With ship and soldiers.” Theoclymenus
As freely said: “And I to thee am fled
From forth my country, for a man strock dead
By my unhappy hand, who was with me
Of one self-tribe; and of his pedigree
Are many friends and brothers: and the sway
Of Acheus kindred reacheth far away.
From whom, because I fear their spleens subborn Blood and black fate against me (being born To be a wanderer among foreign men)
Make thy fair ship my rescue, and sustain
* His wife betrayed him for money.
The Fifteenth Book

My life from slaughter, Thy deservings may Perform that mercy, and to them I pray:"
"Nor will I bar," said he, "thy will to make My means and equal ship thy aid, but take (With what we have here, in all friendly use) Thy life from any violence that pursues."
Thus took he in his lance, and it extended Aloft the hatches, which himself ascended.
The prince took seat a stern, on his right hand,
Set Theoclymenus, and gave command
To all his men to arm, and see made fast
Amidst the hollow keel the beechen mast
With ales hales, hoise sail, launch; which soon
He saw obey'd. And then his ship did run
A merry course; blue-eyed Minerva sent
A fore-right gale, tumultuous, vehement,
Along the air, that her way's utmost yield
The ship might make, and plough the brackish field.
Then set the sun, and night black'd all the ways.
The ship, with Jove's wind wing'd, where th' Epian sways, Fetch'd Phœrus first, then Elis the divine,
And then for those isles made, that sea-ward shine
For form and sharpness like a lance's head;
About which lay the wooers ambushed;
On which he rush'd, to try if he could scape
His plotted death, or serve her treacherous rape.
And now return we to Eumæus' shed,
Where (at their food with others marshall'd)
Ulysses and his noble herdsman sate.
To try if whose love's curious estate
Stood firm to his abode, or felt it fade,
And so would take each best cause to persuade
His guest to town, Ulysses thus contends: "Hear me, Eumæus, and ye other friends.
Next morn to town I covet to be gone,
To beg some others' alms, nor still charge one.
Advise me well then, and as well provide
I may be fitted with an honest guide.
For through the streets (since need will have it so) I'll tread, to try if any will bestow
A dish of drink on me, or bit of bread, Till to Ulysses' house I may be led;
And there I'll tell all-wise Penelope news, Mix with the wooers' pride, and (since they use To fare above the full) their hands excite
To some small feast from out their infinite:
For which, I'll wait, and play the serving-man, Fairly enough, command the most they can.
For I will tell thee, note me well, and hear,
That, if the will be of Heaven's Messenger,(Who to the works of men, of any sort,
Can grace infuse, and glory nothing short
Am I of him, that doth to most aspire
In any service; as to build a fire,
To cleave sawd wood, to roast or boil their meat,
To wait at board, mix wine, or know the neat;
Or any work, in which the poor-call'd worst
To serve the rich-call'd best in Fate are forced."
He, angry with him, said: "Alas, poor guest,
Why did this counsel ever touch thy breast?
Thou seek'st thy utter spoil beyond all doubt,
If thou givest venture on the Wooers' rout,
Whose wrong and force affects the iron heaven,
Their light delights are far from being given
To such grave servitors. Youths richly trick'd In coats or cassocks, locks divinely slick'd,
And looks most rapt, ever have the gift
To taste their crown'd cups, and full trenchers shift.
Their tables ever like their glasses shine,
Loaded with bread, with varied flesh, and wine.
And thou? go thither? Stay; for here do none Grudge at thy presence, nor myself, nor one Of all I feed. But when Ulysses' son Again shall greet us, he shall put thee on Both coat and cassock, and thy quick retreat.
Set where thy heart and soul desire thy seat."
Industrious Ulysses gave reply: "I still much wish, that Heaven's chief Deity Loved thee, as I do, that hast eased my mind
Of woes and wanderings never yet confined.
Nought is more wretched in a human race,
Than country's want, and shift from place to place.
But for the baneful belly men take care Beyond good counsel, whosoever are In compass of the wants it undergoes
By wanderings, losses, or dependent woes.
Excuse me therefore, if I err'd at home;
Which since thou wilt make here, as over come
With thy command for stay, I'll take on me Cares appertaining to this place, like thee.
Does then Ulysses' sire, and mother breathe,
Both whom he left in th' age next door to death?
Or are they breathless, and descended where The dark house is, that never day doth clear?
"Laertes lives," said he, "but every hour
Beseecheth Jove to take from him the power
That joins his life and limbs; for with a morn
That breeds a marvel he laments his son Deprived by death; and adds to that another
Of no less depth for that dead son's dead mother, Whom he a virgin wedded, which the more Makes him lament her loss, and doth deplore
Yet more her miss, because her womb the truer
Was to his brave son, and his slaughter she knew.
Which last love to her doth his life engage,
And makes him live an undigested age.
O! such a death she died as never may Seize any one that here beholds the day,
That either is to any man a friend,
Or can a woman kill in such a kind.
As long as she had being, I would be A still inquirer (since 'twas dear to me, Though death to her, to hear his name) when she Heard of Ulysses, for I might be bold;
She brought me up, and in her love did hold
My life, compared with long-veil'd Citimene,
Her youngest issue (in some small degree
Her daughter yet prefer'd) a brave young dame.
And when of youth the dearly-loved flame
Was lighted in us, marriage did prefer
The maid to Samos: whence was sent for her;
Infinite riches, when the queen bestow'd
A fair new suit, new shoes, and all, and vow'd Me to the field; but passing loth to part,
As loving me more than she loved her heart.
And these I want now; but their business grows Upon me daily, which the Gods impose,
To whom I hold all, give account to them,
For I see none left to the diadem
That may dispose all better. So, I drink
And eat of what is here; and whom I think Worthy or reverend, I have given to, still,
These kinds of guest-rites; for the household ill (Which, where the queen is, riots) takes her still From thought of these things. Nor is it delight
To hear, from her plight, of or work or word;
The wooers spoil all. But yet my men will board
Her sorrows often with discourse of all,
Eating and drinking of the festival
That there is kept, and after bring to field
Such things as servants make their pleasures yield.
"O me, Eurymedes," said Laertes' son,
"Hast thou then err'd so, of a little one?
(Like me?) from friends and country? pray thee say,
And say a truth, doth vast Destruction lay
Her hand upon the wide-way'd seat of men?
Where dwelt thy sire and reverend mother then,
That thou art spared there? Or else, set alone
In guard of beeces, or sheep, set th' enemy on.
Surprised, and shipp'd, transferr'd, and sold thee here?
He that bought thee paid well, yet bought not dear."
"Since thou inquir'st of that, my guest," said he,
"Hear and be silent; and, mean space, sit free

† Supposing him to dwell in a city.
In use of these cups to thy most delights:
Unspeakeable in length now are the nights.
Those that affect sleep yet, to sleep have leave,
Those that affect to hear, their hearers give.
But sleep not ere your hour; much sleep doth grieve.
Whoever lists to sleep, away to bed,
Together with the morning raise his head,
Together with his fellows break his fast,
And then his lord's herd drive to their repast.
We two, still in our tabernacle here
Drinking and eating, will our bosoms cheer
With memories and tales of our annoy,
Betwixt his sorrows every humane joy,
He most, who most hath felt and furthest err'd.
And now thy will to act shall be prefer'd.
There is an isle above Ortygia, (If thou hast heard) they call it Syria,
Where, once a day, the sun moves backwards still.
'Tis not so great as good, for it doth fill
The fields with oxen, fills them still with sleep, Fills roofs with wine, and makes all corn there cheap.
No death comes ever there, nor no disease
That doth with hate us wretched mortals seize.
But when men's varied nations, dwelling there
In any city, enter th' aged year,
The silver-bow-bearer (the Sun) and she
That bears as much renown for archery,
Stoop with their painless shafts, and strike them dead,
As one would sleep, and never keep the bed.
In this isle stand twain cities, betwixt whom
All things that of the soil's fertility come In two parts are divided. And both these My father ruled, Ctesius Ormenides,
A man like the immortals. With these states
The cross-biting Phoenicians traffick'd rates
Of infinite merchandise in ships brought there,
In which they then were held exempt from peer.
There dwelt within my father's house a dame,
Born a Phoenician, skilful in the frame
Of noble housewifery, right tall and fair.
Her the Phoenician great-wench-net-layer;
With sweet words circumvented, as she was Washing her linen. To his amorous pass
He brought her first, shored from his ship to her.
To whom he did his whole life's love prefer,
Which of these breast-exposing dames the hearts
Deceives, though fashion'd of right honest parts.
He ask'd her after, what she was, and whence?
She, passing presently, the excellence Told of her father's turrets, and that she Might boast herself sprung from the progeny
Of the rich Sidons, and the daughter was
Of the much-year-revenged Arabyas;
But that the Taphian pirates made her prize,
As she return'd from her field-housewifery, Transferr'd her hither, and, at that man's house Where now she lived, for value precious Sold her to th' owner. He that stole her love Bade her again to her birth's seat remove,
To see the fair roofs of her friends again,
Who still held state, and did the port maintain Herself reported. She said: *Be it so,
So you, and all that in your ships shall row,
Swear to return me in all safety hence.*
All swore. Th' oath past, with every consequence,
She bade, *Be silent now; and not a word
Do you, or any of your friends, afford,
Meeting me afterward in any way; Or at the washing fount; lest some display
Be made and told the old man, and he then Keep me strait bound; to you and to your men
The utter ruin, plotting of your lives.
Keep in firm thought then every word that strives For dangerous utterance. Haste your ship's full freight
Of what you traffic for, and let me straight Know by some sent friend shef hath all in hold.
And with myself I'll bring thence all the gold

† Intending the ship.
Six days we day and night sail'd; but when Jove Put up the seventh day. She that shafts doth love
Shot dead the woman, who into the pump
Like to a dop-chick dived, and gave a thump
In her sad settling. Forth they cast her then
To serve the fish and sea-calves, no more men.
But I was left there with a heavy heart;
When wind and water drove them quite apart.
Their own course, and on Ithaca they fell,
And there poor me did to Laertes sell.
And thus these eyes the sight of this isle proved."

"Eumaeus," he replied, "thou much hast moved
The mind in me with all things thou hast
said,
And all the sufferance on thy bosom laid;
But, truly, to thy ill Jove join'd good,
That one whose veins are served with humane blood
Hath bought thy service, that gives competence
Of food, wine, cloth to thee; and sure th' ex pense
Of thy life's date here is of good desert,
Whose labours not to thee alone impart
Sufficient food and housing, but to me;
Where I through many a heap'd humanity
Have hither err'd, where, though, like thee, not sold, Nor stay'd like thee yet, nor nought need ful hold."

This mutual speech they used, nor had they slept
Much time before the much-near-morning leapt
To her fair throne. And now strook sail the men
That served Telemachus, arrived just then Near his loved shore; where now they stoop'd the mast,
Made to the port with oars, and anchor cast;
Made fast the ship, and then ashore they went,
Dress'd supper, fill'd wine; when (their appetites spent) Telemachus commanded they should yield
The ship to th'owner, while himself at field
Would see his shepherds; when light drew to end He would his gifts see, and to town descend;
And in the morning at a feast bestow
Rewards for all their pains. "And whither, now."
Said Theoclymenus, "my loved son, Shall I address myself? whose mansion,
Of all men, in this rough-hewn isle, shall I Direct my way to? Or go readily
To thy house and thy mother?" He replied:
"Another time I'll see you satisfied
With my house entertainment, but as now
You should encounter none that could bestow
Your fit entreaty, and (which less grace were)
You could not see my mother, I not there;
For she's no frequent object, but apart
Keeps from her wooers, woor'd with her despair,
Up in her chamber, at her housewifery.
But I'll name one to whom you shall apply Direct repair, and that's Eurymachus, Renown'd descent to wise Polybius,
A man whom th' Ithacensians look on now
As on a God, since he of all that woor
Is far superior man, and likest far
To wed my mother, and as circular Be in that honour as Ulysses was.
But heaven-housed Jove knows the yet hidden pass
Of her disposure, and on them he may
A blacker sight bring than her nuptial day.
As this he utter'd, on his right hand flew
A saker, sacred to the God of view,
That in his talons truss'd and plumed a dove;
The feathers round about the ship did rove.
And on Telemachus fell; whom th' augur then Took fast by th' hand, withdrew him from his men,
And said: "Telemachus, this hawk is sent From God; I knew it for a sure omen.
When first I saw it. Be you well assured,
There will no wooer be by heaven endured
To rule in Ithaca above your race,
But your powers ever fill the regal place."
"I wish to heaven," said he, "thy word might stand, Thou then shouldst soon acknowledge from my hand
Such gifts and friendship, as would make thee, guest, Met and saluted as no less than blest."
This said, he call'd Pireaus, Clytus' son,
His true associate, saying: "Thou hast done
(Of all my followers to the Pylian shore)
My will in chief in other things, once more
Be chiefly good to me; take to thy house
This loved stranger, and be studious
T' embrace and greet him with thy greatest fare, Till I myself come and take off thy care."
The famous for his lance said: "If your stay Take time for life here, this man's care I'll lay
On my performance, nor what fits a guest Shall any penury withhold his feast."
Thus took he ship, bade them board, and away,
They boarded, sat, but did their labour stay.
Till he had deck'd his feet, and reach'd his lance.
They to the city; he did straight advance
Up to his styces, where swine lay for him store;
By whose sides did his honest swine-herd smore;
Till his short cares his longest nights had ended;
And nothing worse to both his lords intended.

THE END OF THE FIFTEENTH BOOK.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK

OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Prince at sea, he sends to town
Eumaeus, to make truly known His safe return. By Pallas' will Telemachus is given the skill
To know his father. Those that lay In ambush, to prevent the way
Of young Ulysses for home,
Retire, with anger overcome.

ANOTHER.

III, To his most dear
Ulysses shows,
The wise son here
His father knows.

Ulysses and divine Eumaeus rose
Soon as the morning could her eyes un-close,
Made fire, brake fast, and to their pasture send
The gather'd herds, on whom their swains attend.
The self-tire barking dogs all fawn'd upon,
Nor bark'd, at first sight of Ulysses' son.
The whinings of their fawnings yet did greet Ulysses' ears, and sounds of certain feet;
Who thus bespake Eumaeus: "Sure some friend,
Or one well-known, comes, that the mastives spend Their mouths no louder. Only some one near They whine, and leap about, whose feet I hear."
Each word of this speech was not spent, before His son stood in the entry of the door.
Out-rush'd amazed Eumaeus, and let go
The cup to earth, that he had labour'd so,
Cleansed for the neat wine; did the prince surprise,
Kiss'd his fair forehead, both his lovely eyes,
Both his white hands, and tender tears distill'd.
There breathed no kind-soul'd father that was fill'd

Less with his son's embraces, that had lived
Ten years in far-off earth, now new retrieved;
His only child too, gotten in his age,
And for whose absence he had felt the rage
Of griefs upon him, than for this divined
So much for form was this divine for mind;
Who kiss'd him through, who grew about him kissing.
As fresh from death scaped. Whom so long time missing,
He wept for joy, and said: "Thou yet art come,
Sweet light, sweet sun-rise, to thy cloudy home.
O, never I look'd, when once shipp'd away
For Pylos' shores, to see thy turning day.
Come, enter, loved son, let me feast my heart
With thy sweet sight, new come, so far apart.
Nor, when you lived at home, would you walk down
Often enough here, but stay'd still at town:
It pleas'd you then to cast such forhead view
About your house on that most damned* crew."
"It shall be so then, friend," said he,
"but now I come to glad mine eyes with thee, and know
If still my mother in her house remain,
Or if some wooer hath aspired to gain
Of her in nuptials; for Ulysses' bed,
By this, lies all with spiders' cobwebs spread,
In penury of him that should supply it."
"She still," said he, "holds her most constant quiet,

* Αἰδέλων ἡμλών, ἐδήλως of ἂδης, occur, and signifies properly temerarious, or informis, so that perniciosus (which is the Latin translation) is not so fit as damned for that crew ofabsolute Wouers. The phrase being now used to all so licentious.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Aloft thine own house, for the bed’s respect; But, for her lord’s sad loss, sad nights and days Obscure her beauties, and corrupt their rays.”

This said, Eumaeus took his brazen spear, And in he went; when, being enter’d near Within the stony threshold, from his seat His father rose to him, who would not let Th’ old man remove, but drew him back and prest With earnest terms his sitting, saying: “Guest, Take here your seat again, we soon shall get Within our own house here some other seat. Here’s one will fetch it.” This said, down again His father sat, and to his son his swain Strew’d fair green osiers, and imposed thereon A good soft sheepskin, which made him a throne.

Then he opposed to them his last-left roast, And in a wicker basket bread engrost, Fill’d luscious wine, and then took oppo-site seat To the divine Ulysses. When, the meat Set there before them, all fell to, and eat. When they had fed, the prince said: “Pray thee say, Whence comes this guest? what seaman gave him way To this our isle? I hope these feet of his Could walk no water: who boasts he he is?” “I’ll tell all truly, son: From ample Crete He boasts himself, and says, his erring feet Have many cities trod; and God was he Whose finger wrought in his infancy, But, to my cottage, the last scape of his Was from a Thesprot’s ship. Whate’er he is, I’ll give him you, do what you please; his vant Is, that he is, (at most) a suppliant.” “Eumæus,” said the prince, “to tell me this, You have afflicted my weak faculties; For how shall I receive him to my house With any safety, that suspicious Of my young forces (should I be assay’d With any sudden violence) may want aid To shield myself? Besides, if I go home, My mother is with two doubts overcome; If she shall stay with me, and take fit care For all such guests as there seek guestive fare, Her husband’s bed respecting, and her fame Amongst the people; or her blood may frame A liking to some wooer, such as best May bed her in his house, not giving lest, And thus am I unsure of all means free To use a guest there, fit for his degree. But, being thy guest, I’ll be his supply For all weeds, such as mere necessity Shall more than furnish. Fit him with a sword, And set him where his heart would have been shored; Or (if so pleased) receive him in thy shed; I’ll send thee clothes, I vow, and all the bread His wish would eat, that to thy men and thee He be no burthen. But that I should be His mean to my house, where a company Of wrong-professing wooers wildly live, I will in no sort author; lest they give Poul use to him, and me as gravely grieve. For what great act can any one achieve Against a multitude, although his mind Retain a courage of the greatest kind? For all minds have not force in one degree.” Ulysses answer’d: “O friend, since ’tis free For any man to change fit words with thee, I’ll freely speak: Methinks, a wolshiv power My heart puts on to tear and to devour, To hear your affirmation; that, in spite Of what may fall on you, made opposite, Being one of your proportion, birth, and age, These wooers should in such injustice rage, What should the cause be? Do you wilfully Endure their spoil? Or hath your empery Been such amongst your people, that all gather In troop, and one voice (which even God doth father) And vow your hate so, that they suffer them? Or blame your kinsfolk’s faiths, before th’ extreme Of your first stroke hath tried them, whom a man, When strifes to blows rise, trusts, though battle ran
In huge and high waves? Would to heaven my spirit Such youth breathed, as the man that must inherit Yet never-touch'd Ulysses, or that he,
But wandering this way, would but come, and see What my age could achieve (and there is Fate
For Hope yet left, that he may recreate
His eyes with such an object) this my head Should any stranger strike off, if stark dead
I struck not all; the house in open force Entering with challenge. If their great concourse Did over-lay me, being a man alone,
(Which you urge for yourself) be you that one.
I rather in mine own house wish to die
One death for all, than so indecently
See evermore deeds worse than death applied;
Guests wrong'd with vile words and blow-giving pride;
The women-servants dragg'd in filthy kind
About the fair house, and in corners blind
Made serve the raptures of ruffians; food devour'd Idly and rudely; wine exhaust, and pour'd
Through throats profane; and all about a deed That's ever woos, and will never speed."
"I'll tell you, guest, most truly," said his son.
"I do not think that all my people ron
One hateful course against me; nor accuse Kinsfolks that I in strifes of weight might use;
But Jove will have it so, our race alone
(As if made singular) to one and one
His hand confining. Only to the king, Jove-bred Arcesius, did Laertes spring;
Only to old Laertes did descend
Ulysses; only to Ulysses' end
Am I the adjutant, whom he left so young,
That from me to him never comfort spring:
And to all these now, for their race, arise
Up in their house a brood of enemies.
As many as in these isles bow men's knees,
Samos, Dullichus, and the rich in trees
Zacythus, or in this rough isle's command,
So many suitors for the nuptials stand,
That ask my mother; and, mean space, prefer
Their lusts to all spoil, that dishonour her.

Nor cloth she, though she loathes, deny their suits.
Nor they denials take, though taste their fruits.
But all this time the state of all things there
Their throats devour, and I must shortly bear
A part in all: and yet the periods
Of these designs lie in the knees of Gods.
Of all loves then, Eumeus, make quick way
To wise Penelope, and to her say
My safe return from Pylos; and alone
Return thou hither, having made it known.
Nor let, besides my mother, any ear
Partake thy message, since a number bear
My safe return displeasure." He replied:
"I know, and comprehend you: you divide
Your mind with one that understands you well.
But, all in one yet; may I not reveal
To th' old hard-fated Arcesiades*
Your safe return? who, through his whole distress Felt for Ulysses, did not yet so grieve.
But with his household he had will to live.
And served his appetite with wine and food,
Survey'd his husbandry, and did his blood
Some comforts fitting life; but since you took Your ship for Pylos, he would never brook
Or wine or food, they say, nor cast an eye On any labour, but sits weeping by,
And sighing out his sorrows, ceaseless moans Wasting his body, turn'd all skin and bones.""
More sad news still," said he, "yet, mourn he still;
For if the rule of all men's works be will,
And his will his way goes, mine stands inclined T'attend the home-turn of my nearer kind.†
Do then what I enjoin; which given effect, Ess not to field to him, but turn direct,
Entreating first my mother, with most speed,
And all the secrecy that now serves need,
To send this way their store-house guardian,
And she shall tell all to the aged man.‡

* Laertes,
† Intending his father, whose return though he were far from knowing, or fully expecting, yet he desired to order all things as he were present.
‡ Intending to Laertes, all that Eumeus would have told.
He took his shoes up, put them on, and went.
Nor was his absence hid from Jove’s descent,
Divine Minerva, who took straight to view
A goodly woman’s shape that all works knew,
And, standing in the entry, did prefer
Her sight to Ulysses; but, though meeting her,
His son Telemachus nor saw nor knew.
The Gods’ clear presences are known to few.
Yet, with Ulysses, even the dogs did see,
And would not bark, but, whining lovingly,
Pied to the stalls’ far side. When she her eye
Moved to Ulysses; he knew her design,
And left the house, pass’d the great sheep-cote’s wall,
And stood before her. She bade utter all
Now to his son, nor keep the least unloosed,
That, all the wooers’ deaths being now disposed,
They might approach the town; affirming, she Not long would fail to assist to victory.
This said, she laid her golden rod on him,
And with his late-worn weeds grace every limb,
His body straighten’d, and his youth infloud,
His fresh blood call’d up, every wrinkle fill’d,
About his broken eyes, and on his chin
The brown hair spread. When his whole trim wroug in,
She issued, and he enter’d to his son,
Who stood amazed, and thought some God had done
His house that honour, turn’d away his eyes,
And said: “Now guest, you grace another guise
Than suits your late shew. Other weeds you wear, And other person. Of the starry sphere
You certainly present some deathless God.
Be pleased, that to your here vouchsafed abode
We may give sacred rites, and offer gold,
To do us favour.” He reply’d: “I hold
No defied state. Why put you thus on me A God’s resemblance? I am only he That bears thy father’s name; for whose loved sake Thy youth so grieves; whose absence makes thee take Such wrongs of men.” Thus kiss’d he him, or could Forbear those tears that in such mighty hold
He held before; still held, still issuing ever:
And now, the shores once broke, the springtide never Forbore earth from the cheeks he kiss’d. His son,
By all these violent arguments not won
To credit him his father, did deny
His kind assumpt, and said, some Deity
Feign’d that joy’s cause, to make him gripe the more;
Affirming, that no man, whoever wore
The garment of mortality, could take,
By any utmost power his soul could make,
Such change into it, since, at so much will,
Not Jove himself could both remove and fill Old age with youth, and youth with age so spoil,
In such an instant: “You wore all the soil
Of age but now, and were old; and but now
You bear that young grace that the Gods endow Their heaven-born forms withal.” His father said: “Telemachus! Admire, nor stand dismay’d,
But know thy solid father; since within
He answers all parts that adorn his skin.
There shall no more Ulysses come here.
I am the man, that now this twentieth year (Still under sufferance of a world of ill)
My country earth recover. ‘Tis the will
The prey-professor Pallas puts in act,
Who put me thus together, thus distract
In aged pieces as even now you saw,
This youth now rendering. ‘Tis within the law
Of her free power sometimes to shew me poor, Sometimes again thus amply to restore
My youth and ornaments, she still would please.
The Gods can raise, and throw men down, with ease.”
This said, he sat; when his Telemachus pour’d Himself about him; tears on tears he shower’d,
And to desire of moan increased the cloud.
Both wept and howl’d, and laid out shrieks more loud Than or the bird-bone-breaking eagle rears,
Or brood-kind vulture with the crooked seres,
When rustic hands their tender eyries draw,
Before they give their wings their fullplumed law.
But miserably pour'd they from beneath Their lids their tears, while both their breasts did breathe
As frequent cries; and, to their fervent moan,
The light had left the skies, if first the son Their dumb moans had not vented, with demand
What ship it was that gave the natural
land
To his coldest feet? He then did likewise lay
Hand on his passion, and gave these words
way:
"I'll tell thee truth, my son: The men that bear
Much fame for shipping, my reducers were
To long-wish'd Ithaca, who each man else That greets their shore give pass to where he dwells.
The Phaeacensian peers, in one night's date,
While I fast slept, fetch'd th' Ithacensian
state,
Graced me with wealthy gifts; brass, store of gold,
And robes fair-wrought; all which have sacred hold
In caves that by the Gods' advice I chased.
And now Minerva's admonitions used For this retreat, that we might here dispose
In close discourse the slaughter of our foes.
Recount the number of the wooers then,
And let me know what name they hold with men,
That my mind may cast over their estates
A curious measure; and confer the rates
Of our two powers and theirs, to try, if we Alone may propagate to victory
Our bold encounters of them all, or prove
The kind assistance of some others' love."
"O father," he replied, "I oft have heard
Your counsels and your force of hand preffer'd
To mighty glory, but your speeches now
Your venturous mind exceeding mighty show.
Even to amaze they move me; for, in right Of no fit counsel, should be brought to fight

Two men 'gainst th' able faction of a throng.
No one two, no one ten, no twice ten strong
These wooers are, but more by much.
For know
That from Dulichius there are fifty-two,
All choice young men; and every one of these Six men attend. From Samos cross'd the seas
Twelve young gallants. From Zacynthus came Twice ten. Of Ithaca, the best of name, Twice six. Of all which all the state they take
A sacred poet and a herald make.
Their delicacies two, of special sort In skill of banquets, serve. And all this port
If we shall dare t' encounter, all thrust up In one strong roof, have great care lest the cup,
Your great mind thirsts, exceeding bitter taste,
And your retreat commend not to your haste
Your great attempt, but make you say, you buy
Their pride's revenges at a price too high.
And therefore, if you could, 'twere well you thought
Of some assistant. Be your spirit wrought
In such a man's election, as may lend
His succours freely, and express a friend."
His father answer'd; "Let me ask of
thee;
Hear me, consider, and then answer me.
Think'st thou, if Pallas and the King of skies
We had to friend, would their sufficiencies Make strong our part? Or that some other yet
My thoughts must work for? "These," said he, "are set Altof the clouds, and are found aids indeed,
As powers not only that these men exceed,
But bear of all men else the high command,
And hold of Gods an overruling hand."
"Well then," said he, "not these shall sever long
Their force and ours in fights assured and
strong.
And then 'twixt us and them shall Mars prefer
His strength, to tand our great distinguisher,
When in mine own roof I am forced to blows.
But when the day shall first her fires disclose,
Go thou for home, and troop up with the wooers;
Thy will with theirs join'd, power with their rude powers;
And after shall the herdsman guide to town
My steps, my person wholly overgrown
With all apparance of a poor old swain, Heavy, and wretched. If their high disdain
Of my vile presence make them my desert
Affect with contumelies, let thy loved heart Beat in fix'd confines of thy bosom still,
And see me suffer, patient of their ill.
Ay, though they drag me by the heels
about
Mine own free earth, and after hurl me out, Do thou still suffer. Nay, though with their darts
They beat and bruise me, bear. But these fool parts
Persuade them to forbear, and by their names Call all with kind words; bidding, for their shames,
Their pleasures cease. If yet they yield not
way,
There breaks the first light of their fatal
day.
In mean space, mark this: When the chiefly wise
Minerva prompts me, I'll inform thine eyes
With some given sign, and then all th' arms that are Aloft thy roof in some near room prepare For speediest use. If those brave men inquire Thy end in all, still rake up all thy fire
In fair cool words, and say: 'I bring them down To seour the smoke off, being so overgrown
That one would think all fumes, that ever were Breathed since Ulysses' loss, reflected here.
These are not like the arms he left behind,
In way for Troy. Besides, Jove prompts my mind
In their remove apart thus with this thought,
That, if in height of wine there should be wrought
Some harsh contention 'twixt you, this apt
mean
To mutual bloodshed may be taken clean
From out your reach, and all the spoil prevented
Of present feast, perhaps even then preserved.
My mother's nuptials to your long kind vows.
Steel itself, ready, draw a man to blow.
Thus make their thoughts secure; to us alone
Two swords, two darts, two shields left; which see done Within our readiest reach, that at our will We may resume, and charge, and all their skill Pallas and Jove, that all just counsels breathe,
May darken with secureness to their death.
And let me charge thee now, as thou art mine,
And as thy veins mine own true blood combine:
Let, after this, none know Ulysses near,
Not any one of all the household there,
Not here the herdsman, not Laertes be Made privy, nor herself Penelope;
But only let thyself and me work out
The women's thoughts of all things borne
about
The wooers' hearts; and then thy men approve,
To know who honours, who with reverence
love,
Our well-weigh'd memories, and who is won
To fail thy fit right, though my only son.
"You teach," said he, "so punctually
now,
As I knew nothing, nor were sprung from
you.
I hope, hereafter, you shall better know What soul I bear, and that it doth not let
The least loose motion pass his natural seat.
But this course you propose will prove, I
fear,
Small profit to us; and could wish your care
Would weigh it better as too far about.
For time will ask much, to the sitting out
Of each man's disposition by his deeds;
And, in the mean time, every wooer feeds
Beyond satiety, nor knows how to spare.
The women yet, since they more easy are
For our inquiry, I would wish you try;
Who right your state, who do it injury.
The men I would omit, and these things
make
Your labour after. But, to undertake
The wooers war, I wish your utmost speed, Especially if you could cheer the deed With some ostent from Jove." Thus, as the sire
Consented to the son, did here expire Their mutual speech. And now the ship was come,
That brought the young prince and his soldiers home.
The deep haven reach’d, they drew the ship ashore,
Took all their arms out, and the rich gifts bore
To Cittius’ house. But to Ulysses’ court
They sent a herald first, to make report
To wise Penelope, that safe at field Her son was left; yet, since the ship would yield
Most haste to her, he sent that first, and them
To comfort with his utmost the extreme He knew she suffer’d. At the court now met
The herald and the herdsman, to repeat One message to the queen. Both whom arrived
Within the gates, both to be foremost strived
In that good news. The herald, he for haste
Amongst the maids bestow’d it, thinking
placed
The queen amongst them. "Now," said he, "O queen,
Your loved son is arrived." And then was seen
The queen herself, to whom the herdsman told
All that Telemachus enjoin’d he should;
All which discharged, his steps he back
bestows,
And left both court and city for his sons.
The wooers then grew sad, soul- vex’d, and all
Made forth the court; when, by the mighty wall
They took their several seat, before the gates.
To whom Eurymachus initiates Their utter’d grievance. "O," said he,
"my friends,
A work right great begun, as proudly ends.
We said, Telemachus should never make His voyage good, nor this shore ever take
For his return’s receipt; and yet we fail, And he performs it. Come, let’s man a sail,
The best in our election, and bestow
Such soldiers in her as can swiftest row,
To tell our friends that way-lay his retreat
"Tis safe perform’d, and make them quickly get Their ship for Ithaca." This was not said Before Amphimous in port display’d
The ship arrived, her sails then under stroke,
And ears resumed; when, laughing, thus he spoke:
"Move for no messenger; these men are come:
Some God hath either told his turning
home,
Or they themselves have seen his ship gone
by,
Had her in chase, and lost her." Instantly They rose, and went to port; found drawn to land
The ship, the soldiers taking arms in hand.
The wooers themselves to council went in throng,
And not a man besides, or old, or young.
Let sit amongst them. Then Eupitheus’
son, Antinous, said: "See what the Gods have
done;
They only have deliver’d from our ill
The men we way-laid. Every windy hill Hath been their watch-tower, where by turns they stood Continual sentinel. And we made good Our work as well, for, sun once set, we ever
Slept wink ashore all night, but made sail
ever,
This way and that, even till the morning kept
Her sacred station, so to intercept
And take his life for whom our ambush lay;
And yet hath God to his return given way.
But let us prosecute with counsels here
His necessary death, nor anywhere
Let rest his safety; for if he survive,
Our sails will never in wish’d havens arrive;
Since he is wise, hath soul, and counsel too
To work the people, who will never do Our faction favour. What we then intend Against his person, give we present end,
Before he call a council; which, believe,
His spirit will haste, and point where it doeth griev,
Stand up amongst them all, and urge his
death
Decreed amongst us. Which complaint will breathe
A fire about their spleens, and blow no
praise
On our ill labours. Lest they therefore Power to exile us from our native earth,
And force our lives' societies to the birth
Of foreign countries, let our speeds prevent His coming home to this austere complaint,
At field and far from town, in some way
Of narrow passage, with his latest day Shewn to his forward youth, his goods and lands
Left to the free division of our hands,
The moveables made all his mother's dower,
And his, whoever fate affords the power
To celebrate with her sweet Hymen's rites:
Or if this please not, but your appetites Stand to his safety, and to give him seat
In his whole birth-right, let us look to eat
At his cost never more, but every man
Haste to his home, and wed with whom he can At home, and there lay first about for
dower;
And then the woman give his second power
Of nuptial-like; and, for last, apply
His purpose with most gifts and destiny.
This silence caused; whose breach, at last, begun
Amphinomus, the much renowned son
Of Nisus surnamed Aretiades,
Who from Dulichius full of flowery leas
Led all the woeers, and in chief did please
The queen with his discourse, because it grew
From roots of those good minds* that did endue
His goodly person; who, exceeding wise, Used this speech: "Friends, I never will advise
The prince's death; for 'tis a damned thing
To put to death the issue of a king.
First, therefore, let's examine, what app-plause
The Gods will give it: If the equal laws
Of Jove approve it, I myself will be The man shall kill him, and this company
Exhort to that mind: If the Gods remain Adverse and hate it, I advise, refrain."
This said Amphinomus, and pleased them all;
When all arose, and in Ulysses' hall Took seat again. Then to the queen was come
The woeers' plot, to kill her son at home,
Since their abroad design had miss'd success;
The herald Medon (who the whole address Knew of their counsels) making the report.
The Goddess of her sex with her fair sort
Of lovely women, at the large hall's door (Her bright cheeks clouded with a veil she wore) Stood, and directed to Antinous
Her sharp reproof, which she digested thus:
"Antinous! composed of injury,
Plotter of mischief! Though reports that fly Amongst our Ithacensian people say
That thou, of all that glory in their sway, Art best in words and counsels, th' art not so.
Fond, busy fellow, why plott'st thou the woe
And slaughter of my son? and dost not fear
The presidents of suppliants, when the ear
Of Jove stoops to them? 'Tis unjust to do Slaughter for slaughter, or pay woe for woe, Mischief for kindness. Death for life sought, then,
Is an injustice to be loathed of men.
Serves not thy knowledge to remember when Thy father fled to us; who (moved to wrath Against the Taphian thieves) pursued with scah
The guiltless Thesprot; in whose people's fear, Pursuing him for wreak, he landed here;
They after him, professing both their prize
Of all his chiefly valued faculties, And more prized life. Of all whose bloodiest ends
Ulysses curb'd them, though they were his friends.
Yet thou, like one that no law will allow The least true honour, eat'st his house up now
That fed thy father; woo'st for love his wife,
Whom thus thou grievest and seek'st her sole son's life.
Cease, I command thee, and command the rest
To see all thought of these foul fashions ceased." Eurymachus replied: "Be confident, Thou all of wit made, the most famed descent
Of king Icarus. Free thy spirits of fear:
There lives not any one, nor shall live here
Now, nor hereafter, while my life gives heat
And light to me on earth, that dares contest.
THE SIXTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

With any ill touch thy well-loved son,
But here I vow, and here will see it done,
His life shall stain my lance, If on his knees
The city-racer, Laertides,
Hath made me sit, put in my hand his food,
And held his red wine to me, shall the blood
Of his Telemachus on my hand lay
The least pollution, that my life can stay?
No: I have ever charged him not to fear Death's threat from any. And for that most dear Love of his father, he shall ever be Much the most loved of all that live to me.
Who kills a guileless man from man may fly;
From God his searches all escapes deny."
Thus cheer'd his words, but his affections still Fear'd not to cherish soul intent to kill Even him whose life to all lives he preferr'd.
The queen went up; and to her love appear'd
Her lord so freshly, that she wept, till steep (By Pallas forced on her) her eyes did steep
In his sweet humour. When the even was come,
The God-like herdsman reach'd the whole way home.
Ulysses and his son for supper drest
A year-old swine, and ere their host and guest Had got their presence, Pallas had put by
With her fair rod Ulysses' royalty,
And render'd him an aged man again,
With all his vile integments, lest his swain
Should know him in his trim and tell his queen,
In these deep secrets being not deeply seen.
He seen, to him the prince these words did use:
"Welcome divine Eumæus: Now what news Employs the city? Are the wooers come Back from their scout dismay'd? Or here at home Will they again attempt me?" He replied:
"These touch not my care; I was satisfied To do, with most speed, what I went to do;
My message done, return. And yet, not so Came my news first; a herald (met with there) Forestall'd my tale, and told how safe you were.
Besides which merely necessary thing,
What in my way chanced I may over-bring.
Being what I know, and witness'd with mine eyes.
Where the Hermæan sepulchre doth rise Above the city, I beheld take port
A ship, and in her many a man of sort;
Her freight was shields and lances; and, methought,
They were the wooers; but, of knowledge, nought Can therein tell you." The prince smiled, and knew They were the wooers, casting secret view Upon his father. But what they intended Fled far the herdsman: whose swain's labours ended,
They dress'd the supper, which, past want, was eat.
When all desire sufficed of wine and meat,
Of other human wants they took supplies
At Sleep's soft hand, who sweetly closed their eyes.
THE SEVENTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Telemachus, return'd to town,
Makes to his curious mother known,
In part, his travels. After whom Ulysses to the court doth come,
In good Eumaeus' guide, and prest
To witness of the Woers' feast:
Whom, though twice ten years did bestow
In far-off parts, his dog doth know.

ANOTHER.

Pō, Ulysses shows
Through all disguise.
Whom his dog knows;
Who knowing dies.

But when air's rosy birth, the morn, arose, Telemachus for the town dispose
His early steps; and took to his command
His fair long lance, well sorting with his hand;
Thus parting with Eumæus: "Now, my friend,
I must to town, lest too far I extend My mother's moan for me, who, fill her eyes Mine own eyes witness, varies tears and cries
Through all extremes. Do then this charge of mine,
And guide to town this hapless guest of thine,
To beg elsewhere his further festival.
Give they that please, I cannot give to all;
Mine own wants take up for myself my pain.
If it incense him, be the worst shall gain;
The lovely truth I love, and must be plain."
"Alas, friend," said his father, "nor do I Desire at all your further charity.
'Tis better beg in cities than in fields,
And take the worst a beggar's fortune yields.
Nor am I apt to stay in swine-eyes more;
However; ever the great chief before
The poor ranks must to every step obey,
But go; your man in my command shall sway,
Anon yet too, by favour, when your fires
Have comforted the cold heat age expires,
And when the sun's flame hath besides corrected
The early air abroad, not being protected
By these my bare weeds from the morning's frost, Which (if so much ground is to be engrost By my poor feet as you report) may give Too violent charge to th' heat by which I live."

This said, his son went on with spritely pace.
And to the woers studied little grace.
Arrived at home, he gave his javelin stay Against a lofty pillar, and bold way
Made further in. When having so far gone
That he transcended the fair porch of stone,
The first by far that gave his entry eye
Was nurse Euryclea; who th' embroidery
Of stools there set was giving cushions fair;
Who ran upon him, and her apt repair
Shed tears for joy. About him gather'd round
The other maids; his head and shoulders crown'd
With kisses and embraces. From above
The Queen herself came, like the Queen of Love,
Or bright Diana; cast about her son
Her kind embraces, with effusion
Of loving tears; kiss'd both his lovely eyes,
His cheeks, and forehead; and gave all supplies
With this entreaty: "Welcome, sweetest light;
I never had conceit to set quick sight
On thee thus soon, when thy loved father's fame
As far as Pylus did thy spirit inflame;
In that search ventured all unknown to me.
O say, by what power camest thou now to be Mine eyes' dear object?" He return'd reply:
"Move me not now, when you my scape desery
From imminent death, to think me fresh entrapp'd;
The fear'd wound rubbing, felt before I scaped.
Double not needless passion on a heart Whose joy so green is, and so apt t’ invert; But pure weeds putting on, ascend and take Young women with you, that ye all may make Vows of full hecatombs in sacred fire To all the Godheads, if their only Sire Vouchsafe revenge of guest-rites wrong’d, which he Is to protect as being their Deity, My way shall be directed to the hall Of common concourse, that I thence may call A stranger, who from off the Pylian shore Came friendly with me; whom I sent before With all my soldiers, but in chief did charge Piræus with him, wishing him t’ enlarge His love to him at home, in best affair, And utmost honours, till mine own repair.” Her son thus spoken, his words could not bear The wings too easily through her either ear, But putting pure weeds on, made vows entire. Of perfect hecatombs in sacred fire To all the Deities, if their only Sire Vouchsafed revenge of guest-rites wrong’d, which he Was to protect as being their Deity. Her son left house, in his fair hand his lance, His dogs attending; and, on every glance His looks cast from them, Pallas put a grace That made him seem of the celestial race. Whom, came to concourse, every man admired. About him throng’d the wooers, and desired All good to him in tongues, but in their hearts Most deep ills threaten’d to his most deserts. Of whose huge rout once free, he cast glad eye On some that, long before his infancy, Were with his father great and gracious; Grave Halitherses, Mentor, Antiphus; To whom he went, took seat by them, and they Inquired of all things since his parting day, To them Piræus came, and brought his guest Along the city thither, whom not least The prince respected, nor was long before He rose and met him. The first word yet bore Piræus from them both; whose haste besought The prince to send his women to see brought The gifts from his house that Atrides gave, Which his own roofs, he thought, would better save. The wise prince answer’d: “I can scarce conceive The way to these works. If the wooers reave By privy stratagem my life at home, I rather wish Piræus may become The master of them, than the best of these. But, if I sow in their fields of excess Slaughter and ruin, then thy trust employ, And to me joying bring thou those with joy.” This said, he brought home his grief-practised guest; Where both put off, both oil’d, and did invest Themselves in rich robes, wash’d, and sate, and eat. His mother, in a fair chair taking seat Directly opposite, her loom applied; Who, when her son and guest had satisfied Their appetites with feast, said: “O my son, You know that ever since your sire was won To go in Agamemnon’s guide to Troy, Attempting sleep, I never did enjoy One night’s good rest, but made my quiet bed A sea blown up with sighs, with tears still shed Embraced and troubled; yet, though all your miss In your late voyage hath been made for this, That you might know th’ abode your father made, You shun to tell me what success you had. Now then, before the insolent access The wooers straight will force on us, express What you have heard.” “I will,” said he, “and true. We came to Pylos, where the studious due That any father could afford his son, (But new-arrived from some course he had run To an extreme length, in some voyage vow’d), Nestor, the pastor of the people, show’d
To me arrived, in turrets thrust up high, Where not his brave sons were more loved than I.
Yet of th' unconquer'd ever-sufferer,
Ulysses, never he could set his ear,
Alive or dead, from any earthy man.
But to the great Lacedemonian, Atrides, famous for his lance, he sent,
With horse and chariots, me, to learn th' event.
From his relation; where I had the view
Of Argive Helen, whose strong beauties drew,
By wills of Gods, so many Grecian states,
And Trojans, under such laborious fates.
Where Menelaus ask'd me, what affair
To Lacedemon render'd my repair.
I told him all the truth, who made reply:
' O deed of most abhor'd indecency!
A sort of impotents attempt his bed.
Whose strength of mind hath cities leveled
As to a lion's den, when any hind Hath brought her young calves, to their rest inclined.
When he is ranging hills, and herby dales,
To make of feeders there his festivals,
But, turning to his lustre, calves and dam,
He shows abhor'd death, in his anger's flame.'
So, should Ulysses find this rabbled housed
In his free turrets, courting his espoused, Foul death would fall them. O, I would to Jove.
Phoebus, and Pallas, that, when he shall prove
The broad report of his exhausted store
Tru' with his eyes, his nerves and sinews wore
That vigour then that in the Lesbian towers, Provoked to wrestle with the iron powers
Philomelides vaunted, he approved;
When down he hurl'd his challenger, and moved Huge shouts from all the Achives then in view.
If, once come home, he all those forces drew
About him there to work, they all were dead,
And should find bitter his attempted bed.
But what you ask and sue for, I, as far As I have heard the true-spoke mariner,
Will tell directly, nor delude your ear:
He told me that an island did ensphere,
In much discomfort, great Laertes' son;
And that the Nymph Calypso, overrun
With his affection, kept him in her caves;
Where men, nor ship, of power to brook the waves,
Were near his convoy to his country's shore,
And where herself importuned evermore
His quiet stay; which not obtain'd, by force
She kept his person from all else recourse.'
This told Atrides, which was all he knew.
Nor stay'd I more, but from the Gods there blew
A prosperous wind, that set me quickly here.'
This put his mother quite from all her cheer.
When Theoclymenus the augur said:
' O woman, honour'd with Ulysses' bed,
Your son, no doubt, knows clearly nothing more,
Hear me yet speak, that can the truth uncore,
Nor will be curious. Jove then witness bear,
And this thy hospitable table here,
With this whole household of your blameless lord,
That at this hour his royal feet are shored
On his loved country earth, and that even here.
Coming, or creeping, he will see the cheer
These wooers make; and in his soul's field sow Seeds that shall thrive to all their overthrow.
This, set a ship-board, I knew sorted thus,
And cried it out to your Telemachus.'
Penelope replied: 'Would this would prove,
You well should witness a most friendly love,
And gifts such of me, as encountering fame
Should greet you with a blessed mortal's name.'
This mutual speech past, all the wooers were Hurling the stone, and toasting of the spear;
Before the palace, in the paved court,
Where others whiles their petulant resort
Sat plotting injuries. But when the hour
Of supper enter'd, and the feeding power
Brought sheep from field, that fill'd up every way
With those that used to furnish that purvey; Medon, the herald (who of all the rest
Pleased most the wooers, and at every feast Was ever near] said: "You whose kind
consort
Make the fair branches of the tree our
court,
Grace it within now, and your supper
take.
You that for health, and fair contention’s
sake,
Will please your minds, know, bodies must have meat;
Play’s worse than idleness in times to eat.”

This said, all left, came in, cast by, on thrones
And chairs, their garments. Their provisions
Were sheep, swine, goats, the chiefly great and fat,
Besides an ox that from the herd they gat.
And now the king and herdsman, from the field,
In good way were to town; ‘twixt whom was held
Some walking conference, which thus
began
The good Eumaeus: “Guest, your will was won,
Because the prince commanded, to make
way
Up to the city, though I wish’d your stay,
And to have made you guardian of my stall;
But I, in care and fear of what might fall
In after anger of the prince, forbore.
The cows of princes touch their subjects sore.
But make we haste, the day is nearly ended,
And cold airs still are in the even extended.”

"I know it," said he, "consider all; your charge
Is given to one that understands at large.
Haste then. Hereafter, you shall lead the
way;
Afford your staff too, if it fit your stay,
That I may use it; since you say our pass
Is less friend to a weak foot than it was.”

Thus cast he on his neck his nasty scrip, All patch’d and torn; a cord, that would not slip
For knots and bracks about the mouth of it,
Made serve the turn; and then his swain did fit
His forced state with a staff. Then plied they hard
Their way to town, their cottage left in

To swains and dogs. And now Eumaeus led
The king along, his garments to a thread
All bare and burn’d, and he himself hard
bore
Upon his staff, at all parts like a poor And sad old beggar. But when now they got

The rough highway, their voyage wanted not Much of the city, where a fount they
reach’d,
From whence the town their choicest water fetched;
That ever overflow’d, and curious art Was shewn about it; in which three had part
Whose names Neritus and Polycytor were,
And famous Ithacus. It had a sphere
Of poplar, that ran round about the wall;
And into it a lofty rock let fall
Continual supply of cool clear stream, On whose top, to the Nymphs that were supreme
In those parts’ loves, a stately altar rose,
Where every traveller did still impose Devoted sacrifice. At this fount found
These silly travellers a man renown’d For guard of goats, which now he had in guide.
Whose huge-stored herd two herdsmen kept beside,
For all herds it excell’d, and bred a feed
For wooers only. He was Dolius’ seed,
And call’d Melanthius. Who casting eye
On these two there, he chid them terribly.
And so past mean, that even the wretched
fate
Now on Ulysses he did irritate.
His fume to this effect he did pursue:
"Why so, ’tis now at all parts passing true,
That ill leads ill, good evermore doth train
With like his like. Why, thou unenvied swain,
Whither dost thou lead this same victless leaguer,
This bane of banquets, this most nasty beggar?
Whose sight doth make one sad, it so abhors;
Who, with his standing in so many doors,
Hath broke his back; and all his beggary tends
To beg base crusts, but to no manly
ends,
As asking swords, or with activity
To get a caldron. Would’st thou give him
me,
To farm my stable, or to sweep my yard,
And bring browse to my kids, and that prefer'd
He should be at my keeping for his pains,
To drink as much whey as his thirsty veins
Would still be willing (whey made all his fees)
His monstrous belly would oppress his knees.
But he hath learn'd to lead base life about,
And will not work, but crouch among the rout
For broken meat to cram his bursten gut.
Yet this I'll say, and he will find it put In sure effect, that if he enters where Ulysses' roofs cast shade, the stools will fly there.
About his ears fly, all the house will throw,
And rub his ragged sides with cuffs now.
Past these reviles, his manless rudeness spurn'd Divine Ulysses; who at no part turn'd
His face from him, but had his spirit fed
With these two thoughts, if he should strike him dead
With his bestowed staff, or at his feet
Make his direct head and the pavement meet.
But he bore all, and entertain'd a breast
That in the strife of all extremes did rest.
Eumeus, frowning on him, chid him yet,
And, lifting up his hands to heaven, he set
This bitter curse at him: "O you that bear Fair name to be the race of Jupiter, Nymphs of these fountains! If Ulysses ever Burn'd thighs to you, that, hid in fat, did never Fail your acceptance of, or lamb or kid;
Grant this grace to me: let the man thus hid Shine through his dark fate, make some God his guide,
That, to thee, goatherd, this same palate's pride, Thou drivest afore thee, he may come and make The scatterings of the earth, and overtake Thy wrongs, with forcing thee to ever err
About the city, hunted by his fear:
And in the mean space may some slothful swains Let lousy sickness gnaw thy cattle's veins."

"O Gods!" replied Melanthius, "what a curse Hath this dog bark'd out, and can yet do worse!
This man shall I have given into my hands,
When in a well-built ship to far-off lands
I shall transport him, that, should I want here,
My sale of him may find me victuals there.
And, for Ulysses, would to heaven his joy
The silver-bearing-bow God would destroy,
This day, within his house, as sure as he
The day of his return shall never see."
This said, he left them going silent on;
But he out-went them, and took straight upon
The palace royal, which he enter'd straight,
Sat with the wooers, and his trencher's freight
The carvers gave him of the flesh there vented,
But bread the reverend butleress presented.
He took against Eurymachus his place,
Who most of all the wooers gave him grace.
And now Ulysses and his swain got near,
When round about them visited their ear
The hollow harp's delicious-stricken string,
To which did Phemius, near the wooers, sing.
Then by the hand Ulysses took his swain,
And said: "Eumeus, one may here see plain,
In many a grace, that Laertiades*
Built here these turrets, and, amongst others these,
His whole court arm'd with such a goodly wall,
The cornice, and the cope, majestical,
His double gates, and turrets, built too strong
For force or virtue ever to expugn.
I know the feasters in it now abound,
Their cates cast such a savour; and the sound
The harp gives, argues an accomplish'd feast.
The Gods made music banquet's dearest guest."
"These things," said he, "your skill may tell with ease, Since you are graced with greater knowledges.
But now consult us how these works shall sort,
If you will first approach this praised court,

* Intending his fat herd, kept only for the wooers' dainty palates.

* Ulysses.
And see these wooers, I remaining here;
Or I shall enter, and yourself forbear.
But he not you too tedious in your stay,
Lest thrust ye be and buffeted away.

\[ Brain hath no fence for blows \; look to \; t\] (I pray.\)

"You speak to one that comprehends,"

said he,
"Go you before, and here adventure me.
I have of old been used to cuffs and blows;
My mind is harden'd, having borne the throes
Of many a sour event in waves and wars,
Where knocks and buffets are no foreigners.
And this same harmful belly by no mean
The greatest abstinent can ever weaken.
\[ Men suffer much bane by the belly's rage \;
For whose sake ships in all their equipage
Are arm'd, and set out to th' untempered seas,
Their bulks full-fraught with ills to enemies.\"

Such speech they changed; when in the yard there lay
A dog, call'd Argus, which, before his way Assumed for Ilion. Ulysses bred,
Yet stood his pleasure then in little stead,
As being too young; but, growing to his grain,
Young men made choice of him for every chase,
Or of their wild goats, of their hares, or harts.
But his king gone, and he, now past his parts,
Lay all abjectly on the stable's store,
Before the oxtail, and mules' stable door,
To keep the clothes cast from the peasants' hands,
While they laid compass on Ulysses' lands,
The dog, with ticks (unlook'd-to) over-grown.
But by this dog no sooner seen but known
Was wise Ulysses, who new enter'd there,
Up went his dog's laid ears, and, coming near,
Up he himself rose, fawn'd, and wag'd his stern, Couch'd close his ears, and lay so; nor discern* Could evermore his dear-loved lord again.
Ulysses saw it, nor had power t' abstain
From shedding tears; which (far-off seeing his swain)
He dries from his sight clean, to whom he thus His grief dissembled: "Tis miraculous.

* The dog died as soon as he had seen Ulysses.

That such a dog as this should have his lair
On such a dunghill, for his form is fair,
And yet, I know not, if there were in him
Good pace, or parts, for all his goodly limb;

Or he lived empty of those inward things,
As are those trencher-beagles tending kings.
Whom for their pleasure's, or their glory's sake,
Or fashion, they into their favour take."

"This dog," said he, "was servant to one dead
A huge time since. But if he bore his head,
For form and quality, of such a height,
As when Ulysses, bound for th' Ilion fight,
Or quickly after, left him, your rapt eyes
Would then admire to see him use his thighs
In strength and swiftness. He would nothing fly, Nor anything let escape. If once his eye
Seized any wild beast, he knew straight his scent;
Go where he would, away with him he went.
Nor was there ever any savage stood Amongst the thicket of the deepest wood
Long time before him, but he pull'd him down;
As well by that true hunting to be shown
In such vast coverts, as for speed of pace
In any open lawn. For in deep chase
He was a passing wise and well-nosed hound.

And yet is all this good in him uncrownd'
With any grace here now; nor more fed
Than any errant cur. His king is dead, Far from his country; and his servants are So negligent: they lend his hound no care.
Where masters rule not, but let men alone,
You never there see honest service done.
That man's half virtue Jove takes quite away,
That once is sun-burn'd with the servile day."

This said, he enter'd the well-builted towers,
Up bearing right upon the glorious woers,
And left poor Argus dead; his lord's first sight
Since that time twenty years bereft his light.
Telemachus did far the first behold Eumaeus enter, and made signs he should Come up to him. He, noting, came, and took On earth his seat. And then the master cook
And all his work did in so like a way,
As he had practised begging many a day,
And though they knew all beggars could do this,
Yet they admired it as no deed of his;
Theough far from thought of other, used expense
And pity to him, who he was, and whence, Inquiring mutually. Melanthius then:
“Hear me, ye wooers of the far-famed queen,
About this beggar: I have seen before
This face of his; and know for certain more,
That this swain brought him hither. What he is,
Or whence he came, flies me.” Reply to this Antinous made, and mock’d Eumæus thus:
"O thou renowned herdsman, why to us Brought’st thou this beggar? Serves it not our hands,
That other land-leapers, and cormorants, Profane poor knives, lie on us, uncon-ducted,
But you must bring them? So amiss instructed
Art thou in course of thrift, as not to know Thy lord’s goods wrack’d in this their overflow?
Which think’st thou nothing, that thou call’st in these?"
Eumæus answer’d: “Though you may be wise.
You speak not wisely. Who calls in a guest
That is a guest himself? None call to feast
Other than men that are of public use, Prophets, or poets, whom the Gods produce,
Physicians for men’s ills, or architects.
Such men the boundless earth afford its respect
Bounded in honour, and may call them well.
But poor men who calls? Who doth so excel
In others’ good to do himself an ill?
But all Ulysses’ servants have been still Eye-sores in your way more than all that woo,
And chiefly I. But what care I for you, As long as these roofs hold as thrills to none
The wise Penelope and her godlike son?”
"Forbear,” said he, “and leave this tongue’s bold ill.
Antinous uses to be crossing still,
And give sharp words; his blood that humour bears,
To set men still together by the ears.

Served in more banquet; of which, part he set
Before the wooers, part the prince did get,
Who sat alone, his table placed aside;
To which the herald did the bread divide.
After Eumæus, enter’d straight the
king,
Like to a poor and heavy aged thing,
Bore hard upon his staff, and was so clad
As would have made his mere beholder sad.
Upon the ashen floor his limbs he spread,
And ‘gainst a cypress threshold stay’d his
head,
The tree wrought smooth, and in a line direct
Tried by the plumb and by the architect.
The prince then bade the herdsman give him bread,
The finest there, and see that prostrated
At-all-parts plight of his given all the cheer
His hands could turn to: “Take,” said he,
“and bear
These cakes to him, and bid him beg of all These wooers here, and to their festival
Bear up with all the impudence he can;
Bashful behaviour fits no needy man.”
He heard, and did his will. “Hold guest,” said he,
“Telemachus commends these cakes to thee, Bids thee bear up, and all these wooers implore,
Wit must make impudent whom Fate makes poor.”
“O Jove,” said he, “do my poor prayers the grace
To make him blessed’st of the mortal race,
And every thought now in his generous heart
To deeds that further my desires convert.” Thus took he in with both his hands his
store,
And in the uncoath scrip, that lay before
His ill-shod feet, reposed it; whence he fed
All time the music to the feasters play’d.
Both jointly ending, then began the wooers
To put in old act their tumultuous powers;
When Pallas standing close did prompt her
friend,
To prove how far the bounties would extend
Of those proud wooers; so, to let him try
Who most, who least, had learnt’d humanity.
However, no thought touch’d Minerva’s
mind,
That any one should scape his wrench design’d.
He handsomely became all, crept about
To every wooer, held a forced hand out,

* Ulysses’ ruthless fashion of entry to his own hall.

VOL. III.
But," turning then t’ Antinous, "O," said he,
"You entertain a father’s care of me,
To turn these eating guests out. "Tis advice
Of needful use for my poor faculties.
But God doth not allow this; there must be Some care of poor men in humanity.
What you yourselves take, give; I not envy.
But give command that hospitality
Be given all strangers. Nor shall my powers fear,
If this mood in me reach my mother’s ear;
Much less the servants, that are here to see Ulysses’ house kept in his old degree.
But you bear no such mind, your wits more cast
To fill yourself than let another taste."
Antinous answer’d him: "Brave-spoken man I Whose mind’s free fire see check’d no virtue can.
If all we woosers here would give as much As my mind serves, his largess should be such As would for three months serve his far off way
From troubling your house with more cause of stay."
This said, he took a stool up, that did rest.
Beneath the board, his spangled feet at feast,
And offer’d at him; but the rest gave all,
And fill’d his fulsome scrip with festival.
And so Ulysses for the present was,
And for the future, furnish’d, and his pass Bent to the door to eat. Yet could not leave Antinous so, but said: "Do you too give,
Loved lord; your presence makes a show to me.
As you not worst were of the company,
But best; and so much that you seem the king,
And therefore you should give some better thing
Than bread, like others. I will spread your praise Through all the wide world, that have in my days Kept house myself, and trod the wealthy ways
Of other men even to the title Blest;
And often have I given an erring guest (How mean soever) to the utmost gain
Of what he wanted, kept whole troops of men,
And had all other comings in, with which Men live so well, and gain the fame of rich.
Yet Jove consumed all; he would have it so;
To which, his mean was this: He made me go Far off, for Egypt, in the rude consort
Of all-ways-wandering pirates, where, in port,
I bade my loved men draw their ships ashore,
And dwell amongst them; sent out some t’ explore
Up to the mountains, who, intemperate,
And their inflamed bloods bent to satiate, Foraged the rich fields, haled the women thence And unman’d children, with the foul ex pense Both of their names and bloods. The cry then flew Straight to the city; and the great fields grew
With horse and foot, and flamèd iron arms;
When Jove (that breaks the thunder in alarms)
An ill flight cast amongst my men; not one Inspired with spirit to stand, and turn upon
The fierce pursuing foe; and therefore stood
Their ill fate thick about them; some in blood,
And some in bondage; toils led by constraint Fastening upon them. Me along they sent To Cyprus with a stranger-prince they met,
Dmetor Insides, who the imperial seat
Of that sweet island sway’d in strong command.
And thus feel I here need’s condemned hand."
"And what God sent," said he, "this suffering bane To vex our banquet? Stand off, nor profane
My board so boldly, lest I shew thee here
Cyprus and Egypt made more sour than there.
You are a saucy set-faced vagabond.
About with all you go, and they, beyond Discretion give thee, since they find not here
The least proportion set down to their cheer.
The Seventeenth Book of Homer's Odyssey.

But every fountain hath his under-floods,
It is no bounty to give others' goods:"
"O Gods," replied Ulysses, "I see now
You bear no soul in this your goodly show.
Beggars at your board, I perceive, should get Scarcely salt from your hands, if themselves brought meat;
Since, sitting where another's board is spread,
That flows with feast, not to the broken bread Will your allowance reach?" "Nay then," said he,
And look'd most sternly, "if so saucy be Your under-language, I suppose, that clear
You shall not scape without some broken cheer."
Thus rapt he up a stool, with which he smit
The king's right shoulder, 'twixt his neck and it.
He stood him like a rock. Antinous' dart
Not stern'd Ulysses; who in his great heart Deep ills projected, which, for time yet, close He bound in silence, shook his head, and went Out to the entry, where he then gave vent
To his full scrip, sat on the earth, and eat,
And talk'd still to the wooers: "Hear me yet,
Ye wooers of the Queen. It never grieves
A man to take blows, where for sheep, or heaves,
Or other main possessions, a man fights;
But for his harmful belly this man smites,
Whose love to many a man breeds many a woe.
And if the poor have Gods, and Furies too,
Before Antinous wear his nuptial wreath,
He shall be worn upon the dart of death."
"Harsh guest," said he, "sit silent at your meat,
Or seek your desperate plight some safer seat.
Lest by the hands or heels youths drag your years,
And rend your rotten rags about your ears."
This made the rest as highly hate his folly,
As he had violated something holy.
When one, even of the proudest, thus began:
"Thou dost not nobly, thus to play the man
On such an errant wretch. O ill disposed!
Perhaps some sacred Godhead goes enclosed
Even in his abject outside; for the Gods
Have often visited these rich abodes
Like such poor stranger pilgrims, since their powers (Being always shapely) glide through towns and towers, Observing, as they pass still, who they be
That piety love, and who impety."
This all men said, but he held sayings cheap.
And all this time Telemachus did heap
Sorrow on sorrow on his heaving heart,
To see his father stricken; yet let part
No tear to earth, but shook his head, and thought
As deep as those ills that were after wrought.
The Queen now, hearing of her poor guest's stroke,
Said to her maid (as to her wooer she spoke),
"I wish the famous-for-his-bow, the Sun,
Would strike thy heart so." Her wish, thus begun,
Her lady, fair Eurynome, pursued
Her exclamation, and did thus conclude:
"So may our vows call down from heaven his end,
And let no one life of the rest extend His life till morning." "O Eurynome," Replied the Queen, "may all Gods speak in thee,
For all the wooers we should rate as foes,
Since all their wails they place in others' woes.
But this Antinous we past all should hate,
As one resembling black and cruel Fate.
A poor strange wretch begg'd here, compell'd by need,
Ask'd all, and every one gave in his deed,
Fill'd his sad scrip, and eased his heavy wants,
Only this man bestow'd unmanly taunts,
And with a cruel blow, his force let fly,
'Twixt neck and shoulders shew'd his charity.
These minds, above, she and her maids
did show,
While, at his scrip, Ulysses sat below.
In which time she Eumæus call'd, and said:
"Go, good Eumæus, and see soon convey'd
The stranger to me; bid him come and take My salutations for his welcomed face."
And my desire serve, if he hath not heard
Or seen distress'd Ulysses; who hath err'd
Like such a man, and therefore chance may fall
He hath by him been met and spoke withal."
"O Queen," said he, "I wish to heaven your ear
Were quit of this un-reverend noise you hear
From these rude wooers, when I bring the guest;
Such words your ear would let into your breast
As would delight it to your very heart.
Three nights and days I did my roof impair
To his fruition (for he came to me
The first of all men since he fled the sea)
And yet he had not given a perfect end
To his relation of what woes did spend
The spite of Fate on him, but as you see
A singer, breathing out of Deity Love-kindling lines, when all men seated near Are rapt with endless thirst to ever hear;
So sweeten'd he my bosom at my meat,
Affirming that Ulysses was in Crete,
Where first the memories of Minos were,
A guest to him there dwelling then, as dear
As his true father; and from thence came he Twined on with sorrows, toss'd from sea to sea,
To cast himself in dust, and tumble here,
At wooers' feet, for blows and broken cheer.
But of Ulysses, where the Thesprotors dwell,
A wealthy people, Fame, he says, did tell
The still survival; who his native light Was bound for now, with treasure infinite."
"Call him," said she, "that he himself may say This over to me. We shall soon have way
Given by the wooers; they, as well at gate,
As set within doors, use to recreate
Their high-fed spirits. As their humours lead
They follow; and may well; for still they tread Uncharged ways here, their own wealth lying unwasted
In poor-kept houses, only something tasted
Their bread and wine is by their household swains;
But they themselves let loose continual reins
To our expenses, making slaughter still
Of sheep, goats, oxen, feeding past their fill,
And vainly lavishing our richest wine;
All these extending past the sacred line,
For here lives no man like Ulysses now
To curb these ruins. But should he once show His country light his presence, he and his Would soon revenge these wooers' injuries."
This said, about the house in echoes round,
Hers' son's strange necings* made a horrid sound;
At which the Queen yet laugh'd, and said:
"Go call
The stranger to me. Heard'st thou not, to all My words last utter'd, what a neessing brake From my Telemachus? From whence I make This sure conclusion: That the death and fate
Of every woer here is near his date.
Call then the guest, and if he tell as true
What I shall ask him, coat, cloak, all things new,
These hands shall yield him." This said, down he went,
And told Ulysses, that the Queen had sent
To call him to her, that she might inquire About her husband what her sad desire
Urged her to ask; and, if she found him true, Both coat, and cassock (which he needed) new
Her hands would put on him; and that the bread,
Which now he begg'd amongst the common tread,
Should freely feed his hunger now from her,
Who all he wish'd would to his wants prefer."
His answer was: "I will with fit speed tell
The whole truth to the Queen; for passing well

* Simile, in which Ulysses is compared with a poet for the sweetness of his speech.

* Necing a good omen.
I know her lord, since he and I have shared In equal sorrows. But I much am scared
With this rude multitude of wooers here.
The rage of whose pride smites heaven's brazen sphere.
Of whose rout when one strook me for no fault,
Telemachus nor none else turn'd th' assault
From my poor shoulders. Therefore, though she haste, Beseech the Queen her patience will see past
The day's broad light, and then may she inquire.
"Tis but my closer pressing to the fire
In th' evening's cold, because my weeds, you know,
Are passing thin; for I made bold to show Their bracks to you, and pray'd your kind supply."

He heard, and hasted; and met instantly
The Queen upon the pavement in his way,
Who said: "What! bring'st thou not?
what cause of stay
Find his austere supposes? Takes he fear
Of th' unjust wooers? Or thus hard doth bear
On any other doubt the house objects?
He does me wrong, and gives too nice respects
To his fear'd safety." "He does right,"
said he,
"And what he fears should move the policy
Of any wise one; taking care to shun
The violent wooers. He bids bide, till sun Hath bid his broad light. And, believe it, Queen,
"Twill make your best course, since you two, unseen,

May pass th' encounter; you to speak more free,
And he your ear gain less distractedly."
"The guest is wise," said she, "and well doth give The right thought use. Of all the men that live, Life serves none such as these proud wooers are,
To give a good man cause to use his care."
Thus, all agreed, amongst the wooers goes Eumaeus to the prince, and, whispering close,
Said: "Now, my love, my charge shall take up me, (Your goods and mine). What here is, you must see In fit protection. But, in chief, regard
Your own dear safeguard; whose state study hard, Lest sufferance seize you. Many a wicked thought Conceal these wooers; whom just Jove see brought
To utter ruin, ere it touch at us."
"So chance it, friend," replied Telemachus,
"Your bever taken, go. In first of day
Come, and bring sacrifice the best you may.
To me and to th' Immortals be the care
Of whatsoever here the safety's are.
This said, he sat in his elaborate throne.
Eumaeus (fed to satisfaction)
Went to his charge, left both the court and walls
Full of secure and fatal festivals,
In which the wooers' pleasures still would sway.
And now begun the even's near-ending day.

THE END OF THE SEVENTEENTH BOOK.
THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.
Ulysseus and rogue Iris fight.
Penelope vouchsafes her sight
To all her wooers, who present
Gifts to her, rash'd with content.
A certain parley then we sing,
Betwixt a Wooer and the King.

ANOTHER.
Zeus. The beggar's glee.
The King's high fame,
Gifts given to see
A virtuous dame.

There came a common beggar to the court,
Who in the city begg'd of all resort,
Excell'd in madness of the gut, drunk, ate,
Past intermission, was most hugely great,
Yet had no fibres in him nor no force;
In sight a man, in mind a living corpse.
His true name was Arnaeus, for his mother
Impoited it from his birth, and yet another
The city youth would give him (from the course
He after took, derived out of the force
That need held on him, which was up and down
To run on all men's errands through the town Which sounded Irus. When whose gut
Was come,
He needs would bar Ulysses his own home,
And fell to chiding him: "Old man," said he,
"Your way out of the entry quickly see
Be with fair language taken, lest your stay
But little longer see you dragg'd away.
See, sir, observe you not how all these make Direct signs at me, charging me to take Your heels, and drag you out? But I Take shame.
Rise yet, y' are best, lest we two play a game
At cuffs together," He bent brows, and said:
"Wretch! I do thee no ill, nor once upbraided Thy presence with a word, nor, what mine eye
By all hands sees thee given, one thought envy.
Nor shouldst thou envy others. Thou May'st see
The place will hold us both; and seem'st to me
A beggar like myself; which who can mend?
The Gods give most to whom they least are friend.
The chief goods Gods give, is in good to end.
But to the hands' strife, of which y' are so free.
Provoke me not, for fear you anger me;
And lest the old man, on whose scorn you stood,
Your lips and bosom make shake hands in blood.
I love my quiet well, and more will love
To-morrow than to-day. But if you make My peace beyond my right, the war you make Will never after give you will to take Ulysses' house into your begging walk."
"O Gods," said he, "how volubly doth talk This eating gulf! And how his fume breaks out,
As from an old crack'd oven! whom I will clout
So bitterly, and so with both hands mall
His chaps together, that his teeth shall fall
As plain seen on the earth as any sow's
That ruts the corn-fields, or devours the mows.
Come, close we now, that all may see what wrong
An old man tempts that takes at cuffs a young."
Thus in the entry of those lofty towers
These two, with all spleen, spent their jarring powers, Antinous took it; laugh'd, and said: "O friends,
We never had such sport: This guest contends
With this vast beggar at the buffets' fight, Come, join we hands, and screw up all their spite."
All rose in laughter; and about them
bore
All the ragged rout of beggars at the door.
Then moved Antinous, the victor's hire;
To all the woosers thus: "There are now at fire
Two breasts of goat; both which let law set down
Before the man that wins the day's renown,
With all their fat and gravy. And of both The glorious victor shall prefer his tooth,
To which he makes his choice of, from us also.
And ever after banquet in our hall,
With what our boards yield; not a beggar
more Allow'd to share, but all keep out at door."
This he proposed; and this they all approved.
To which Ulysses answer'd: "O most
loved,
By no means should an old man, and one cold
In chief with sorrows, be so over-bold
To combat with his younger; but, alas, Man's own ill-working belly needs will pass
This work upon me; and enforce me, too,
To beat this fellow. But then, you must do
My age no wrong, to take my younger's
part,
And play me foul play, making your strokes' smart
Help his to conquer; for you easily may With your strengths crush me. Do then right, and lay
Your honours on it in your oaths, to yield
His part no aid, but equal leave the field."
All swore his will. But then Telemachus
His father's scoffs with comforts serious
Could not but answer, and made this reply:
"Guest! If thine own powers cheer thy victory,
Fear none man's else that will not pass it
free.
He fights with many that shall touch but
thee.
I'll see thy guest-right paid. Thou here art
come
In my protection; and to this the sum Of all these wooers (which Antinous are And King Eurymachus) conjoin their care."

Both vow'd it. When Ulysses, laying
by
His upper weed, his inner beggary Near shew'd his shame, which he with rags prevented
Pluck'd from about his thighs, and so presented
Their goodly sight, which were so white and great,
And his large shoulders were to view so set By his bare rags, his arms, his breast, and
all,
So broad, and brawny (their grace natural Being help'd by Pallas, ever standing near)
That all the woosers his admirers were Beyond all measure, mutual whispers
driven
Through all their cluster, saying: sure as heaven
Poor Iris pull'd upon him bitter blows.
Through his thin garment what a thigh he shows it!
They said. But Iris felt. His coward
mind
Was moved at root. But now he needs must find
Facts to his brags; and forth at all parts fit
The servants brought him, all his arteries smite
With fears and tremblings. Which Antinous saw,
And said: "Nay, now too late comes fear.
No law
Thou shouldst at first have given thy braggart vein,
Nor should it so have swell'd, if terrors strain
Thy spirits to this pass, for a man so old,
And worn with penityes that still lay hold On his ragged person. Howsoever, take This vow from me for firm: That if he make Thy forces stoop, and prove his own supreme,
I'll put thee in a ship, and down the stream Send thee ashore where King Chetas reigns,
(The roughest tyrant that the world contains)
And he will slit thy nostrils, crop each ear, Thy shame cut off, and give it dogs to tear."
This shook his nerves the more. But both were now
Brought to the lists; and up did either throw
His heavy fists. Ulysses, in suspense
To strike so home that he should fright from thence
His coward soul, his trunk laid prostrate there,
Or let him take more leisure to his fear,
And stoop him by degrees. The last show'd best,
To strike him slightly, out of fear the rest Would else discover him. But, peace now broke,
On his right shoulder Irus laid his stroke.
Ulysses strook him just beneath the ear,
His jaw-bone broke, and made the blood
appear;
When straight he strew'd the dust, and made his cry
Stand for himself; with whom his teeth did
lie.
Spit with his blood out; and against the
ground
His heels lay sprawling. Up the hands went round
Of all the wooers, all at point to die
With violent laughers. Then the king did ply
The beggar's feet, and dragged him forth
the hall,
Along the entry, to the gates and wall;
Where leaving him, he put into his hand
A staff, and bade him there use his command
On swine and dogs, and not presume to
be
Lord of the guests, or of the beggary, Since he of all men was the scum and curse;
And so bade please with that, or fare yet worse.
Then cast he on his scrip, all-patch'd and rent,
Hung by a rotten cord, and back he went to greet the entry's threshold with his seat.
The wooers throng'd to him, and did treat
With gentle words his conquest; laughing
still,
Pray'd Jove and all the Gods to give his
will
What most it wish'd him, and would joy him most,
Since he so happily had clear'd their coast Of that unsavoury morsel; whom they vow'd
To see with all their utmost haste bestow'd Aboard a ship, and for Epirus sent To King Echites, on whose throne was spent
The worst man's seat that breathed. And thus was graced
Divine Ulysses, who with joy embraced

Even that poor conquest. Then was set to him
The godly goat's breast promised (that did swim
In fat and gravy) by Antinous.
And from a basket, by Amphinomus,
Were two breads given him; who, besides,
renown'd
His banquet with a golden goblet crownd,
And this high salutation: "Frolic, guest,
And be those riches that you first possess,
Restored again with full as many joys,
As in your poor state I see now annoys."
"Amphinomus," said he, "you seem to
me,
Exceeding wise, as being the progeny
Of such a father as authentic Fame Hath told me was so, one of honour'd
name,
And great revenues in Dulichius,
His fair name Nisus. He is blazon'd thus;
And you to be his son, his wisdom heiring,
As well as wealth, his state in nought impairing.
To prove which all ways, let me tell you
this,
(As warning you to shun the miseries
That follow full states, if they be not held
With wisdom still at full, and so compell'd
To courses that abode not in their brows,
By too much swinge, their sudden overthrows)
Of all things breathing, or that creep on earth,
Nought is more wretched than a human
birth,
Blest men think never they can cursed be,
While any power lasts to move a knee.
But when the blest Gods make them feel that smart,
That fled their faith so, as they had no heart
They bear their sufferings, and, what well they might Have clearly shunn'd, they then meet in despite.
The mind of man flies still out of his way,
Unless God guide and prompt it every day.
I thought me once a blessed man with
men,
And fashion'd me to all so counted then,
Did all injustice like them; what for lust,
Or any pleasure, never so unjust
I could by power or violence obtain And gave them both in all their powers in the rein,
Bold of my fathers and my brothers still;
While which held good my arts seem'd never ill.
And thus is none held simply good or bad,
But as his will is either miss'd or had.
All gods God's gifts man calls, how'er
he gets them,
And so takes all, what price so'er God sets them,
Says nought how ill they come, nor will control
That raving in him, though it cost his soul.
And these parts here I see these wooers
play.
Take all that falls, and all dishonours lay
On that man's Queen, that, tell your friends, doth bear
No long time's absence, but is passing near.
Let God then guide thee home, lest he may meet
In his return thy undeparted feet;
For when he enters, and sees men so rude,
The quarrel cannot but in blood conclude;
This said, he sacrificed, then drunk, and
then Referr'd the given bowl to the guide of
men;
Who walk'd away, afflicted at his heart,
Shook head, and fear'd that these facts would convert
To ill in th' end; yet had not grace to fly, Minerva stay'd him, being ordain'd to die
Upon the lance of young Ulyssides.
So down he sat; and then did Pallas please
T' incline the Queen's affections to appear
To all the wooers, to extend their cheer
To th' utmost lightning that still ushers
death,
And made her put on all the painted sheath,
That might both set her wooers' fancies
high,
And get her greater honour in the eye
Even of her son and sovereign than before.
Who laughing yet, to shew her humour
bore
No serious appetite to that light show,
She told Eurynome, that not till now
She ever knew her entertain desir'd
To please her wooers' eyes, but oft on fire
She set their hate, in keeping from them
still;
Yet now she pleased 't appear, though from no will
To do them honour, vowing she would tell Her son that of them that should fit him
well
To make use of; which was, not to con verse
Too freely with their pride, nor to disperse His thoughts amongst them, since they used to give Good words, but through them ill intents did drive.
Eurynome replied: "With good advise
You vow his counsel, and your open guise.
Go then, advise your son, nor keep more
close
Your cheeks, still drown'd in your eyes' overflows,
But bathe your body, and with balms make clear
Your thicken'd countenance. Uncomposed cheer,
And ever mourning, will the marrow wear.
Nor have you cause to mourn; your son hath now
Put on that virtue which, in chief, your vow Wish'd, as your blessing, at his birth, might deck
His blood and person." "But forbear to speak
Of baths, or balmings, or of beauty, now."
The Queen replied, "lest, urging comforts,
you
Discomfort much; because the Gods have won
The spoil of my looks since my lord was
gone.
But these must serve. Call hither then to me
Hippodamia and Antiope,
That those our train additions may supply
Our own deserts. And yet, besides, not I,
With all my age, have learn'd the boldness
yet
T' expose myself to men, unless I get Some other graces." This said, forth* she went
To call the ladies, and much spirit spent
To make their utmost speed, for now their Queen
Would both herself shew, and make them be seen.
But now Minerva other projects laid,
And through Icarius' daughter's veins convey'd
Sweet sleep's desire; in whose soft fumes involved
She was as soon as laid, and quite dissolved Were all her lineaments. The Goddess
then
Bestow'd immortal gifts on her, that men Might wonder at her beauties; and the beams
That glister in the deified suprimes,

THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

She clear'd her mourning countenance up withal.
Even such a radiance as doth round empall Crown'd Cytherea, when her order'd places
Conduct the bevy of the dancing Graces,
She added to her own; more plump, more
high,
And fairer than the polish'd ivory, Rendering her parts and presence. This grace done,
Away the Deity flew; and up did run
Her lovely-wristed ladies, with a noise
That blew the soft chains from her sleeping
joys;
When she her fair eyes wiped, and,
gasping, said:
"O me unblest! How deep a sweet sleep spread His shades about me! Would Diana pleased
To shoot me with a death no more diseased,
As soon as might be, that no more my mean Might waste my blood in weepings never
done,
For want of that accomplish'd virtue
sphered
In my loved lord, to all the Greeks pre-ferr'd."
Then she descended with her maids, and
took Place in the portal; whence her beamy look Reach'd every wooer's heart; yet cast she
on
So thin a veil, that through it quite there shone
A grace so stolen, it pleased above the clear,
And sunk the knees of every wooer there,
Their minds so melted in love's vehement fires,
That to her bed she heighten'd all desires.
The prince then coming near, she said:
"O son,
Thy thoughts and judgments have not yet put on
That constancy in what becomes their good, Which all expect in thee. Thy younger blood
Did sparkle choicer spirits; but, arrived
At this full growth, wherein their form hath thrived
Beyond the bounds of childhood, and when
now,
Beholders should affirm, 'This man doth grow

Like the rare son of his [most] matchless
Sire,
(His goodliness, his beauty, and his fire Of soul aspired to), thou makest nothing
good Thy fate, nor fortune, nor thy height of blood,
In manage of thy actions. What a deed
Of foul desert hath thy gross sufferance freed
Beneath thine own roof! A poor stranger Used most unmanly! How will this appear To all the world, when Fame shall trumpet out,
That thus, and thus, are our guests she about
Our court unrighted? 'Tis a blaze will
show Extremely shameful to your name and
you."
"I blame you not, O mother," he replied,
"That, this clear wrong sustain'd by me,
you chide;
Yet know I both the good and bad of all,
Being past the years in which young errors fail.
But, all this known, skill is not so exact
To give, when once it knows, things fit their fact.
I well may doubt the procease of strangers
here,
Who, bent to ill, and only my nerves near,
May do it in despite. And yet the jar
Betwixt our guest and Irus was no war Wrought by the wooers; nor our guest sustain'd
Wrong in that action, but the conquest gain'd.
And would to Jove, Minerva, and the Sun,
That all your wooers might serve Contention
For such a purchase as the beggar made,
And wore such weak heads: Some should death invade,
Strew'd in the entry, some embrace the hall,
Till every man had vengeance capital,
Satisfied like Irus at the gates, his head
Every way nodding, like one forfeited
To reeling Bacchus, knees nor feet his own,
To bear him where he's better loved or
known."
Their speeches given this end, Eury-machus
Began his courtship, and express'd it thus:
"Most wise Icarus' daughter; If all
these,
That did for Colches venturous sail dispose
THE EIGHTEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

For that rich purchase, had before but seen Earth's richer prize in th' Ithacensian Queen,
They had not made that voyage, but to you Would all their virtues and their beings vow,
Should all the world know what a worth you store,
To-morrow than to-day, and next light, more Your court should banquet; since to all dames you are far prefer'red, both for the grace of show,
In stature, beauty, form in every kind
Of all parts outward, and for faultless mind," "Alas," said she, "my virtue, body, form,
The Gods have blasted with that only storm
That ravish'd Greece to Ilium, since my lord,
For that war shipp'd, bore all my goods aboard,
If he, return'd, should come and govern here
My life's whole state, the grace of all things there
His guide would heighten, as the spirit it bore;
Which dead in me lives, given him long before.
A sad course I live now; Heaven's stern decree
With many an ill hath numb'd and deaded me.
He took life with him, when he took my hand
In parting from me to the Trojan strand,
These words my witness: 'Woman! I conceive That not all th' Achives bound for Troy shall leave Their native earth their safe returned bones,
Fame saying, that Troy trains up approved sons
In deeds of arms, brave putters off of shafts,
For winging lances masters of their crafts,
Unmatched riders, swift of foox, and straight
Can arbitrate a war of deadliest weight.
Hope then can scarce fill all with life's supply,
And of all any failing, why not I?
Nor do I know, if God hath marshall'd me
Amongst the safe-return'd; or his decree
Hath left me to the thraldom order'd there.
However, all cares be thy burthens here; My sire and mother tend as much as now,
I further off, more near in cares be you.
Your son to man's state grown, wed whom you will:
And, you gone, his care let his household fill.'
Thus made my lord his will, which Heaven sees proved Almost at all parts; for the Sun removed Down to his set, ere long, will lead the night
Of those abhorred nuptials, that should fright
Each worthy woman, which her second are With any man that breathes, her first lord's care
Dead, because he to flesh and blood is dead;
Which, I fear I shall yield to, and so wed
A second husband; and my reason is,
Since Jove hath taken from me all his bliss,
Whom God gives over they themselves for-sake,
Their griefs their joys, their God their devil, make.
And 'tis a great grief, nor was seen till now
In any fashion of such men as woo
A good and wealthy woman, and contend
Who shall obtain her, that those men should spend Her beoves and best sheep, as their chiefest ends; But rather that herself and all her friends
They should with banquetts and rich gifts entreat.
Their life is death that live with others' meat;" Divine Ulysses much rejoiced to hear
His Queen thus fish for gifts, and keep in cheer
Their hearts with hope that she would wed again,
Her mind yet still her first intent retain.
Antinous saw the wooers won to give,
And said: "Wise Queen, by all your means receive Whatever bounty any wooer shall use,
Gifts freely given 'tis folly to refuse.
For know, that we resolve not to be gone
To keep our own roofs, till of all some one, Whom best you like, your long-wood'd love shall win."
This pleased the rest, and every one sent in His present by the herald. First had place Antinous' gift: a robe of special grace.

Exceeding full and fair, and twenty hues Changed lustre to it; to which choice of shews,
Twelve massy plated buttons, all of gold,
Enrich’d the substance, made to fairly hold
The robe together, all laced down before,
Where keeps and catches both sides of it wore.
Eurymachus a golden tablet gave,
In which did Art her choicest works engrave;
And round about an amber verge did run,
That cast a radiance from it like the Sun.
Eurydamas two servants had that bore Two goodly earrings, whose rich hollows were Three pearls in either, like so many eyes, Reflecting glances radiant as the skies.
The king Pisander, great Polyctor’s heir,
A casket gave, exceeding rich and fair.
The other other wealthy gifts commanded
To her fair hand; which took, and straight ascended
This Goddess of her sex her upper state.
Her ladies all her gifts elaborate Up bearing after. All to dancing then
The wooers went, and song’s delightful strain;
In which they frolick’d, till the evening came,
And then raised sable Hesperus his flame.
When, for their lights within, they set up there Three lamps, whose wicks were wood exceeding sere,
And passing porous; which they caused to burn,
Their matter ever minister’d by turn
Of several handmaids, Whom Ulysses seeing Too conversant with wooers, ill agreeing
With guise of maids, advised in this fair sort; “Maids of your long-lack’d King, keep you the port Your Queen’s chaste presence bears? Go up to her, Employ your looms, or rocks, and keep ye there:
I’ll serve to feed these lamps, should these lords’ dances
Last till Aurora cheer’d us with their glances.
They cannot weary me, for I am one Born to endure when all men else have done.”

They wantonly brake out in laughers all,
Look’d on each other; and to terms did fall
Cheek-proud Melantho, who was Dollius’ seed, Kept by the Queen, that gave her dainty bread Fit for her daughter; and yet won not so
Her heart to her share in any woe
She suffer’d for her lord, but she was great
With great Eurymachus, and her love’s heat
In his bed quench’d. And this choleric thing Bestow’d this railing language on the King:
“Base stranger, you are taken in your brain,
You talk so wildly. Never you again
Can get where you were born, and seek your bed
In some smith’s hovel, or the market-stead;
But here you must take confidence to prate
Before all these; for fear can get no state
In your wine-bary stomach. Or’tis like To prove your native garb, your tongue will strike
On this side of your mouth still, being at best.
Is the man idle-brain’d for want of rest?
Or proud because he beat the roguish beggar?
Take heed, Sir, lest some better man beleaguer
Your ears with his fists, and set headlong hence
Your bold abode here with your blood’s expense.”
He, looking sternly on her, answer’d her:
“Dog! What broad language givest thou?
I’ll prefer
Your usage to the prince, that he may fall Foul on your fair limbs till he tell them all.”
This fray’d the wenches, and all straight got gone
In fear about their business, every one Confessing he said well. But he stood now Close by the cressets, and did looks beswore
On all men there; his brain employ’d about Some sharper business than to dance it out,
Which had not long to go. Nor therefore would Minerva let the wooers’ spleens grow cold
With too good usage of him, that his heart
Might fret enough, and make his choler smart.
Eurymachus provoked him first, and made His fellow laugh, with a conceit he had Fetch'd far from what was spoken long
before,
That his poor form perhaps some Deity
bore.
"It well may chance," said he, "some God
dothe bear
This man's resemblance, for, thus standing near
The glistering torches, his slick'd head doth throw
Beams round about it as those cressets do,
For not a hair he hath to give it shade.
Say, will thy heart serve t' undertake a trade
For fitting wages? Should I take thee
hence
To walk my grounds, and look to every fence,
Or plant high trees, thy hire should raise thy forces
Food store, and clothes. But these same idle courses
Thou art so prompt in that thou wilt not work,
But forage up and down, and beg, and lurk
In every house whose roofs hold any will To feed such fellows. That thy gut may fill,
Gives end to all thy being." He replied:
"I wish, at any work we two were tried,
In height of spring-time, when heaven's lights are long;
I a good crook'd scythe that were sharp and
strong,
You such another, where the grass grew
deep,
Up by day-break, and both our labours
keep
Up till slow darkness eased the labouring
light,
Fasting all day, and not a crumb till night;
We then should prove our either workmanship.
Or if, again, beees, that the goad or whip
Were apt t' obey before a tearing plow,
Big lusty beasts, alike in bulk and brow,
Alike in labour, and alike in strength,
Our task four acres, to be till'd in length Of one sole day; again then you should try
If the dull glebe before the plow should fly, Or I a long stick could bear clean and even,
Or lastly, if the guide of earth and heaven Should stir stern war up, either here or
there,
And that at this day I had double spear,
And shield, and steel casque fitting for my brows:
At this work likewise, 'midst the foremost
blows,
Your eyes should note me, and get little cause
To twit me with my belly's sole applause.
But you affect t' affect with injury,
Your mind ungentle, seem in valour high, Because 'gainst few, and those not of the best,
Your conversation hath been still profess.
But if Ulysses, landed on his earth.
And enter'd on the true right of his birth, Should come and front ye, straight his ample gates
Your feet would hold too narrow for your fates."
He frowned, raged, call'd him wretch, and vow'd
To be his death, since he durst prove so proud
Amongst so many, to tell him so home
What he affected: ask'd, if overcome
With wine be were, or, as his minion said, Talk'd still so idly, and were paissed
In his mind's instruments, or was proud because
He get from Iris off with such applaud?
With all which, snatching up a stool, he threw:
When old Ulysses to the knees withdrew
Of the Dulichian lord, Amphimomus,
As if he fear'd him. His dart missing thus His aged object, and his page's hand
(A boy that waited on his cup's command, Now holding of an ewer to him) he smit.
Down fell the sounding ewer, and after it
The guiltless page lay sprawling in the dust,
And crying out. When all the wooers thrust
A tumult up amongst them, wishing all
The rogue had perish'd in some hospital,
Before his life there stirr'd such uproars up,
And with rude speeches spice their pleasures' cup.
And all this for a beggar, to fulfill
A filthy proverb: Good still yields to ill.
The prince cried out on them, to let the bad Obscure the good so; told them they were mad,
Abused their banquet, and affirm'd some
God
Tried masteries with them; bade them take their load
Of food and wine, sit up, or fall to bed
At their free pleasures; and since he gave
head
To all their freedoms, why should they mistake
Their own rich humours for a beggar's sake?
All bit their lips to be so taken down,
And taught the course that should have been their own,
Admired the prince, and said he bravely spoke.
But Nisus' son then strook the equal stroke,
And said: "O friends, let no man here disdain
To put up equal speeches; nor maintain
With serious words an humour; nor with stroke
A stranger in another's house provoke;
Nor touch the meanest servant; but confine
All these dissensions in a bowl of wine;
Which fill us, cup-bearer, that, has done
Our nightly sacrifice, we may atone
Our powers with sleep, resigning first guest
Up to the prince, that holds all interest
In his dispose here; the house being in just descent, and all the faculties."
This all approved; when noble Mull
Herald in chief to lord Amphionomus,
The wine distributed with reverend grace
To every wooer; when the Gods got place With service fit, they served themselves and took Their parting cups; till (when they all shook The angry humour off) they bent to re

THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses and his son eschew
Offending of the Woers’ view
With any armour. His birth’s seat, Ulysses tells his Queen, is Cretan.
Euryclea the truth yet found,
Discover’d by a scar’s heal’d wound,
Which in Parnassus’ tops a bear,
Strook by him in his chase, did gore.

ANOTHER.

Tao. The King still bid
By what he said;
By what he did
Informs his maid.

Yet did divine Ulysses keep his roof,
And with Minerva plotted still the proof
Of all the wooers’ deaths; when thus his son He taught with these fore-counsels: “We must run
A close course with these arms, and lay
And to the wooers make so fair a sky
As it would never thunder. Let me then,
That you may well retain, repeat again
What in Eumaeus’ cottage I advised:
If when they see your leisure exercised In fetching down your arms, and ask what use
Your mind will give them, say, ’tis their abuse
With smoke and rust that makes you take them down,
This not being like the armory well-
known
To be the leavings of Laertes’ son
Consorting the design for Ilium;
Your eyes may see how much they are infected,
As all fires’ vapours ever since reflected On those sole arms. Besides, a graver
thought
Jove graves within you, lest, their spirits
wrought
Above their pitch with wine, they might contend
At some high banquet, and to wounds transcend,

Their feast inverting; which, perhaps, may be
Their nuptial feast with wise Penelope.
The ready weapon, when the blood is up,
Doubles the uproar heighten’d by the cup.
Wrath’s means for aid, curb all the ways ye can,
As lodestones draw the steel, so steel draws
man.

Retain these words; nor what is good think, thus Received at second hand, superfluous.”

The son, obeying, bid Euryclea call,
And bade her shut in th’ utter porches all The other women, till himself brought down
His father’s arms, which all were overgrown
By his neglect with rust, his father gone,
And he too childish to spend thoughts
upon Those manly implements; but he would
now
Reform these young neglects, and th’ arms bestow Past reach of smoke. The loving nurse replied:

“I wish, O son, your powers would once provide
For wisdom’s habit, see your household
were
In thrifty manage, and tend all things
there.
But if these arms must down, and every maid
Be shut in utter rooms, who else should aid
Your work with light?” He answer’d:

“This my guest,
There shall no one in my house taste my feast,
Or join in my nave,* that shall idly live,
However far hence he his home derive.”

* Χαλίσσων ἄγνωστος, they will needs turn this, quadrans (for modum) guestet. Though the words bear no such signification, but give a proverb then in use repetition, which was: he shall not join or make a spoke in the name of my chariot, or chariot-wheel. Χαλίσσων, or Χαλίσσως, signifying modiolus rotae, and łołonecto.
THE NINETEENTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

From out the lamps, and other fuel added,
That still with cheerful flame the sad house gladdened.
Melantho, seeing still Ulysses there, Thus she held out her spleen: "Still, stranger, here?
Thus late in night? To see what ladies
do?
Avant, you wretch, hence, go without doors, go;
And quickly, too, lest ye be singed away With burning fire-brands." He, thus seeing their fray
Continued by her with such spleen, re-piled:
"Minion! What makes your angry blood thus chide
My presence still? Is it because you see
I shine not in your wanton bravery,
But wear these rags? It suits the needy fate
That makes me beg thus of the common state.
Such poor souls, and such beggars, yet are
men;
And even my mean means, means had to maintain A wealthy house, and kept a manly press,
Was counted blessed, and the poor access
Of any beggar did not scorn, but feed
With open hand, and any man of need
Relieved as fitted; kept my servants, too,
Not few, but did with those additions go
That call choice men The Honest, who are styled The rich, the great. But what such great ones build
Jove oft pulls down, as thus he ruin'd me;
His will was such, which is his equity.
And therefore, woman, bear your fitting hand
On your behaviour, lest your spirit thus
man'd,
And cherish'd with your beauties, when they wane,
Comes down, your pride now being then your bane;
And in the mean space shun the present danger,
Lest your bold fashion breed your sovereign's anger.
Or lest Ulysses come, of whom even yet
Hope finds some life in fate. Or, be his seat
Amongst the merely ruin'd, yet his son,
Whose life's heat Phoebus saves, is such a one
As can discover who doth well deserve
Of any woman here, his years now serve."

He said, and his words stood. The doors she shut
Of that so well-fil'd house; and the other put Their thoughts in act; best shields, helms, sharpen'd lances,
Brought down; and Pallas before both advances
A golden cresset, that did cast a light
As if the Day sat in the throne of Night.
When, half amazed, the prince said:
"O my father,
Mine eyes my soul's powers all in wonder gather,
For though the walls, and goodly wind-beams here,
All these pillars, that their heads so rear,
And all of fire, they seem yet all of fire.
Some God is surely with us." His wise sire Bade peace, and keep the counsels of the Gods, Nor ask a word: "These Powers, that use abodes
Above the stars, have power from thence to shine
Through night and all shades to earth's immense mine.
Go thou for sleep, and leave me here to wake
The women, and the Queen; whose heart doth ache
To make inquiry for myself of me."
He went to sleep where lights did endlessly
Burn in his night-rooms; where he feasted rest, Till day's fair weed did all the world in-est.
Thus was divine Ulysses left alone
With Pallas, plotting foul confusion
To all the wooers. Forth then came the Queen;
Phoebe, with golden Cytherea seen,
Her port presented. Whom they set a chair
Aside the fire, the fashion circular,
The substance silver and rich elephant;
Whose fabric did the cunning finger vaunt
Of great Iamalius, who besides had done
A footstool for her that did suit her throne,
On which they cast an ample skin, to be The cushion for her other royalty.
And there she sat; about whom came her maids,
Who brought upon a table store of breads,
And bowls that with the wooers' wine were crown'd.
The embers then they cast upon the ground.
The Queen gave ear, and thus suppress'd the flame:
"Thou quite without a brow, past female shame, I hear thy monstrous boldness, which thy head Shall pay me pains for. Thou hast heard it said,
And from myself too, and at every part Thy knowledge serves thee, that, to ease my heart,
So punish'd in thy witness, my desire Dwelt on this stranger, that I might inquire My lost friend's being. But 'tis ever tried, Both man and God are still forgot with pride.
Eurynome! bring here this guest a seat,
And cushion on it, that we two may treat
Of the affair in question. Set it near,
That I may softly speak, yet he well hear."
She did this little freely; and he sat
Close by the Queen, who ask'd him, Whence, and what he was himself? And what th' inhabited place Where lived his parents? whence he fetch'd his race?
"O woman," he replied, "with whom no man,
That moves in earth's unbounded circle, can Maintain contention for true honour given;
Whose fame hath reach'd the* fairly-flowing heaven,
Who, like a never-ill-deserving king,
That is well spoke of, first, for worshipping,
And striving to resemble God in empire;
Whose equal hand impartially doth temper
Greatness and Goodness; to whom therefore bears
The black earth store of all grain, trees confers
Cracking with burthen, long-lived herds creates,
All which the sea with her sorts emulates;
And all this feeds beneath his powerful hand
Men, valiant, many, making strong his land;
With happy lives led; nothing else the cause
Of all these blessings, but well-order'd laws;
Like such a king are you, in love, in fame,
And all the bliss that defines a dame.

And therefore do not mix this with a moan
So wretched as is now in question.
Ask not my race nor country, lest you fill
My heart yet fuller with repeated ill;
For I must follow it with many tears,
Though 'tis not seemly to sit wounding ears
In public roofs with our particular life:
'Time's worst expense is still-repeated grief.
I should be irksome to your ladies here,
And you yourself would say you urged your ear
To what offends it, my still-broken eye Supposing wounded with your too much wine."
"Stranger," said she, "you fear your own excess With giving me too great a nobleness,
The Gods my person, beauty, virtue too,
Long since subverted, when the Ilion woe
The Greek design attempted; in which went My praise and honour. In his government Had I deserved your utmost grace, but now Sinister Deity makes dishonour woo,
In show of grace, my ruin. All the peers,
Sylvan Zacynthus and Dulichius spheres,
Samos and Ithaca, strange strifes have shown
To win me, spending on me all mine own;
Will wed me, in my spite; and these are those That take from me all virtue to dispose
Or guest or suppliant, or take any course
Amongst my heralds, that should all disburse,
To order anything. Though I need none
To give me grief at home, abroad erra one
That my veins shrink for, whom these, holding gone,
Their nuptials hasten, and find me as slow.
Good spirits prompted me to make a show
Of undertaking a most curious task,
That an unmeasured space of time would ask;
Which they enduring long would often say,
When ends thy work? I soon had my delay,
And pray'd their stay; for though my lord were dead,
His father's life yet matter ministered
That must employ me; which, to tell them true,
Was that great work I named. For now near drew Laertes' death, and on my hand did lie
His funeral robe; whose end, being now so nigh,
I must not leave, and lose so much begun;
The rather lest the Greek dames might be won
To tax mine honour, if a man so great Should greet his grave without his winding sheet.
Pride made them credulous, and I went on;
When whatsoever all the day had done
I made the night help to undo again,
Though oil and watch it cost, and equal pain.
Three years my wit secured me undiscern'd;
Yet, when the fourth came, by my maids discern'd,
False careless wenches, how they were deluded;
When, by my light discern'd, they all intruded,
Used threatening words, and made me give it end;
And then could I to no more length extend My linger'd nuptials; not a counsel more
Was to be stood upon; my parents bore Continual hand on me to make me wed;
My son grew angry that so ruined
His goods were by them. He is now a man Wise in a great degree, and one that can Himself give order to his household fare;
And Jove give equal glory to his care.
But thus you must not pass me; I must know,
It may be for more end, from whence doth grow
Your race and you; for I suppose you none Sprung of old oak, or justly out of stone."
He answer'd: "O Ulysses' reverend wife!
Yet hold you purpose to inquire my life?
I'll tell you, though it much afflict me more Than all the sorrows I have felt before.
As worthy it may, since so long time
As I have wander'd from my native clime, Through humane cities, and in sufferance still,
To rip all wounds up; though of all their ill
I touch but part, must actuate all their pain.
But, ask you still, I'll tell, though still sustain.
In middle of the sable sea there lies An isle call'd Crete, a ravisher of eyes, Fruitful, and mann'd with many an infinite store;
Where ninety cities crown the famous shore,
Mix'd with all-language'd men. There Greeks survive,
There the great-minded Eteocretans live;
There the Dorensians never out of war,
The Cydons there, and there the singular Pelasgian people. There doth Glaucus stand,
That mighty city, where had most command
Great Aegeus' disciple (Minos) who rise years Confer'd with Jove; both great familiar In mutual counsels. And this Minos' sea,
The mighty-minded king Deucalion,
Was sire to me and royal Idomen,
Who with Atrides went to Ilion then,
My elder brother and the better man,
My name Aethon. At that time began
My knowledge of Ulysses, whom my house Received with guest-rites. He was thither come By force of weather, from the Malean coast
But new got off, where he the navy lost,
Then under sail for Troy, and wind-bound lay Long in Amnissus, hardly got away
From horrid storms, that made him anchor there,
In havens that sacred to Lucina were,
Dreadful and dangerous, in whose bosom crept Lucina's cavern. But in my roof slept Ulysses, shored in Crete; who first inquired
For royal Idomen, and much desired To taste his guest-rites, since to him had been A welcome guest my brother Idomen.
The tenth or 'leventh light on Ulysses shined
In stay at Crete, attending then the wind
For threaten'd Ilion. All which time my house
With love and entertainments curious Embraced his person, though a number more
My hospitable roofs received before.
His men I likewise call'd, and from the store
Allow'd them meal and heat-exciting wine
And oxen for their slaughter, to confine
In my free hand the utmost of their need.
Twelve days the Greeks stay'd, ere they got them freed,
A gale so bitter blew out of the north,
That none could stand on earth, being tumbled forth
By some stern God. But on the thirteenth day
The tempest ceased, and then went Greeks their way."
Thus many tales Ulysses told his wife
At most but painting, yet most like the life;
Of which her heart such sense took through her ears,
It made her weep as she would turn to tears;
And as from off the mountains melts the snow,
Which Zephyr’s breath conceal’d, but was made flow
By hollow Eurus, which so fast pours down,
That with their torrent floods have overflow’d;
So down her fair cheeks her kind tears did glide,
Her miss’d lord mourning set so near her side.
Ulysses much was moved to see her mourn,
Whose eyes yet stood as dry as iron or horn
In his untroubled lids, which in his craft
Of brilling passion he from issue saft.
When she had given her moan so many tears,
That now ‘twas satiate, her yet loving fears Ask’d thus much further: "You have thus far tried My love’s credulity, but if gratified
With so long stay he was with you, you can Describe what weed he wore, what kind of man
Both he himself was, and what followers
Observe him there.” "Alas," said he, "the years Have grown so many since (this making now Their twentieth revolution) that my show
Of these slight notes will set my memory sore;
But, to my now remembrance, this he wore:
A double purple robe, drawn close before
With golden buttons, pleated thick, and bore
A facing where a hundred colours shined:
About the skirts a hound, a freckled hind
In full course hunted; on the foreskirts, yet,
He panel’d and pull’d her down, when with her feet,
And all her force, she struggled hard for flight.
Which had such life in gold, that to the sight
It seem’d the bind itself for every hue,
The hound and all so answering the view,
That all admired all. I observed beside His inner weed, so rarely beautified
That dumb amaze it bred, and was as thin
As any dry and tender onion-skin;
As soft ‘twas, too, and glister’d like the sun.
The women were to loving wonder won
By him and by his weeds. But, by the way,
You must excuse me, that I cannot say
He brought this suit from home, or had it there Sent for some present; or, perhaps, elsewhere
Received it for his guest-gift; for your lord
Had friends not few, the fleet did not afford Many that had not fewer. I bestow’d
A well-edged sword on him, a robe that flow’d
In folds and fulness, and did reach his feet,
Of richest purple; brought him to his fleet
With all my honour; and besides, to add To all this sifted circumstance, he had A herald there, in height a little more
Put from the earth, that thicker shoulders wore,
A swarth complexion and a curied head,
His name Eurybates; and much in stead
He stood your king, employ’d in most command, Since most of all his mind could understand.”
When all these signs she knew for chiefly true, Desire of man upon her beauties grew,
And yet (even that desire sufficed) she said:
"Till this, my guest, a wretched state array’d
Your ill-used person, but from this hour forth
You shall be honour’d, and find all the worth
That fits a friend. Those weeds these hands bestow’d From out my wardrobe; those gold buttons sew’d Before for closure and for ornament.
But never more must his return present
The person that gave those adornments state;
And therefore, under an abhorred fate,
Was he induced to feed the common fame,
To visit vile Troy: ay, too vile to taste."
"No more yet mourn," said he, "nor thus see pined.
Your lovely person. Weeping wastes the mind.
And yet I blame you, nay; for any dame
That wed's one young, and brings to him his name, Whatever man he is, will mourn his loss.
Much more respectful then must shew your woes
That weep thus for Ulysses, who, Fame says,
Was equal with the Gods in all his ways.
But where no cause is there must be no moan.
And therefore hear me, my relation Shall lay the clear truth naked to your view:
I heard amongst the Thesprots for most true,
That lord Ulysses lived, and stood just now
On his return for home; that wealth did flow
In his possession, which he made not known,
But begg'd amongst the people, since alone
He quite was left, for all his men were lost
In getting off from the Trinacrian coast;
Jove and the Sun was wroth with them for rape
Made of his oxen, and no man let escape
The rugged deeps of Neptune; only he,
The ship's keel only keeping, was by sea
Cast on the fair Phaeacian continent,
Where men survive that are the Gods' descent.
And like a God received him, gave him heaps Of wealthy gifts, and would conduct his steps Themselves safe home; which he might long ago
His pleasure make, but profit would not so.
He gather'd going, and had mighty store
Of gold in safeguard; so beyond the shore
That common sails kept, his high flood of wit Bore glorious top, and all the world for it Hath far exceeded. All this Phaecon told,
That doth the sceptre of Thesprotia hold,
Who swore to me, in household sacrifice,
The ship was launch'd, and men to man the prise,
That soon should set him on his country earth,
Shew'd me the goods, now to serve the birth
That in the tenth age of his seed should spring, Yet in his court contain'd. But then the king,
Your husband, for Dodona was in way,
That from th' oraculous Oak he might display
Jove's will; what course for home would best prevail;
To come in pomp, or bear a secret sail.
But me the king dispatch'd in course before,
A ship then bound for the Dulichian shore.
So thus you see his safety whom you me;
Who now is passing near, and his return
No more will punish with delays, but see His friends and country. All which truth to thee I'll seal with sacred oath. Be witness, Jove, Thou first and best of all the throne'd above;
And thou house of the great Laertes' heir,
To whose high roofs I tender my repair,
That what I tell the Queen event shall crown;
This year Ulysses shall possess his own:
Nay ere the next month ends, shall here arrive;
Nay, ere it enters, here abide alive:"
""O may this prove," said she; "gifts, friendship, then Should make your name the most renown'd of men.
But 'tis of me received, and must so sort,
That nor my lord shall ever see his court,
Nor you gain your deduction thence, for now;
The alter'd house doth not such man allow As was Ulysses, if he ever were,
To entertain a reverend passenger,
And give him fair dismissal. But, maids, see Ve bathe his feet, and then with tapestry,
Best sheets and blankets, make his bed, and lay Soft waistcoats by him, that, lodged warm, he may Even till the golden-seated morning's ray Enjoy good rest; and then, with her first light, Bathe, and give alms, that cherish'd appetite
He may apply within our hall, and sit Safe by Telemachus. Or, if th' unfit
And harmful mind of any be so base
To grieve his age again, let none give grace
Of doing any deed he shall command,
Wow wroth soever, to his barbarous hand.
For how shall you, guest, know me for a dame
That pass so far, nay, turn and wind the fame
Of other dames for wisdom, and the frame
Of household usage, if your poor thin weeds
I let draw on you want, and worser deeds,
That may, perhaps, cause here your latest day?

The life of man is short and flies away.
And if the ruler’s self of households be Ungentle, studying inhumanit,
The rest prove worse, but he bears all the blame;
All men will, living, vow against his name
Mischiefs and miseries, and, dead, supply
With bitter epitaphs his memory.
But if himself be noble (noble things Doing and knowing) all his underlings
Will imitate his noblesse, and all guests
Give it, in many, many interests.”

“...But worthiest Queen,” said he, “where you command, Baths and rich beds for me, I scorn to stand
On such state now; nor ever thought it yet
Since first I left the snowy hills of Crete.
When once I fell a-shipboard those thoughts fled;
I love to take now, as long since, my bed.
Though I began the use with sleepless nights,
I many a darkness with right homely rites
Have spent ere this hour, and desired the morn
Would come, and make sleep to the world a scorn.

Nor run these dainty baths in my rude head;
Nor any handmaid, to your service bred,
Shall touch my ill-kept feet, unless there live
Some poor old drudge here, that hath Learn’d to give
Old men good usage, and no work will fly,
As having suffer’d ill as much as I.
But if there live one such in your command,
I will not shame to give my foot her hand.”
She gave this answer: “O my loved guest,
There never enter’d these kind roofs for rest,
Stranger or friend that so much wisdom laid
In gage for guest-rites, as your lips have paid.

There lives an old maid in my charge that knows
The good you speak of by her many woes;
That nourish’d and brought up, with curious care,
Th’ unhappy man, your old familiar,
Even since his mother let him view the light,
And oft hath felt in her weak arms his weight;
And she (though now much weaker) shall apply
Her maiden service to your modesty.
Euryclea, rise, and wash the feet of one
That is of one age with your sovereign gone:
Such hands, such feet hath, though of altered grace;

Much grief in men will bring on change of pace.”
She, from her aged slumber waked, did clear
Her heavy eyes, and instantly, to hear
Her sovereign’s name, had work enough to dry
Her checks from tears, and to his memory
These moans did offer: “O my son,” said she,
“I never can take grief enough for thee,
Whom Goodness hurts, and whom even Jove’s high spleen, Since thou art Jove-like, hates the most of men.

For none hath offer’d him so many thighs,
Nor such whole hecatombs of sacrifice;
Fat and selected, as thy zeal hath done;
For all, but praying that thy noble son,
Thy happy age might see at state of man.
And yet hath Jove with mists Cimmerian
Put out the light of his returning day.
And as yourself, O father, in your way
Took these fair roofs for hospitable rites,
Yet find, for them, our dogged women’s spites;
So he, in like course, being driven to proof,
Long time ere this, what such a royal roof
Would yield his miseries, found such usage there.
And you, now flying the soul language here,
And many a filthy fact of our fair dames,
Fly me like them, and put on causeless shames
To let me cleanse your feet. For not the cause
The Queen’s command yields is the power that draws My will to wash your feet, but what I do Proceeds from her charge and your reverence too;
THE NINETEENTH BOOK
OF HOMER’S ODYSSEYS.

Since I in soul am stricken with a ruth
Of your distresses, and past show* of truth;
Your strangeness claiming little interest
In my affections. And yet many a guest Of poor condition hath been harbour’d
here,
But never any did so right appear
Like king Ulysses as yourself, for state
Both of your stature, voice, and very gait.”
“’So all have said,” said he, “that ever yet
Had the proportions of our figures met
In their observances; so right your eye Proves in your soul your judging faculty.”
Thus took she up a caldron brightly scour’d,
To cleanse his feet in; and into it pour’d Store of cold wave, which on the fire she set;
And therein bathed, being temperately heat,
Her sovereign’s feet. Who turn’d him from the light,
Since suddenly he doubted her conceit,
So rightly touching at his state before,
A scar now searing on his foot, that bore
An old note to discern him, might descry
The absolute truth; which, witness’d by her eye,
Was straight approved. He first received
This sore
As in Parnassus’ tops a white-tooth’d boar
He stood in chase withal, who strook him there,
At such time as he lived a sojourner
With his grandsire, Autolycus; who th’ art Of theft and swearing (not out of the heart, But by equivocation) first adorn’d
Your witty man withal, and was suborn’d
By Jove’s descent, ingenious Mercury,
Who did bestow it, since so many a thigh
Of lambs and kids he had on him bestow’d
In sacred flames; who therefore when he vow’d
Was ever with him. And this man imposed Ulysses’ name, the light being first disclosed
To his first sight then, when his grandsire came To see the then preferrer of his fame,
His loved daughter. The first supper done,
Euryclea put in his lap her son,
And pray’d him to bethink and give his name,
Since that desire did all desires inflame.

“Daughter and son-in-law,” said he, “let then
The name that I shall give him stand with men.
Since I arrived here at the hour of pain,
In which mine own kind entrails did sustain Moan for my daughter’s yet unended throes;
And when so many men’s and women’s woes,
In joint compassion met, of humane birth,
Brought forth t’attend the many-feeding earth;
Let Odysseus* be his name, as one Exposed to just constraint of all men’s moan.
When here at home he is arrived at state
Of man’s first youth he shall initiate His practised feet in travel made abroad,
And to Parnassus, where mine own abode
And chief means lie, address his way, where it
Will give him from my open’d treasury
What shall return him well, and fit the fame
Of one that had the honour of his name.”
For these fair gifts he went, and found all grace
Of hands and words in him and all his race.
Amphithea, his mother’s mother, too,
Applied her to his love, withal, to do
In grandame’s welcomes, both his fair eyes kist,
And brows; and then commanded to assist
Were all her sons by their respected sire,
In furnishing a feast, whose ears did fire
Their minds with his command; who home straight led A five-years-old male ox, fell’d, slew, and flend, Gather’d about him, cut him up with net,
Spitted, and roasted, and his every part Divided orderly. So all the day
They spent in feast; no one man went his way Without his fit fill. When the sun was set,
And darkness rose, they slept, till day’s fire het
Th’ enlighten’d earth; and then on hunting went Both hounds and all Autolycus’ descent.

* Autolycus gives his grandchild. Ulysses his name: from whence the Odyssey is derived. ‘Odiouos, derived of odous, ex buon, faction; signifying dolores propria corporis, nam iva ex dolor oritur.
Enquired all passages, all which he gave
In good relation, nor of all would save
His wound from utterance; by whose scar
He came
To be discover’d by this aged dame.
Which when she cleansing felt, and noted
Well,
Down from her lap into the caldron fell
His weighty foot, that made the brass resound;
Turn’d all aside, and on th’ embrowed
ground
Splitt all the water. Joy and grief together Her breast invaded; and of weeping weather.
Her eyes stood full; her small voice stuck within
Her part expressive; till at length his chin
She took and spake to him: “O son,” said
she, “I’thou art Ulysses, nor canst other be;
Nor could I know thee yet, till all my king
I had gone over with the warmed spring.”
Then look’d she for the Queen to tell her all;
And yet knew nothing sure, though sought could fall
In compass of all thoughts to make her doubt.
Minerva that distraction strook throughout Her mind’s rapt forces that she might not tell.
Ulysses, noting yet her aptness well,
With one hand took her chin, and made all shew.
Of favour to her, with the other drew
Her offer’d parting closer, ask’d her why She, whose kind breast had nursed so tenderly
His infant life, would now his age destroy, Though twenty years had held him from the joy
Of his loved country? But, since only she,
God putting her in mind, now knew ‘twas
he,
He charg’d her silence, and to let no ear
In all the court more know his being there, Lest, if God gave into his wreakful hand
Th’ insulting wooers’ lives, he did not stand
On any partial respect with her,
Because his nurse; and to the rest prefer Her safety therefore: but, when they should feel
His punishing finger, give her equal steel.
“What words,” said she, “fly your re-tentive powers?
You know you lock your counsels in your towers;
In my firm bosom, and that I am far
From those loose frailties, like an iron
Or bolt of solid’st stone, I will contain;
And tell you this besides: that if you gain,
By God’s good aid, the wooers’ lives in What dames are here their shameless paramours,
And have done most dishonour to your worth,
My information well shall paint you forth."
"It shall not need," said he, "myself wills soon, While thou thus mask here, set on every one
My sure observance of the worst and best.
Be thou then silent, and leave God the rest."
This said, the old dame for more water
went,
The rest was all upon the pavement spent By known Ulysses’ foot. More brought, and he Supplied besides with sweetest ointments, she His seat drew near the fire, to keep him warm
And with his piecéd rags hiding close his harm.
The Queen came near, and said: "Yet, guest, afford
Your further patience, till but in a word
I’ll tell my woes to you; for well I know
That Rest’s sweet hour her soft foot orders now,
When all poor men, how much soever grieved,
Would gladly get their woe-watch’d powers relieved.
But God hath given my grief a heart so great
It will not down with rest, and so I set
My judgment up to make it my delight.
All day I mourn, yet nothing let the right
I owe my charge both in my work and maids;
And when the night brings rest to others’ sides
I toss my bed; Distress, with twenty points, Slaughtering the powers that to my turning joints Convey the vital heat. And as all night
Pandareus’ daughter, poor Edone, sings,
Clad in the verdure of the yearly springs,
When she for Ithys, her beloved son,
By Zethus’ issue in his madness done
To cruel death, pours out her hourly moan,
And draws the cars to her of every one;
So flows my moan that cuts in two my mind,
And here and there gives my discourse the wind, Uncertain whether I shall with my son
Abide still here, the safe possession
And guard of all goods, reverence to the bed
Of my loved lord, and to my far-off spread Fame with the people, putting still in use,
Or follow any best Greek I can chuse
To his fit house, with treasure infinite, Won to his nuptials. While the infant plight
And want of judgment kept my son in guide,
He was not willing with my being a bride.
Nor with my parting from his court; but now,
Arrived at man’s state, he would have me vow
My love to some one of my wooers here,
And leave his court; offended that their cheer
Should so consume his free possessions.
To settle then a choice in these my maids,
Hear and expound a dream that did engrave
My sleeping fancy: Twenty geese I have,
All which, methought, mine eye saw tasting wheat
In water steep’d, and joy’d to see them eat;
When straight a crook-beak’d eagle from a hill
Stoop’d, and truss’d all their necks, and all did kill;
When, all left scatter’d on the pavement there,
She took her wing up to the Gods’ fair sphere.
I, even amid my dream, did weep and mourn
To see the eagle, with so shrewd a turn,
Stoop my sad turrets; when, methought, there came About my mournings many a Grecian dame,
To cheer my sorrows; in whose most extreme
The hawk came back, and on the prominent beam
That cross’d my chamber fell, and used to me
A human voice, that sounded horribly,
And said: ‘Be confident, Icarius’ seed,
This is no dream, but what shall chance indeed.
The geese the wooers are, the eagle, I, Thy husband's being, and am come to give
The wooers death that on my treasure
live.'
With this sleep left me, and my waking
way
I took, to try if any violent prey
Were made of those my fowls, which well enough
I, as before, found feeding at their trough Their yoted wheat." "O woman," he replied,
"Thy dream can no interpretation bide
But what the eagle made, who was your lord,
And said himself would sure effect afford
To what he told you; that confusion
To all the wooers should appear, and none Escape the fate and death he had decreed."
She answer'd him: "O guest, these dreams exceed
The art of man t' interpret; and appear Without all choice of form; nor ever were Perform'd to all at all parts. But there are To these light dreams, that like thin vapours fare,
Two two-leaved gates; the one of ivory,
The other horn. Those dreams, that fantasy
Takes from the polish'd ivory port, delude
The dreamer ever, and no truth include;
Those, that the glittering horn-gate lets
abroad,
Do evermore some certain truth abode.
But this my dream I hold of no such sort
To fly from thence; yet, whichever port
It had access from, it did highly please My son and me. And this my thoughts
profess:
That day that lights me from Ulysses' court
Shall both my infancy and curse consort.
I therefore purpose to propose them now,
In strong contention, Ulysses' bow;
Which he that easel draws, and from his draft Shoots through twelve axes (as he did his shaft,
All set up in a row, and from them all His stand-far-off kept firm) my fortunes shall Dispose, and take me to his house from
hence,
Where I was wed a maid, in confluence
Of feast and riches; such a court here then As I shall ever in my dreams retain."
"Do not," said he, "defer the gameful prize,
But set to task their importunities With something else than nuptials; for your lord
Will to his court and kingdom be restored Before they thread those steels, or draw his bow."
"O guest," replied Penelope, "would you Thus sit and please me with your speech, mine ears
Would never let mine eyelids close their spheres;
But none can live without the death of
sleep.
Th' Immortals in our mortal memories keep Our ends and deaths by sleep; dividing so (As by the fate and portion of our woe)
Our times spent here, to let us nightly try That while we live, as much as live we die.
In which use I will to my bed ascend,
Which I bedew with tears, and sigh past
end
Through all my hours spent, since I lost my joy
For vile, lewd, never-to-be-named Troy.
Yet there I'll prove for sleep, which take you here,
Or on the earth, if that your custom
were,
Or have a bed, disposed for warmer rest."
Thus left she with her ladies her old
guest,
Ascended her fair chamber, and her bed,
Whose sight did ever duly make her shed Tears for her lord; which still her eyes did
sleep,
Till Pallas shut them with delightsome
sleep.

THE END OF THE NINETEENTH BOOK.
THE TWENTIETH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.
Ulisses, in the Wooers' beds,
Resolving first to kill the maidens;
That sentence giving off, his care
For other objects doth prepare.

ANOTHER.

S. Jove's thunder chides,
But cheers the King,
The Wooers' prides Discomfiting.

Ulisses in the entry laid his head,
And under him an ox-hide newly flead, Above him sheep-fells store; and over those Eurynome cast mantles. His repose
Would bring no sleep yet, studying the ill
He wish'd the wooers; who came by him still With all their wenches, laughing, wantoning,
In mutual lightness; which his heart did sting, Contending two ways; if, all patience fled,
He should rush up and strike those strumpets dead,
Or let that night be last, and take th'e.xtreme
Of those proud wooers, that were so supreme In pleasure of their high-fed fantasies,
His heart did bark within him to surprise
Their sports with spoils; no fell she-mastiff can,
Amongst her whelps, fly eagerer on a man
She doth not know, yet scents him something near,
And fain would come to please her tooth,
and tear,
Than his disdain, to see his roof so filed
With those foul fashions, grew within him wild.
To be in blood of them. But, finding best
In his free judgment to let passion rest,
He chid his angry spirit, and beat his breast,
And said: "Forbear, my mind, and think on this:
There hath been time when bitter agonies
Have tried thy patience. Call to mind the day
In which the Cyclop, which pass'd manly sway
Of violent strength, devour'd thy friends; thou then Stood'st firmly bold, till from that hellish den Thy wisdom brought thee off, when nought but death Thy thoughts resolved on." This discourse did breathe
The fiery boundings of his heart, that still Lay in that resture, without end his ill
Yet manly suffering. But from side to side
It made him toss space. You have not tried
A fellow roasting of a pig before
A hasty fire, his belly yielding store
Of fat and blood, turn faster, labour more
To have it roast, and would not have it burn,
Than this and that way his unrest made turn
His thoughts and body, would not quench the fire,
And yet not have it heighten his desire
Past his discretion, and the fit enough
Of haste and speed, that went to all the proof
His well-laid plots, and his exploits required,
Since he, but one, to all their deaths aspired.
In this contention Pallas stoop'd from heaven,
Stood over him, and had her presence given
A woman's form, who sternly thus began:
"Why, thou most sour and wretched-fated man
Of all that breathe! yet liest thou thus awake?
The house in which thy cares so toss and take Thy quiet up, is thine; thy wife is there;
And such a son, as if thy wishes were To be sufficed with one they could not mend."
"Goddess," said he, "'tis true; but I contend.
To right their wrongs, and, though I be bune.
To lay unhelp'd and wreekful hand upon
This whole resort of Impudents, that here
Their rude assemblies never will forbear.
And yet a greater doubt employs my care,
That if their slaughters in my reaches are,
And I perform them, Jove and you not pleased,
How shall I fly their friends? and would stand seised
Of counsel to resolve this care in me."
"Wretch," she replied, "a friend of worse degree Might win thy credence, that a mortal were,
And used to second thee, though nothing near
So powerful in performance nor in care;
Yet I, a Goddess, that have still had share
In thy achievements, and thy person's guard, Must still be doubted by thy brain, so hard
To credit anything above thy power;
And that must come from heaven; if every hour
There be not personal appearance made,
And aid direct given, that may sense invade.
I'll tell thee, therefore, clearly: If there were
Of divers languaged men an army here
Of fifty companies, all driving hence
Thy sheep and oxen, and with violence
Ofer'd to charge us, and besiege us round,
Thou shouldst their prey reprise, and them confound.
Let sleep then seize thee. To keep watch all night
Consumes the spirits, and makes dull the sight."
Thus pour'd the Goddess sleep into his eyes,
And ascended the Olympian skies.
When care-and-lineament-resolving sleep
Had laid his temples in his golden steep,
His wise-in-chaste-wit-worthy wife did rise:
(First sitting up in her soft bed) her eyes
Open'd with tears, in care of her estate,
Which now her friends resolved to terminate
To more delays, and make her marry one.
Her silent tears then ceased, her orison
This Queen of women to Diana made:
"Reverend Diana, let thy darts invade My woful bosom, and my life deprive,
Now at this instant, or soon after drive
My soul with tempests forth, and give it way
To those far-off dark vaults, where never day
Hath power to shine, and let them cast it down
Where refluent Oceanus doth crown
His curled head, where Pluto's orchard is,
And entrance to our after miseries.
As such stern whirlwinds ravish'd to that stream Panareus' daughters, when the Gods to them
Had neft their parents, and them left alone (Poor orphan children) in their mansion;
Whose desolate life did Love's sweet Queen incline
To nurse with pressed milk and sweetest wine;
Whom Juno deck'd beyond all other dames
With wisdom's light, and beauty's moving flames;
Whom Phoeb'e goodness of stature render'd;
And to whose fair hands wise Minerva tender'd
The loom and needle in their utmost skill;
And while Love's Empress scaled th' Olympian hill To beg of lightning-loving Jove (since he
The means to all things knows, and doth decree Fortunes, infortunes, to the mortal race)
For those poor virgins, the accomplish'd grace
Of sweetest nuptials, the fierce Harpies prey'd
On every good and miserable maid,
And to the hateful Furies gave them all
In horrid service; yet, may such fate fall
From steep Olympus on my loathed head,
Or fair-chair'd Phoeb'e strike me instant dead,
That I may undergo the gloomy shore
To visit great Ulysses' soul, before
I soothe my idle blood and wed a worse.
And yet, beneath how desperate a curse
Do I live now! It is an ill that may Be well endured, to mourn the whole long day,
So night's sweet sleeps, that make a man forget Both bad and good, in some degree would let My thoughts leave grieving; but, both day and night,
Some cruel God gives my sad memory sight.
This night, methought, Ulysses graced my bed
In all the goodly state with which he led The Grecian army; which gave joys extreme
To my distress, esteeming it no dream,
But true indeed; and that conceal I had,
That when I saw it false I might be mad.
Such cruel fates command in my life's guide.

By this the morning's orient dews had dyed
The earth in all her colours; when the King,
In his sweet sleep, supposed the sorrowing
That she used waking in her plaintive bed
To be her mourning, standing by his head,
As having known him there; who straight arose;
And did again within the hall dispose
The carpets and the cushions, where before They served the seats. The hide without the door
He carried back, and then, with held-up hands,
He pray'd to him that heaven and earth commands:
"O Father Jove, if through the moist and dry
You, willing, brought me home, when misery
Had punish'd me enough by your free dooms, Let some of these within those inner rooms, (Startled with horror of some strange ostent)
Come here, and tell me that great Jove hath bent Threatenings without at some lewd men within:"
To this his prayer Jove shook his sable chin,
And thunder'd from those pure clouds that, above
The breathing air, in bright Olympus move.
Divine Ulysses joy'd to hear it roar,
Report of which a woman-miller bore
Straight to his ears; for near to him there ground
Mills for his corn, that twice six women found Continual motion, grinding barley-meal,
And wheat, man's marrow. Sleep the eyes did seal
Of all the other women, having done
Their usual task; which yet this dame alone

Had scarce given end to, being, of all the rest, Least fit for labour. But when these sounds prest
Her ears, above the rumbling of her mill,
She let that stand, look'd out, and heaven's steep hill Saw clear and temperate; which made her (unaware Of giving any comfort to his care,
In that strange sign he pray'd for) thus invoke:
"O King of men and Gods, a mighty stroke
Thy thundering hand laid on the cope of stars,
No cloud in all the air; and therefore was Thou bidst to some men in thy sure ostent:
Perform to me, poor wretch, the main event,
And make this day the last, and most extreme,
In which the wooers' pride shall solace them
With worshippis banquet in Ulysses' root,
That, with sad toil to grind them meal enough,
Have dissolved my knees. Vouchsafe, then, now Thy thunders may their latest feast foreshow."
This was the boon* Ulysses begg'd of Jove, Which, with his thunder, through his bosom drove A joy, that this vaunt breathed: "Why now these men, Despite their pride, will Jove make pay me pain."
By this had other maids, than those that lay Mix'd with the wooers, made a fire like day
Amidst the hearth of the illustrious hall;
And then the Prince, like a Celestial,
Rose from his bed, to his embalm'd feet tied.
Fair shoes, his sword about his breast applied,
Took to his hand his sharp-piled lance, and met,
Amidst the entry, his old nurse, that set His haste at sudden stand; to whom he said:
"O, my loved nurse, with what grace have you laid fed my guest here? Could you so neglect age, to lodge him thus? Though all respect to my mother’s wisdom, I must yet in it fail’d in this; for she hath set much more price a man of much less worth, put his person’s note, and yet casts forth ignominious hands, for his form sake, an much better.” “Do not faulty make, son, the faultless. He was given his seat to her side, and food till he would eat, till his wish was served; for she required wants, and will’d him all things he desired; manded her chief maids to make his bed, he, as one whom sorrow only fed all infortune, would not take his rest ed, and coverings fit for any guest, in the entry, on an ox’s hide at tanner’s, his old limbs implied, arm sheep-fells; yet over all we cast mile, fitting for a man more graced.” took her answer, left the house, and went, ded with his dogs, to siff th’ event private plots, betwixt him and his sire common counsel. Then the crew entire the household maids Euryclea bade them through the house, and see it glad best form; gave all their parts; and one set to furnish every seat and throne needleworks, and purple clothes of stait; her set to scour and cleanse the plate; her all the tables to make proud porous sponges; others she bestow’d speed to the spring, to fetch from thence lore of water; all at all expense ans she will’d to be; for this to all ld be a day of common festival, not a wooer now should seek his home, where than there, but all were bld to come eating early, and be raised to heaven all the entertainment could be given, They heard with greedy ears, and every thing. Put straight in practice. Twenty to the spring. Made speed for water; many in the house Took pains; and all were both laborious And skill’d in labour; many fell to fell And cleave their wood; and all did more than well. Then troop’d the lusty woosers in; and then Came all from spring; at their heels loaded men With slaughter’d brawns, of all the herd the prize, That had been long fed up in several styces Eumaeus and his men convey’d them there. He (seeing now the king) began to cheer, And thus saluted him: “How now, my guest? Have yet your virtues found more interest In these great woosers’ good respects? Or still Pursue they you with all their wonted ill?” “I would to heaven, Eumaeus,” he replied, “The Deitie once would take in hand their pride; That such unseemly fashions put in frame In others’ roofs, as shew no spark of shame.” Thus these; and to these came Melantheus, Great guardian of the most egregious Rich woosers’ herds, consisting all of goats; Which he, with two more, drave, and made their cotes The sounding porticos of that fair court. Melantheus, seeing the king, this former sort Of upland language gave: “What? still stay here, And dill these woosers with thy wretched cheer? Not gone for ever, yet? why now I see This strife of cuffs betwixt the beggary, That yesterday assay’d to get thee gone, And thy more roguery, needs will fall upon My hands to arbitrate. Thou wilt not hence Till I set on thee; thy ragg’d impudence Is so fast footed. Are there not beside Other great banqueters, but you must ride At anchor still with us? He nothing said, But thought of ill enough, and shook his head.

There came Philoctetus, a chief of men,
That to the wooers' all-devouring den
A baron steer drove, and fat goats; for they
In custom were with traffickers by sea,
That who they would sent, and had utterance there.
And for these likewise the fair porches were Hurdles and sheep-pens, as in any fair.
Philoctetus took note in his repair
Of seen Ulysses, being a man as well
Given to his mind's use as to buy and sell,
Or do the drudgery that the blood desired,
And, standing near Eumaeus, this inquired:
"What guest is this that makes our house of late
His entertainer? whence claims he the state
His birth in this life holds? what nation?
What race? what country stands his speech upon?
O'er-hardly portion'd by the terrible Fates,
The structure of his lineaments relates
A king's resemblance in his pomp of reign
Even thus in these rags. But poor erring men,
That have no firm home, but range here and there
As need compels, God keep in this earth's sphere,
As under water, and this tune he sings,
When he is spinning even the cares of kings.
Thus coming to him, with a kind of fear
He took his hand, and, touch'd exceeding near With mere imagination of his worth,
This salutation he sent loudly forth:
"Health! Father stranger; in another world
Be rich and happy, though thou here art hurl'd
At feet of never such insulting Need.
O Jove, there lives no one God of thy seed More ill to man than thou. Thou takest no ruth (When thou thyself hast got him in most truth)
To wrap him in the straits of most distress,
And in the curse of others' wickedness.
My brows have sweat to see it, and mine eyes
Broke all in tears, when this being still the guise
Of worthiest men, I have but only thought,
That down to these ills was Ulysses wrought.
And that, thus clad, even he is enrol
Driven,
If yet he live and sees the light of heaven.
But, if now dead, and in the house of hell
O me! O good Ulysses! That my soul
Did ever wish, and when, but half a man
Amongst the people Cephalenian,
His bounty to his oxen's charge prefers'd
One in that youth; which now is grown a herd Unspeakable for number, and feed there
With their broad heads, as thick as of his ear
A field of corn is to a man. Yet these Some men advise me that this noted præce
Of wooers may devour, and wish me drive
Up to their feasts with them, that neither give His son respect, though in his own free roof.
Nor have the wit to fear th' infallible proof
Of heavenly vengeance, but make offer now
The long-lack'd King's possessions to bestow
In their self shares. Methinks the mind in me Doth turn as fast, as in a flood or sea
A raging whirlpool doth, to gather in To fishy death those swimmers in their sin;
Or feeds a motion as circular
To drive my herds away. But while the son Bears up with life, 'twere hainous wrong to press
To other people with them, and to trust Men of another earth. And yet more just
It were to venture their laws, the main right Made still their masters, than at home less quite Their right and them, and sit and grieve to see
The wrong authorized by their goutony.
And I had long since fled, and tried the event
With other proud kings, since more insolent
These are than can be borne, but that even still I had a hope that this, though born to ill,
Would one day come from some coast, and their last
In his roofs strew with ruins red and vast.”
“Herdsman,” said he, “because thou art in show
Nor vex'd, nor indiscreet, and that I know.
THE TWENTIETH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

There rules in thee an understanding soul,
I'll take an oath, that in thee shall control
All doubt of what I swear; be witness, Jove,
That sway'st the first seat of the throned above,
This hospitable table, and this house,
That still hold title for the strenuous Son of Laertes, that, if so you please,
Your eyes shall witness Laertiades
Arrived at home, and all these men that reign
In such excesses here shall here lie slain."
He answer'd: "Stranger! would just Jove would sign
What you have sworn: in your eyes' beams should shine
What powers I manage, and how these my hands Would rise and follow where he first commands."
So said Eumaeus, praying all the Sky
That wise Ulysses might arrive and try.
Thus while they vow'd, the wooers sat as hard
On his son's death, but had their counsels scared,
For on their left hand did an eagle soar,
And in her seres a fearful pigeon bore.
Which seen, Amphinomus pressing: "O friends,
Our counsels never will receive their ends
In this man's slaughter: let us therefore ply
Our bloody feast, and make his oxen die."
Thus came they in, cast off on seats their cloaks,
And fell to giving sacrificing stokes
Of sheep and goats, the chiefly fat and great,
Slew red-up swine, and from the herd a neat.
The inwards roasted they disposed betwixt
Their then observers, wine in flagons mixt.
The bowls Eumaeus brought, Philocteus bread, Melanthius fill'd the wine. Thus drank and fed
The feastful wooers. Then the prince, in grace
Of his close project, did his father place
Amidst the paved entry, in a seat
Seemless and abject, a small board and meat
Of th' only inwards; in a cup of gold
Yet sent him wine, and bade him now drink bold,

All his approaches he himself would free Gainst all the wooers, since he would not see His court made popular, but that his sire Built it to his use. 'Therefore all the fire Blown in the wooers' spleens he bade suppress,
And that in hands nor words they should digress
From that set peace his speech did then proclaim.
They bit their lips and wonder'd at his aim
In that brave language; when Antinous said:
"Though this speech, Grecians, be a mere uphold, Yet this time give it pass. The will of Jove Forbids the violence of our hands to move,
But of our tongues we keep the motion free;
And, therefore, if his further jollity
Tempt our encounter with his braves, let's check
His growing insolence, though pride to speak Fly passing high with him." The wise prince made
No more spring of his speech, but let it fade.
And now the heralds bore about the town
The sacred hecatomb; to whose renown
The fair-hair'd Greeks assembled, and beneath Apollo's shady wood the holy death
They put to fire; which, made enough, they drew,
Divided all, that did in th' end accure
To glorious satisfaction. Those that were Disposers of the feast did equal cheer Bestow on wretched Laertiades,
With all the wooers' souls; it so did please Telemachus to charge them. And for these Minerva would not see the malices
The wooers bore too much contain'd, that so Ulysses' moved heart yet might higher flow
In wretched anguish. There was wooing there,
Amongst the rest, a gallant that did bear
The name of one well-learn'd in jests profane,
His name Ctesippus, born a Samian;
Who, proud because his father was so rich,
Had so much confidence as did bewitch
His heart with hope to wed Ulysses' wife;
And this man said: "Hear me, my lords, in strife
For this great widow. This her guest did share Even feast with us, with very comely care
Of him that order'd it; for 'is not good Nor equal to deprive guests of their food,
And specially whatever guest makes way to that house where Telemachus doth stay;
And therefore I will add to his receipt
A gift of very hospitable weight,
Which he may give again to any maid
That bathes his grave feet, and her pains see paid,
Or any servant else that the divine Ulysses' lofty battlements confine."
Thus snatch'd he with a valiant hand, from out
The poor folks' common basket, a neat's foot,
And threw it at Ulysses; who his head
Shrank quietly aside, and let it shed
His malison on the wall; the suffering man
A laughter raising most Sardinian,
With scorn and wrath mix'd, at the Samian.
Whom thus the prince reproved: "Your valour wan Much grace, Ctesippus, and hath eased your mind
With mighty profit, yet you see it find No mark it aim'd at; the poor stranger's part Himself made good enough, to scape your dart.
But should I serve thee worthily, my lance Should strike thy heart through, and, in place t' advance
Thyself in nuptials with his wealth, thy sire Should make thy tomb here; that the foolish fire
Of all such valours may not dare to show
These foul indecencies to me. I now Have years to understand my strength, and know
The good and bad of things, and am no more
At your large sufferance, to behold my store
Consumed with patience, see my cattle slain,
My wine exhausted, and my bread in vain Spent on your license; for to one then young
So many enemies were match too strong.
But let me never more be witness to Your hostile minds, nor those base deeds ye do;
For, should ye kill me in my offer'd wrek,
I wish it rather; and my death would speak Much more good of me, than to live and see Indignity upon indignity.
My guests provoked with bitter words and blows,
My women-servants dragg'd about my house
To lust and rapture." This made silence seize
The house throughout; till Damastorides At length the calm brake, and said: "Friend, forbear
To give a just speech a disdainful ear:
The guest no more touch, nor no servant here.
Myself will to the Prince and Queen command
A motion grateful, if they please to lend Grateful receipt. As long as any hope Left wise Ulysses any passage ope
To his return in our conceits, so long
The Queen's delays to our demands stood strong In cause and reason, and our quarrels thus With guests, the Queen, or her Telemachus,
Set never foot amongst our liberal feast;
For should the King return, though thought deceased,
It had been gain to us, in finding him,
To lose his wife. But now, since nothing dist
The days breaks out that shews he never more Shall reach the dear touch of his country shore, Sit by your mother, in persuasion
That now it stands her honour much upon
To choose the best of us, and, who gives most,
To go with him home. For so, all things lost
In sticking on our haunt so, you shall clear Recover in our no more concourse here,
Possess your birth-right wholly, eat and drink,
And never more on our disgraces think."
"By Jove, no, Agelaus; for I swear
By all my father's sorrows, who doth err,
Far off from Ithaca, or rests in death,
I am so far from spending but my breath
To make my mother any more de fer
Her wished nuptials, that I'll counsel her
To make her free choice; and besides will give Large gifts to move her. But I fear to drive
Or charge her hence; for God will not give way
To any such course, if I should assay."
THE TWENTIETH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

At this, Minerva made for foolish joy
The woers mad, and roused their late annoy
To such a laughter as would never down.
They laugh'd with others' cheeks, eat meat o'erflown
With their own bloods, their eyes stood full of tears
For violent joys; their souls yet thought of tears,
Which Theoclymenus express'd, and said:
"O wretches! Why sustain ye, well apaid,
Your luminent ill? A night, with which Death sees,
Your heads and faces hides beneath your knees;
Shrieks burn about you; your eyes thrust out tears;
These fixed walls, and that main beam that bears
The whole house up, in bloody torrents fall;
The entry full of ghosts stands; full the hall
Of passengers to hell; and under all
The dismal shades; the sun sinks from the poles;
And troubled air pours bane about your souls."
They sweetly laugh'd at this. Eurymachus
To mocks disposed, and said: "This newcome-t'us
Is surely mad, conduct him forth to light
In th' open market-place; he thinks 'tis night Within the house." "Eurymachus," said he,
"I will not ask for any guide of thee,
I both my feet enjoy, have ears and eyes,
And no mad soul within me; and with these Will I go forth the doors, because I know
That imminent mischief must abide with you,
Which not a man of all the woers here
Shall fly or scape. Ye all too highly bear Your uncurb'd heads. Impieties ye commit,
And every man affect with forms unfit."
This said, he left the house, and took his way Home to Piraeus; who, as free as day,
Was of his welcome. When the woers' eyes Changed looks with one another, and, their guise
Of laughter still held on, still eased their breasts
Of will to set the Prince against his guests
Affirming that of all the men alive
He worst luck had, and proved it worst to give Guests entertainment; for he had one there
A wandering hunter out of providence,
An errant beggar every way, yet thought (He was so hungry) that he needed nought.
But wine and victuals, nor knew how to do, Nor had a spirit to put a knowledge to,
But lived an idle burthen to the earth.
Another then stepp'd up, and would lay forth
His lips in prophecy, thus: "But, would he hear His friends' persuasions, he should find it were More profit for him to put both aboard
For the Sicilian people, that afford
These feet* of men good price; and this would bring Good means for better guests." These words made wing
To his ears idly, who had still his eye
Upon his father, looking fervently
When he would lay his long-withholding hand
On those proud wooers. And, within command
Of all this speech that pass'd, Icarius' heir,
The wise Penelope, her royal chair
Had placed of purpose. Their high dinner then
With all pleased palates these ridiculous men Fell sweetly to, as joying they had slain Such store of banquet. But there did not reign
A bitterer banquet planet in all heaven
Than that which Pallas had to that day driven,
And, with her able friend now, meant t' appose,
Since they till then were in deserts so gross.

THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Penelope proposeth now
To him that draws Ulysses' bow
Her instant nuptials. Ithaca
Rumours and Philocerus
Gives charge for guarding of the gates;
And he his shaft shoots through the plates.

ANOTHER.

Ơ: The nuptial vow
And game rehearsed,
Drawn is the bow,
The steel is pierced.

Pallas, the Goddess with the sparkling eyes,
Excites Penelope 't object the prize,
The bow and bright steel, to the wooers' strength;
And here began the strife and blood at length.
She first ascended by a lofty stair
Her utmost chamber; of whose door her fair
And half transparent hand received the key.
Bright, brazen, bitted passing curiously,
And at it hung a knob of ivory.
And this did lead her where was strongly kept
The treasure-royal; in whose store lay heart
Gold, brass, and steel, engraven with infinite art;
The crooked bow, and arrowy quiver, part Of that rich magazine. In the quiver were Arrows a number, sharp and shining gear.
The bow was given by kind Eurytides Iphitus, fashion'd like the Deities,
To young Ulysses, when within the roof
Of wise Orestocus ther pass had proof Of mutual meeting in Messena; where Ulysses claim'd a debt, to whose pay were The whole Messenian people bound, since they From Ithaca had forced a wealthy prey
Of sheep and shepherds. In their ships Three hundred sheep together; for whose just
And instant rendry old Laertes sent Ulysses his ambassador, that went
A long way in the embassy, yet then Bore but the foremost prime of youngest men;
His father sending first to that affair
His gravest counsellors, and then his heir.
Iphitus made his way there, having lost Twelve female horse, and multes commended most
For use of burthen; which were after cause
Of death and fate to him; for, past all laws
Of hospitality, Jove's mighty son,*
Skill'd in great acts, was his confusion
Close by his house, though at that time his guest, Respecting neither the apposed feast,
And hospitable table, that in love
He set before him, nor the voice of Jove,
But, seizing first his mares, he after slew
His host himself. From those mares' search now grew Ulysses known t Iphitus; who that bow
At their encounter did in love bestow,
Which great Eurytus' hand had borne before, (Iphitus' father) who, at death's sad door,
In his steep turrets, left it to his son.
Ulysses gave him a keen falchion,
And mighty lance. And thus began they there,
Their fatal loves: for after never were Their mutual tables to each other known,
Because Jove's son th' unworthy part had shown.
Of slaughtering this God-like loving man, Eurytus' son; who with that bow began
And ended love t Ulysses; who so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black fleet that guest-rite to the war,
But, in fit memory of one so far
In his affection, brought it home, and kept His treasure with it; where till now it slept.
And now the Queen of women had intent
To give it use, and therefore made ascent

THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK OF HOMER’S ODYSSEY.

Up all the stairs’ height to the chamber door,
Where shining leaves two bright pilasters lone;
To such a close, when both together went,
It would resist the air in their consent.
The ring she took then, and did draw aside
A bar that ran within, and then implied
The key into the lock, which gave a sound,
The bolt then shotting, as in pasture ground
A bull doth low, and make the valleys ring;
So loud the lock hummed when it loosed his spring.
And ope the doors flew. In she went, along
The lofty chamber, that was boardered strong.
With heart of oak, which many years ago
The architect did smooth and polish so
That now as then he made it freshely shine,
And tried the eveness of it with a line.
There stood in this room presses that encloased Robes odoriferous, by which reposed
The bow was upon pins; nor from it far Hung the round quiver glittering like a star;
Both which her white extended hand took down.
Then sat she low, and made her lap a crown
Of both those relics, which she wept to see,
And cried quite out with loving memory
Of her dear lord; to whose worth paying then Kind deus snow, she left, and, to the men Vow’d to her wooing, brought the crooked bow,
And shaft-receiving quiver, that did flow With arrows, bearing sighs up where they fell.
Then, with another chest, replete as well With games won by the King, of steel and brass,
Her maids attended. Past whom making pass
To where her wooers were, she made her stay Amids the fair hall door, and kept the ray Of her bright countenance hid with veils so thin, That though they seem’d t’ expose, they let love in;
Her maids on both sides stood; and thus she spake: "Hear me; ye wooers, that a pleasure take
To do me sorrow, and my house invade
To eat and drink, as if ’twere only made
To serve your rapines; my lord long away,
And you allow’d no colour for your stay
But his still absence; striving who shall frame Me for his wife; and, since ’tis made a game,
I here propose divine Ulysses’ bow
For that great master-piece to which ye vow.
He that can draw it with least show to strive,
And through these twelve axe-heads an arrow drive,
Him will I follow, and this house forego
That nourish’d me a maid; now furnish’d so
With all things fit, and which I so esteem
That I shall still live in it in my dream,"
This said, she made Eumaeus give it them. He took and laid it by, and wept for woe;
And like him wept Philoctetus, when the bow
Of which his king was bearer he beheld.
Their tears Antinous’ manhood much refell’d,
And said: "Ye rustic fools! that still each day
Your minds give over to this vain dismay,
Why weep ye, wretches? and the widow’s eyes
Tempt with renew’d thought, that would otherwise Depose her sorrows, since her lord is dead,
And tears are idle? Sit, and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
And weep without doors. Let this bow alone
To our out-match’d contention. For I fear
The bow will scarce yield draught to any here;
Here no such man lives as Laertes’ son Amongst us all. I knew him; thought puts on His look’s sight now, methinks, though then a child."
Thus shew’d his words doubt, yet his hopes instill’d
His strength the stretcher of Ulysses’ string,
And his steels’ piercer. But his shaft must sing Through his pierced palate first; whom so he wrong’d
In his free roof, and made the rest ill-tongued.

v v
Against his virtues. Then the sacred heat
That spirited his son did further set
Their confidence on fire, and said: "O friends, Jove hath bereft my wits. The Queen intends, Though I must grant her wise, ere long to leave Ulysses' court, and to her bed receive
Some other lord; yet, notwithstanding, I Am forced to laugh, and set my pleasures high Like one mad sick. But, wooers, since ye have An object for your trials now so brave,
As all the broad Achæian earth exceeds,
As sacred Pylos, as the Argive breeds,
As black Epirus, as Mycenæa's birth,
And as the more famed Ithacensian earth,
All which, yourselves well know, and oft have said;
(For what need hath my mother of my aid
In her advancement?) tender no excuse
For least delay, nor too much time profuse
In stay to draw this bow, but draw it straight, Shoot, and the steels pierce; make all see How small
You make these poor bars to so rich a prize.
No eagerer yet? Come on. My faculties
Shall try the bow's strength, and the pierced steel.
I will not for my reverend mother feel
The sorrow that I know will seize my heart.
To see her follow any, and depart
From her so long-held home; but first extend
The bow and arrow to their tender'd end.
For I am only to succeed my sire
In guard of his games, and let none aspire
To their besides possession." This said,
His purple robe he cast off; by he laid
His well-edged sword; and, first, a several pit
He digg'd for every axe, and strengthen'd it
With earth close ramm'd about it; on a row Set them, of one height, by a line he drew Along the whole twelve; and so orderly Did every deed belonging (yet his eye Never before beholding how 'twas done)
That in amaze rose all his lookers on.
Then stood he near the door, and proved to draw
The stubborn bow. Thrice tried, and thrice gave law
To his uncrown'd attempts; the fourth assay
With all force offering, which a sign gave stay Given by his father; though he shew'd a mind
As if he stood right heartily inclined To perfect the exploit, when all was done
In only c rift to set the wooers on.
His weakness yet confess'd, he said: "O shame!
I either shall be ever of no name.
But prove a wretch; or else I am too young,
And must not now presume on powers so strong.
As sinews yet more growing may engrraft,
To turn a man quite over with a shaft.
Besides, to men whose nerves are best prepared,
All great adventures at first proof are hard.
But come, you stronger men, attempt this bow,
And let us end our labour." Thus, below
A well-join'd board he laid it, and close by The brightly-headed shaft; then throned his thigh Amidst his late-left seat. Antinous then Bade all arise; but first, who did sustain
The cup's state ever, and did sacrifice
Before they eat still, and that man bade rise,
Since on the other's right hand he was plaid,
Because he held the right hand's rising, graced With best success still. This direction won Supreme applause; and first rose Ænops' son,
Iliodes, that was priest to all the rest.
Sat lowest with the cup still, and their jest
Could never like, but ever was the man
That check'd their follies; and he now began
To taste the bow, the sharp shaft took, tugg'd hard,
And held aloft, and, till be quite had marr'd
His delicate tender fingers, could not stir
The shrill string; who therefore did refer
The game to others, saying, that same bow,
In his presage, would prove the overthrow
Of many a chief man there; nor thought the fate
Was any whit austere, since death's short date
Were much the better taken, than long life Without the object of their amorous strife,
For whom they had burn'd out so many days
To find still other, nothing but delays
Obtaining in them; and affirm'd that now
Some hoped to have her, but when that tough bow
They all had tried, and seen the utmost done,
They must rest pleased to cease; and now some one
Of all their other fair-veil'd Grecian dames
With gifts, and dower, and Hymenecal flames, Let her love light to him that most will give,
And whom the nuptial destiny did drive."
Thus laid he on the well-join'd polish'd board
The bow and bright-piled shaft, and then restored His seat his right. To him Antinous Gave bitter language, and reproved him thus:
"What words, Liodes, pass thy speech's guard,
That 'tis a work to bear? and set so hard
They set up my disdain: This bow must end
The best of us? Since thy arms cannot lend
The string least motion? Thy mother's throes Brought never forth thy arms to draught of bows,
Or knitting shafts off. Though thou canst not draw
The sturdy plant, thou art to us no law.
Melanthius! I light a fire, and set thereat
A chair and cushions, and that mass of fat
That lies within bring out, that we may set
Our pages to this bow, to see it het
And suppled with the suet, and then we May give it draught, and pay this great decree Utmost performance." He a mighty fire Gave instant flame, put into act th' entire Command laid on him, chair and cushions set,
Laid on the bow, which straight the pages het, Chafed, supplied with the suet to their most;
And still was all their unctuous labour lost.
All wooers' strengths too indigent and poor
To draw that bow; Antinous' arms it tore,
And great Eurymachus', the both clear best,
Yet both it tired, and made them glad to rest.
Forth then went both the swains, and after them Divine Ulysses; when, being past th' extreme
Of all the gates, with winning words he tried Their loves, and this ask'd: "Shall my counsels hide Their depths from you? My mind would gladly know
If suddenly Ulysses had his vow
Made good for home, and had some God to guide
His steps and strokes to wreak these wooers' pride,
Would your aids join on his part, or with theirs?
How stand your hearts affected?" They made prayers
That some God would please to return their lord,
He then should see how far they would afford
Their lives for his. He, seeing their truth, replied:
"I am your lord, through many a sufferance tried,
Arrived now here, whom twenty years have held From forth my country. Yet are not conceal'd From my sure knowledge your desires to see My safe return. Of all the company
Now serving here besides, not one but you Mine ear hath witness'd willing to bestow
Their wishes of my life, so long held dead.
I therefore vow, which shall be perfected,
That if God please beneath my hand to leave These wooers lifeless, ye shall both receive Wives from that hand, and means, and near to me Have houses built to you, and both shall be
As friends and brothers to my only son.
And, that ye well may know me, and be won
To that assurance, the infallible sign
The white-tooth'd boar gave, this mark'd knee of mine,
When in Parnassus he was held in chase.
By me, and by my famous grandson's race.
I'll let you see. Thus sever'd he his weed
From that his wound; and every word had deed
In their sure knowledges, Which made them cast Their arms about him, his broad breast embraced,
His neck and shoulders kiss'd. And him as well Did those true powers of human love compel
To kiss their heads and hands, and to their moon
Had sent the free light of the cheerful sun,
Had not Ulysses broke the ruth, and said:
"Cease tears and sorrows, lest we prove display'd
By some that issue from the house, and they Relate to those within. Take each his way,
Not altogether in, but one by one,
First I, then you; and then see this be done:
The envious wooers will by no means give
The offer of the bow and arrow leave
To come at me; spite then their pride, do thou,
My good Eumæus, bring both shaft and bow
To my hand's proof; and charge the maids before,
That instantly they shut in every door,
That they themselves (if any tumult rise
Beneath my roofs by any that envies
My will to undertake the game) may gain
No passage forth, but close at work contain;
With all free quiet, or at least constrain'd.
And therefore, my Philætus, see maintain'd.
When close the gates are shut, their closure fast,
To which end be it thy sole work to cast Their chains before them." This said, in he led,
Took first his seat; and then they seconded
His entry with their own. Then took in hand Eurymachus the bow, made close his stand
Aside the fire, at whose heat here and there
He warm'd and supple'd it, yet could not stree
To any draught the string, with all his art;
And therefore swell'd in him his glorious heart, Affirming, "that himself and all his friends
Had cause to grieve, not only that their ends

They miss'd in marriage, since enough besides Kind Grecian dames there lived to be their brides
In Ithaca, and other bordering towns,
But that to all times their renowns
Would stand disparaged, if Ulysses' bow
They could not draw, and yet his wife would woo." Antinous answer'd: "That there could ensure No shame at all to them; for well he knew
That this day was kept holy to the Sun
By all the city, and there should be done
No such profane act, therefore bade lay by The bow for that day; but the mastery
Of axes that were set up still might stand,
Since that no labour was, nor any hand
Would offer to invade Ulysses' house,
To take, or touch with surreptitious
Or violent hand, what there was left for use.
He, therefore, bade the cup-bearer infuse
Wine to the bowls, that so with sacrifice
They might let rest the shooting exercise,
And in the morning make Melanthius bring
The chief goats of his herd, that to the King,
Of bows and archers they might burn the thighs
For good success, and then attempt the prize."
The rest sat pleased with this. The heralds straight Pour'd water on their hands; each page did wait
With his crown'd cup of wine, served every man Till all were satisfied. And then began Ulysses' plot of his close purpose thus:
"Hear me, ye much renown'd Eurymachus,
And king Antinous, in chief, who well,
And with decorum sacred, doth compel
This day's observance, and to let lay down
The bow all this light, giving Gods their own.
The morning's labour God the more will bless,
And strength bestow where he himself shall please.
Against which time let me presume to pray
Your favours with the rest, that this essay
May my old arms prove, trying if there lie
In my poor powers the same activity
That long since crown'd them; or if needy fare
And dessicate wandering have the web worn bare.

503

Of my life's thread at all parts, that no more
Can furnish these affairs as heretofore."
This heat their spleens past measure, blown with fear
Lest his loathed temples would the garland wear
Of that bow's draught; Antinous using speech
To this sour purpose: "Thou most arrant wretch
Of all guests breathing, in no least degree
Grace'd with a humane soul, it serves not thee
To feast in peace with us, take equal share
Of what we reach to, sit, and all things hear That we speak freely (which no begging guest Did ever yet) but thou must make request
To mix with us in merit of the Queen.
But wine inflames thee, that hath ever been
The bane of men whoever yet would take Th' excess it offers and the mean forsake.
Wine spoil'd the Centaur great Eurytion,
In guest-rites with the mighty-minded son
Of bold Ixion, in his way to war Against the Lapithes; who, driven as far As madness with the bold effects of wine,
Did outrage to his kind host, and decline
Other heroes from him feasted there
With so much anger that they left their cheer,
And dragg'd him forth the fore-court, slit his nose,
Cropp'd both his ears, and, in the ill dispose His mind then suffer'd, drew the fatal day
On his head with his host; for thence the fray Betwixt the Centaurs and the Lapithes
Had mortal act. But he for his excess
In spoil of wine fared worst himself; as thou
For thy large cups, if thy arms draw the bow,
My mind foretells shalt fear; for not a man
Of all our consort, that in wisdom can Boast any fit share, will take prayers then,
But to Echecus, the most stern of men,
A black sail freight with thee, whose worst of ill,
Be sure, is past all ransom. Sit then still,
Drink temperately, and never more contend With men your youngers." This the Queen did end

With her defence of him, and told his foe
It was not fair nor equal t' overrow
The poorest guest her son 'pon t' entertain
In his free turrets with so proud a strain
Of threats and braving; asking if he thought,
That if the stranger to his arms had brought
The stubborn bow down, he should marry her,
And bear her home? And said, himself should err
In no such hope; nor of them all the best
That grieved at any good she did her guest Should banquet there; since it in no sort shou'd Noblesse in them, nor paid her what she owed
Her own free rule there. This Eurymachus Confirm'd and said: "Nor feeds it hope in us, Icarus' daughter, to solemnize rites
Of nuptials with thee; nor in noblest sights
It can shew comely; but to our respects
The rumour both of sexes and of sects
Amongst the people, would breed shame and fear, Lest any worst Greek said: 'See, men that were
Of mean deservings will presume t' aspire
To his wife's bed, whom all men did admire
For fame and merit, could not draw his bow,
And yet his wife had foolish pride to woo,
When straight an errant beggar comes and draws
The bow with ease, performing all the laws
The game beside contain'd; and this would thus Prove both indignity and shame to us."
The Queen replied: "The fame of men, I see,
Bears much price in your great supposed degree;
Yet who can prove amongst the people great,
That of one so esteem'd of them the seat Doth so defame and ruin? And beside,
With what right is this guest thus vilified
In your high censures, when the man in blood Is well composed and great, his parents good?"
And therefore give the bow to him, to try
His birth and breeding by his chivalry.
If his arms draw it, and that Phoebus stands
So great a glory to his strength, my hands
Shall add this gourdon: Every sort of weed,
A two-edged sword, and lance to keep him freest
From dogs and men hereafter, and dismiss His worth to what place tends that heart of his."

Her son gave answer, that it was a wrong
To his free sway in all things that belong
To guard of that house, to demand the bow
Of any wooer, and the use bestow Upon the stranger; for the bow was his
To give or to withhold; no masteries
Of her proposing giving any power
T' impair his right in things for any wooer,
Or any that rough Ithaca affords,
Any that Elis; of which no man's words
Nor powers should curb him, stood he so inclined,
To see the bow in absolute gift resign'd
To that his guest to bear and use at will,
And therefore bade his mother keep her still Amongst her women at her rock and loom;
Bows were for men; and this bow did become Past all men's his disposer, since his sire Left it to him, and all the house entire." She stood dismay'd at this, and in her mind His wise words laid up, standing so inclined,
As he had will'd, with all her women going Up to her chamber, there her tears bestow'd,
As every night she did, on her loved lord,
Till sleep and Pallas her rest rest restored.
The bow Eumaeus took, and bore away;
Which up in tumult, and almost in fray,
Put all the wooers, one inquiring thus:
"Whither, rogue, abjurt, wilt thou bear
That bow proposed? Lay down, or I protest Thy dogs shall eat thee, that thou nourishest
To guard thy swine; amongst whom, left of all,
Thy life shall leave thee, if the festival,
We now observe to Phoebus, may our zeal
Grace with his aid, and all the Deities' else."

This threat made good Eumaeus yield the bow
To his late place, not knowing what might grow From such a multitude. And then fell on Telemachus with threats, and said: "Set gone
That bow yet further; 'tis no servant's part
To serve too many masters; raise your heart
And bear it off, lest, though your younger,
yet
With stones I pelt you to the field with it.
If you and I close, I shall prove too strong.
I wish as much too hard for all this throng
The Gods would make me, I should quickly send Some after with just sorrow to their end,
They waste my victuals so, and ply my cup,
And do me such shrewd turns still." This put up
The wooers all in laughter, and put down
Their anger to him, that so late were grown
So grave and bloody; which resolved that fear
Of good Eumaeus, who did take and bear
The King the bow; call'd nurse, and bade her make The doors all sure, that if men's tumult take
The ears of some within, they may not fly,
But keep at work still, close and silently.
These words put wings to her, and close she put The chamber door. The court-gates then were shut
By kind Philistus, who straight did go
From out the hall, and in the portico Found laid a cable of a ship, composed Of spongy bulrushes; with which he closed,
In winding round about them, the court-gates,
Then took his place again, to view the fates
That quickly follow'd. When he came, he saw Ulysses viewing, ere he tried to draw
The famous bow, which every way he moved,
Up and down turning it; in which he proved
The plight it was in, fearing, chiefly, lest
The horns were eat with worms in so long rest.
But what his thoughts intended turning so,
And keeping such a search about the bow,
The wooers little knowing, fell to jest,
And said: "Past doubt he is a man profest
In bowyers' craft, and sees quite through the wood;
Or something, certain, to be understood
There is in this his turning of it still:
A cunning rogue he is at any ill."
Then spake another proud one: "Would to heaven,
I might, at will, get gold till he hath given That bow his draught I!" With these sharp jests did these Delightsome wooers their fatal humours please.
But when the wise Ulysses once had laid
His fingers on it, and to proof survey'd
The still sound plighted it held, as one of skill In song, and of the harp, doth at his will,
In tuning of his instrument, extend A string out with his pin, touch all, and lend
To every well-wreathed string his perfect sound, Struck all together; with such ease drew round
The King the bow. Then twang'd he up the string, That as a swallow in the air doth sing
With no continued tune, but, pausing still,
Twinks out her scatter'd voice in accents shrill;
So sharp the string sung when he gave it touch, Once having bent and drawn it. Which so much Amazed the wooers, that their colours went And came most grievously. And then Jove rent
The air with thunder; which at heart did cheer
The now-enough-sustaining traveller,
That Jove again would his attempt enable.
Then took he into hand, from off the table,
The first drawn arrow; and a number more Spent shortly on the wooers; but this one
He measured by his arm, as if not known
The length were to him, nuck'd it then, and drew;
And through the axes, at the first hole, flew
The steel-charged arrow; which when he had done
He thus bespake the Prince: "You have not won Disgrace yet by your guest; for I have strook
The mark I shot at, and no such toil took In wearying the bow with fat and fire
As did the wooers: yet reserved entire,
Thank Heaven, my strength is, and myself am tried,
No man to be so basely vilified
As these men pleased to think me. But, free way Take that, and all their pleasures; and while day Holds her torch to you, and the hour of feast Hath now full date, give banquet, and the rest, Poem and harp, that grace a well-fill'd board."
This said, he beckon'd to his son; whose sword
He straight girt to him, took to hand his lance,
And complete-arm'd did to his sire advance.

THE END OF THE TWENTY-FIRST BOOK.
THE TWENTY-SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Thus Woes in Minerva's sight
Slain by Ulysses: all the light
And lustful housewives by his son
And servants are to slaughter done.

ANOTHER.

X. The end of pride,
And lawless lust,
Is wretched tried
With slaughters just.

The upper rags that wise Ulysses wore Cast off, he rusheth to the great hall door
With bow and quiver full of shafts, which down
He pour'd before his feet, and thus made known His true state to the wooers: "This strife thus Hath harmless been decided; now for us
There rests another mark, more hard to hit,
And such as never man before hath smit;
Whose full point likewise my hands shall assay,
And try if Phoebus will give me his day."
He said, and off his bitter arrow thrust Right at Antinous; that struck him just As he was lifting up the bowl; to show
That 'twixt the cup and lip much ill may grow.
Death touch'd not at his thoughts at feast;
for who
Would think that he alone could perish so Amongst so many, and he best of all?
The arrow in his throat took full his fall,
And thrust his head far through the other side.
Down fell his cup, down he, down all his pride;
Straight from his nostrils gush'd the human gore:
And, as he fell, his feet far overbore
The feastful table; all the roast and bread
About the house strew'd. When his highborne head
The rest beheld so low, up rush'd they all,
And ransack'd every corner of the hall
For shields and darts; but all red far their reach.
Then fell they foul on him with terrible speech,
And told him it should prove the dearest shaft
That ever pass'd him; and that now was saft
No shift for him, but sure and sudden death;
For he had slain a man, whose like did breathe
In no part of the kingdom; and that now
He should no more for games strive with his bow, But vultures eat him there. These threats they spent,
Yet every man believed that stern event Chanced' gainst the author's will. O fools, to think That all their rest had any cup to drink
But what their great Antinous began!
He, frowning, said: "Dogs, see in me the man Ye all held dead at Troy. My house it is That thus ye spoil, and thus your luxuries
File with my women's rapes; in which ye woo
The wife of one that lives, and no thought show
Of man's fit fear, or God's, your present fame,
Or any fair sense of your future name;
And, therefore, present and eternal death Shall end your base life." This made fresh fears breathe Their former boldness. Every man had eye
On all the means, and studied ways to fly
So deep deaths imminent. But seeing none, Eurynmachus began with suppliant moan
To move his pity, saying: "If you be
This isle's Ulysses, we must all agree,
In grant of your reproof's integrity,
The Greeks have done you many a wrong at home,
At field as many. But of all the sum Lies here contract in death; for only he Imposed the whole ill offices that we Are now made guilty of, and not so much Sought his endeavours, or in thought did touch
At any nuptials, but a greater thing
Employ'd his forces; for to be our king Was his chief object; his sole plot it was To kill your son, which love a hand would not pass,
But set it to his own most merited end,
In which end your just anger, nor extend Your stern wreak further; spend your royal powers
In mild ruth of your people; we are yours.
And whatsoever waste of wine or food
Our liberties have made, we'll make all
good
In restitutions. Call a court, and pass
A fine of twenty oxen, gold, and brass,
On every head, and raise your most rates
still,
Till you are pleased with your confessed foll.
Which if we fail to tender, all your wrath
It shall be justice in our bloods to bathe.”
"Eurymachus," said he, "if you would give
All that your fathers hoard, to make ye
live,
And all that ever you yourselves possess,
Or shall by any industry increase,
I would not cease from slaughter, till your bloods
Had bought out your intemperance in my goods.
It rests now for you that you either fight
That will escape death, or make your way by flight.
In whose best choice, my thoughts conceive, not one Shall shun the death your first hath undergo-
gone.”
This quite dissolved their knees.
Eurymachus,
Enforcing all their fears, yet counsel’d thus:
"O friends! This man, now he hath got the bow
And quiver by him, ever will bestow
His most inaccessible hands at us,
And ever leave, if we avoid him thus,
Till he hath strew’d the pavement with us
all;
And, therefore, join we swords, and on him fall
With tables forced up, and borne in oppose
Against his sharp shafts; when, being round enclosed
By all our onsets, we shall either take His horrid person, or for safety make His rage retire from out the hall and
gates;
And then, if he escape, we’ll make our states
Known to the city by our general cry.
And thus this man shall let his last shaft
fly
That ever his hand vaunted.” Thus he drew
His sharp-edged sword; and with a table
flew
In on Ulysses, with a terrible throat His fierce charge urging. But Ulysses smote
The board, and cleft it through from end to end
Borne at his breast, and made his shaft extend
His sharp head to his liver, his broad
breast
Fierced at his nipple; when his hand releas’d
Forthwith his sword, that fell and kiss’d the ground,
With cups and victuals lying scatter’d
round.
About the pavement; amongst which his brow
Knock’d the imbrayed earth, while in pains did flow
His vital spirits, till his heels shook out His feastful life, and hurl’d a throne
about
That way-laid death’s convulsions in his feet;
When from his tender eyes the light did fleet.
Then charg’d Amphinomus with his drawn blade
The glorious king, in purpose to have made
His feet forsake the house; but his assay
The prince prevented, and his lance gave
way
Quite through his shoulder, at his back; his breast
The fierce pile letting forth. His ruin prest
Groans from the pavement, which his forehead strook.
Telemachus his long lance then forsook (Left in Amphinomus) and to his sire Made fiery pass, not staying to acquire His lance again, in doubt that, while he drew
The fixed pile, some other might renew Fierce charge upon him, and his unharm’d
head Cleave with his back-drawn sword; for which he fled
Close to his father, bade him arm, and

THE TWENTY-SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

To serve the swine-herd and the oxen-herd.
Valour well arm'd is ever most prefer'd.
"Run then," said he, "and come before the last
Of these auxiliary shafts are past,
For fear, lest, left alone, they force my hand
From forth the ports." He flew, and brought to hand Eight darts, four shields, four helms. His own parts then First put in arme, he furnish'd both his men,
That to their king stood close; but he, as long As he had shafts to friend, enough was strong For all the woosers, and some one man still He made make even with earth, till all a hill Had rais'd in th' even-floor'd hall. His last shaft spent,
He set his bow against a beam, and went To arm at all parts, while the other three Kept off the woosers, who, unarm'd, could be No great assailants. In the well-built wall
A window was thrust out, at end of all
The house's entry; on whose utter side
There lay a way to town, and in it wide
And two-leaved folds were forged, that gave fit mean For flyers-out; and, therefore, at it then Ulysses placed Eumæus in close guard;
One only pass ope to it, which (prepared In this sort by Ulysses' gainst all pass)
By Agæus' tardy memory was In question call'd, who bade some one ascend
At such a window, and bring straight to friend
The city with his clamour, that this man Might quickly shoot his last. "This no one can Make safe access to," said Melanthius,
"For 'tis too near the hall's fair doors, whence thus
The man afflicts ye; for from thence there lies
But one strait passage to it, that denies Access to all, if any one man stand,
Being one of courage, and will countermand
Our offer to it. But I know a way
To bring you arms, from where the King doth lay His whole munition; and believe there is No other place to all the armouries
Both of himself and son." This said, a pair
Of lofty stairs he climb'd, and to th' affair
Twelve shields, twelve lances brought, as many casques
With horse-hair plumes; and set to bitter tasks
Both son and sire. Then shrunken Ulysses' knees,
And his loved heart, when thus in arms he sees
So many wooers, and their shaken darts;
For then the work shew'd as it ask'd more parts
To safe performance, and he told his son
That or Melanthius or his maids had done
A deed that foul war to their hands confirm'd.
"O father," he reply'd, "'tis I have err'd
In this caused labour; I, and none but I,
That left the door ope of your armoury.
But some, it seems, hath set a sharper eye
On that important place. Eumæus haste
And shut the door, observing who hath past
To this false action; any maid, or one
That I suspect more, which is Dulcis' son."
While these spake thus, Melanthius went again
For more fair arms; whom the renowned swain Eumæus saw, and told Ulysses straight
It was the hateful man that his conceit
Before suspected, who had done that ill;
And, being again there, ask'd if he should kill,
If his power served, or he should bring the swain
To him, t' inflict on him a several pain
For every forfeit he had made his house.
He answer'd: "I and my Telemaëchus Will here contain these proud ones in despite,
How much soever these stolen arms excite Their guilty courses, while you two take Possession of the chamber; the doors make Sure at your back, and then, surprising him,
His feet and hands bind, wrapping every limb
In plant chairs; and with a halter cast Above the wind-beam, at himself made fast, Ałat the column drew him, where alone
He long may hang, and praise where deserv'd.
THE TWENTY-SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

His vexed life before his death succeed," This charge, soon heard, as soon they put to deed, Stole on his stealth, and at the further end Of all the chamber saw him busily bend His hands to more arms; when they, still at door, Watch'd his return. At last he came, and bore In one hand a fair helm, in th' other held A broad and ancient rusty-rested shield, That old Laertes in his youth had worn, Of which the cheek-bands had with age been torn. They rush'd upon him, caught him by the hair, And dragg'd him in again; whom, crying out, They cast upon the pavement, wrapp'd about With sure and pinching cords both foot and hand, And then, in full act of their King's com- mand, A pliant chain bestow'd on him, and haled His body up the column, till he sealed The highest wind-beam; where made firmly fast, Enrages on his just infliction past This pleasable cavil: "Now you may All night keep watch here, and the earliest day Discern, being hung so high, to rouse from rest Your dainty cattle to the wooers' feast. There, as besifs a man of means so fair, Soft may you sleep, nought under you but air; And so long hang you." Thus they left him there, Made fast the door, and with Ulysses were All arm'd in th' instant. Then they all stood close, Their minds fire breathed in flames against their foes, Four in th' entry fighting all alone; When from the hall charged many a mighty one. But to them then Jove's seed, Minerva, came, Resembling Mentor both in voice and frame Of manly person. Passing well apaid Ulysses was, and said: "Now, Mentor, aid 'Gainst these odd mischiefs; call to memory now My often good to thee, and that we two Of one year's life are," Thus he said, but thought It was Minerva, that had ever brought To her side safety. On the other part, The wooers threaten'd; but the chief in heart Was Agelaus, who to Mentor spake: "Mentor, let no words of Ulysses make Thy hand a fighter on his feeble side Gainst all us wooers; for we firm abide In this persuasion, that when sire and son Our swords have slain, thy life is sure to run One fortune with them. What strange acts hast thou Conceit to form here? Thy head must bestow The wreak of theirs on us. And when thy powers Are taken down by these fierce steels of ours, All thy possessions, in-doors and without, Must raise on heap with his; and all thy rout Of sons and daughters in thy turrets bleed Wreak offerings to us; and our town stand freed Of all charge with thy wife." Minerva's heart Was fired with these braves, the approved desert Of her Ulysses chiding, saying: "No more Thy force nor fortitude as heretofore Will gain thee glory; when nine years at Troy White-wristed Helen's rescue did employ Thy arms and wisdom, still and ever used, The bloods of thousands through the field diffused By thy vast valour; Prim's broad-way'd town By thy grave parts was sack'd and overthrown; And now, amongst thy people and thy goods, Against the wooers' base and petulant bloods Stint'st thou thy valour? Rather mourning here Than manly fighting? Come, friend, stand we near, And note my labour, that thou may'st discern Amongst thy foes how Mentor's nerves will earn All thy old bounties." This she spake, but stay’d
Her hand, from giving each-way-often-
sway’d
Uncertain conquest to his certain use, But still would try what self-powers would produce
Both in the father and the glorious son.
Then on the wind-beam that along did ron
The smoky roof, transform’d, Minerva sat, Like to a swallow; sometimes cufing at The swords and lances, rushing from her
seat,
And up and down the troubled house did beat
Her wing at every motion. And as she Had roused Ulysses; so the enemy
Damastor’s son excited, Polybus, Amphinomus, and Deoptolemus, Eurynomus, and Polyctorides;
For these were men that of the wooing prase
Were most egregious, and the clearly best In strength of hand of all the desperate
rest
That yet survived, and now sought for their souls;
Which straight swift arrows sent among the fowls.
But first, Damastor’s son had more space
breath
To spend on their excitements ere his
death,
And said: That now Ulysses would forbear His dismal hand, since Mentor’s spirit was
there,
And blew vain vaunts about Ulysses’ ears;
In whose trust he would cease his massacres,
Rest him, and put his friend’s huge boasts in proof;
And so was he beneath the entry’s roof
Left with Telemachus and th’ other two.
"At whom," said he, "discharge no darts, but throw
All at Ulysses, rousing his faint rest;
Whom if we slaughter, by our interest
In Jove’s assistance, all the rest may yield Our powers no care, when he strows once the field."
As he then will’d, they all at random
threw
Where they supposed he rested; and then flaw
Minerva after every dart, and made Some strike the threshold, some the walls invade,
Some beat the doors, and all acts render’d vain
Their grave steel offer’d: which escaped, again
Came on Ulysses, saying: "O that we
The woe’s troop with our joint archery Might so assail, that where their spirits
dream
On our deaths first, we first may slaughter
them."
Thus the much-sufferer said; and all let
fly
When every man strook dead his enemy.
Ulysses slaughter’d Deoptolemus;
Euryades by young Telemachus
His death encounter’d. Good Eumaeus slow
Elatus; and Philetius overthrew
Fisander: all which tore the paved floor
Up with their teeth. The rest retired before
Their second charge to inner rooms; and
then Ulysses follow’d; from the slaughter’d
men
Their darts first drawing. While which work was done,
The woe’s threw with huge contention
To kill them all; when with her swallowing
Minerva cuff’d, and made their javelins ring
Against the doors and thresholds, as before.
Some yet did graze upon their marks. One tore
The Prince’s wrist, which was Amphi-
medon,
Th’ extreme part of the skin but touch’d
upon.
Ctesippus over good Eumaeus’ shield
His shoulder’s top did taint; which yet did yield
The lance free pass, and gave his hurt the
ground.
Again then charged the woe’s, and girt round
Ulysses with their lances; who turn’d
head,
And with his javelin strook Eurydamas
dead.
Telemachus dislied Amphimedon;
Eumaeus, Polybus; Philotelus won
Ctesippus’ bosom with his dart, and said, (Incquittance of the jester’s part he play’d,
The neat’s foot hurling at Ulysses;
"Now"
Great son of Polythearse, you that vow
Your wit to bitter taints, and love to wound
The heart of any with a jest, as scarce a
Your wit be with a laughter, never yielding
To fools in folly, but your glory building
On putting down in fooling, spitting forth Puff'd words at all sorts: cease to scoff at worth,
And leave revenge of vile words to the Gods,
Since their wits bear the sharper edge by evils.
And, in the mean time, take the dart I draw,
For that right hospitable foot you gave Divine Ulysses, begging but his own."
Thus spake the black-ox-herdsman;
and straight down
Ulysses struck another with his dart; Damastor's son. Telemaechus did part,
Just in the midst, the belly of the fair
Evanor's son; his fierce pile taking air
Out at his back. Flat fell he on his face, His whole brows knocking, and did mark the place.
And now, man-slaughtering Pallas took in hand
Her snake-fringed shield, and on that beam took stand
In her true form, where swallow-like she sat.
And then, in this way of the house and that,
The woeers, wounded at the heart with
fear,
Fled the encounter; as in pastures where Fat herds of oxen feed, about the field
(As if wild madness their instincts impell'd)
The high-fed bullocks fly, whom in the spring,
When days are long, gad-bees or breezes sting.
Ulysses and his son the flyers chased,
As when, with crooked beaks and scres, a cast
Of hill-bred eagles, cast-off at some game,
That yet their strengths keep, but put up in flame
The eagles' stoops; from which, along the field
The poor fowls make wing, this and that way yield
Their hard-flown pinions, then the clouds say;
For scape or shelter, their forlorn dismay All spirit exhaling, all wings' strength to carry
Their bodies forth, and, truss'd up, to the quarry
Their falconers ride in, and rejoice to see Their hawks perform a flight so fervently;

So, in their flight, Ulysses with his heir Did stoop and cuff the woeers, that the air
Broke in vast sighs; whose heads they shot and cleft,
The pavement boiling with the souls they reft.

Liones, running to Ulysses, took His knees, and thus did on his name invoke:
"Ulysses, let me pray thee to my place
Afford the reverence, and to me the grace,
That never did or said, to any dame Thy court contain'd, or deed, or word to blame;
But others so affected I have made Lay down their insolence; and, if the trade
They kept with wickedness have made them still Despise my speech, and use their wonted
ill,
They have their pence by the stroke of
death,
Which their desert divinely warranteth.
But I am priest amongst them, and shall I That nought have done worth death amongst them die?
From thee this proverb then will men
derive:
Good turns do never their mere deeds survive."
He, bending his displeased forehead, said:
"If you be priest amongst them, as you plead,
Yet you would marry, and with my wife too,
And have descent by her. For all that woo
Wish to obtain, which they should never
do,
Dames' husbands living. You must therefore pray
Of force, and oft in Court here, that the
day
Of my return for home might never shine:
The death to me wish'd, therefore, shall be thine."
This said, he took a sword up that was cast
From Agelaus, having strook his last,
And on the priest's mid neck he laid a stroke
That strook his head off, tumbling as he spoke.
Then did the poet Phemius (whose surname
Was call'd Terplades; who thither came Forced by the wooers) fly death; but being near
The court’s great gate, he stood, and parted there In two his counsels; either to remove
And take the altar of Heracean Jove (Made sacred to him, with a world of art Engraven about it, where were wont t’impair Laertes and Ulysses many a thigh
Of broad-brow’d oxen to the Deity)
Or venture to Ulysses, clasp his knee,
And pray his ruth. The last was the decree
His choice resolved on. “Twixt the royal throne
And that fair table that the bowl stood on With which they sacrificed, his harp he laid Along the earth, the King’s knees hugg’d, and said:
“Ulysses! Let my prayers obtain of thee
My sacred skill’s respect, and ruth to me.
It will hereafter grieve thee to have slain
A poet, that doth sing to Gods and men.
I of myself am taught, for God alone
All sorts of song hath in my bosom sown.
And I, as to a God, will sing to thee;
Then do not thou deal like the priest with me.
Thine own loved son Telemachus will say,
That not to beg here, nor with willing way
Was my access to thy high court accord.
To give the wooers my song after feast,
But, being many, and so much more strong,
They forced me hither, and compell’d my song.”
This did the prince’s sacred virtue hear,
And to the King, his father, said: “Forbear
To mix the guiltless with the guilty’s blood.
And with him likewise let our mercies save Medon the herald, that did still behave
Himself with care of my good from a child;
If by Eumaeus yet he be not kill’d,
Or by Philoctetus, nor your fury met,
While all this blood about the house was wet.”
This Medon heard, as lying hid beneath
A throne set near, half-dead with fear of death;
A new-dead ox-hide, as but there thrown by,
His serious shroud made, he lying there to fly.
But hearing this he quickly left the throne,
His ox-hide cast as quickly, and as soon,
The prince’s knees seized, saying: “O my love,
I am not slain, but here alive and move.
Abstain yourself, and do not see your sire Quench with my cold blood the unmeasured fire
That flames in his strength, making spoil of me,
His wrath’s right, for the wooers’ injury.”
Ulysses smiled, and said: “Be confident
This man hath saved and made me different,
To let thee know, and say, and others see.
Good life is much more safe than villany.
Go then, sit free without from death within:
This much renowned singer from the sin
Of these men likewise quit. Both rest you there, While I my house purge as it fits me here.”
This said, they went and took their seat without At Jove’s high altar, looking round about,
Expecting still their slaughter: when the King
Search’d round the hall, to try life’s hidden wing Made from more death. But all laid prostrate there In blood and gore he saw: whole shools they were,
And lay as thick as in a hollow creek
Without the white sea, when the fishers break
Their many-meshed draught-net up, there lie
Fish frisking on the sands, and fain the dry
Would for the wet change; but th’ all-seeing beam
The sun exhales hath suck’d their lives from them;
So one by other sprawl’d the wooers there.
Ulysses and his son then bid appear
The nurse Euryclea, to let her hear
His mind in something fit for her affair.
He ope the door, and call’d, and said:
“Reap, grave matron long since born, that art our spy
To all this house’s servile housewifery:
My father calls thee, to impart some thought That asks thy action.” His word found in nought
Her slack observance, who straight ope’d the door
And enter’d to him; when himself beheld
Had left the hall. But there the King she view'd Amongst the slain, with blood and gore imbrued.
And as a lion skulking all in night,
Far off in pastures, and come home, all night
In jaws and breast-locks, with an ox's blood
New feasted on him, his looks full of mood;
So look'd Ulysses, all his hands and feet Sbreckled with purple. When which sight did greet
The poor old woman (such works being for eyes
Of no soft temper) out she brake in cries,
Whose vent, though throughly open'd, he yet closed, Call'd her more near, and thus her plaints composed:
"Forbear, nor shriek thus, but vent joys as loud:
It is no piety to bemoan the proud,
Though ends befall them moving ne'er so much,
These are the portions of the Gods to such.
Men's own impatiens in their instant act
Sustain their plagues, which are with stay but rack'd.
But these men, Gods nor men had in esteem;
Nor good nor bad had any sense in them.
Their lives directly ill were, therefore, cause
That Death in these stern forms so deeply draws.
Recount, then, to me those licentious dames
That lost my honour and their sex's shame.
"I'll tell you truly," she replied: "there are Twice five-and-twenty women here that share
All work amongst them; whom I taught to spin,
And bear the just bands that they suffer'd in.
Of all which only there were twelve that gave Themselves to impudence and light behove,
Nor me respecting, nor herself, the Queen.
And for your son he hath but lately been
Of years to rule; nor would his mother bear
His empire where her women's labours were.
But let me go and give her notice now
Of your arrival. Sure some God doth show His hand upon her in this rest she takes,
That all these uproars bears and never wakes."
"Nor wake her yet," said he, "but cause to come Those twelve light women to this utter room."
She made all utmost haste to come and go,
And bring the women he had summon'd so.
Then both his swains and son he bade go call
The women to their aid, and clear the hall
Of those dead bodies, cleanse each board and throne
With wetted sponges: which with fitness done.
He bade take all the strumpets 'twixt the wall
Of his first court and that room next the hall,
In which the vessels of the house were scour'd,
And in their bosoms sheath their every sword,
Till all their souls were fled, and they had then Felt 'twas but pain to sport with lawless men.
This said, the women came, all round'd in moan,
And weeping bitterly. But first was done
The bearing thence the dead; all which beneath
The portico they stow'd, where death on death
They heap'd together. Then took all the pains Ulysses will'd. His son yet and the swains
With paring-shovels wrought. The women bore
Their parings forth, and all the clotter'd gore.
The house then cleansed, they brought the women out,
And put them in a room so wall'd about
That no means served their sad estates to fly.
Then said Telemachus: "These shall not die
A death that lets out any wanton blood,
And vents the poison that gave lust her food,
The body cleansing; but a death that chokes
The breath, and altogether that provokes
And seems as bellows to abhorred lust,
That both on my head post'd ephemera un-just,
And on my mother's, scandailling the Court,
With men debauch'd, in so abhor'd a sort."

This said, a halser of a ship they cast
About a cross-beam of the roof, which fast
They made about their necks, in twelve parts cut,
And haled them up so high they could not put Their feet to any stay. As which was done,
Look how a mavis, or a pigeon,
In any grove caught with a springe or net.
With struggling pinions 'gainst the ground doth beat
Her tender body, and that then strait bed Is sour to that swing in which she was bred;
So strived these taken birds, till every one
Her pliant halter had enforced upon Her stubborn neck, and then aloft was haul'd
To wretched death. A little space they sprawl'd,
Their feet fast moving, but were quickly
still.
Then fetch'd they down Melanthius, to fulfil
The equal execution; which was done
In portal of the hall, and thus begun:
They first slit both his nostrils, cropp'd each car,
His members tugg'd off, which the dogs did tear
And chop up bleeding sweet; and, while red-hot The vice-abhorr'd blood was, off they smote
His hands and feet; and there that work had end.
Then wash'd they hands and feet that blood had stain'd,
And took the house again. And then the King
Euryclea calling, bade her quickly bring
All-ill-expelling brimstone, and some fire,
That with perfumes cast he might make entire
The house's first integrity in all.
And then his timely will was, she should call
Her Queen and ladies; still yet charging her
That all the handmaids she should first
confer.
She said he spake as fitted; but, before,
She held it fit to change the weeds he
wore,
And she would others bring him, that not so
His fair broad shoulders might rest clad, and show
His person to his servants was to blame.
"First bring me fire," said he. She went, and came With fire and sulphur straight; with which the hall
And of the huge house all rooms capital
He throughly sweeten'd. Then went nurse
to call
The handmaid servants down; and up she went
To tell the news, and will'd them to present Their service to their sovereign. Down they came
Sustaining torches all, and pour'd a flame
Of love about their lord, with welcomes
home,
With huggings of his hands, with labour-some Both head's and forehead's kisses and embraces,
And piled him so with all their loving graces
That tears and sighs took up his whole desire;
For now he knew their hearts to him
entire.

THE END OF THE TWENTY-SECOND BOOK.
THE TWENTY-THIRD BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Ulysses to his wife is known,
A brief sum of his travels shown,
Himself, his son, and servants go T' approve the Wooers' overthrow.

ANOHER.

S. For all annoy Sustain'd before,
The true wife's joys
Now made the more.

The servants thus inform'd, the matron goes
Up where the Queen was cast in such repose, Affected with a fervent joy to tell
What all this time she did with pain conceal.
Her knees revok'd their first strength, and her feet
Were borne above the ground with wings, to greet
The long-grieved Queen with news her King was come;
And, near her, said: "Wake, leave this withdrawn room,
That now your eyes may see at length, though late,
The man return'd; which, all the heavy date
Your woes have rack'd out, you have long'd to see,
Ulysses is come home, and hath set free
His court of all your wooers, slaughtering all
For wasting so his goods with festival;
His house so vexing, and for violence done
So all ways varied to his only son,"
She answer'd her: "The Gods have made thee mad,
Of whose power now thy powers such proof have had.
The Gods can bind with follies wisest eyes,
And make men foolish so to make them wise.
For they have hurt even thy grave brain,
That bore
An understanding spirit heretofore.

Why hast thou waked me to more tears, when Moan
Hath turn'd my mind with tears into her own?
Thy madness much more blameful, that With lies
Thy lisaste is loaded, and both robs mine eyes
Of most delightful sleep, and sleep of them,
That now had bound me in his sweet extreme,
Embrace my lids and close my visual spheres.
I have not slept so much this twenty years;
Since first my dearest sleeping-mate was gone
For that too-ill-to-speak-of Ilion.
Hence, take your mad steps back. If any maid
Of all my train besides a part had play'd
So bold to wake, and tell mine ears such lies,
I had return'd her to her housewiferies
With good proof of my wrath to such rude dames;
But go, your years have saved their younger blames."
She answer'd her: "I nothing wrong your ear,
But tell the truth. Your long-miss'd lord is here:
And, with the wooers' slaughter, his own hand
In chief exploit, hath to his own command Reduced his house; and that poor guest was he,
That all those wooers wrought such injury.
Telemachus had knowledge long ago
That 'twas his father, but his wisdom so Observed his counsels, to give surer end
To that great work to which they did contend."
This call'd her spirits to their conceiving places;
She sprung for joy from blames into embraces
Of her grave nurse, wiped every tear away
From her fair cheeks, and then began to say What nurse said, over thus: "O nurse, can this
Be true thou say'st? How could that hand of his Alone destroy so many? They would still Troop all together. How could he then kill Such numbers so united?" "How," said
she,
"I have not seen nor heard; but certainly The deed is done. We sat within in fear,
The doors shut on us, and from thence might hear
The sighs and groans of every man he
slew,
But heard nor saw more, till at length there flew
Your son's voice to mine ear, that call'd
to me,
And bade me then come forth; and then I see Ulysses standing in the midst of all Your slaughter'd wooers, heap'd up, like a wall,
One on another round about his side.
It would have done you good to have described
Your conquering lord all-smeared with blood and gore
So like a lion. Straight, then, off they borne
The slaughter'd carcasses, that now before The fore-court gates lie, one on other piled.
And now your victor all the hall, defiled
With stench of hot death, is perfuming
round,
And with a mighty fire the hearth hath
crown'd.
Thus, all the death removed, and every room
Made sweet and sightly, that yourself should come
His pleasure sent me. Come, then, take you now
Your mutual fills of comfort. Grief on you Hath long and many sufferings laid;
which length,
Which many sufferings, now your virtuous strength
Of uncorrupted chasteness hath conierr'd
A happy end to. He that long hath err'd is safe arrived at home; his wife, his son, Found safe and good; all ill that hath been done
On all the doers' heads, though long pro-long'd,
His right hath wreak'd, and in the place they wrong'd."

She answer'd: "Do not you now laugh and boast
As you had done some great act, seeing most
Into his being; for you know he won,
Even through his poor and vile condition,
A kind of prompted thought that there was placed
Some virtue in him fit to be embraced
By all the house; but most of all by me:
And by my son that was the progeny
Of both our loves. And yet it is not he,
For all the likely proofs ye plead to me:
Some God hath stain the wooers, in disdain
Of the abhorred pride he saw so reign
In those base works they did. No man avive,
Or good or bad, whoever did arrive
At their abodes once, ever could obtain Regard of them; and therefore their so
vain
And vile deserts have found as vile an end.
But, for Ulysses, never will extend His wish'd return to Greece; nor he yet lives."

"How strange a Queen are you," said she, "that gives
No truth your credit, that your husband,
set
Close in his house at fire, can purchase yet
No faith of you, but that he still is far From any home of his! Your wit's at war
With all credulity ever; and yet now
I'll name a sign shall force belief from you:
I bathed him lately, and beheld the scar
That still remains a mark too ocular
To leave your heart yet blinded; and I then Had run and told you, but his hand was fain
To close my lips from th' acclamation
My heart was breathing, and his wisdom
won
My still retention, till he gave me leave And charge to tell you this. Now then receive
My life for gage of his return; which take
In any cruel fashion, if I make All this not clear to you." "Loved nurse," said she,
"Though many things thou know'st, yet these things be Veil'd in the counsels th' uncreated Gods
Have long time mask'd in; whose dark periods
'Tis hard for thee to see into. But come, Let's see my son, the slain, and he by where
They had their slaughter. This said, down they went; When, on the Queen's part, divers thoughts were spent, If, all this given no faith, she still should stand Aloof, and question more; or his hugg'd hand And loved he should at first assay With free-given kisses. When her doubtful way Had pass'd the stony pavement, she took seat Against her husband, in the opposite heat The fire then cast upon the other wall. Himself set by the column of the hall, His looks cast downwards, and expected still When her incredulous and curious will To shun ridiculous error, and the shame To kiss a husband that was not the same, Would down, and win enough faith from his sight. She silent sat, and her perplexed plight Amaze encounter'd. Sometimes she stood clear He was her husband; sometimes the ill wear His person had put on transform'd him so That yet his stamp would hardly current go. Her son, her strangeness seeing, blamed her thus: "Mother, ungentle mother! tyrannous! In this too-curious modesty you show; Why sit you from my father, nor bestow A word on me 't inquire and clear such doubt As may perplex you? Found man ever out One other such a wife? that could forbear Her love, lord's welcome home, when twenty year In infinite sufferance he had spent apart. No fire so hard is as a woman's heart." "Son," said she, "amaze contains my mind, Nor can I speak and use the common kind Of those inquiries, nor sustain to see With opposite looks his countenance. If this be My true Ulysses now return'd, there are Tokens betwixt us of more fitness far To give me argument he is my lord; And my assurance of him may afford My proofs of joy for him from all these eyes With more decorum than object their guise To public notice. The much-sufferer brake In laughter out, and to his son said: "Take Your mother from the prease, that she may make Her own proofs of me, which perhaps may give More cause to the acknowledgments that drive Their shew thus off. But now, because I go So poorly clad, she takes disdain to know So loathed a creature for her loved lord. Let us consult, then, how we may accord The town to our late action. Some one slain Hath made the all-left slaughterer of him fain To fly his friends and country; but our swords Have slain a city's most supportful lords, The chief peers of the kingdom: therefore see You use wise means t' uphold your victory." "See you to that, good father," said the son, "Whose counsels have the sovereign glory won From all men living. None will strive with you; But with unquestion'd girlands grace your brow, To whom our whole alacrities we vow In free attendance. Nor shall our hands leave Your onsets needy of supplies to give All the effects that in our powers can fall." "Then this," said he, "to me seems capital Of all choice courses: Bathe we first, and then Attire we freshly; all our maids and men Enjoining likewise to their best attire. The sacred singer then let touch his lyre, And go before us all in graceful dance; That all without, to whose ears shall advance Our cheerful accents, or of travellers by, Or firm inhabitants, solemnity Of frolic nuptials may imagine here, And this perform we, lest the massacre Of all our wooers be divulged about The ample city, ere ourselves get out And greet my father in his grove of trees; Where, after, we will prove what policies Olympus shall suggest to overcome Our latest toils, and crown our welcome home."
This all obey'd; bathed, put on fresh attire
Both men and women did. Then took his lyre
The holy singer, and set thrist on fire
With songs and faultless dances; all the court
Rung with the footings that the numerous sport
From jocund men drew and fair-girdled dames;
Which heard abroad, thus flew the common names:
"This sure the day is when the much-woo'd Queen Is richly wed. O wretch! that hath not been So constant as to keep her ample house Till th' utmost hour had brought her foremost spouse."
Thus some conceived, but little knew the thing.
And now Eurynome had bathed the King,
Smooth'd him with oils, and he himself attired
In vestures royal. Her part then inspired
The Goddess Pallus; deck'd his head and face
With infinite beauties, gave a goodly grace
Of stature to him, a much plumper plight
Through all his body breathed; curls soft and bright Adorn'd his head withal, and made it show
As if the flowery hycacinth did grow
In all his pride there, in the general trim
Of every lock and every curious limb.
Look how a skilful artisan, well-seen
In all arts metalline, as having been Taught by Minerva and the God of fire, Doth gold with silver mix so that entire They keep their self-distinction, and yet so
That to the silver from the gold doth flow
A much more artificial lustre than his own,
And thereby to the gold itself is grown
A greater glory than if wrought alone,
Both being stuck off by either's mition;
So did Minerva hers and his combine,
He more in her, she more in him, did shine.
Like an Immortal from the bath he rose,
And to his wife did all his grace dispose,
Encountering thus her strangeness: "Cruel dame
Of all that breathe, the Gods past steel and flame Have made thee ruthless. Life retains not one Of all dames else that bears so overgrown
A mind with abstinence; as twenty years to miss her husband drown'd in woes and tears,
And at his coming keep aloof, and fare
As of his so long absence and his care
No sense had seized her. Go, nurse, make a bed,
That I alone may sleep; her heart is dead
To all reflection." To him thus replied
The wise Penelope: "Man half-deified,
'Tis not my fashion to be taken straight
With bravest men, nor poorest use to slight.
Your mean appearance made not me retire.
Nor this your rich shew makes me now admire,
Nor moves at all; for what is all to me,
If not my husband? All his certainty
I knew at parting; but, so long apart,
The outward likeness holds no full desert
For me to trust to. Go, nurse, see address
A soft bed for him, and the single rest Himself affects so. Let it be the bed
That stands within our nuptial chambered, Which he himself made. Bring it forth from thence,
And see it furnish'd with magnificence."
This said she to assay him, and did stir
Even his establish'd patience; and to her Whom thus he answer'd: "Woman!" thy words prove My patience strangely. Who is it can move
My bed out of his place? It shall oppress Earth's greatest understander; and, unless Even God himself come, that can easily grace Men in their most skills, it shall hold his place;
For man, he lives not that (as not most skill'd,
So not most young) shall easily make it yield;
If, building on the strength in which he flows,
He adds both levers too and iron crowns:
For in the fixture of the bed is shown
A master-piece, a wonder; and 'twas done
By me, and none but me, and thus was wrought:
There was an olive-tree that had his growth
Amidst a hedge, and was of shadow proud,
Fresh, and the prime age of his verdure show'd,
His leaves and arms so thick that to the eye
It shew'd a column for ushering.
To this had I a comprehension
To build my bridal bower; which all of Thick as the tree of leaves, I raised, and cast
A roof about it nothing meanly graced,
Put glued doors to it; that oped art enough.
Then from the clive every bread-leaved bough
I lopp'd away; then fell'd the tree; and
then
Went over it both with my axe and plane, Both govern'd by my line. And then I hew'd
My curious bedstead out; in which I shew'd
Work of no common hand. All this began,
I could not leave till to perfection
My pains had brought it; took my wimple, boared
The holes, as fitted, and did last afford
The varied ornament, which shew'd no want
Of silver, gold, and polish'd elephant.
An ox-hide dyed in purple then I threw Above the cords. And thus to curious view
I have not have objected honest sign
To prove I author nought that is not mine.
But if my bed stand unremoved or no,
O woman, passeth human wit to know."
This sunk her knees and heart, to bear so true
The signs she urged; and first did tears ensue
Her rapt assurance; then she ran and spread
Her arms about his neck, kiss'd oft his head,
And thus the curious stay she made exculsed:
"Ulysses! be not angry that I used Such strange delays to this; since heretofore
Your suffering wisdom hath the garland wore From all that breathe; and 'tis the Gods who, that, thus With mutual miss so long afflicting us,
Have caused my coyness; to our youths envied
That wish'd society that should have tied
Our youths and years together; and since now Judgment and Duty should our age allow As full joys therein as in youth and blood,
See all young anger and reproof withstood
For not at first sight giving up my arms:
My heart still trembling lest the false alarms
That words oft strike up should ridicule me.
Had Argive Helen known credulity
Would bring such plagues with it, and her again,
As authoress of them all, with that foul stain
To her and to her country, she had stay'd
Her love and mixture from a stranger's bed;
But God impell'd her to a shameless deed,
Because she had not in herself decreed,
Before th' attempt, that such acts still were shent
As simply in themselves as in th' event.
By which not only she herself sustains,
But we, for her fault, have paid mutual pains.
Yet now, since these signs of our certain bed
You have discover'd, and distinguished From all earth's others, no one man but you Yet ever getting of it th' only show, Nor one of all dames but myself and she My father gave, old Actor's progeny (Who ever guarded to ourselves the door Of that thick-shaded chamber) I no more
Will cross your clear persuasion, though till now
I stood too doubtful and austere to you."
These words of hers, so justifying her stay, Did more desire of joyful man convey To his glad mind, than if at instant sight
She had allow'd him all his wishes' right.
He wept for joy, t' enjoy a wife so fit
For his grave mind, that knew his depth of wit,
And held chase virtue at a price so high.
And as sad men at sea when shore is nigh,
Which long their hearts have wish'd, their ship quite lost
By Neptune's rigour, and they vex'd and tost Twixt winds and black waves, swimming for their lives,
A few escaped, and that few that survives,
All drench'd in foam and brine, crawl up to land,
With joy as much as they did worlds command;
So dear to this wife was her husband's sight;
Who still embraced his neck, and had, till light
Display'd her silver ensign, if the Dame,
That bears the blue sky intermix'd with flame
In her fair eyes, had not infect'd her thought.
On other joys, for loves so hardly brought.
To long'd-for meeting; who th' extended night
Withheld in long date, nor would let the light
Her wing-hooved horse join (Lampus, Phaeton) Those ever colts that bring the morning on To worldly men; but, in her golden chair,
Down to the ocean by her silver hair Bound her aspirations. Then Ulysses said;
"O wife, nor yet are my contentions stay'd:
A most unmeasured labour long and hard Asks more performance; to it being prepared
By grave Tiresias, when down to hell
I made dark passage, that his skill might tell My men's return and mine. But come, and now Enjoy the sweet rest that our Fates allow."
"The place of rest is ready," she replied,
"Your will at full serve, since the defied
Have brought you where your right is to command.
But since you know, God making understand
Your searching mind, inform me what must be Your last set labour; since 'twill fall to me,
I hope, to hear it after, tell me now.
The greatest pleasure is before to know."
"Unhappy!" said Ulysses; "To what end Importune you this labour? It will lend Nor you nor me delight, but you shall know:
I was commanded yet more to bestow
My years in travel, many cities more
By sea to visit; and when first for shore
I left my shipping, I was will'd to take A naval oar in hand, and with it make My passage forth till such strange men I met
As knew no sea, nor ever salt did eat
With any victuals, who the purple beaks
Of ships did never see, nor that which breaks
The waves in curls, which is a fan-like oar,
And serves as wings with which a ship doth soar.
To let me know, then, when I was arrived
On that strange earth where such a people lived,
He gave me this for an unfailing sign:
When any one that took that oar of mine,
Borne on my shoulder, for a corn-cleane fan,
I met ashore, and shew'd to be a man
Of that land's labour, there had I command
To fix mine oar, and offer on that strand
Of imperial Neptune, whom I must implore,
A lamb, a bull, and a sow-ascending boar;
And then turn home, where all the other Gods
That in the broad heaven made secure abodes
I must solicit (all my curious heed Given to the several rites they have decreed)
With holy hecatombs; and then, at home
A gentle death should seize me, that would come From out the sea, and take me to his rest
In full ripe age, about me flying blest
My loving people; to which, he pressed.
The sequel of my fortunes were engaged."
"If then," said she, "the Gods will please I impose
A happier being to your fortune's close Than went before; your hope gives comfort strength
That life shall lend you better days at length."
While this discourse spent mutual speech, the bed Eurynome and nurse had made, and spread With richest furniture, while torches spent Their parcel gilt thereon. To bed then went
The aged nurse; and, where their sovereigns were, Eurynome, the chambermaid, did bear
A torch, and went before them to their rest;
To which she left them and for hers address
The King and Queen then now, as newly wedd.
Resumed the old laws of th' embracing bed.
Telemaclus and both his herdsmen then Dissolved the dances both to maids and men;
Who in their shady roofs took timely sleep.
The bride and bridgroom having ceased to keep Observed love-joys; from their fit delight
They turn'd to talk. The Queen then did recite
What she had suffer'd by the hateful rout
Of harmful woers, who had eat her out
So many oxen and so many sheep,
How many tun of wine their drinking deep Had quite exhausted. Great Ulysses then Whatever slaughterc he had made of men,
Whatever sorrows he himself sustain'd,
Repeated amply; and her ears remain'd
With all delight attentive to their end,
Nor would one wink sleep till he told her all,
Beginning where he gave the Cicons fall;
From thence his pass to the Lotophagi;
The Cyclop's acts, the putting out his eye,
And wreck of all the soldiers he had eat, No least ruth shown to all they could entreat;
His way to Æclus; his prompt receipt
And kind dismissal; his enforced retreat
By sudden tempest to the fusty main,
And quite distraction from his course again;
His landing at the Læstrigonian port,
Where ships and men in miserable sort
Met all their spoils, his ship and he alone
Got off from the abhor'd confusion;
His pass to Circe, her deceits and arts;
His thence descention to th' infernal parts;
His life's course of the Theban prophet learn'd, Where all the slaughter'd Grecians he discom't,
And loved mother; his astonish'd ear
With what the Sirens' voices made him
hear;
His scape from th' erring rocks, which Scylla was,
And rough Charybdis, with the dangerous
pass
Of all that touch'd there; his Sicilian Offence given to the Sun; his every man
Destroy'd by thunder valley'd out of heaven,
That split his ship; his own endeavours
driven
To shift for succours on th' Ogygian shore,
Where Nymph Calypso such affection bore
To him in his arrival, that with feast She kept him in her caves; and would have best
His welcome life with an immortal state Would he have stay'd and lived her nuptial mate;
All which she never could persuade him to:
His pass to the Phaeacians spent in woe;
Their hearty lives and lived her nuptial
mate;
A God descended from the starry sphere;
Their kind disposition of him home with
gold,
Brass, garments, all things his occasions would.
This last word used, sleep seized his weary eye
That salves all care to all mortality.

In mean space Pallas entertain'd intent That when Ulysses thought enough time spent
In love-joys with his wife, to raise the day,
And make his grave occasions call away.
The morning rose and he, when thus he
said:
"O Queen, now satiate with afflictions
laid
On both our bosoms (you oppressed here
With cares for my return, I everywhere
By Jove and all the other Deities tost Even till all hope of my return was lost)
And both arrived at this sweet haven, our
bed,
Be your care used to see administered
My house-possessions left. Those sheep, that were Consumed in surfeits by your wooers here,
I'll forage to supply with some; and more
The suffering Grecians shall be made restore,
Even till our stalls receive their wonted fill.
:"And now, to comfort my good father's ill
Long suffer'd for me, to the many-tree'd
And ample vineyard grounds it is decreed
In my next care that I must haste and see His long'd-for presence. In the mean time, be Your wisdom used, that since, the sun ascended,
The fame will soon be through the town extended
Of those I here have slain; yourself, got close
Up to your chamber, see you there repose, Cheer'd with your women; and nor look afford
Without your court, nor any man a word."
This said, he arm'd; to arms both son and swain
His power commanding, who did entertain His charge with spirit, oped the gates and
out,
He leading all. And now was hurl'd about Aurora's ruddy fire; through all whose
light
Minerva led them through the town from sight.

THE END OF THE TWENTY-THIRD BOOK.
THE TWENTY-FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

THE ARGUMENT.

By Mercury the Woosers' souls
Are usher'd to th' infernal pools.
Ulysses with Laertes met,
The people are in uproar set Against them, for the woosers' ends;
Whom Pallas stays and renders friends.

ANOTHER.

n. The uproar's fire
The people's fall:
The grandsire, sire,
And son, to all.

CYLLENIAN Hermes, with his golden rod,
The woosers' souls, that yet retain'd abode
Amids their bodies; call'd in dreadful rout Forth to th' Infernals; who came murmuring out.
And as amid the desolate retreat
Of some vast cavern, made the sacred seat
Of austere spirits, bats with breasts and wings
Clasp fast the walls, and each to other clings,
But, swept off from their cov'nts, up they rise
And fly with murmurs in amazeful guise
About the cavern; so these, grumbling, rose
And flock'd together. Down before them goes None-hurtling Mercury to Hell's broad ways,
And straight to those straits, where the ocean stays
His lofty current in calm deeps, they flew.
Then to: he snowy rock they next withdrew.
And to the close of Phoebus' orient gates.
The nation then of dreams, and then the states
Of those souls' idols that the weary dead
Gave up in earth, which in a flowery mead Had habitable situation.
And there they saw the soul of Thetis' son,
Of good Patroclus, brave Antilochus,
And Ajax, the supremely strenuous
Of all the Greek host next, Peleion;
All which assembled about Maia's son.

And to them, after, came the mournful ghost
Of Agamemnon, with all those he lost
In false Agamemnon's court. Achilles then Beholding there that mighty king of men, Depuis, his plight, and said: "O Atreus' son!
Of all heroes, all opinion
Gave thee for Jove's most loved, since most command
Of all the Greeks he gave thy eminent hand
At siege of Ilion, where we suffer'd so.
And is the issue this? that first in woe
Stern Fate did therefore set thy sequel down?
None borne past others' Fate can pass his own.
I wish to heaven that in the height of all
Our pomp at Ilion, Fate had sign'd thy fall;
That all the Greeks might have advanced to thee
A famous sepulchre; and Fame might see Thy son given honour in thy honour'd end;
But now a wretched death did Fate extend To thy confusion and thy issue's shame.
"O Thetis' son," said he, "the vital flame Extinct at Ilion, far from th' Argive fields,
The style of blessed to thy virtue yields.
About thy fall the best of Greece and Troy
Were sacrificed to slaughter. Thy just joy Conceived in battle with some worth forgot
In such a death as great Apollo shot
At thy encounters. Thy brave person lay Hid in a dusty whirlwind, that made way
With human breaths spent in thy ruin's state.
Thou, great, wert greatly valued in thy fate.
All day we fought about thee; nor at all
Had ceased our conflict, had not Jove let fall
A storm that forced off our unwilling feet.
But, having brought thee from the fight to fleet,
Thy glorious person, bathed and balm'd, we laid Aloft a bed; and round about thee laid
The Greeks warm tears to thy deplored decease, Quite daunted; cutting all their curls increase.
Thy death draw a divine voice through the seas
That started up thy mother from the waves;
And all the marine Godheads left their caves,
Consorting to our fleet her rapt repair.
The Greeks stood frightened to see sea and air.
And earth combine so in thy loss’s sense,
Had taken ship and fled for ever thence,
If old much-knowing Nestor had not stay’d
Their rushing off; his counsels having sway’d
In all times former with such cause their courses;
Who bade contain themselves, and trust their forces,
For all they saw was Thetis come from sea,
With others of the watry progeny,
To see and mourn for her deceased son.
Which stay’d the fears that all to flight had won;
And round about thee stood th’ old Seagod’s seeds
Wretchedly mourning, their immortal seeds Spreading upon thee. All the sacred Nine
Of deathless Muses paid thee dues divine,
By varied tunas their heavenly voices vening,
All in deep passion for thy death consenting.
And then of all our army not an eye
You could have seen undrown’d in misery,
The moving Muse so ruled in every mind.
Full seventeen days and nights our tears confined To celebration of thy mourn’d end;
Both men and Gods did in thy moan con-tend.
The eighteenth day we spent about thy head
Of dying fire; black oxen, fattest sheep
We slew past number. Then the precious spoil, Thy corse, we took up, which with floods of oil
And pleasant honey we embalm’d; and then Wrapped thee in those robes that the Gods did rain,
In which we gave thee to the hallow’d flame;
To which a number of heroical name,
Of all our enemies there, at home a friend
And wife have given me inglorious end?"
While these thus spake, the Argus-killing spy Brought near Ulysses' noble victory
To their renew'd discourse, in all the ends
The wooers suffer'd, and shew'd those his friends;
Whom now amaze invaded with the view
And made give back; yet Agamemnon knew Melanthius' heir, much-famed Amphimedon,
Who had in Ithaca guest-favours shown
To great Atrides; who first spake, and said:
"Amphimedon, what sufferance hath been laid On your alive parts that hath made you make This land of darkness the retreat you take,
So all together? all being like in years?
Nor would a man have chosen, of all the peers
A city honours, men to make a part More strong for any object? Hath your smart Been felt from Neptune, being at sea? his wrath
The winds and waves exciting to your seath?
Or have offensive men imposed this fate?
Your oxen driving, or your flocks' estate?
Or for your city fighting and your wives,
Have deaths untimely seized your best-timed lives?
Inform me truly. I was once your guest,
When I and Menelaus had profess'd
First arms for Ilium, and were come ashore
On Ithaca, with purpose to implore Ulysses' aid, that city-racing man,
In wreak of the adulterous Phrygian.
Retain not you the time? A whole month's date.
We spent at sea, in hope to instigate
In our arrival old Laertes' son, Whom, hardly yet, to our design we won."
The soul made answer: "Worthiest king of men,
I well remember every passage then You now reduce to thought, and will relate
The truth in whole form of our timeless fate:
"We woo'd the wife of that long-absent king,
Who (though her second marriage were a thing Of most hate to her) she would yet deny
At no part our affections, nor comply
With any in performance, but decreed,
In her delays, the cruel Fates we seed.
Her craft was this: She undertook to weave
A funeral garment destined to receive The corse of old Laertes; being a task
Of infinite labour, and which time would ask.
In midst of whose attempt she caused our stay
With this attraction: 'Youths, that come in way
Of honour'd nuptials to me; though my lord
Abide amongst the dead, yet cease to board.
My choice for present nuptials, and sustain,
Lest what is past me of this web be vain,
Till all receive perfection. 'Tis a weed Disposed to wrap in at his funeral need
The old Laertes; who, possessing much,
Would, in his want of rites as fitting, touch
My honour highly with each vulgar dame."
Thus spake she, and persuaded; and her frame
All day she labour'd, her day's work not small,
But every night-time she unwrought it all,
Three years continuing this imperfect task;
But when the fourth year came her sleights could mask
In no more covert, since her trusted maid
Her whole deceit to our true note betray'd.
With which surpriz'd, she could no more protract
Her work's perfection; but gave end exact.
To what remain'd; wash'd up, and set thereon
A gloss so bright that like the sun and moon
The whole work shew'd together. And when now
Of mere necessity her honour'd vow
She must make good to us, ill-fortune brought Ulysses home; who yet gave none one thought
Of his arrival, but far-off at-field
Lived with his herdsman; nor his trust would yield Note of his person, but lived there a guest,
Ragg'd as a beggar in that life protest.
At length Telemachus left Pylos' sand,
And with a ship fetch'd soon his native land,
When yet not home he went, but laid his way
Up to his herdsman where his father lay;
And where both laid our deaths. To town then bore
The swine-herd and his King, the swain before.
Telemachus in other ways bestow'd
His course home first, to associate us that woo'd.
The swain the King led after, who came on Ragged and wretched, and still lean'd upon A borrow'd staff. At length he reach'd his home, Where (on the sudden and so wretched come)
Nor we, nor much our elders, once did dream
Of his return there, but did wrongs extreme
Of words and blows to him; all which he bore
With that old patience he had learn'd before.
But when the mind of Jove had rais'd his own,
His son and he fetch'd all their armour down,
Fast lock'd the doors, and, to prepare their use,
He will'd his wife, for first mean, to produce
His bow to us, to draw; of which no one Could stir the string; himself yet set upon
The deadly strength it held, drew all with ease, Shot through the steels, and then began to seize Our armless bosoms; striking first the breast
Of king Antinous, and then the rest
In heaps turn'd over; hopeful of his end
Because some God, he knew, stood firm his friend.
Nor proved it worse with him, but all in flood
The pavement straight blush'd with our vital blood,
And thus our souls came here; our bodies laid Neglected in his roofs; no word convey'd
To any friend to take us home and give Our wounds fit balm'ing; nor let such as live
Entomb our deaths; and for our fortunes shed
Those tears and dead rites that renown the dead."

Atrides' ghost gave answer: "O blest son
Of old Laertes; thou at length hast won
With mighty virtue thy unmatched wife.
How good a knowledge, how untouch'd a life,
Hath wise Penelope! How well she said Her husband's rights up, whom she loved a maid!
For which her virtues shall extend applause
Beyond the circles frail mortality draws;
The deathless in this vale of death comprising
Her praise in numbers into infinite rising,
The daughter Tyndarus begat begot
No such chaste thoughts, but cut the virgin knot
That knit her spouse and her with murtherous swords.
For which posterities shall put hateful words
To notes of her, that all her sex defamed,
And for her ill shall even the good be blamed.
To this effect these these digressions made
In hell, earth's dark and ever-hiding shade.
Ulysses and his son, now past the town,
Soon reach'd the field elaborately grown
By old Laertes' labour; when, with care
For his lost son, he left all court affairs,
And took to this rude upland; which with toil
He made a sweet and habitable soil;
Where stood a house to him; about which ran,
In turnings thick and labyrinthian,
Poor nooks, where his necessary men
That did these works (of pleasure to him then) Might sit, and eat, and sleep. In his own house An old Sicilian dame lived, studious
To serve his sour age with her cheerful pains.
Then said Ulysses to his son and swains:
"Go you to town, and for your dinner kill
The best swine ye can choose; myself will still Stay with my father, and assay his eye
If my acknowledged truth it can descry,
Or that my long time's travel doth so change
My sight to him that I appear as strange."
Thus gave he arms to them, and home he hied, Ulysses to the fruitful field applied.
His present place; nor found he Dolius there,
His sons, or any servant, anywhere
In all that spacious ground; all gone from thence Were dragging bushes to repair a fence,
Old Dolius leading all. Ulysses found
His father far above in that fair ground, Employ'd in pruning of a plant; his weeds
All torn and tatter'd; fit for homely deeds.
But not for him. Upon his legs he wore Patch'd boots to guard him from the brambles' gore;
His hands had thorn-proof hedging mittens on;
His head a goat-skin casque; through all which shone
His heart given over to abjectest moan.
Him when Ulysses saw consumed with age:
And all the ensigns on him that the rage
Of grief presented, he broke out in tears;
And, taking stand then where a tree of pears
Shot high his forehead over him, his mind
Had much contention if to yield to kind,
Make straight way to his father, kiss, embrace,
Tell his return, and put on all the face
And fashion of his instant-told return;
Or stay th' impulsion, and the long day burn
Of his quite loss given in his father's fear
A little longer; trying first his cheer
With some free dailiance, th' earnest being so near.
This course his choice preferr'd, and forth
he went:
His father then his aged shoulders bent
Beneath what years had stoop'd, about a tree Busily digging: "O, old man," said he,
"You want no skill to dress and deck your ground,
For all your plants doth order'd distance bound:
No apple, pear, or olive, fig, or vine,
Nor any plat or quarter you confine
To grass or flowers, stands empty of your care,
Which shews exact in each peculiar;
And yet (which let not move you) you be stow
No care upon yourself; though to this show
Of outward irksomeness to what you are You labour with an inward toilful care,
Which is your age; that should wear all without More neat and cherishing. I make no doubt That any sloth you use procures your lord
To let an old man go so much abhor'd
In all his weeds; nor shines there in your look A fashion and a goodliness so took With abject qualities to merit this Nasty entreaty. Your resemblance is A very king's, and shines through this retreat.
You look like one that having wash'd and eat
Should sleep securely, lying sweet and neat.
It is the ground of age, when cares abuse it,
To know life's end, and, as 'tis sweet, to use it.
"But utter truth, and tell what lord is he
That rates your labour and your liberty?
Whose orchard is it that you husband thus?
Or quit me this doubt, for if Ithaca
This kingdom claims for his, the man I found
At first arrival here is hardly sound
Of brain or civil; not enduring stay
To tell nor hear me my inquiry out
Of that my friend; if still he bore about His life and being, or were div'd to death,
And in the house of him that harbouroth
The souls of men. For once he lived my guest:
My land and house retaining interest
In his abode there; where there sojourn'd none
As guest from any foreign region
Of more price with me. He derived his grace From Ithaca, and said his father was Laertes, surnamed Arcesilas.
I had him home, and all the offices
Perform'd to him that fitted any friend.
Whose proof I did to wealthy gifts extend:
Seven talents gold; a bowl all silver, set
With pots of flowers; twelve robes that had no pleat;
Twelve cloaks, or mantles, of delicious dye;
Twelve inner weeds; twelve suits of tapestry.
I gave him likewise women skill'd in use
Of loom and needle, freeing him to choose Four the most fair." His father, weeping, said:
"Stranger! The earth to which you are convey'd
THE TWENTY-FOURTH BOOK OF HOMER'S ODYSSEYS.

Is Ithaca; by such rude men possess'd,
Unjust and insolent, as first address'd
To your encounter; but the gifts you gave Were given, alas! to the ungrateful grave.
If with his people, where you now arrive,
Your fate had been to find your friend alive,
You should have found like guest-rites from his hand;
Like gifts, and kind pass to your wished
land.
But how long since received you for your guest,
Your friend, my son, who was th' unhappiest
Of all men breathing, if he were at all?
O cruel fate, and ill-aspects let fall!
A cruel influence for him: far away
From friends and country destined to allay
The sea-bred appetites; or, left alone,
To be by fowls and upland monsters tore;
His life's kind authors nor his wealthy wife
Bemoaning, as behooved, his parted life;
Nor closing, as in honour's course it lies,
To all men dead, in bed his dying eyes.
But give me knowledge of your name and
race.
What city bred you? where the anchoring-
place
Your ship now rides at lies that shored you here
And where your men? or, if a passenger
In others' keels you came, who (giving land
To your adventures here, some other strand
To fetch in further course) have left to us Your welcome presence?" His reply was thus:
"I am of Alybande, where I hold
My name's chief house, to much renown extoll'd.
My father Aphidantes, famed to spring
From Polypemon, the Molossian king.
My name Epeirus. My taking land
On this fair isle was ruled by the command
Of God or fortune, quite against consent
Of my free purpose, that in course was bent
For th' isle Sicaia. My ship is held Far from the city, near an ample field.
And for Ulysses, since his pass from me
'Tis now five years. Unbless'd by destiny,
That all this time hath had the fate to err!
Though, at his parting, good birds did augur
His putting off, and on his right hand flew;
Which to his passage my affection drew,
His spirit joyful; and my hope was now
To guest with him, and see his hand bestow Rites of our friendship." This a cloud of grief
Cast over all the forces of his life.

With both his hands the burning dust he swept Up from the earth, which on his head be heapt,
And fetch'd a sigh as in it life were broke:
Which grieved his son, and gave so sharp a stroke
Upon his nostrils with the inward stripe.
That up the vein rose there; and weeping ripe
He was, to see his sire feel such woe.
For his dissembled joy; which now let go,
He sprung from earth, embraced and kid's his sire,
And said: "O father: he of whom y' enquire Am I myself, that, from you twenty years,
Is now return'd. But do not break in tears, Fornow must we not forms of kind maintain,
But haste and guard the substance. I have slain
All my wife's wooers, so revenging now Their wrong so long time suffer'd. Take not you
The comfort of my coming then to heart
At this glad instant, but, in proved desert
Of your grave judgment, give moan glad suspense,
And on the sudden put this consequence
In act as absolute, as all time went To ripening of your resolute assent."
All this haste made not his staid faith so
free
To trust his words; who said: "If you are he, Approve it by some sign." "This scar then see,"
Replied Ulysses, "given me by the boar Slain in Parnassus; I being sent before By yours and by my honour'd mother's will,
To see your sire Autolycus fulfill
The gifts he vow'd at giving of my name.
I'll tell you, too, the trees, in goodly frame
Of this fair orchard, that I ask'd of you Being yet a child, and follow'd for your
show,
And name of every tree. You gave me
then
Of fig-trees forty, apple-bearers ten,
Pear-trees thirteen, and fifty ranks of vine:
Each one of which a season did confine For his best eating. Not a grape did grow That grew not there, and had his heavy
brow
When Jove's fair daughters, the all-ripening
Hours Gave timely date to it." This charged the powers
Both of his knees and heart with such impression
Of sudden comfort, that it gave possession
Of all to Trance; the signs were all so true;
And did the love that gave them so renew.
He cast his arms about his son and sunk,
The circle slipping to his feet; so shrunk
Were all his age's forces with the fire
Of his young love rekindled. The old sire
The son took up quite lifeless. But his breath Again respiring, and his soul from death
His body's powers recovering, out he cried,
And said: "O Jupiter! I now have tried
That still there live in heaven remembering Gods
Of men that serve them; though the periods
They set on their appearances are long
In best men's sufferings, yet as sure as strong
They are in comforts; be their strange delays Extended never so from days to days.
Yet see the short joys or the soon-mix'd fears
Of helps withheld by them so many years:
For if the wooers now have paid the pain
Due to their impious pleasures, now again Extreme fear takes me, lest we straight shall see
The Ithacensians here in mutiny;
Their messengers dispatch'd to win to friend
The Cephallian cities." "Do not spend Your thoughts on these cares," said his suffering son,
"But be of comfort, and see that course run
That best may shun the worst. Our house is near, Telemachus and both his herdsman there
To dress our supper with their utmost haste;
And thither haste we." This said, forth they past, Came home, and found Telemachus at feast
With both his swains; while who had done, all drest
With baths and balms and royally array'd
The old king was by his Sicilian maid.
By whose side Pallas stood, his crook'd, age straightening,
His flesh more plumping, and his looks enlightening.
Who issuing then to view, his son admired
The Gods' aspects into his form inspired,
And said: "O father, certainly some God
By your addression in this state hath stood,
More great, more reverend, rendering you by far At all your parts than of yourself you are."
"I would to Jove," said he, "the Sun, and she
That bears Jove's shield, the state had stood with me
That help'd me take-in the well-built towers Of strong Nericus (the Cephalian powers
To that fair city leading) two days past.
While with the wooers thy conflict did last,
And I had then been in the wooers' wreak;
I should have help'd thee so to render wreak;
Their stubborn knees, that in thy joy's desert Thy breast had been too little for thy heart."
This said, and supper order'd by their men,
They sat to it; old Dolius entering then;
And with him, tired with labour, his sons came,
Call'd by their mother, the Sicilian dame
That brought them up and dress'd their father's fare.
As whose age grew, with it increased her care
To see him served as fitted. When thus set
These men beheld Ulysses there at meat.
They knew him, and astonish'd in the place
Stood at his presence; who, with words of grace, Call'd to old Dolius, saying: "Come and eat,
And banish all astonishment: your meat
Hath long been ready, and ourselves made stay, Expecting ever when your wished way
Would reach amongst us." This brought fiercely Old Dolius from his stand; who ran upon.
With both his arms abroad, the King, and kiss'd
Of both his rapt up hands the either wrist,
Thus welcoming his presence: "O my love,
Your presence here, for which all wishes strove,
No one expected. Even the Gods have gone
In guide before you to your mansion;"
Welcome, and all joys to your heart content.
Knows yet Penelope? Or shall we send Some one to tell her this? "She knows," said he,
"What need these troubles, father, touch at thee?"
Then came the sons of Dolicus, and again
Went over with their father's entertain;
Welcomed, shook hands, and then to feast
Sat down.
About which while they sat, about the town
Fame flew, and shriek'd about the cruel death.
And fate the wooers had sustain'd beneath Ulysses' roofs. All heard; together all
From hence and thence met in Ulysses' hall,
Short-breathed and noiseful, bore out all the dead
To instant burial, while their deaths were spread
To other neighbour-cities where they lived,
From whence in swiftest fisher-boats arrived
Men to transfer them home. In mean space here
The heavy nobles all in council were;
Where, met in much heap, up to all arose
Extremely-grieved Eupitheus, so to lose His son Antinous; who, first of all,
By great Ulysses' hand had slaughterous fall.
Whose father, weeping for him, said: "O friends,
This man hath author'd works of dismal ends;
Long since conveying in his guide to Troy
Good men, and many that did ships employ,
All which are lost, and all their soldiers dead;
And now the best men Cephallenia bred His hand hath slaughter'd. Go we then (before His scape to Pylos, or the Elean shore, Where rule the Epeans) gainst his horrid hand;
For we shall grieve, and infamy will brand
Our names for ever, if we see our sons
And brothers end in these confusions, Revenge left uninflicted. Nor will I Enjoy one day's life more, but grieve and die
With instant onset. Nor should you survive
To keep a base and beastly name alive.

Haste, then, lest flight prevent us." This with tears
His griefs advised, and made all sufferers
In his affliction. But by this was come Up to the council from Ulysses' home (When sleep had left them, which the slaughterers there
And their self-dangers from their eyes in fear
Had two nights intercepted) those two men
That just Ulysses saved out of the slain;
Which Medon and the sacred singer were,
These stood amidst the council; and the fear
The slaughter had impress'd in either's look Stuck still so ghastly, that amaze it strook
Through every there beholder. To whose ears
One thus enforced, in his fright, cause of theirs:
"Attend me, Ithacensians; This stern fact Done by Ulysses was not put in act Without the Gods' assistance. These self eyes Saw one of the immortal Deities Close by Ulysses, Mentor's form put on
At every part: and this sure Deity shone
Now near Ulysses, setting on his bold
And slaughterous spirit; now the points control'd
Of all the wooers' weapons, round about
The arm'd house whisking, in continual rout
Their party putting, till in heaps they fell."
This news new fears did through their spirits impel,
When Halitherses (honour'd Mentor's son,
Who of them all saw only what was done Present and future) the much-knowing man
And aged hero, this plain course ran Amongst their counsels: "Give me likewise ear,
And let me tell ye, friends, that these il's bear
On your malignant spleens their sad effects,
Who not what I persuaded gave respects,
Nor what the people's pastor. Mentor, said:
That you should see your issues' follies stay'd
In those foul courses; by their petulant life
The goods devouring, scandalizing the wife
Of no mean person; who, they still would say,
Could never more see his returning day.
This said, he pray'd; and she a mighty force
Inspired within him, who gave instant course
To his brave-brandish'd lance; which strook the brass
That check'd Eupitheus' casque, and thrust his pass Quite through his head; who fell, and sounded falling,
His arms the sound again from earth recalling.
Ulysses and his son rush'd on before,
And with their both-way-headed darts did gore
Their enemies' breasts so thick, that all had gone
The way of slaughter, had not Pallas thrown Her voice betwixt them, charging all to stay
And spare expense of blood. Her voice did fray
The blood so from their faces that it left
A greenish paleness; all their hands it reft

Of all their weapons, falling thence to earth;
And to the common mother of their birth,
The City, all fled, in desire to save The lives yet left them. Then Ulysses gave A horrid shout; and like Jove's eagle flew In fiery pursuit, till Saturnius threw His smoking lightning 'twixt them, that had fall Before Minerva, who then out did call Thus to Ulysses: "Born of Jove! abstain
From further bloodshed: Jove's hand in the slain Hath equall'd in their pains their prides to thee.
Abstain, then, lest you move the Deity."
Again then, 'twixt both parts the seed of Jove, Athenian Pallas, of all future love
A league composed; and for her form took choice
Of Mentor's likeness both in limb and voice.

END OF THE TWENTY-FOURTH AND LAST BOOK.
APPENDIX.
[The Seven Books of Homer's Iliad published by Chapman in 1561 comprised the first, second, and seventh to eleventh books inclusive. The later books were considerably revised when the complete Iliad appeared: some of the more important of the original readings have been given in footnotes. But the first book and the second, as far as the catalogue of ships, were complete and re-written. The earlier version is therefore added here in an appendix, together with a fragment of the eighteenth book, Achilles' Shield, also published in 1598, and translated into the nine-syllable metre as the Odyssey.]
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Apollo's Priest to th' Argive fleet doth bring Gifts for his daughter, prisoner to the king:
For which her tender'd freedom he entreats;
But being dismiss'd with contumelious threats
At Phoebus' hands by vengeful prayer he seeks
To have a plague inflicted on the Greeks:
Which done, Achilles doth a council cite And forthwith Chalcis in the king's despite
To tell the truth why they were punish'd so:
From whence their fierce and deadly strife doth grow.

In which Achilles so extremely raves,
That Goddess Thetis from her throne of waves,
(Ascending Heaven) of Jove assistance won
To afflict the Greeks, by absence of her son,
And make the General himself repent
To wrong so much his army's ornament.
This found by Juno, she with Jove contends,
Till Vulcan with Heaven's cup the quarrel ends.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.

Alpha, the prayer of Chryses sings,
The army's plague, th' incensed kings.

Achilles' baneful wrath resound, great Goddess of my verse,
That through th' afflicted host of Greece did worlds of woes disperse,
And timeless sent by trods to hell the glory-thirsting souls
Of great Heroes; but their limbs, left food for beasts and fowls:
So Jove's high counsel took effect, from whence that jar begun
'Twixt Agamemnon, King of men, and Thetis' Godlike son.

What God did give them up to strife?
Jove's and Latona's seed,
Who angry with the King for wrongs against his Priest decreed, Excited sickness through the host, which much life put to flight:
His Priest came to the Greeks' swift fleet, with ransom infinite.
The golden Sceptre and the Crown, far-shooting Phoebus wore,
To free his daughter; which in hand he did propose before
The peers of Greece, whom he besought, but both th' Atrides most,
Who were most mighty in the rule of all th' imperial host.

"Atrides and the well-greaved Greeks, Gods that in heavenly halls
Make blest abodes, renown your swords with Priam's razed walls,
And grant you safe retreat to Greece:
mean time accept of me
This holy ransom, and return my dearest daughter free,
Approving your religious minds to him;
from Jove descends
Divine Apollo that his darts through all the earth extends.
The general presence well allow'd the Priest and his demands,
And thought the shining presents fit to free his daughter's bands:
But Agamemnon was displeased, and did his gifts refuse,
Dismiss'd him with unfit repulse, and this hard charge did use:
"Hence, doating Priest, nor let me find thy stay protracted now,
In circuit of our hollow fleet, or once hereafter know
Of thy return; for if I do, the Crown thou dost sustain.

And golden sceptre of thy God, thou shalt present in vain:
Thy daughter I will not dissolve, till age deflower her head;
Till in my Royal Argive Court, her beauties strow my bed,
And she her twisting spindle turns far from her native shore,
To which if thou wilt safe return, tempt our contempt no more."

This answer strock the Priest with fear, who served his stern command In silence shunning his abode, and walked along the strand
Of Neptune's high resounding rule, when from the fleet far gone.
Thus pray'd he to the King of Flames, fair-hair'd Latona's son:
"Hear thou that bear'st the silver Bow that dost on Chrysa shine,
That strongly govern'st Tenedos, and Cylla most divine,
O Sminthus, if ever thy thankful Tenedan
crown'd,
Or with fat thighs of bulls and goats halloa made thy fires abound," Give full effect to my desires, and for these tears I shed,
Let Greeks pay pains, and with thy shafts in troops be stricken dead:"
Thus pray'd he, and Apollo heard, who at the heart offended, Down from the topless brows of heaven into the host descended;
His bow and quiver cover'd round his golden shoulders wore,
His angry arrows, as he moved, did thunder on the shore;
So like the lowering night he walk'd, and took his wreatheal stand Athwart the fleet; his silver bow with his hard-loving hand
A dreadful sound did make, and first the mules and dogs he wounds
And after with the breasts of men his mortal shafts confounds.
The funeral piles did ever burn with heaps of men he slew,
Nine days together through the host his poison'd arrows flew,
The tenth a council through the camp
Aeacides design'd [into his mind,
Which Juno with the silver arms did put Who stood remorseful of the Greeks, to ev'rywhere Employ the greedy fires of death. And now convented were
The chief commanders of the camp, who (altogether placed)
From sacred Thetis' swift-foot son, this supposition pass'd:
"Atrides, some new error now, procures this plague I fear
To drive us hence, if with our lives we may th' impulsion bear
Of this our double pestilence, th' infection and the war:
But let us some grave Prophet ask, or Priest that sees from far,
Or some interpreter of dreams (for dreams proceed from Jove)
Who may report what sin doth thus the Delphian Archer move [offer'd shep, To punish us; if hecatombs or fumes of Or soundest goats, or voves unkept, which now our seals may keep,
That his sharp arrows in our breasts he may refrain to steep."
Achilles having said, sat down, when Calchas, Thetis's son,
The best of Augurs, that was skill'd in all things present, done Deeds past, and every act to come; and did direct the course [force
Of th' Argive Fleet to Ilion, for his prophetic (Given by Apollo) next stood up, and thus did silence break:
"'Jove-loved Achilles, if thou wish and wilt command me speak
My knowledge of Apollo's wrath, covenant and swear to me.
That I ready with thy hand and sword, thou wilt assistant be Both now and in affairs to come; for him that most doth sway
The sovereign empire of the host, whom all the Greeks obey.
I fear my sentence will offend: and if a mighty state
[jordy hate
Against a much inferior man conceive a Though he depress it for a time, yet he reserves it still Till bow advantage of his power have perfected his will.
Say then if thou wilt warrant me against the worst event?"' Achilles answer'd: "All thou knowest, speak and be confident.
For by the dear-belonged of Jove, the day's eternal King,
From whom (O Calchas) to the Greeks thou Oracles dost sing,
Not one of all the peers shall lay offensive hands on thee
While my truth-shielding forces last, or that in earth I see;
No, not if Agamemnon's frown be object of thy fears,
Who to be sovereign of us all the glorious title bears."
Then took the blameless prophet heart, and said: "They were not vows Yet unperform'd, nor hecatombs, but love
That Phoebus shows
In honour of his priest disgraced by Agamemnon's will,
That scorn'd his ransom, and reserves his dearest daughter still:
For this Apollo sends this plague, and yet will send us more,
Nor will contain from our distress his heavy hand, before
The black-eyed virgin be released, un-bought and ransomless,
And convoy'd hence with hecatombs, till her chaste foot do press
The flowery Chrysa's holy shore; and so, if we shall please.
Th' offended God, perhaps he may recreate this keen disease."
Achilles, the great Hero rose, the far commanding King
[force Achilles, full of forward soul; excess of anger's sting.]
Spersed black fumes round about his breast, his eyes like burning fire Sparkled beneath his bended brows, as lightnings of his ire;
And looking sternly on the priest, “Prophet of ill (said he,)
That never did presage my good, but took’st delight to be Offensive in thy auguries, not one good word proceeds From thy rude lips, nor is perform’d in any future deeds;
And now thou frowardly dost preach, in midst of all the Greeks, That heaven’s far-shooter in this plague, the restitution seeks
Of my fair prisoner, who retain’d, is cause of our annoy;
And all because thou know’st in her I take such special joy,
And wish to bring her to my court, since I esteem her more Than Clytemnestra, that to me the nuptial contract swore
When she was yet a maid and young; nor doth she merit less Both for her body’s comely form, her native tow Ardness,
Her wisdom and her huswifery, yet will I render her [prefer.
If it be best, for to my good my soldiers’ I
But in her place some other prize see quickly you prepare,
That I alone of all the Greeks lose not my honour’s share,
Which needs must be confess’d un fit: but thus, my friends, you see,
That what by all your minds is mine, another takes from me.”
To him the excellent’st of foot, divine Achilles, said, “Amidst and most covetous man, what prize can be repaid
By these our noble-minded friends for thy desired supply?
All know how scantily we’ve stored our common treasury;
For what the spoiled cities gave each soldier for his pain,
Hath daily shared by our consents, which to exact again
Were base and gnominous; but to the God resign Thy pleasure for our common good; and if the most divine
So grace us that this well-wall’d town we level with the plain,
We fourfold will repay the loss thy fortunes now sustain.”

The king replied: “Be not deceived, nor think thou art strong
And godlike framed, thou canst persuade my patience to my wrong;
Or that thy feet into thy breath can transmigrated be
To pass me with thy sleights as well as in outrunning me.
Would’st thou thyself enjoy thy prize, and I sit dispossess’d?
Then let the Greeks apply themselves as much to my request,
And with some other fit amends my satisfaction make;
If not I’ll make mine own amends, and come more oft and take Thine Ajax or Ulysses’ prize (men of most excellence, And most admitted to thy love) and let him take offence
On whom I shall perform my vow; but touching this design,
We will hereafter or elsewhere decide what shall be mine.
Now let us launch the sable bark into the holy seas,
Ship chosen rowers on her banks, and hecatombs to ease
Our instant plague, and we will cause bright Chrysaos to ascend, Whose charge to some Greek prince in chief ‘tis fit we should commend,
Or to the royal Idomen or Ajax Telamon,
Or to the prudent counsellor, divine Laertes’s son,
Or to the terriblest of men, thyself, Αἰκαίδες;
That offerings made by thy strong hands, Apollo may appease.”
Αἰκαίδες, observing well the urged authority
Of his proud foe with brows contract, return’d this sharp reply:
“O thou possess’d with impudence that in command of men Affect’st the brute mind of a fox, for so thou fill thy den
With forced or betrayed spoils thou feel’st no sense of shame;
What soldier can take any spirit to put on, for thy fame.
Contempt of violence and death, or in the open field,
Or secret ambush, when the hire his high desert should yield,
Is before hand condemn’d to glut thy gulf of avarice.
For me, I have no cause to account these Titans enemies, Nor of my oxen nor my horse have they made hostile spill, Nor hurt the comfortable fruits of Phthia's populous soil;
For many shady distances, hills and resounding seas
Are interposed; but our kind arms are lifted to release (Thou senseless of all royalty) thine and thy brother's fame, Imprison'd in disgraceful Troy, which nothing doth inflame Thy dogged nature to requite with favour or renown
Our ceaseless and important toils; for which what is mine own, Given by the general hands of Greece, yet by the valour got
Of my free labours, thy rude lust will wrest into thy lot.
In distribution of all towns won from our Trojan foes,
Still more than mine to thy heap'd store
th' uneven proportion rose,
But in proportion of the fight, the heaviest part did rise
To my discharge, for which I find much praise and little prize.
But I'll endure this odds no more, 'tis better to retire,
And to my country take my fleet, not feeding thy desire,
Both with the wrack of my renown and of my wealth beside,
Exhausted by the barbarous thirst of thy degenerate pride."
"Affect'st thou flight," replied the king,
"begone, and let not me
Nor any good of mine be cause to stay the fleet or thee;
There are now besides will stay and do my state renown,
But chiefly prudent Jupiter. Of all his hand doth crown
Thou still art bitterest to my rule, content-tion and stern flight
To thee are unity and peace; if thou exceed in might, [as our own,
God gave it thee, and 'tis absurd to glory
In that we have not of ourselves, but is from others grown.
Home with thy fleet and Myrmidons, there let thy rule be seen,
I loathe so much to fear thy rage or glorify thy spleen,
That to thy face I threaten thee, and since
th' offended sun
Takes Chryses from me, whom by right of all consents I won, Yet I, with mine own ship and men, must send her to her sire.
Myself will to thy tent repair, and take thy heart's desire,
Even bright-check'd Briseis from thine arms, that then thy pride may swear Atrides is thy better far, and all the rest may fear [tibious heart
To vaunt equality with me, or take am-To stand with insolence compared in any adverse part."
This set Felides' soul on fire, and in his bristled breast
His rational and angry parts a doubtful strife possest
If he should draw his wreakful sword, and forcing way through all, Make Agamemnon's bravery fit for bloody
funeral,
Or else restrain his froward mind, and calm his anger's heat.
Whilst in his thus divided self these agitations beat,
And he his mighty sword unsheathed, wise
Pallas was in place, Forebent by great Saturnia, that makes the white embrace,
Who of the two late enemies had wondrous love and care:
She stood behind Æacides, and by the golden hair
She pull'd him to her, and to him she only did appear,
Who turning to her heavenly sight, was strok'd with reverend fear, But by her dreadful sparkling eyes her godhead straight he knew,
And said, "Why comes Jove's daughter here, the arrogance to view Of Atreus' son? 'twere fitter death his barbarous pride should bow, Whose author I have vow'd to be, and will perform my vow."
She answer'd, "'Tis not best for thee;
and I am come t'appase Thy violent fury, if thou wilt, for my persuasions cease,
Sent by the ivory-finger'd Queen that tenders both your lives, Forbear then thy adviseless sword, and rule that part that strives, Reproving him with words more safe, and here I promise thee
What shall be perfectly perform'd: thou shalt presented be
With gifts of thousand eminence to thy received wrong;
And therefore serve thy deities, and can use thy tongue."
"'Tis fit," Pelides did reply, "your godhead should be pleased, Though at my soul I be incensed; who is for heaven appeased Heaven will appease his wrongs for him."
This said, his ample hand
Closed in his silver hilt forthore, and did the Dame's command.
So to the heavenly house she flew of Aegis-bearing Jove
To keep her state with other Queens that sway the thrones above.
She gone, Pelides did renew breach of his temper's peace,
And gave the king despiteful words nor yet his wrath would cease.
"Thou great in wine with dogged looks, and heart but of a hurt,
That never with the foremost troops in fight darest shake thy dart,
Nor in dark ambush arm thyself, these seem too full of death For thy cold spirit; 'tis more safe, with contumelious breath,
To show thy manhood 'gainst a man that contradicts thy lust,
And with thy covetous valour take his spoils with force unjust;
Because thou knowest a man of fame will take wrong ere he be A general mischief; nor shamest thou though all the army see.
Thou soldier-eating king, it is on beasts thou rule hast won,
Or else this wrong had been the last thou ever shouldst have done;
But I protest and swear to thee a great and sacred oath Even by this sceptre which with kings, laws and religion both Was wont to institute and held a symbol of the right,
[beawes the might
By partless justice minister'd, and still Of princes carried in their hands, protecting all the laws
We all receive from Jupiter, which gives sufficient cause
To make thee think I mean t' observe what I so deeply swear,
That as it never since it grew did leaves or branches bear
Cut from the hills, and can no more produce delightful shade;
So since thy most inhuman wrongs have such a slaughter made
Of my affections borne to thee, they never shall renew
Those sweet and comfortable flowers with which of late they grew.

But when the universal host shall faint with strong desire
Of wrong'd Achilles, though thou pine, thou never shalt aspire Help to their miseries from me, when underneath the hand
Of bloody Hector cold as death their bodies spread the sand, And thou with inward hands of grief, shalt bear thy desperate mind
That to the most kind-worthy Greek thou wert so most unkind."
This said, he threw against the ground the sceptre he sustaine'd, Through which, in bright transfixed drops, a shower of gold was rain'd.
So sat the king, and he enarged, when up old Nestor stood.
The thundering Pylean orator, whose tongue pour'd forth a flood Of honey-sweeting eloquence: two ages he had lived,
Of sundry-language men, all which were dead, yet he survived,
And now amongst the third he reign'd.
He thus bespeak the peers:
"O Gods, what mighty woes will pierce through all true Achive ears,
And how will Priam and his sons with all the Ilion seed
Even at their hearts rejoice to hear these hainous discords breed
'Twixt you who in the skill of fight and counsels do excel
All other Greeks; let me advise this bitterness expel:
You are not both so old as I, who lived with men that were
Your better's far, yet ever held my exhortations dear;
[of them,
I never saw, nor ever shall behold the like
Of whom my counsels were esteem'd; the god-like Poliphem, Exadius, and Perithous, and Drias great in power,
And Theseus wedded to renown with an immortal dower,
And Caeo Evan, a right worthy man, all which the strongest were
Of all the earth then nourished, the strongest past compare,
And with the strongest Centaurs fought that ever mountain bred,
And bravely slew them, and with these my Lyceans forth I led Far from the land of Apia, themselves did call me forth,
And to my utmost strength I fought; and these were men whose worth
No men that now live durst withstand, yet these would gladly hear.
My counsels, and obey them too; then do
Greater conceits than greater men, but as they did obey; Obedience better is than rule, where rule errs in his sway. [damsel take, Let not the king officiously by force the But yield her whom the Greeks at first Pelides' prize did make.
Nor let a king's heir against a king with such contempt repine,
Since never seepre-state attain'd an honour so divine.
And rightfully, by Jove's high gift; though better born thou be Because a goddess brought thee forth; yet better man is he Since his command exceeds so much; then let the king subdue
His spirit's greatness, and myself to Thetis' son will sue [mightiest bar
That he depose his fury's seat, who is the Betwixt the Grecians' safe estate, and power of impious war."
"With good decorum, reverend sire," Atrides did reply,
"Thou givest us counsel, but this man above us all will fly;
All in his power he will conclude, and over all men reign,
Commanding all, all which I think his thoughts attempt in vain,
What if the ever being state to him such strength the fords,
Is it to rend up men's renown with contumelious words?"
Achilles interrupted him, "Thou might'st esteem me base
disgrace;
And cowardly to let thee use thy will in my
To bear such burthens never were my strength and spirits combined,
But to reform their insolence, and that thy soul shall find Were it not hurt of common good more than mine own delight,
But I not sothing Nestor's suit, for right's sake reverence right Which thou dost servilely command, but violate it quite.
And this even in thy entraillé print, I'll not profane my hand
With battle in my lust's defence; a girl cannot command
My honour and my force like thine, who yet commands our host,
Slave live he to the world that lives slave to his lusts engross'd.
But feed it; come, and take the dame, safe go thy violent fleet;
But whatsoe'er else thou find'st aboard my sable fleet
Dare not to touch without my leave; for feel my life mischance
If then thy black and lust-burnt blood flow not upon my lance."
Contending thus in words opposed they rose, the council brake.
Pelides to his tents and ships his friend and men did take;
Atrides launch'd the swift-sail'd ship into the brackish seas
And put therein the hecatomb, that should the God appease.
Twice ten selected rowers then, then Chryséis forth he brings,
Made her ascend the sacred ship; with her the grace of kings, Wise Ithacus ascended too. All shipp'd together, then Neptune's moist wilderness they plow, the king charged all his men Should hallowed lustrations use; which done, into the flood
They threw the offal, and the bark purged from polluted blood.
Thus sweet and due solemnities they to Apollo keep,
Of bulls and goats, near to the shore of the unfruitful deep;
The savour wrapt in clouds of smoke ascended to the skies,
And thus they sanctified the Camp with general sacrifice.
Yet Agamemnon's froward thoughts did not from discord cease,
But call'd to him Talthibius and grave Euribates, [high commands, Heralds and careful ministers of all his And this injurious embassy committed to their hands:
"Go to Achilles' tent and take the bright-cheek'd Briseis there;
If he deny, tell him myself with more extreme offence
Will come and force her from his arms, with unresisted bands."
The heralds all unwilling went along the barren sands;
The tents and fleet of Myrmidons they reach'd, and found the king
In his black ship and tent, his looks mark'd with his anger's sting.
Greeting their entry; which amazed and made them reverence stand,
Not daring to salute his majesty, or what they sought demand.
THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

He seeing them loth th' injurious cause of his offence to be,
"Welcome, ye heralds, messengers of gods and men," said he,
"Come near; I blame not you, but him that 'gainst your wills doth send To have the lovely Briseis brought: Patroclus, princely friend, Bring forth the dame, and render her, pleased be their sovereign then.
But here before the blessed gods, before the eyes of men,
Before your ignominious king, be faithful witnesses
Of what I bear; if ever work in future
Of any plague to be removed from your unhappy host,
Be needful of my friendly hand, wrong hath your refuge lost.
Your king not present harms conceives, much less succeeding woes,
But led by envious counsel raves and knows not what he does;
Nor how to win his name renown, being careful to foretell How with least death his men might fight, and have them bulwark'd well.
This said, Patroclus well allow'd the patience of his friend, Brought Briseis forth, and to her guides her comforts did commend
With utmost kindness; which his friend could not for anguish use;
She wept, and look'd upon her love; he sigh'd and did refuse.
O how his wisdom with his power mightily contend,
His love encouraging his power and spirit, that durst descend
As far as Hercules for her: yet wisdom all subdued, Wherein a high exploit he show'd and sacred fortitude.
Briseis without her soul did move and went to th' Acheans tents, Achilles sever'd from his friends melts anger in lament.
Upon the shore of th' aged deep, viewing the purple seas,
And lifting his broad hands to heaven he did with utterance ease His manly bosom, and his wrongs to Theosis thus relate:—
"O mother, since you brought me forth to breathe so short a date,
Th' Olympian thunderer might commix some boon with my short breath,
That what my mind's power, wanting time, contracts in timeless death Short life well graced might amplify; which Jupiter denies,
As if his gifts being given in vain, men justly might despise, Admitting Atreus' son to vaunt the enforcement of my prize."
His mother (seated in the deeps of Neptune's soften'd sky
[like a cloud,
With old Oceanus) forsakes the grey seas.
And presently before him sat, whom ruthless sorrows bow'd.
She minion'd him with her soft hand, and said, "Why mourns my son?
What bold woe does invade thy breast?
conceal not what is done,
But tell, that we may both partake one mournful injury."
He sighing, said, "Why should I tell? thou know'st as well as I
We went and ramrack'd sacred Thebes Aetion's wealth by town,
Brought thence the spoil and parted it,
each man possess'd his own:
Th' Atrides beauteous Chryseis choose'd, whose liberty was sought By her grave father, Phoebus' priest, that to the navy brought A precious ransom, even the crown and sceptre of his God;
Which Atreus' impious son despised, and threaten'd his abode, Dismissing him with all disgrace; for which his vengeful prayer Attain'd of Phoebus such a plague as poison'd all the air;
In which his shafts flew through our camp,
and many soldiers died.
We had an Augur, that our course of mischief prophesied.
I urged the appeasement of the Gods, which vex'd Atrides so,
He threaten'd his amends on me, which with disgraceful woe
He hath perform'd; his heralds now fetch'd Briseis from my tent, Whose beauty was my valour's prize by every Greek's consent.
If then thou canst assist thy son, ascend Olympus' top,
Pray Jove, if ever his estate thy godhead help'd to prop,
By ministry of words, or works, he will assistance grant.
Since often in my father's court mine ears have heard the vaunt (As women love to tell their worth) thou didst avert alone,
Of all th' immortals cruel scath from that cloud-maker's throne, When Juno, Neptune, and the dame he shook out of his brain, Offer’d to bind him: thy repair their furies did restrain,
And brought the hundred-handed power to high Olympus’ Hall, Whom gods do Briares name, but men
Egeon call,
Whose strength redoubled his strong sire’s;
he fray’d the immortal states,
And drave them from the impious chains, should execute their hates:
For which in Jove’s own throne he joy’d:
let this remember’d be,
Sit ever praying at his foot, never forsake his knee, Till (if by any means he mean to help Troy) now he design
To fight for Ilion and expel the Greeks to sea again:
Or slaughter’d at their fleet, their lives may wreak their king’s offence,
And he in his acknowledged harms confess my eminence.”

Theis pour’d out reply in tears: “Ah me, my son,” said she,
“Why bearing thee to such hard fate, did my breasts nourish thee?
O woman! thou wouldst contain thyself at fleet from wrongs and tears, Since fates allow thee little life, and that too swiftly wears:
Soon must thou die, and yet the date is hasten’d with such woes
As none endures; and therefore sad and hapless were my throes That brought thee forth; but Jupiter, that doath in thunder joy,
I will importune as thou will’st, and all my powers employ,
Scaling Olympus’ snowy brows to order, if I may,
unmoved stay
An honourable wreak for thee; meantime Hid in thy tent, and scorn the Greeks; thought of their aid abstain; Jove by Oceanus yesterday, with all th’ immortal train,
Went to the holy Æthiops’ feast, which thrice four days will end:
Then will he turn to heaven again, and then I will ascend His Pyramis, whose base is brass, where round about his knee
I will solicit thy revenge, and hope to bring it thee.”
Thus left she her dear son with wrath for his lost love still fed, Whom wilful force, against his will, took from his mournful bed.

Ulysses with the hecatomb arrived on Chryses’ shore;
And when into the haven’s deep mouth they came to use the oar,
They straight struck sail, they roll’d them up, and them on th’ hatches threw:
The topmast by the kelsaine laid, with cables down they drew,
The ship then into harbour brought, with oars, they anchor cast,
And ‘gainst the violent sway of storms make her for drifting fast.
All come ashore, they all exposed the sacred hecatomb
To angry Phoebus, and withal, fair Chryses forth did come,
Who wise Ulysses to her sire, that did at thy altar stand,
For honour lead, and with these words re-sign’d her to his hand:
“Chryses, the mighty king of men, great Agamemmon, sends Thy loved daughter safe to thee, and to thy god commend;
This holy hecatomb, to cease the plague he doth extend Amongst the sigh-expiring Greeks, and make his power their friend.”
Thus he resign’d her to her sire, who took her full of joy, [orderly employ
The honour’d offering to the God they About the Altar, wash their hands, and take their salted cakes;
When Chryses with erected hands this prayer to Phoebus makes:
“O thou that be’st the silver bow, that Chrysa dost dispose Celestial Cyilla, and with power command’st in Tenedos,
O hear thy Priest, and as thine ears gave honour to my prayers
In shooting sickness amongst the Greeks, now hearten their affairs
With health renew’d, and quite exhale th’ infection from their breasts.”
He pray’d, and gracious Phoebus heard both his allow’d requests:
All after prayer cast on salt heaps, draw back, kill, fle a the beves;
Cut off their thighs dubb’d with the fat, drest fair in doubled leaves And prick the sweat-bands thereupon in cleft perfumed wood.
The grave old Priest did sacrifice, and red wine as they stood
He gave to every one to taste; the young men held to him
Five folded gridirons, on which he laid each choicest limb,
The First Book of Homer's Iliads.

Which broil'd and with the inwards eat; the rest in gigots sit;
They fix on spits, till roasted well they draw and fall to it.
The Mariners (their labours past) have food for them prepared, [petently fared.
Which eaten, not a man was left but cons'd;
Their hunger and their thirst thus quench'd, the youths crown cups with wine, Begin and distribute to all; that day was held divine Consumed in Peans to the Sun, who heard with pleased ear,
And when his chariot took the sea, and twilight hid the night;
All soundly on their cables slept, even till the night was worn;
And when the lady of the light, the rosy-finger'd morn,
Rose from the hills, they freshly rose, and to the camp retired;
Apollo with a prosperous wind theirs swelling bark inspired;
The topmast hoisted, milk-white sails upon the same they put,
The mizens then were fill'd with wind, the ship her course did cut.
So swiftly that the parted waves about her sides did roar.
Which coming to the camp they drew upon the sandy shore,
Where, laid on stocks, each soldier kept his quarter as before.
[In anger's flame
But Peleus' son at his black fleet sat girt Nor to consults, that makes men wise, nor forth to battle came; [late desires
But did consume his mighty heart in deso.
Of mortal shrieks and massacres made in the Greeks' retir
And now the day-star had appear'd twelve times in furthest East.
When all the Gods return'd to heaven from th' Ethiopian feast,
And Jupiter before them all; then Theseus'call'd to mind
Her mournful issue, and above the seas green billows shined:
The great heaven early she ascends, and doth the king behold,
Set from the rest in heaven's bright top adorn'd with pearl and gold;
By him she falls, her left hand holds his knee, her right his chin,
And thus her son's desire of Jove by prayer she seeks to win.
"Celestial Jove, if ever I amongst the immortals stood Thy trusty aid in word or act, do my desires this good:
Honour my son above the rest, since past the rest his life
Hath so short date; yet Atreus' son in a disgraceful strife
His labours' recompense hath forced: but thou most prudent Jove,
That with just will rewards desires, which glory grace the love
Of my sad son, to shew his strength with adding strength to Troy
Now he is absent, that the Greeks may let him clearly joy Gain of his honour in their loss, and so augment his fame
By that disgrace they let him bear to their eternal shame.
Jove answer'd not a word to this, but silent sat on long.
That she still hanging on his knee, insisting on her wrong,
Intreated promise at hands by his resistless beak
Or flat rebuke. "I know," said she, "the servile fear of check
Is far from him may check all powers, then if thy power deny
I well may see myself least grace of every deity.
Jove thunder'd out a sigh, and said: "Thou urg'st works of death And strife betwixt my Queen and me, who
With opprobrious breath
Still stirs the tempest of my wrath, though vainly she contend,
And chargeth my respectful hand to be the Trojans' friend.
But covertly do thou descend, lest her eye seize on thee:
Care of thy will I will assume, which shall effect be:
Whereof to make thee sure, my head shall to my bosom bow,
Which with the gods is greatest sign of any fact I vow,
Not by myself to be revoked, nor spaced with any guile,
Nor can it ever to my breast without effect
Now bow'd the sable brows of Jove, the thick ambrosian hair Flow'd on his most immortal head; heaven shook beneath his chair.
Their conference dissolved, she slid to th' ocean from the skies;
Jove to his house, when all the Gods did from their thrones arise
To meet their aire, none durst sustain to save that reverence done Till he came near, all met with him, attending to his throne.
Nor Juno ignorantly sat, but when her jealous view Saw Theseus with the silver feet, she con-
She brought some plots to heaven with her, and thus began to chide:
“What goddess’ counsels yet again deceitful dost thou hide?
Still thou takest joy to be from me, and sitt’st in corners still Secrets that I must never know, nor ever with thy will Thou canst endure a word to me of all thy actions’ scope.”
The Sire of men and gods replied:
“Saturnia, do not hope
That all my counsels thou shalt know; they are too deep for thee, Although my wife; but for thy ear what decent I shall see
Not any God nor man shall know; before thee myself partake;
Yet what I list to understand, and no God partner make,
Enquire not their particulars, nor urge them at my hand.”
Then Juno with the ox-fair eyes, “On what nice terms you stand,
As if I did so much affect, or urge to know thy mind [close you bind Froward Saturnides till now; but wondrous Your loose endeavours, and my heart sustains exceeding fear
The aged sea-god’s daughter breathed seductions in thine ear;
She kneel’d so early at thy feet, and took thee by the knee,
For whom thy chin against thy breast, my mind suggested me,
Thou erst didst knock, and promise her some honour for her son, Though for his mood the Greeks in heaps do on their ruins run.”
“Wretch,” answer’d Jove, “still thy suspects into my bosom dive, Yet canst thou hinder me in nought but thou dost ever strive
To be ungracious in my thoughts, which humour, if I please,
I can make horrible to thee: obey me then and cease, Lest all the Gods Olympus holds suffice not for thy aid [said.”
If my inaccessible hands upon thy limbs be
The reverend fair-eyed Juno sat with this high threat afraid, Wor any word she answer’d him, her heart had such a fall;
The rest of Gods with murmur fill’d the high Saturnian hall.

The famous fiery Artisan, the white-arm’d goddess’ son
Lame Vulcan, stood betwixt them both, and with kind words begun
To ease his loved mother’s heart: he said, “This strife will breed Intolerable plaguy acts, if you of heavenly seed [the Gods ye make For paltry mortals thus contend; amongst A tumult here, and all the mirth from our sweet banquet take,
Because the worse the better hath: but, mother, I advise (Although I need not counsel you, because I know you wise)
Give good respect to my good sire, lest once again he chide,
And make our banquet bitter yet; for he is magnified With power to throw us from our thrones, th’ Olympian lightener is;
With gentle words then supple him, it will not be amiss
To make benevolent and calm that thundering heart of his.”
With this the double-eared bowl put in his mother’s hand,
Upon his admonition still, the crook’d-legg’d God did stand.
“Bear mother, and forbear,” said he, “though it be pain to you;
Lest I that hold you dear behold stripes make your stomach bow,
And cannot help you if I would, although it cost me tears;
It is not easy to repugn the king of all our spheres [wish it otherwise?
How served he me, though seeking help I
He took me by the helpless foot and threw me from the skies;
The whole day long I headlong fell, even till the Sun and I Did set together; he at ease, I in extremity; [did I fall,
He on the sea, and I by land. In Lemnos
And there the Sinti took me up half dead with my appeal.
The ivory-finger’d goddess laugh’d, and did that laughter make An echo with a counter-laugh, and then the bowl did take
Of her kind son, who now began carouse to all the Gods
Of heaven’s sweet wine, from his right hand, round in despite of odds,
Which unextinguish’d laughter stirr’d in every blessed breast.
To see you tan, sweet the house, and fill to all the feast.
So all that day they banqueted till sunset raised the night,
And wanted nought that with content might crown the appetite.
There did the God of music touch his harp’s stone-quenching strings,
To which each sacred muse consorts and most divinely sings.
But when the comfortable Sun left to enlighten air,

To several houses all the Gods with sleepy brows repair,
The famous both-foot-halter wrought their rooms with wondrous art;
With them the heavenly-wild fire-god did to his rest depart
Where Somnus used to close his eyes, and to his side ascends Fair Juno with the golden throne; and there their quarrel ends.

THE END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF HOMER’S ILIADS.
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

THE ARGUMENT.
Jove calls a vision up from Somnus' den,
To will Atrides muster up his men;
The king to Greeks dissembling his desire,
Persuades them to their country to retire;
By Pallas' will Ulysses stays their flight,
And prudent Nestor heartens them to fight.
They take repast; which done, to arms they go,
And march in good array against the foe;
So turn'd Troy, when Iris from the sky
Of friendly Jove performs the embassy.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT.
Beta, the dream and synod cites,
And catalogues the naval knights.

The other Gods and Knights at arms slept all the humorous night, But Jove lay waking, and his thoughts kept in discursive fight How he might honour Theis' Son with slaughterings at their tents Whole troops of Greeks; this counsel then seem'd best for these events:
He instantly would send a dream to Atreus' eldest son,
That with dark vows might draw his powers to their confusion.
And calling him, he wing'd these words:
"Fly to the Grecian fleet, Pernicious vision, and the king at our high summons greet,
Uttering the truth of all I charge; give him command to arm
His universal fair-hair'd host, this is the last alarm
He shall enthrone 'gainst proud Troy, and take her airy towers,
For now no more remain disjoint'd the heavenly housed powers.
Saturnia with successive prayers hath drawn in one right line
Their general forces, instant ills shall Ilion's pomp decline."
This Jove assures, which well observe, nor let oblivion seize Thy loose affections, carelessly dissolved in sleep and ease."
Thus left he him, who in his mind with deep contention toss'd
These wish'd events: far short of date, yet he supposed his host Should raze in that next day the town, so indiscreet he was:
Not knowing what repugnant works did
Jove's designments pass,
Who plotted miseries and sighs to smoke from either's side.
In scathful battle, long before Troy's general spoil was tried.
He rose from heaven-infused sleep, the dream's celestial sounds
Still rung about his pleased ears sweeten'd with ease of wounds;
He deck'd him with his silken weed, right beautiful and new,
On which he cast his plenteous robe; then on his feet he drew Fair shoes, and on his shoulder girt his silver-studded sword:
The never-tainted sceptre then, his birthright did afford,
He took, and went amongst the fleet; Aurora now arose, Climb'd steep Olympus, and sweet light did to all gods disclose,
When he the voiceful heralds charged in counsel to convert
The curled Greeks; they summon'd all;
and all with one consent Together came; the court in chief, the General did decree.
At Nestor's ship, the Pylian King should all of princes be
And men of counsel: all which met, Atrides thus did frame [sacred vision came The consultation: "Princeely friends, a
In this night's depth, and in my sleep, like Nestor greeting me,
For stature, habit, form of face, and head as white as he:
He stood above my head, and said:
'Sleepst thou, wise Areus' son?
A counsellor's state-charged thoughts, thoughts, through broken sleeps should run To whom so many cares and lives are in commission given;
Then give me audience instantly, the ambassado"r of heaven Whose sovereign though so far removed, vows his exceeding care
And easeful pity of thy toils; he bids thee straight prepare Thy fair-hair'd complete host for fight; for now thy royal hand Shall take Troy's ample-streeted town; no more at difference stand The great immortals, Juno's suit hath clear inclined them all To smoother Ilion's fatal pride, in ashy
funeral.
This Jove affirms, which let thy thoughts be sure to memorise, Then took he wings, and golden sleep flew with him from mine eyes; Resolve then, let us prove to arm our powers to this design;
Whom to make eager of exploit, I will in show incline
To sail and fight; as far as may with their incitements stand,
Which will be much the fiercer made if you shall countermand
With words of honourable stay, assuring them the prize
By their firm valours: soldiers' spirits are fired by contraries."
This said, he used his royal throne, and up did Nestor rise, Grave king of Pylos' sandy soil, who thus gave his advice:
"Ye friends, commanders of the Greeks, ye princes of estate,
If, save our General any Greek, his vision should relate,
We might esteem it fabulous, or rather flat reject
The strange narration; but because his sovereign intellect (With which and with the like high souls, Jove and the powers divine Have properest mixture) had the grace to have this glory shine
In his immortal faculties: serve we their high contract,
Admitting utmost power to give this excitation act."
[ sceptre-states
To this affair he first went forth; the other Rose and obey'd their General, and help'd
't' effect the fates
Jove plotted by the baneful dream, endavouring to alone
Their complete host; to their attempt in public session;
To which in troops the soldiers ran, as when black swarms of bees Break ceaseless from a crannied rock, and none the exhausure sees
Of their sweet vault, they fill it so, and furnish the supply
Of their fresh issue, still with flocks that every way do fly
To prey upon the flowery spring; so from the ships and tents.
The soldiers multiplied the shore, in endless
regiment;
And Fame the ambassador of Jove amongst them all did shine, Enflaming their desires to hear th' intent of this design;
Whose utterance much disturbance found,
so thick they did appear,
And th' earth did crack beneath the weight of such as sat to hear.
Rude tumult sprang out of the thrust, nine heralds cried for peace, And audience of the Jove-kept King; and straight they sit and cease.
Divine Atrides stood aloft, and in his hand he closed
Th' elaborate sceptre Vulcan wrought, and to heaven's king disposed;
Jove gave it to his messenger that slew Saturnius's spy;
Hermes to Pelops render'd it, renown'd
for chivalry;
Pelops to chieftain Areus, and Areus at his death
Gave it Thyestes, rich in herds; Thyestes did bequeath
The high successive use thereof to Agamemnon's hands
To rule great Argos, and the powers of many sea-sieged lands;
He leaning on this sceptre, said: "Princes of Greece and friends,
The household and the guard of Mars, cruel Saturnius ends
Our actions in extreme disgrace, who promised my desire,
And bound it with his moved brow, to honour our retire,
With well-wall'd Troy's eversion; but now th' event approves
His plain deceit, since glorless he urgeth our removes;
Commanding our retreat to Greece, with loss of so much blood
Of our dear countrymen and friends, who must not be withstood,
That hath in desolation crown'd the free commercial steeps
Of many cities; and of more will make subverted hearts,
His power is so surpassing great; but it will loathe the car [number were,
Of all posterity, that we, who such a
And so renown'd, with men so few, should wage successless war,
Of whose drifts yet no end appears; that we exceed them far;
If we should strike firm trace and try, by numbering either side,
Take all the town's inhabitants, and into tens divide.
Our Acheive power, and let each ten at banquet choose them one Of Troy, to minister them wine, and Troy should harbour none;
To fill the cup to many tens, so much I say, transcend
Our powers, th' inhabitants of Troy; but their assistant friends,
From many cities drawn, are they that stay this city's spoil,
In spite of our affected wreak, nine years have past our toil;
And now the substance of our ships corrupts, our tackleings fail,
Our wives and seed sit in their doors expecting our resail;
When that we sought is yet unknown; but come, hoist sail and home,
For never shall Troy's spacious town by us be overcome."
This moved to flight in every mind, th' inglorious multitude,
Who heard not wha' tin private court the council did conclude.

Th' assembly grew most turbulent, as billows rude and vast.
Roused in the rough Icarian seas, where east and southern blasts Break fiercely from the clouds of Jove; or as when Zephyr flies
Upon a wealthy field of corn, makes all his forces rise, [beneath his violence:
And all the field bows her fair headz.
So did the common soldiers yield t' Atrodes' forced pretence;
All to the ships with shouting ran, earth smoked beneath their feet,
And mutually they made exhort to hale the crazed fleet
Into the seas; pump'd and made clean, and drew the stocks away,
Offering to launch; the other Peers could not be heard for stay;
A noise confused amongst the shore did smite the golden stars,
From soldiers' throats, whose hearts did long to leave such irksome wars.
Then gloomless the Greeks had fled, past all presage of fate.
Had not Saturnia thus advised Jove's targe-supporting state:
"Out on this shame, O Jove's fair seed, thou conquering deity, Shall thus upon the sea's broad back th' infamous Argives fly, Admitting Priam and his Peers, a glory so despised, [dearly prized
As Helen's rapture in despite, and have so Their long-swear'd honour of revenge with Greks so many shin
Far from their country? but descend to Argos' brass-arm'd train,
And with persuasive gentle speech will every man to stay,
Not suffering any go aboard, nor hale their ships away, [out of the bay.
Which now are everywhere prepared to fly
So said she, nor the gray-eyed maid stood adverse to her will,
But left the undecerned brows of Jove's Olympian hill,
And quickly reach'd the Grecian fleet, where standing still, she found
Th' adviceful King of Ithaca, like Jove in counsels sound,
Who yet had not so much as touch'd his black well transom'd bark;
But vexed in his heart and soul, the army's shame did mark.
To him said Pallas, coming near, "Great Latrildies,
Most wise Ulysses, make ye flight thus headlong to the seas,
In your well-furnish'd men-of-war, and long so much for home?
What honour to the King of Troy, and his consorts will come,
In leaving Argive Helen here, the price of so much blood, Suck'd from the woful breasts of Greece, robb'd of her dearest brood?
But run and interpose no stay, through every Grecian band,
And with thy sweet persuasive tongue, let none depart the land, Nor draw the ear-enforced fleet from off the Trojan strand."
So Pallas charged, whose heavenly voice, prudent Ulysses knew;
Then forth he ran and for more speed, his cloak on earth he throw,
Which diligent Eurybates, a herald of renown of Priam's town
Who came from Ithaca with him, to siege Took up; Ulysses met the King, from whom he was so bold [his line of old,
To take the sceptre never-stain'd, held in With which he went amongst the troops to stay them from the fleet;
And with what Prince or gentleman, his royal steps did meet.
In these fair terms he willed him, pretended flight forbear,
"Sir, 'tis not fit for such as you to fly as check'd with fear,
But rather stay, and with bold words, make others so inclined:
For you as yet not rightly know king Agamemnon's mind;
He makes but trial of such spirits as he may most renown,
And he will quickly punish such as flying humours drown,
All we in council heard not all comprised in his command,
Nor durst we preaze too near for fear of his offended hand.
The anger of a king is death; his honour springs from Jove, His person is in spite of hate protected in his love." [took
But if he saw the vulgar sort, or if in cry he A soldier with exclams for flight; him with his mace he strock.
And used these speeches of reproof;
"Wretch, keep thy place and hear Others besides thy General that place above thee bear; Thou art unfit to rule, and base, without a name in war, Or state of council; nor must Greeks be so irregular,
To live as every man may take the sceptre from the king;
The rule of many is absurd, one Lord must lead the ring
Of far resounding government; one king whom Saturn's son, Hath given a sceptre and sound laws, to bear dominion."
Thus ruling govern'd be the host; again to council then,
From ships and tents in tumult swarm'd these base disorder'd men
With such a clustering as against the Pontic shore rebounds A storm-driven billow, with whose rage the sea itself resounds.
All sail, and silent used their seats, Thersites sole except, A man of tongue, whose raven-like voice a tuneless jarring kept,
Who in his rank mind copy had of unregard'd words, That rashly and beyond all rule used to oppugn the Lords; But whatsoever came from him was laugh'd at mightily.
The filthiest Greek that came to Troy: he had a goggle eye, Stark-lame he was of either foot; his shoulders were contract Into his breast and crock'd his head; he was sharp compact, And here and there it had a hair; to mighty Thetides, [and disease; And wise Ulysses he retain'd much anger For still he chid them eagerly; and then against the state, At Agamemnon he would rail; the Greeks in vehement hate, And high disdain conceited him, yet he with violent threat Would needs upbraid the General; and thus himself forgot: "Atrides, why complain'st thou now? what dost thou covet more? Thy thrifty tents are full of coin, and thou hast women store, Fair and well-favour'd, which we Greeks, at every town we take Resign to thee; think'st thou, thou want'st some treasure thou might'st make To be deduced thee out of Troy, by one that comes to seek His son for ransom; who myself, or any other Greek Should bring thee captive? or a wench, fill'd with her sweets of youth, Which thou may'st love and private keep for thy insatiate tooth?
But it becomes not kings to tempt by wicked precedent Their subjects to dishonesty: O minds most Not Achieves but Achyian girls; come fall aboard and home;
Let him concoct his prey alone, alone Troy overcome,
To make him know if our free ears his proud commands will hear,
In anything: or not disdain his longer yoke
to bear,
Who hath with contumely wrong'd a better Achilles, from whose arms, in spite that all the world might see,
He took a prize won with his sword, but now it plain appears, Achilles hath no spleen in him, but most remissly bears
A female stomach: else be sure the robbery of his weed,
O Agamemnon, would have proved thy last injurious deed."
Thus did Thersites chide the king to whom all Greece did bow, When wise Ulysses straight stood up, and with contracted brow, Beholding him, used this rebuke: "Prating
Thersites, cease
Though thou caus'st rail so cunningly; nor dare to tempt the peace Of sacred kings, for well thou know'st I know well what thou art,
A baser wretch came not to Troy to take the Grecians' part.
Profane not kings then with thy lips; examine our retreat, Whereof ourselves are ignorant, nor our estates so great
That we dare urge upon the king what he will only know.
Sit then and cease thy barbarous taunts to him whom all we owe.
So much observance, though from thee these insolent poisons flow;
But I protest and will perform, if I shall deprehend
Such frenzy in thy pride again, as now doth all offend,
Then let Ulysses lose his head, and cease inglorious,
To be the native father call'd of young
If from thee thy nakedness thy garments be not stript
And from the Council to the fleet thou be not soundly whipt."
This said, his back and shoulder blades
he with his sceptre smit, Who then shrunk round and down his cheeks the servile tears did fit:
The golden sceptre in his flesh a bloody print did raise
With which he trembling took his seat, and looking twenty ways, Ill-favouredly he wiped the tears from his self-pitying eyes,
And then, through all the host were sad, they laugh to hear his cries, When thus flew speeches intermix'd: "O
God, what endless good Ulysses still bestows on us! that to the field of blood
Instructs us; and in council doth for chief director serve;
Yet never action past his hands that did more praise deserve Than to disgrace this railing fool in all the army's sight,
Whose rudeness henceforth will take heed how he doth princes bite."
This all the multitude affirm'd, when now again did rise
The razer of repugnant towns, Ulysses bold and wise,
With sceptre of the General, and prudent That did a herald's form assume, and for still silence cry,
That through the host the soldierly might understand th' intent
The council urged; and thus their flight his wisdom did prevent.
"Atrides, if in these faint drifts the Greeks have licence given, Thou wilt be most opprobrious of all men under heaven,
Since they infringed their vows to thee at our designs for Troy,
From horse-race Argos, to persist, till Ilion they destroy:
But like young babbles amongst themselves,
or widows, they lament,
And would go home; and I confess a tedious discontent
May stir some humour to return: for if a man remain
But twice two se' nights from his wife, much mood he doth sustain Within his many-seated ship, which winter's storms enfold
And fierce commotion of the sea; where thrice three heavens have roll'd About the circle of the year since this our anchor'd stay.
I cannot then reprove such Greeks as grieve at this delay;
Yet were it shame to stay so long, and empty-handed fly:
Sustain a little longer, my friends, that we the truth may try.
THE SECOND BOOK OF HOMER'S ILIADS.

Of reverend Calchas' prophecy; for we remember well,
And you in heart are witnesses, whom death-arm'd fates from hell,
The third day past and yesterday have held in sovereign guard,
That when in Aulis' long-ring gulf, we Grecian ships prepared To ruin Priam and his friends, on holy altars made.
About a fountain, and within a widely platan shade,
We perfect hecatombs did burn to all the Gods divine,
Where straight appear'd to all our eyes a most prodigious sign:
A dragon with a bloody back, most horrible to sight, [into the light;]
Which great Olympus himself did send This tumbling from the altar's foot, did to the Platan creep,
Where nestling in an utter bow, and under shade, did sleep.
The rusted sparrows' little young, which eight in number were,
The dam the ninth, that brought them forth, which with the beast did smear His ruthless jaws, and crack'd their bones, the mother round about.
Flew mowing her beloved birth, who by her wing stretch'd out
The dragon caught, and crying eat, as he her young had done,
This openly Olympus wrought, and turn'd into a stone.
The purple serpent, which effect we standing by admiring,
That such a terrible portent should answer offerings fired.
A little after, Calchas said: 'Why stand ye wonder-driven, Ye men of Greece? This miracle almighty Jove hath given Thus late to shew the late event whose fame shall never die.
For as these young birds eat he, and she that morned by Did make the ninth, so we nine years should here firm battle wage,
And in the tenth year take the town.'
Thus Calchas did presage,
All which is almost now fulfilled; then stay, renowned Greeks,
Till every man possess the spoil he honourably seeks.'
Ulysses having spoken thus his words so liked were,
That of his praise the ships, the tents, the shore did witness bear:

Resounding with the people's noise, who gave his speech the prize.
The applause once ceased, from seat to speak old Nestor doth arise:
"Fie, Greeks, what infamy is this? ye play at children's game,
Your warlike actions thus far brought, now to neglect their fame.
O whither from our lips profane, shall oaths and compact cast fly?
The counsels and the cares of men now in the fire shall die.
With those our sacred offerings made by pure unmixed wine:
And our right hands with which our faiths we freely did combine.
The cause is, since amongst ourselves we use discursive words,
And go not manlike to the field, to manage it with swords,
[gem's device]
Nor with the fineness of our wits by stratain all this while against a world to work our enterprise.
[being sound]
But, great Atrides, as at first, thy counsel Command to field, and be not led cor-ruply from the ground
Of our endeavours, by the moods of one or two that use
Counsels apart; they shall not go to Greece till Jove refuse
To ratify his promise made, or we may surely know.
If those ostents were true or false, that he from heaven did show:
But I am sure (to cheer our hopes) his beck the heavens did shake That day of choice, when towards Troy our fleet first sail did make, Conferring on our conquering sterns the powers of death and fate,
His lightning right hand shewing us pres-sages fortunate.
And therefore not a man shall do himself that wrong to fly Before with Phrygian maids and wives he at his pleasure lie,
That Helen's rape and all our sighs may be revenged thereby.
But if some be so mutinous whom nothing may restrain,
Let him but touch his black-arm'd bark, that he may first be slain.
Then, great Atrides, be advised, and others' reasons see, [will utter thee.
It shall not prove an object speech that I In tribes and nations let thy men be presently array'd
That still the tribes may second these, and nations nations aid;:
Of every chief and soldier thus, the proof shall rest in sight,
For both will thirst their country's fame,
and prese for single fight.
What soldier when he is allow'd his countryman for guide
Will not more closely stick to him than to a stranger's side?
Thus shalt thou know, if Gods detain thy hand from Ilion's harms, Or else the faintness of thy men, and ignorance in arms.
Thus to autentique Nestor's speech Atrides' answer was:
"All Grecian birth, thrice reverend king,
thy counsels far surpass;
O would King Jove, Tritonea, and be that guides the Sun,
Would grant me ten such counsellors:
then should our toils be done.
Then Priam's high-topp'd towers should stoop, out-facing us no more,
But fall beneath our conquering hands, despoil'd of all her store;
But Jove hath stored my life with woes, that no good hour can spend,
And thrown me in the midst of strifes that never shall lack of end.
Since, with Achilles for a girl in humorous terms I strove,
And I the author of the strife; but if en-Make us with reunited minds consult in one again,
Troy shall not in the left delay her loathed
But now to food, that to the fight ye may your valours yield;
Well let his soldier sharp his lance, and well address his shield;
Well let each horseman meat his horse, to break the bristled field;
Well let each coachman view his wheels, and chariot-furniture,
And arm them so that all the day we soundly may endure.
For faint conceits must be expell'd, that pinc at labour lest, Till night take strength from both our hosts, and force us to our rest:
The bosoms of our targeteers must all be
steep'd in sweat,
The lancer's arm must fall dissolved, our
chariot horse with heat
Must seem to melt; and if I find one soldier hide the chace, [face, Pursued by any enemie, or fight not in his Or else be found a shipboard hid, not all the world shall save
His hateful limbs; but fowls and beasts be his abhorred grave."
This speech applusive murmur stirr'd;
as when upon the shore
The waves run high, driven with south gales, and gainst a rock do rear, Plied with a diverse flood of air at one set time so fast,
That their fierce rages never cease; such lasting murmurs past
The pleased Greeks: they rose, dispersed, all haste to shipward make,
Where all made fires within their tents, and did their suppers take:
And every man to some of heaven did sacrifice and pray
To scape the fury of the fight in that important day.
Atrides to the king of Gods, a well-fed ox first kill'd
Of five years' growth'd, and all the host to wait on him were will'd.
Wise Nestor first, then Idomen Crete
the kingly name,
Then both the Ajaxes in consort with Diomedes came,
Ancient Laertes' son was sixth, whose counsel bore the sway,
And uninvited last of all, came sweet-voiced Ment, and Thersites in his respect.
Acknowledging his brothers' cares and toils King Agamemnon in the midst did pray to this effect:
"Most happy and almighty Jove, great thicker of the sky, Descend on our long-toiled host, with thy remorseful eye;
Let not the lightsome Sun be set, nor set the night on wing,
Before old Priam's high-raised towers to level earth I bring;
Before his broad-leaved ports enflamed may far off be descried, Before my sword on Hector's breast his cuirass may divide,
And his chief friends fall'n dead in dust, may spread his carcass round,
And in fell death's convulsions eat the many-feeding ground."
At this Jove bend'd not his head, but did more labours guise,
For him and his associates: yet took his sacrifice.
Then, after prayer, salt lumps of dough cast on the altar's sides, They strike the offerings down, then strike and strip them of their hides, Then quarter them and all the thighs with thirty fat they spread,
Put one in other, and to them, the little fragments shred;
All these with sere and leafless wood, they consequently burn,
And all the inwards put to spit, before the fire they turn;
The thighs burn'd up, th' entrails roast,
They eat and piemeeal slice
In little goblets all the rest reserved for sacrifice.
They roast it wondrous cunningly, and draw it from the spirit,
And when their labours were perform'd,
They used their stomachs, wanting nought that a proper d'm a feast.
When thirst and hunger being allay'd, thus spake the Pylian guest:

"Great Agamemmon, king of men, effect thy words with hands,
Nor more defer the work Jove so instantly commands,
But give the heralds charge t' accite all soldiers to the fleet,
And set ourselves assist their pains to set With expedition more exact." The king was pleased, and will'd
The heralds cite the curl'd-head Greeks,
Who with quick concourse fill'd
The smoother'd shore, and all the kings en-

The great Atrides; and with them, Jove's gray-eyed maid went out;
She bore the targe her father made, of Amalthea's hide, [all eternified;
Not to be pierced, nor worn with time, but A hundred serpents fringed it round, quick And at a hundred oxen's price, each serpent might be sold. [utmost haste,
She through the Achive army ran, enforcing
And every stomach fill'd with thirst to lay proud Ilion waste; [ceaseless fight, Enabling all their faculties to fierce and
And made Troy's irksome war more wish'd than their dear country's sight.
Then as a hungry fire enflames a mighty wood that grows
Upon the high-tops of a hill, and far his splendour throws, So from the Grecians' burnish'd arms an Admirable light
Flew through the air with golden wings, and did the Gods a fright.
Or as whole flocks of geese, or cranes, or Swans with necks so tall,
Fly cloud-like over Asian meads to fair Calster's fall,
Who proud of their supportful wings, as they take stream or ground,
Make all the river-bordering lawn's their melody resound.
So the thick troops from ships and tents Throng'd to Scamander's plain,
And under sway of foot and horse the earth did groan again;
They stood in that enflowered mead, as Infinite as leaves,
Or flowers the spring doth amplify; or as The cloudy threas
Of busy flies that sheep-cotes fill when summer's golden vails Enrich the fields, and nourishing milk dews the sprinkled palls;
So many fair-hair'd Grecians stood, upon
That equal ground,
The Trojan ranks with deadly charge desirous to confound;
And as good goat-herds when their goats
At food in herds abide,
Though they be never so commix'd, can Easily them divide;
So did the leaders well digest their bands
For fight applied.
Mongst whom the mighty king of men,
With brows and eyes like Jove,
Like Mars in waist, in breast like him that Most doth waters love.
And as a bull amidst the herd, most proudly far doth go (For he with well-branch'd oxen fed, makes most illustrious show)
So Jupiter made Atreus' son in that death-threatening day.
The bravest object of all Greeks that held supremest sway.

(Sing then, fair Muses, ye that hold celestial For you are Goddesses, know all, and Fill the farthest places;
We knowing sought but only hear the uncertain voice of fame),
What Grecian princes and their peers to hapless Phrygia gave
The common soldiers by their names I not assay to sing.
Although ten tongues, and ten big threats
I could to utterance bring;
Though I sustain'd a brazen heart, and breathed a voice infract:
For only you the seed of Jove can tell the troops exact,
That under Ilion's lofty walls employ'd revengeful fight;
The princes therefore of the fleet, and fleet itself I cite.
ACHILLES' SHIELD.

Bright-footed Thetis did the sphere aspire,
Amongst the Immortals, of the God of fire,
Starry, incorruptible, and had frame
Of ruddy brass, right shaped by the lame.
She found him at his swelling bellows sweating,
And twenty tripods seriously beating,
To stand and beautify his royal hall,
For chairs of honour, round about the wall,
And to the feet he fix'd of every one Wheels of man-making gold to run alone.
To the Gods' Temples; to which they Were religious ornaments, when standing there Till sacrifice were done, they would retire
To Vulcan's house, which all eyes did admire; Yet the Daedalian handles to hold by Were unimposed, which straight he did apply.
These while he fashion'd with miraculous art,
The fair white-footed dame appear'd apart
To Charis with the rich-attired head,
Whose heavenly beauties strow'd the nuptial bed.
Of that illustrious smith; she took her hand
And entertain'd her with this kind demand:
"What makes the Goddess with the ample train, Reverend and friendly Thetis, entertain Concert to honour us with her repair,
That never yet was kind in that affair?
But enter further, that so wish'd a guest
May be received with hospitable feast."
Thus led she Thetis to a chair of state,
Rich, and exceedingly elaborate,
And set a footstool at her silver feet;
Then call'd her famous smith; "Vulcan,
My sweet,
Thetis in some use needs thy fiery hand:"
He answer'd, "Thetis hath a strong command
Of all my powers, who gave my life defence,
Cast by my mother's wilful impudence
Out of Olympus; who would have obscured
My native lameness; then had I endured Unhelped griefs, if on her shining breast Hospitious Thetis had not let me rest,
And bright Eurinome, my guardian,
Fair daughter of the labouring Ocean,
With whom nine years I wrought up Divers things,
Buttons and bracelets, whistles, chains,
Rings.
In concluse of a cave; and over us
The swelling waves of old Oceanus
With foamy murmurs flow'd, and not a God,
Nor any mortal knew my close abode,
But Thetis and divine Eurinome,
Who succour'd me; and now from gulf
Sea:
To our steep house hath Thetis made ascent,
To whom requital more than competent
It fits me much my safety should repay;
Charis, do thou some sumptuous feast Purvey.
Whiles I my airy bellows may lay by,
And all my tools of heavenly ferrary.
Thus from his anvil the huge monster rose,
And with distorted knees he limping goes
To a bright chest of silver ore composed,
Where all his wonder-working tools were closed,
And took his sighing bellows from the fire;
Then with a sponge, his breast with hairs
Like wire,
His brawned neck, his hard hands and his face
He cleansed; put on his robe, assumed his mace,
And balled forth, and on his steps attended Handmaids of gold that with strong paces wended, Like dames in flower of life, in whom were minds Furnish'd with wisdom, knowing all the kinds
Of the Gods' powers; from whom did Voices fly,
In whom were strengths, and motions voluntary.
These at his elbow ever ministered;
And these, drawing after him his legs, he led To Thetis seated in a shining throne,
Whose hand he shook, and ask’d this question:
"What wish’d occasion brings the sea’s bright Queen
To Vulcan’s house, that ever yet hath been So great a stranger? shew thy reverend will,
Which mine of choice commands me to fulfil,
If in the reach of all mine art it lie,
Or it be possible to satisfy?"
Thetis pour’d out this sad reply in accents:
"O Vulcan, is there any Goddess bears,
Of all the deities that deck the sky,
So much of mortal wretchedness as I,
Whom Jove past all deprives of heavenly peace?
My self of all the blue Nereides,
He hath subjected to a mortal’s bed,
Which I against my will have suffered To Peleus surmained Αeacides,
Who in his Court lies slain with the disease
Of woful age; and now with new infortunes,
He all my joys to discontentes importunes
In giving me a son, chief in renown
Of all Heroes; who hath palm-like grown,
Set in a fruitful soil; and when my care
Had nursed him to a form so singular,
I sent him in the Grecian’s crook-stern’d fleet
To Ilion, with the swiftness of his feet,
And dreadful strength, that his choice limbs indued
To fight against the Trojan fortitude;
And him I never shall receive retired,
To Peleus’ court; but while he lives inspired With human breath, and sees the Sun’s clear light,
He must live sad and moody as the night.
Nor can I cheer him, since his valour’s price Resigned by all the Grecians’ compromise, Atrides forced into his fortune’s part
For which consumption tires upon his heart;
Yet since the Trojans, all the Greeks conclude Within their fort, the peers of Greece have sued
With worthiness of gifts and humble prayers,
To win his hand to hearten their affairs
Which he denied; but to appease their harms,
He deck’d his dear Patroclus in his arms,
And sent him with his bands to those debates:
All day they fought before the Scæan gates,
And well might have expugn’d by that black light,
The Ilian city, if Apollo’s spite
Thirsting the blood of good Menetius’ son,
Had not in face of all the fight foredone
His faultless life; and author’d the renown
On Hector’s prowess, making th’ act his own;
Since therefore, to revenge the timeless death
Of his true friend, my son determineth
’T embrue the field; for want whereof he lies Buried in dust, and drown’d in miseries;
Here at thy knees I sue, that the short date
Prefix’d his life by power of envious fate, Thou wilt with heavenly arms grace and maintain,
Since his are lost with his Patroclus slain."
He answer’d, "Be assured, nor let the care
Of these desires thy firmest hopes impair;
Would God as far from lamentable death,
When heavy fates shall see it with his breath,
I could reserve him, as unequal’d arms,
Shall be found near t’ avert all instant harms,
Such arms as all worlds shall for art admire
That by their eyes their excellence aspire."
This said, the smith did to his bellows go,
Set them to fire, and made his Cyclops blow:
Full twenty pair breathed through his furnace holes
All sorts of blasts to inflame his temper’d coals,
Now blister’d hard, and now did contrariwise,
As Vulcan would, and as his exercise
Might with perfection serve the dame’s desire.
Hard brass and tin he cast into the fire,
High-prized gold and silver, and did set Within the stock, an anvil bright and great:
His massy hammer then his right hand held,
His other hand his gasping tongues compell’d;
And first he forged a huge and solid shield,
Which every way did variant arçhiply yield.
Through which he three ambitious circles cast, Round and refulgent; and without he placed A silver handle; five-fold proof it was,
And in it many things with special grace
And passing artificial pomp were graven;
In it was earth's green globe, the sea and heaven,
Th' unweary'd Sun; the Moon exactly round,
And all the stars with which the sky is crown'd,
The Pleiades, the Hyads, and the force
Of great Orion; and the Bear, whose course
Turns her about his sphere observing him
Surnamed the Chariot, and doth never swim
Upon the unmeasured Ocean's marble face,
Of all the flames that heaven's blue veil encirce.
In it two beauteous cities he did build
Of divers-linguaged men: the one was fil'd
With sacred nuptials and with solemn feasts,
And through the streets the fair officious guests,
Lead from their bridal chambers their fair brides,
With golden torches burning by their sides.
Hymn's sweet triumphs were abundant there,
Of youths and damsels dancing in a sphere;
Amongst whom masking flutes and harps were heard,
And all the matrons in their doors appear'd,
Admiring their enamour'd braveries;
Amongst the rest busy Contention flies
About a slaughter; and to solemn Court
The Citizens were drawn in thick resort,
Where two contended for a penalty:
The one due satisfaction did deny
At th' other's hands for slaughter of his friend,
The other did the contrary defend;
At last by arbitration both desired,
To have their long and costly suit expired,
The friends cast sounds confused on either side Whose tumult straight the heralds pacified.
In holy circle and on polish'd stones,
The reverend Judges made their Sessions,
The voiceful heralds awful sceptres holding;
And their grave dooms on either side unfolding.
In midst two golden talents were proposed
For his rich fee by whom should be disclosed
The most applausive sentence; th' other town
Two hosts besieged, to have it overthrown,
Or in two parts to share the wealthy spoil;
And this must all the citizens assoil.
They yield to neither, but with close alarms,
To sally's and to ambuscadoes arm,
Their wives and children on their walls did stand,
With whom and with the old men they were mann'd.
The other issued: Mars and Pallas went Propitious captains to their brave intent.
Both golden did in golden garments shine
Amply and fair, and seem'd indeed divine.
The soldiers were in humbler habits deck'd.
When they had found a valley most select To couch their ambush—at a river's brink
Where all their herds had mutual place to drink.
These, clad in shining steel, they close did lie,
And sit far off two sentinels to spy,
When all their flocks and crook-baund herds came near,
Which soon succeed'd, and they follow'd were
By two poor herdsmen that on bagpipes play'd, Doubtless of any ambuscadoes laid;
The sentinels gave word; and in they flew,
Took herds and flocks, and both their keepers slew.
The enemy hearing such a strange uproar
About their cattle—being set before
In solemn council—instantly took horse,
Pursued, and at the flood, with mutual force,
The conflict join'd; betwixt them flew debate,
Disorder'd tumult, and exitial fate;
Here was one taken with wounds bleeding green,
And here, one pale and yielding, no wound seen.
Another slain, drawn by the strengthless heels
From the red slaughter of the ruthless steels,
And he that slew him on his shoulders wearing
His bloody weeds as trophies of his daring.
Like men alive they did converse in fight,
And tired on death with mutual appetite.
He carved besides a soft and fruitful field
Broad and thrice new-til'd in that heavenly shield,
Where many ploughmen turn'd up here and there
The earth in furrows, and their sovereign near.
They strived to work; and every furrow ended
A bowl of sweetest wine he still extended
To him that first had done, then turn’d they hand, Desirous to dispatch that piece of land,
Deep and new-ear’d; black grew the plough with mould.
Which look’d like blackish earth tho’ forged of gold.
And this he did with miracle adorn.
Then made he grow a field of high-sprung corn,
In which did reapers sharpen’d sickles ply;
Others, their handles fall’n confusedly,
Laid on the ridge together; others bound
Their gather’d handfuls to sheaves hard and round.
Their binders were appointed for the place,
And at their heels did children glean apace,
Whole armfuls to the binders ministering.
Amongst all these all silent stood their king,
Upon a balk, his sceptre in his hand,
Glad at his heart to see his yieldy land.
The heralds then the harvest feast prepare,
Beneath an oak far off, and for their fare,
A mighty ox was slain, and women dress’d Store of white cakes, and mix’d the labourers’ feast.
In it besides a vine ye might behold
Loaded with grapes, the leaves were all of gold,
The bunches black and thick did through it grow
And silver props sustain’d them from below:
About the vine an azure dyke was wrought
And about it a hedge of tin he brought.
One path went through it, through the which did pass
The vintagers, when ripe their vintage was.
The virgins then, and youths, childishly wise,
For the sweet fruit did painted cups devise,
And in a circle bore them dancing round,
In midst whereof a boy did sweetly sound
His silver harp, and with a piercing voice,
Sung a sweet song; when each youth with his choice
Triumphing over earth, quick dances treads.
A herd of oxen thrusting out their heads
And bellowing, from their stalls rushing to feed.
Near a swift flood, raging and crown’d with reed,
ACHILLES' SHIELD.

He courest made that did for light outshine
The blaze of fire, impecroesable, divine:
A helm fit for his brow, whose lofty crest
Was with a waving plume of gold impress'd:
Then shining greaves he made of brightest brass;
And when this smith of heaven brought to full pass
This full of wonder and unmatch'd affair,
To goddess Thetis he address'd repair,

And laid it sounding at her crystal fee
Which with refreshed mind and e tenance sweet

She took, and like a hawk, stoop'd: the brow
Of steep Olympus: and the wra
vows
Of her enraged son she help'd to pay,
With Vulcan's arms wrought for et
day.

THE END OF ALL THE ENDLESS WORKS OF HOMER.
